Possession is sufficiently changed upon the sale of a farm with the personal property thereon, upon which neither of the parties reside, if the vendee records his deed, enters upon the premises, and assumes the entire control thereof. Wilson v. Hooper, 36 D. 366.

A sale of personal property is complete, and no subsequent formal delivery thereof is necessary, where, from the date of the bill of sale, the property continued to be on land, or in buildings, in the exclusive possession and control of the vendee. Nichols v. Patten, 36 D. 713.

Delivery by a vendor is sufficient where all has been done by him that he may do, though something remains to be accomplished by the vendee. Thus the delivery of wood sold by the cord may be sufficient, though it has not been measured by the vendee. Hunt v. Thurman, 40 D. 683.

Delivery of goods by vendor at a place designated by the vendee's agent, who made the purchase, is a good performance of the contract, though the vendor knows that they are to be used by a third person and not by the purchaser. Melledge v. Boston Iron Co., 51 D. 59.

In delivery of goods already in buyer's possession, the same acts of segregation, offer, and acceptance are necessary as in other cases. Messer v. Woodman, 53 D. 241.

A good delivery and continued change of possession of cattle roaming at large, and purchased in good faith, is clearly constituted by the act of the purchaser in collecting them together, marking them with his brand, and turning them out to pasture on their accustomed range. Walden v. Murdock, 83 D. 135.

Delivery is sufficient to pass title, where by one party purchases four ricks of hay at a stipulated price per ton, the same to be baled and weighed by himself, if he actually bales a small portion of the hay therefrom, and takes it into his possession; and this though he then refuses to take more of the hay, alleging that it is unsound and unfit to be baled. Kohl v. Lindley, 89 D. 294.

Mere suppression of facts will not alone constitute fraud such as will avoid a contract; there must be something more than a failure to communicate facts within the knowledge of the vendor; there must be a concealment, as by withholding information when asked for, or by using some device to mislead, involving act and intention. Thus in a sale of hay, where the seller was silent, and used no artifice to induce the purchaser to buy, and the hay was then in ricks, and proper diligence would have enabled him to detect the unsound condition—held, that the sale was not fraudulent. Ib.

Evidence that a person seeing an unfinished piano in the maker's shop offered to purchase it of him, if he would finish it; that the offer was then and there accepted; that a bill of sale was then and there made; that the price was made at a subsequent day, the piano being left to be finished, will authorize a jury in finding a delivery of the piano sufficient to pass the title as against a subsequent purchaser. Thorndike v. Bath, 19 R. 318.

The defendant, H. W. Selby, ordered of the plaintiffs goods, which were shipped by the usual carrier, but by a clerical error they were directed to "W. H. Selby," instead of H. W. Selby. The defendant never received the goods. In an action for their price—held, that in the absence of proof that the loss of the goods was attributable to the error in direction, the defendant was liable. Garretson v. Selby, 18 R. 14.

36. — as against creditors. — Subsequent purchasers or judgment creditors with notice of a prior sale before their rights attached cannot attack such sale for want of delivery. Ludwig v. Fuller, 35 D. 245.

Delivery of a chattel to the vendee before seizure thereof under execution against the vendor is sufficient to vest title in the vendee as against the creditors levying the execution. Bartlett v. Blake, 58 D. 775.

A sale of sheep on the land of a third person whom the vendee asks to select the sheep from a larger number pasturing on the land, and who does make such selection, and marks those selected with the initials of the vendee, will constitute a good delivery as against creditors of the vendor, although the sheep remain on the land of the third person, the same as before the sale. Barney v. Brown, 19 D. 720.

Delivery of possession of personalty is sufficient as against subsequent attaching creditors of the vendor where the latter executes a deed of certain realty, followed by a bill of sale of the personalty thereon, and delivers possession of everything about the premises to the vendee, and surrenders the keys to the agent of the latter. In such a case, a removal of the personal property from the premises is not necessary. Sharon v. Shaw, 90 D. 546.

The plaintiff purchased, in good faith, bales of wool stored in the seller's factory, and the seller agreed to keep the wool for a time where it was on storage for the plaintiff, who had no place to store it. The seller, by the plaintiff's direction, opened some of the bails, took out of them samples, and delivered them to the plaintiff together with a bill of parcels wherein was acknowledged the receipt of the contract price. Plaintiff desired the parcels to resell the wool by. Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of a delivery sufficient as to creditors. Ingalles v. Herrick, 11 R. 360.

It was orally agreed between a farmer and his laborer that the latter should accept certain hogs in payment for his services. They were pointed out, but were to remain in the pasture with other hogs, until an opportunity should be found for selling them. Held, a valid delivery as against the seller's creditors. Webster v. Anderson, 36 R. 452.

Failing debtors delivered to a heavy creditor a bill of sale of 12,000 bushels of charcoal in pits on the vendor's land. The vendee a few days afterward sent a person who marked the pits with their name. This person remained in charge of the pits a few days, and after him, a neighbor was requested to look after the pits, and visited them every day. Held, a valid change of possession as against other creditors. Tognini v. Kyle, 45 R. 442.

37. What is not sufficient. — Delivery is incomplete while anything remains to be done. Messer v. Woodman, 53 D. 241.

It is not a delivery of pew panels, contracted to be made and delivered at a meeting-house in process of construction, and to be paid for in cash on delivery, to leave them at the meeting-house in the absence of the vendee from the town, and they could not be attached as the property of the latter. Woodbury v. Long, 19 D. 345.

Delivery of boards under a bill of sale, to secure a prior debt, is not sufficient to pass title against a subsequently attaching creditor, where the boards are lying in different piles about a mill-yard, and the vendor, going in sight of them, points towards them and says, "There is the lumber," and tells the vendee to take it away and make the best of it, and the vendee goes away and leaves the lumber as it is, and exercises no ownership over it for two months, and until the attachment is levied. Cobb v. Haskell, 31 D. 56.

Mere notification of a servant in charge that personal property has been sold, accompanied with a request by the purchaser to continue in his employment, is not such delivery or change of possession as will vest the property in him as against subsequent attaching creditors of the party from whom he bought. Sharon v. Shaw, 90 D. 546.

Where a tenant remains in possession after the termination of his lease and sells to his landlord, in the presence of a third person, his share of the grain raised upon the land but allows the grain to remain in the barn the same as before, without any removal, and retains the key to the barn and the control and possession of the same, — this is not sufficient delivery or change of possession to make the sale valid as against attaching creditors of the vendor. Lawrence v. Burnham, 97 D. 540.

Want of immediate delivery, accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession, in the sale of goods and chattels, is conclusive evidence of fraud in the vendor as against attaching creditors whether the latter knew of the sale or not. Id.

Readiness of and offer by seller to deliver goods sold, and refusal of the purchaser to receive them, do not constitute actual or constructive delivery, so as to entitle the seller to recover the full contract price. Webber v. Minor, 99 D. 688.

Where the plaintiff agreed to manufacture a reaper of a certain kind, and to deliver it to the defendant at a certain time and place, and at the appointed time and place the defendant was shown the separate pieces of a number of reapers, of identical form and size, and was told that one was designed for him and would be put up for him if he would take it, but he refused — held, not such a delivery as vested the title in the defendant. Ganson v. Madigan, 82 D. 659.

A party had a quantity of hay in a barn upon a farm which he carried on by his hired man. He sold a quantity of it to another person, telling him he could leave it in the barn until he could haul it away. The latter, in the presence of the former, thereupon requested the hired man to take charge of the hay for him, and he said he would do so. The remaining hay in the barn belonged to the seller. Held, that there was not such a delivery and change of possession as the law requires to protect the property from attachment by the seller's creditors. Sleeper v. Pollard, 67 D. 741.

33. Partial delivery. — Under a contract to deliver wood to a large amount before a day certain, the delivery need not be of the entire amount at the same time, but may be of portions upon several days, and the delivery of each portion vests the title in the vendee, and subjects him to the risk of future loss of the property. Hunt v. Therman, 40 D. 683.

If a vendee, on receiving part of a quantity of goods sold, finds they are not of the kind or quality which his contract entitles him to, he is not at liberty to retain such part, and claim damages for the non-delivery of the entire quantity. Nor can he require the delivery of the residue, retaining a claim for damages. He must either receive the article as it is, or he must return the portion delivered, and then enforce his claim for damages. He can recover no damages if he refuse to return the part delivered. Reed v. Randall, 86 D. 306.

The plaintiff contracted to sell and deliver 699 boxes of glass to defendant, delivery to be made at one time. Prior to any delivery the defendant wrote to plaintiff asking for immediate delivery of a small portion, and plaintiff thereupon delivered 265 boxes. The defendant received and used this quantity, and afterward wrote that he wished the order completed in a reasonable time. A correspondence ensued as to the terms of the agreement. The plaintiff subsequently offered to complete, but defendant declined on the ground that the time had elapsed. Held, that the plaintiff could recover for the amount delivered. Avery v. Wilson, 37 R. 503.

39. Separation, weighing and measurement. — As between seller and buyer, if anything remains to be done before the goods are to be delivered, a present right of property does not attach in the buyer. But separation is enough to pass the property, though weighing, measuring, or counting may afterwards be necessary to adjust and determine the final amount of the price. Southwestern Freight etc. Co. v. Steward, 100 D. 255.

Separation of articles sold out of a large number, where all are of exactly the same quality, is unnecessary to constitute such delivery as will pass the property; as in the case of a number of barrels of flour sold out of a larger number of the same brand belonging to the vendor and stored in a warehouse. Pleasant v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726; Cushing v. Breed, 92 D. 771; Russell v. Carrington, 1 R. 498; Hurf v. Hires, 29 R. 232; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Gillette, 46 R. 222; Kingman v. Holmgvist, 59 R. 604.

The duty is on vendor of separating merchantable corn from unmerchantable, where he has sold with warranty, and, under a local usage, the vendee, after receiving part, refuses to take the residue as of inferior quality, where the vendor claims that enough of the residue is of good quality to cover the purchase money already paid. Clark v. Baber, 45 D. 190.

The doctrine of appropriation, as constituting delivery, and thereby passing title, arises in cases of a sale of goods generally, as distinguished from the sale of a specific chattel; where a less quantity out of a larger is sold, no property passes until a delivery. To constitute a delivery, the vendor may appropriate the quantity purchased, by separating it from the bulk; but the appropriation is not complete until the vendee assents to take the separated portion. Braxier v. Anselv, 51 D. 408.

Where defendant bid off at auction a portion of a quantity of hay, — held, that to constitute a delivery of it, separation of the portion so bid off from the residue, and an offer and an acceptance by the buyer were necessary. Messer v. Woodman, 53 D. 241.

Property in twenty-eight barrels of flour passes to vendee as being sufficiently selected and separated, where the vendee purchased fifty barrels constituting part of a larger number at a railroad depot, received an order from the vendor upon the railroad company for a delivery thereof, and presented the same to the company, and obtained in return a "flour check," or order upon a clerk whose business it was to deliver such freight accordingly, under which twenty-two barrels were delivered to the vendee, but the remaining twenty-eight barrels were by mistake delivered to some unauthorized third person. Hall v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 92 D. 783.

Measuring and marking wood is good delivery to pass the property to a purchaser, where the wood is left on the vendor's land in a common pile with other wood, with license to the purchaser to remove it within a year; but if the buyer becomes insolvent before payment and before the wood is actually removed, the vendor may hold it against the assignee in insolvency until the price is paid, though a credit which is unexpired has been given. Arnold v. Delano, 50 D. 754.

Measuring and setting apart goods are not essential to a perfect sale, except when it is necessary in order to define the subject-matter. Winslow v. Leonard, 62 D. 354.

Delivery, weighing, and setting aside goods are only circumstances from which the intention of the parties to the sale, as to the vesting of title, may be inferred as a matter of fact. Id.

40. Delivery of cumbersome articles. — Constructive delivery of bulky articles, such as pig-iron, at a distance from the place of contract, in care of an agent, is sufficient to pass the title upon a present sale. Van Brunt v. Pile, 45 D. 126.

It is a good constructive delivery of bulky goods in care of an agent of the vendor at a distant place, for both the vendor and the vendee to notify him of the sale, and for the vendee to instruct him to ship the articles to his agent at another place, he agreeing to comply with such instructions. Id.

Actual delivery of ponderous goods is not required, and constructive delivery may be implied from various acts, among which are designating them for the use of the purchaser by marking, or removing them for the purpose of being delivered. Hall v. Richardson, 77 D. 303.

In case of an agreement to manufacture and deliver heavy machinery, an actual tender is not necessary, but readiness and an offer to deliver is sufficient to maintain an action for the price. Smith v. Wheeler, 33 R. 698.

Delivery of a lot of iron, of great weight, in a pile by itself, after an agreement as to its price, by the vendor saying to the vendee, "I deliver this iron to you, at that price," is sufficient under the statute of frauds. Gallins v. Lockwood, 42 D. 729.

41. Delivery to carrier. — Delivery to a carrier or warehouseman named or indicated by the buyer, is a delivery to the buyer, and the goods so delivered will be at the risk of the buyer, without notice of delivery, unless the parties contract that notice of delivery shall be given. Bradford v. Marbury, 46 D. 264. S. P., Diversey v. Kellogg, 92 D. 154; Kruidler v. Ellison, 7 R. 402.

*Delivery of goods forwarded C. O. D., see note, 51 R. 570-572.

Where the contract of purchase is silent as to the method of delivery, a delivery by the vendor to a common carrier in the usual course of business, transfers the title to the vendee. Magruder v. Gage, 3 R. 177. Contra, see Loyd v. Wight, 65 D. 638.

Flour purchased for shipment is delivered to purchaser by being marked with the initials of the purchaser and of the ship, and being delivered to the proper agent of the ship. Hall v. Richardson, 77 D. 303.

Delivery to the master or agent of a vessel, where goods are designed for shipment, is equivalent to delivery to the purchaser. Id.

Where a manufacturer in one city receives an order for goods through his agent in another city for a customer there, and ships them by a common carrier at the place of manufacture, title ordinarily passes at the place of shipment, although payment is made to the agent at the other place. Sar Becker v. State, 56 R. 624.

The shipment of goods, pursuant to a contract by which the consignor was to pay the freight, and the consignee, after sale, was to credit the consignor with the proceeds, does not vest title in the consignee, in the absence of a bill of lading or notice to him of the shipment. First Nat. Bank v. McAndrews, 51 R. 51.

Plaintiff, a resident of Wisconsin, sued defendant, a resident of Iowa, on account for intoxicating liquors sold and delivered pursuant to an oral order given in Iowa. Defendant answered that the sale was in violation of an Iowa statute. Plaintiff replied that the sale was also void under the Iowa statute of frauds, but that plaintiff had avoided the effect of both statutes by delivering the goods to a carrier in Wisconsin for transportation, in accordance with an agreement at the time of sale. On demurrer, — held, that the answer was good and the reply was bad. Kehwert v. Meyer, 30 R. 206.

42. — or other third person. — The personal representatives of a purchaser dying after the contract is closed, may receive delivery of the goods. Mactier v. Frith, 21 D. 262.

Delivery of goods to a servant or agent of a purchaser is equivalent to a delivery to such purchaser. Bonner v. Marsh, 48 D. 754.

Delivery to a warehouseman may be complete delivery to the buyer, although the seller takes the receipts in his own name, unless his intention in so taking them was to preserve the right of property in himself. Bradford v. Marbury, 46 D. 264.

Title to property delivered to a warehouseman indicated by the buyer, vests in him, though the warehouseman may have a lien on it for his charges. Id.

43. Constructive and symbolic delivery. — Constructive delivery by a vendor of chattels is insufficient to pass the right of property. Pleasants v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726.

In a contract of sale, delivery may be symbolical or by implication, when the article is not in possession of the seller. Cocks v. Chapman, 44 D. 536.

In determining whether chattels have been delivered constructively, the intention of the parties, if it can be collected from what they have said and done, will largely govern. Sahlman v. Mills, 51 D. 630.

Constructive delivery is a mixed question of law and fact, and the circumstances or facts necessary to constitute it must be found by the jury, as in actual delivery. Atwell v. Miller, 61 D. 294.

On a sale of flour in barrels of different brands in a warehouse, where the vendor gives the vendee a bill of parcels specifying the number of barrels of each brand with an order on the warehouseman for their delivery, and receives the vendee's check in payment, giving a receipt in full, the contract is completely executed, and vests the property in the vendee, so that a subsequent loss before actual delivery falls upon him. Pleasants v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726.

Where the vendor and vendee of a horse in the keeping of a third person write to that person on the day of sale, the one that he is no longer responsible for the keeping of the animal, the other that he is answerable for the keeping from that date, these acts constitute a sufficient delivery as against a subsequent attaching creditor of the vendor. Tuxworth v. Moore, 20 D. 479.

Where the owner of corn gave an order on the agent at the depot where the corn was to arrive, to deliver six hundred and twenty-five bags to a person designated, and the agent recognized the person's right to the property—held, that there was a constructive delivery. Sahlman v. Mills, 51 D. 630.

It is not a constructive delivery of hay as a chattel, so as to pass title to it, as against third persons, under a sale of grass with an agreement that the vendor shall cut it at the proper time, to pluck a handful of the half-grown grass, and deliver it to the purchaser in the field. Lamson v. Patch, 81 D. 765.

To constitute a constructive delivery of wood sold, so as to entitle the seller to recover the contract price, he should set it apart for the purchaser, and relinquish his own control of it, at or as near to the place of delivery as is reasonably practicable. Webber v. Minor, 99 D. 688.

Symbolical delivery of a large number of logs landed on a stream, preparatory to driving, is sufficient delivery, even as against subsequent purchasers, where a survey of the logs is made by a person mutually agreed upon by the parties to the sale, and the vendee's mark is put upon the logs as they are thus landed, although the vendor is bound by the contract of sale to deliver the logs at a specified place which is many miles below the landing. Bethel S. M. Co. v. Brown, 99 D. 752.

44 — by endorsement of bill of lading. — A mere endorsement of a bill of lading, without a delivery thereof, does not transfer the property in the goods. Buffington v. Curtis, 8 D. 115.

A consignment of goods by bill of lading vests the property in the consignee when made in pursuance of prior contract with the consignee, and not otherwise. Bonner v. Marat, 48 D. 754.

45. — or warehouse receipt, or order. — A usage to sell flour in store by order, and to pass it by the transfer of the order from hand to hand, without actual delivery of the flour, is reasonable and lawful. Pleasants v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726.

Where one has a large number of barrels of flour in a warehouse, and sells the entire quantity to several separate purchasers, giving to each his delivery order upon his warehouseman, if the purchasers all surrender their several orders to the warehouseman without making any separation, but voluntarily leave the flour standing on the books to the credit of each for his proper number of barrels, the delivery to each purchaser is complete. When each purchaser presented his order, he was entitled to a separation of his number of barrels from the mass, or not, at his election. Horv v. Barker, 70 D. 791.

Warehouse receipts were delivered, one for 3,600 hams weighing 50,400 pounds, and another for 8,250 hams, without stating the weight, all marked "K. F. & Co., Eclipse." These hams were part of a great quantity all marked in the same way, and were not separated or distinguished in any way from the rest. Held, that such receipts gave no title. Ferguson v. Northern Bank &c., 29 R. 418.

46. Delivery by bill of sale. — Where the property is not in the seller's possession, at the time of sale, but the consideration is paid and fraud is neither alleged nor fairly deducible from the evidence, a symbolical delivery, by means of a bill of sale, is valid, as against a subsequent attaching creditor. Cocks v. Chapman, 44 D. 536.

A delivery of a bill of sale to a third person by the vendor, for the use and benefit of the vendee, and possession taken of the property as soon as convenient, constitutes a valid transfer. Buffington v. Curtis, 8 D. 115.

A bill of sale of a negro registered, but not proved by two witnesses, passes the title as between the parties. Williams v. Walton, 29 D. 122.

The mere delivery, for value, of a bill of sale of a chattel to the purchaser does not vest title in him as against a subsequent attaching creditor of the vendee. Dempsey v. Gardner, 34 R. 389.

The mere execution of a bill of sale of cattle roaming at large, in which the brand with which they are marked is described, accompanied by a delivery of the branding-iron, does not constitute a delivery of possession of the cattle. Walden v. Murdock, 83 D. 185.

Where a vendor executes a deed of real estate, and also a bill of sale of the personal property thereon, but includes in such bill of sale other personalty not on the land conveyed, the latter-named personal property, without further change of possession, does not vest in the vendee as against subsequent attaching creditors of the vendor. Sharon v. Shaw, 90 D. 548.

A husband, for a good consideration, conveyed cattle to his wife by an absolute bill of sale, which he delivered to her. The cattle were at the time upon the husband's farm, where both he and the wife resided. No other delivery of the cattle was made, and they remained and were used upon the farm as before. The cattle having afterward been attached on a writ against the husband,—held, in replevin by the wife, that there was no sufficient delivery of the cattle from the husband to the wife. McKee v. Garcelon, 11 R. 200.

47. Necessity of acceptance. — A manufactured article continues to be the manufacturer's property until completed, tendered, and accepted by the party ordering it. There must be proof of acceptance, or of acts or words respecting it, from which an acceptance may be inferred. Moody v. Brown, 56 D. 640. But if the purchaser has notice of the completion of the articles, and makes no objection to them, his acceptance will be presumed. McIntyre v. Kline, 64 D. 163.

Leaving a manufactured article with the party that has ordered it will not transfer title to him, if done against his will. Moody v. Brown, 56 D. 640.

Property in a manufactured article passes to the party ordering it, without tender and acceptance of it, when he employs a superintendent, and pays for it by installments as the work is performed. Id.

Property in goods of a different quality from those ordered does not vest in purchaser until he accepts them with a knowledge of their quality, or after he has a reasonable opportunity of determining their quality; and the question of acceptance is one for the jury. Diversy v. Kellogg, 92 D. 154.

48. Sufficiency of acceptance. — The purchaser's right to repudiate a parol sale of goods must be exercised immediately upon their delivery to him, or he will be regarded as having accepted them. Spencer v. Hale, 73 D. 309.

Where articles are partly consumed by the buyer before signifying his acceptance of the offer to sell, the contract is nevertheless rendered binding on both parties by such acceptance. Mactier v. Fritch, 21 D. 262.

49. Effect of refusal to accept. — A purchaser is not bound to accept goods of a different quality from those ordered, but may, upon learning of their quality, within a reasonable time, give notice that he declines to receive them, and thereby avoid liability. Diversy v. Kellogg, 92 D. 154.

Notice of refusal of buyer to accept goods delivered in pursuance of a verbal sale is not invalid because it does not come from the hand or mouth of the buyer himself, if it comes from a third party by his direction. Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, 96 D. 533.

50. Payment, generally. — Payment of earnest money does not necessarily transfer title to the specific property for which it has been given. Jennings v. Flanagan, 30 D. 683.

A vendee offering payment in notes of the vendor, after delivery of the goods, where he has promised to pay cash, is not guilty of fraud if he did not contemplate payment in such notes at the time of the purchase or delivery. Chapman v. Lathrop, 16 D. 433.

A note or acceptance given at time of purchase does not destroy vendor's right of action on the original agreement for the sale of the goods, but it is a payment sub modo, and suspends the right to sue for the price until the expiration of the credit, and operates to pass title to the vendee, subject, of course, to the vendor's lien, if he has not parted with possession, or to his right of stoppage if the goods are in transitu. Hall v. Richardson, 77 D. 303.

Subsequent failure of the purchaser to pay a draft accepted by him for purchase-price of goods does not affect the question of title. If one sells to another who becomes insolvent before payment, the property in the goods passes to the purchaser, though the seller may have a remedy for the price by lien or stoppage in transitu, according to the situs of the property at the time of the failure to pay. Id.

A sale of merchandise, where the seller draws a draft for the purchase-money on the buyer at one day after sight, is a sale on credit, though indefinite as to time of payment because of the uncertainty when the draft will be accepted. Id.

A contract to pay purchase price of land in wheat of a certain quality, at a specified price per bushel, in annual installments of a specified amount, is equivalent to a contract for the sale of the amounts of wheat to be delivered at the times and price specified; the vendor is entitled to the wheat, or in default thereof, he may recover its actual value at the time specified for its delivery; and the vendee has no right to pay in money, instead of wheat, the amount of the purchase price. And more especially will this rule apply where the contract signifies the intention of the parties that the mode of payment shall not be at the option of the debtor, as where it provides that he may pay more in each year, provided that the additional payments shall be made in wheat at the stipulated price, or in cash, as the vendor may elect. Starr v. Light, 99 D. 55.

The plaintiff agreed to buy of the defendant the cattle of a certain brand, then running in the defendant's herd, but of an uncertain number, at a fixed price per head, and paid down a certain amount, but no time was fixed for delivery or completing the payment. The plaintiff notified the defendant that he would receive the cattle on a certain day, and on that day the defendant tendered the cattle, and the plaintiff offered in payment a check payable two days after sight. The defendant refused to accept anything but cash, and declined to deliver the cattle. Some days afterwards the plaintiff tendered the balance of the price, and later on the same day the defendant tendered the part paid. Both tenders were refused, and the plaintiff brought replevin. Held, not maintainable. Beauchamp v. Archer, 41 R. 266.

51. Delivery a condition precedent to payment.—Under a contract to sell and deliver a certain amount of cotton within a given time, and at an agreed price per pound, the seller has no right to demand payment until the whole is delivered. He has no right to demand payment, as a part is delivered, and declare the contract forfeited for a refusal to pay for the part so delivered. Kenigsberger v. Wingate, 98 D. 512.

52. When delivery and payment should be simultaneous acts.—Where one sells goods to be paid for in cash, no time of payment being specified, payment and delivery are simultaneous acts, and the vendor may refuse to part with the goods until payment. Chapman v. Lathrop, 16 D. 433.

When nothing is said, and no time stipulated as to payment, the sale is understood to be for cash, and the payment and delivery are concurrent acts, and the vendor may refuse to deliver without payment; and if payment is not made immediately, the sale becomes void. Southwestern Freight etc. Co. v. Standard, 100 D. 255.

Delivery of chattels sold and payment of price are concurrent acts when time and place of delivery are not agreed upon; and neither party can maintain an action for non-performance without showing readiness and willingness to perform. Cole v. Swanston, 52 D. 258.

* Promise to pay on delivery, what necessary to put promisor in default, see note, 46 R. 307-222.

The vendee is liable for the value of a cow upon delivery, where they directed her to be delivered at their slaughter house, and agreed to pay as much for her as though they had previously seen her, and she was accordingly delivered, but the vendee, not finding her as good as expected, ordered her to be turned out, whereby she was lost. The delivery and sale are unconditional, and the price is conditional; but even if the sale were on condition, the vendee would be liable as bailee. Neally v. Wilhelm, 61 D. 118.

53. Effect of delivery without payment.—Absolute delivery of goods sold is a waiver of antecedent conditions. Chapman v. Lathrop, 16 D. 433.

Delivery of goods, sold for cash, without payment, passes the property, and the vendee may avail himself of any legal set-off, notwithstanding his agreement to pay ready money. Id.

A delivery and acceptance of goods, before the day of payment, passes the legal title to the vendee. Ford v. Sproule, 12 D. 439.

Upon a contract to deliver articles at a particular time and place for a specified price, the party bound thereby, after making delivery in the manner agreed upon, if the price be not paid, may remove the articles and resell them and may recover upon the original contract as for a breach thereof. McCombs v. McKennan, 37 D. 505.

A contract for sale of three hundred barrels of flour, to be delivered in lots of one hundred barrels, each lot to be paid for on delivery, is severable, and delivery and receipt of payment for the last two lots do not constitute a waiver of any rights of the seller arising out of an unauthorized delivery of the first lot by a railroad company to the purchaser without payment made. Sawyer v. Chicago & N. W. R'y Co., 99 D. 49.

2. Conditional Sales.

54. When a sale is conditional.—Where property is sold and delivered by one to another, and the vendee admits the title to be in the vendor, and to remain there until such property is fully paid for, the transaction amounts to a conditional sale. Crocker v. Gullifer, 69 D. 118.

The delivery of wool to manufacture into cloth, upon the condition that the wool and cloth are to be the property of the deliverer until the payment of the price agreed to be paid for the wool, the price to be paid in six months, is a conditional sale. Barrett v. Pritchard, 13 D. 449.

An agreement by a bona fide purchaser at a sheriff's sale, that the former owner may repurchase within a given time, is a conditional sale. Barrington v. Harper, 20 D. 145.

* See note on condition in sale, reserving title to vendor, 43 R. 124, 125.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The onus of proving that by the execution of a defeasance simultaneously with an absolute conveyance, the parties intended the transaction to be a conditional sale, lies upon the party maintaining that such was the intention. Id.

A sale of chattels is not conditional where an absolute bill of sale is given acknowledging payment at a stipulated price, although it is provided that in case the vendee sells for more than a specified sum, the vendor is to have the overplus after deducting the expenses of sale, and that the vendor is to transport the property to a certain place, free of expense to the vendee. Jewett v. Lincoln, 31 D. 36.

The sale is consummated in such a case as between the parties, by designating and setting apart the articles for the vendee from the mass of which they are a part. Id.

Whether an alleged sale is absolute or conditional, is a question of fact for the jury. Ross v. Story, 44 D. 121.

An absolute sale accompanied by delivery of property, with a stipulation that the purchase-money should be paid at a future day, and that on the payment the vendor should make "proper title" to the wife of the vendee, is not a conditional sale. The retention of title by the vendor is merely a security for the payment of the purchase-money in the nature of a mortgage. Weaver v. Lapeley, 94 D. 671.

Where a person gave an instrument in writing to another, stating that he had received from the latter thirty pounds, and had placed in his possession a slave as security, and that if the thirty pounds were not paid on or before a certain day the slave should become his property for the said thirty pounds; — held, that this was a conditional sale, which became absolute on the failure to pay the thirty pounds on the day specified. Chapman v. Turner, 1 D. 514.

Under a written agreement, a piano worth seven hundred dollars was delivered to a purchaser, who, on taking it, paid fifty dollars, which was called the rent of the piano for the first month, and he was to pay fifty dollars at the beginning of each month thereafter for thirteen months; the piano to become the property of the purchaser in the event of his paying seven hundred dollars within the thirteen months, all past payments of rent to count as a part of the seven hundred dollars, — held, that this transaction, though called a lease, was not such, but a conditional sale of the piano, with a right of rescission on the part of the vendor in the event that the purchaser should fail in paying the installments; and that if, while in the purchaser's possession, it was levied upon by his creditors, the vendor's lien would have to yield. Murch v. Wright, 95 D. 456.

H. sold and delivered a house car to P.,

under a bill of sale providing that "said H. reserves the right from said car until fully paid, but said P. shall have the use of said car from date; should said P. fail to comply with this agreement, said H. shall have the right to take said car from said P. as his property." Held, that it was a conditional sale, and that the car might be taken under execution by P.'s judgment creditor. Haas v. Linderman, 3 R. 612.

An organ was delivered on a written agreement for a specified "rent," part of which was paid in a melodeon delivered by the vendee, and part in a note executed by him, payable in about two years, "with the understanding that if I shall have punctually paid all said rent, I shall be entitled to a bill of sale of the organ, and if I fail to pay any of said rent when due, all my rights herein shall terminate, and said H. may take possession of said organ." The organ having been returned, — held, that no action could be maintained by the vendor on the note, the transaction being not a lease, but a conditional sale. Hins v. Roberts, 40 R. 170.

55. Distinction between conditional sale and mortgage. — The distinction between a mortgage and a conditional sale is this: if the relation of debtor and creditor remains, and a debt still subsists between the parties, it is a mortgage; but if the debt is extinguished by the agreement of the parties, or the money advanced was not by way of loan, and the grantor has the privilege of refunding if he pleases by a given time, and thereby entitling himself to a reconveyance, it is a conditional sale. Slowsy v. McMurray, 72 D. 251.

A contract for the transfer of property, by the terms of which the purchaser advances a part of the purchase money, and the seller reserves the right to abrogate the contract by returning the money so advanced with interest, at a particular time; and if not so abrogated, the contract to be executed by the purchaser paying the residue of the purchase money, and the seller surrendering the possession of the property, is a conditional sale and not a mortgage. Moss v. Green, 24 D. 731.

Retention of possession by a vendor will not change the nature of a conditional sale, so as to render the same a mortgage. Id.

A contract by which mares are delivered to a person to work and use, keeping them upon the place he was then occupying, the mares to become his property upon the payment of one hundred dollars balance of the purchase price, but to remain the property of the original owner until such payment, is a valid contract, and is a conditional sale, not a mortgage. Dunbar v. Rawles, 92 D. 311.

Equity will not treat a conditional sale as

* Conditional sale, distinguished from mortgage, see note, 50 D. 196-197.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

a mortgage, except upon equitable grounds and to prevent fraud. Id.

Equity will not treat a conditional sale as a mortgage at the instance of a purchaser from the vendee in the conditional sale, who within an hour after his purchase was fully informed by the vendee that he had no title, and was tendered back the price paid, but refused to receive it and restore the property. Id.

56. Rights of the parties, generally. — On a conditional sale the condition must be strictly performed, and the tender made with all the formalities required by law. Hickman v. Cantrell, 30 D. 396.

Failure to comply with the conditions of an agreement to resell, within the time stipulated, will deprive the vendor of the benefits resulting from the agreement, and render the sale absolute and indefeasible. Munsterlin v. Birmingham, 34 D. 402.

A conditional sale passes the title to the vendee, with a reservation to the vendor, of a right to repurchase the property at a fixed price and specified time. Lockett v. Townsend, 49 D. 723.

A clause in a bill of sale of an unfinished chattel allowing the vendee the right to take the same at will does not authorize the vendee at his election, to repudiate the contract and annul the sale. Bartlett v. Blake, 58 D. 775.

A sale on condition that vendee may return the chattel in a specified time becomes absolute, and the obligation to pay the price becomes unconditional, if during that time the vendee disables himself from performing the condition by substantially injuring the chattel. Ray v. Thompson, 59 D. 187.

An executory contract of sale binds parties to performance of concurrent acts, and neither party can demand a performance by the other without allegation and proof of his own readiness and ability to perform his part of the agreement. Grandy v. McCleese, 64 D. 574; Slowe v. McMurray, 72 D. 251.

A waiver of conditions of sale as to price is not effected by asking for and being promised security for payment, no security in fact ever having been given. Sargent v. Metcalf, 66 D. 368.

The vendor, if guilty of no laches, may reclaim the property even from a vendee in good faith and without notice. Crocker v. Gullifer, 69 D. 118.

A chattel sold under conditional sale is in constructive possession of seller, and an action may be maintained without a demand in case of a conversion by the purchaser. Id.

Sale and delivery of goods upon condition that title shall not pass until the payment of price vests in the vendee no title which he can convey to a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration. Under such contract the vendee takes no more than a mere right of possession. Dunbar v. Randles, 92 D. 311; and the vendor's delay of eight months in enforcing his rights against a second purchaser will not prejudice his case. Burbank v. Crocker, 66 D. 470.

A vendor in a conditional sale is entitled to recover in replevin or trover from any purchaser from his vendee the full value of the property, if a return cannot be had, though a less sum was due from the vendee on his contract, for the absolute title is in the vendor. Dunbar v. Randles, 92 D. 311.

Whether or not the purchaser from the vendee may avail himself of the rights of his vendor to acquire title, quære. Id.

Under a conditional sale with reservation of right in the vendor to repurchase, he must exercise promptness and precision on his part in the assertion of his right, or it will be lost, especially when the vendee pays a fair valuation for the property. Beck v. Blue, 94 D. 630.

Where, in a conditional sale with reservation of right to purchase in the vendor no time is expressed in which such right must be exercised, it must be performed, or an offer made to perform, within a reasonable time. Id.

A conditional sale with reservation of right to repurchase in the vendor vests an adverse title in the vendee, subject to the defeasance, and the purchase money paid becomes the absolute property of the vendor. Id.

In a conditional sale with reservation of right to repurchase in the vendor, his long delay in offering to repurchase may be excused by and with the consent and approbation of the vendee; but such assent terminates with his death, and the right must be exercised within a reasonable time thereafter. Eleven months after the commencement of the executor's possession, and eight months after his sale of the property, is an unreasonable time at which to seek to exercise the right to repurchase. Id.

Where a contract is made for the sale and delivery of specified articles of personal property, under circumstances where the title does not vest in the vendee, and the property is destroyed by an accident before delivery without the fault of the vendor, the latter is not liable upon the contract for damages sustained by the vendee. Dexter v. Norton, 7 R. 415.

A. buys from B., administrator, etc., certain property, for which he gives his note, the sale to become absolute when A. should furnish security for the payment of said note; A. is afterwards appointed guardian of the children of B.'s intestate, and A. and B. agree that A. shall hold the above purchase price, and charge himself with it as guardian: Held, that the agreement was good, and that the sale became absolute. Wilson v. Soper, 58 D. 573.

A mare, being with foal, was sold on condition that she was to "remain the property of the vendor until paid for,"—held, that the colt subsequently foaled continued the property of the vendor until performance of the condition. Allen v. Delano, 92 D. 573.

A contract provided that the plaintiff should deliver a certain quantity of lumber, at a certain rate, monthly, commencing at a specified date, to be paid for on arrival with bill of lading. One shipment only was made, three months after the appointed time, with no bill of lading, and was accepted without objection. Held, that the plaintiff could recover therefor. Ohio Falls Car Co. v. Menies, 46 R. 195.

The plaintiff let and the defendant hired a piano, price $140, for twenty-seven months, $5 down, and $5 to be paid monthly, the piano to become the defendant's property when all was paid, and in case of default the plaintiff to have the right to retake it, the defendant's right to cease, and the money paid to be forfeited. Held, a conditional sale and not a lease, and that the plaintiff had no ground of action for failure to pay the monthly rent, but could only retake his property and retain the money paid. Loomis v. Bragg, 47 R. 638.

On a sale, on February twenty-second, of iron "for prompt shipment," the iron was the next day put on board ship, in a German river, frozen over and unnavigable, forty miles from the sea, and so remained till April third. Held, that prompt shipment was a condition precedent, and that the known unnavigable condition of the river did not excuse the delay. Tobias v. Lissberger, 59 R. 509.

57. Conditional delivery, and its effect.—A voluntary delivery of goods sold on condition, without any reference to the condition, and followed by no demand for the performance of the condition, until after the goods were attached by the vendee's creditors, will be a waiver of the condition as regards such creditors. Smith v. Dennis, 17 D. 368.

To constitute a conditional delivery the condition must be expressed. People v. Haynes, 28 D. 530.

Goods sold on condition that security for the purchase-price be given do not pass absolutely to the vendee, where such security is not given, although the goods were removed by the vendee without objection. Whitwell v. Vincent, 16 D. 355.

In such a case, if the vendee sell the goods and take a negotiable note, which he transfers to a creditor having full knowledge of the facts, an action of assumpsit will not lie by the original vendor against the creditor, the note being unpaid, as such a form of action is an affirmation of the sale. Id.

Personal property may be sold conditionally, the same as real property. Possession, although prima facie evidence of ownership, may be rebutted. Mount v. Harris, 40 D. 89.

When a manufacturer and wholesale vendor of wagons sells upon credit and delivers them to a retail dealer for the apparent and implied purpose of resale, a condition that the title shall remain in the vendor until the purchase price is paid, is fraudulent and void as against a purchaser from the vendee. Winchester Wagon Manuf. Co. v. Carman, 58 R. 382.

3. When the Title Passes.

58. As between the parties. 1. In general.—Delivery of goods to a purchaser on a fair contract, without any fraudulent contrivance to obtain possession, passes the property, and the vendor cannot maintain trover for such goods in case of non-payment of the purchase-money. Chapman v. Lathrop, 16 D. 433.

When separation is unnecessary as to part of the articles included in a contract, though it may be as to the rest, title may pass as to the former, though not as to the latter. Pleasant v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726.

An absolute delivery of a chattel pursuant to a bargain perfect, or capable of being made so by reference to something else, or to an arbiter, vests the ownership in the purchaser. And therefore, a sale of a raft of boards at so much per thousand feet, and delivery thereof to the buyer, changes the property, although the number of feet contained therein remains to be ascertained. Scott v. Wells, 40 D. 568.

Where a chattel has been unconditionally sold and delivered, no subsequent negotiations in reference thereto, that afterwards fail, can alter the terms of the sale so as to affect the title of the property. Id.

Title to personal property does not pass to a vendee by sale thereof without delivery until the goods sold are specifically identified by the parties to the sale. Golder v. Ogden, 53 D. 618.

Vesting of title to goods sold depends upon intention of parties, except where the vendor has no title, or the subject-matter has not been specified. Winslow v. Leonard, 62 D. 354.

Title to goods sold may vest in vendee, even while the vendor has such remaining control over the goods as entitles him to a lien for unpaid purchase money, or to the right of stoppage in transitu, or to the right of rescinding the sale, if there be no occasion for the exercise of these rights. Id.

The seller's taking a receipt in his own name for goods sold for shipment, upon delivering them to the warehouseman of the ship's agents, will not overcome the legal effect of the delivery to such warehouseman of the goods marked with the initials of the purchaser and of the ship after the acceptance by the latter of a draft for the purchase-money drawn by the seller upon him. From these acts, unexplained, it must be concluded that the property was transferred to the purchaser, and the title of the seller divested. Hall v. Richardson, 77 D. 303.

Where a certain number of barrels of No. 1 mackerel are sold, and by mistake some barrels of No. 3 mackerel and some barrels of salt are delivered, no title to the articles thus delivered by mistake passes to the purchaser. Gardner v. Lane, 85 D. 779.

Where, under a sale of a number of barrels of mackerel, delivery is made which includes some mackerel packed in half-barrels, the title will pass to the purchaser if the property is of the same kind and quality as that which the parties intended to include in their agreement. Id.

Title to chattels does not pass by bill of sale while they remain in the hands of the collector of the port with the duties unpaid, since by the laws of Congress no delivery can be effected until the duties are paid. United States v. Murdock, 89 D. 651.

Title to goods does not pass when either the operation of counting, weighing, or measuring is necessary, in order to separate the goods from a larger mass of which they form a part; but when the entire mass is sold and must be measured, etc., simply to ascertain its price for the purpose of a settlement, the title passes. Cleveland v. Williams, 94 D. 274.

Plaintiff bought of defendant and paid for a building to be removed by a day designated, but did not remove it within the time stated. Held, that the title to the building did not revert in the defendant. Davis v. Emery, 14 R. 553.

On an oral sale of lumber, of unknown quantity, at an agreed price per thousand, nothing being said about measuring it, the question when title was intended to pass is one of fact. Morgan v. King, 57 R. 633.

The purchaser's failure to give notes as agreed, if not waived, prevents the title passing. Lapin v. Marie, 21 D. 256.

Vendor's title in goods is not divested by a sale to a purchaser who conceals his insolvency, and, at the time of the purchase, has no intention to pay for them, or who, by the fraudulent aid of a creditor to whom he has confessed judgment, buys such goods in order that such judgment creditor may levy execution upon them. Harris v. Alcock, 32 D. 158.

Absolute delivery of chattels to a vendee is a waiver of the condition of payment or giving notes or other security, and passes the title to the property. Lapin v. Marie, 21 D. 256.

2. When the sale is complete.—A sale of personal property is complete as soon as both parties have agreed to its terms. Shaddon v. Knott, 58 D. 63.

A sale is complete upon completion of the contract, and the right of property and of possession vest in the purchaser upon payment of the price and delivery of a bill of sale, without actual delivery of the property. Griffin v. Chubb, 58 D. 85.

A sale is complete, and passes title to the buyer, although the thing sold has not been measured or the quantity ascertained in any way, when it is apparent that it is the intention of the seller to transfer the title, and of the buyer to accept it. Sewell v. Eaton, 70 D. 471.

At common law, a sale is complete, and title passes at once, where the seller makes a proposition and the buyer accepts, and the goods are in the possession of the seller, and nothing remains to be done to identify them, or in any way prepare them for delivery. Cleveland v. Williams, 94 D. 274.

A sale is complete and title passes when the goods are delivered and the purchaser put in full possession and control of them; and the transfer of title is not suspended by a provision that payment is not to be made until after a resale. Blow v. Spear, 97 D. 412.

3. When title vests without actual delivery.—A sale of goods without an actual delivery to or possession by the vendee will vest the property in the vendee as against the administrator of the vendor, if the property be of such a nature and in such a situation that a personal possession is impracticable. Thus, a sale of logs lying in a boom, which were shown to the vendee, was held to be effectual to transfer the right of property. Jewett v. Warren, 7 D. 74.

Where a purchaser of chattels takes possession of part of them, and the key to the shop containing the residue is left with a third person for him by the vendor pursuant to an understanding between them, the property thereby passes so as to enable such purchaser to maintain trespass against a subsequent purchaser from the vendor who takes actual possession of the goods in the shop by borrowing the key from the person with whom it is left. Chappell v. Marvin, 16 D. 684.

Property in personal chattels may pass by a bargain and sale for sufficient consideration without delivery as between the parties, but delivery is necessary as to other persons. Fletcher v. Howard, 16 D. 686.

A bargain struck and payment of the purchase-money vests the property of a chattel in the vendee. Pleasant v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726.

A sale of a chattel becomes absolute as between parties without actual payment or delivery, when the terms of sale are agreed upon and the bargain is struck; and the title thereupon passes to the vendee, although the right to the possession does not pass until the price is paid or satisfactorily arranged. Wade v. Moffett, 74 D. 79.

A sale of large and cumbrous merchandise, as of grain in bulk, may pass the title without actual separation of the quantity sold from a larger mass with which it is mixed, if the acts and declarations of the parties clearly evince an intent to make immediate transfer of ownership. Kimberly v. Patchin, 75 D. 334.

Title to goods sold passes to the purchaser, independent of delivery, upon the acceptance by the purchaser of a draft drawn upon him by the seller for the purchase-money. Hall v. Richardson, 77 D. 303.

To pass title on a sale, either sale and delivery or sale and payment is sufficient, and it is erroneous for the court to instruct that the jury must find a sale, delivery, and payment. Id.

The sale of a specific, designated chattel, in the possession of a third person, where the purchase-money is paid in full at the date of sale, vests in the purchaser a perfect and complete title, though the actual possession of the chattel is not changed. Cassell v. Backtrack, 97 D. 436.

4. Subsequent liabilities of the parties.—A vendor of personal property is not liable for defects of any kind in the thing sold, unless there is an express warranty or fraud in him. Kingsbury v. Taylor, 50 D. 607.

When a contract of sale has been consummated, and the price paid and the property, though ready for delivery, is not removed by the vendee because not convenient for him to do so, he must bear the loss of its destruction by fire. Smith v. Nevitt, 12 D. 571.

A party who buys goods, to be delivered to another at a certain time, before which time they are destroyed by flood, must, if he bought them under a contract to sell, bear the loss; but if he bought them as agent for the second party, the loss is the principal's. Black v. Webb, 55 D. 456.

Where the owner of a large quantity of corn in bulk sells to another a certain number of bushels of it, and the vendee pays for the whole of what he buys and takes away a part thereof, leaving the rest for his convenience, without charge for storage, in the vendor's store, the property in the whole of the corn sold passes to the vendee, and is at his risk. Waldron v. Chase, 59 D. 56. S. P., Newhall v. Langdon, 48 R. 426.

A loss falls on the purchaser of goods, if after shipment of the amount and quality, in the manner directed, a portion is abstracted and others of an inferior quality substituted by third persons, so as to render the whole of an inferior quality. Diversy v. Kellogg, 92 D. 154.

A purchaser who receives and appropriates goods of a different kind from those ordered thereby makes them his own, and is liable to pay what they are reasonably worth. Id.

The purchaser of a chattel, being dissatisfied with it, re-shipped it to the seller, and, afterward, the chattel not having come to the seller's hands, paid him for it. Held, that the right of action against the carrier for its loss was in the purchaser. Ralph v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 14 R. 725.

59. *As against creditors.—Where goods are delivered upon lease to be paid for by installments, the title to remain in the vendor until full payment, the judgment creditors of the vendee may seize the same for their claims. Brunswick & B. Co. v. Hoover, 40 R. 674.

Goods being sold on credit, and shipped to the buyer, and he becoming insolvent subsequent to the sale, but the goods not being stopped in transit, title vests in his assignee on delivery. McElroy v. Seery, 48 R. 110.

A stock of goods, old and new, was sold, the new at invoice prices, the old at prices to be agreed on at a fixed time, the purchaser giving his notes for the estimated price of the whole, to be increased or diminished according to the eventual agreement as to the old goods. The goods were delivered. Before any agreement as to the price of the old goods a creditor of the seller attached the goods. Held, that title had passed and the creditor got no lien. Shealy v. Edwards, 49 R. 43.

T. sold to plaintiff part of a growing crop of corn, designating the part sold by cutting off the tops of one row. Plaintiff paid $80 in cash, but, by the terms of the sale, T. was to cut and shock a part of the corn, and to gather the remainder, and the corn was then to be measured and paid for by the bushel. Subsequently, the said corn was levied on by virtue of an execution against T. In a proceeding to try the right of property, there was evidence tending to show that it was the intention of the parties that the sale should be complete and absolute at the time it was made. Held, that an instruction to the jury that, if the vendee was to cut and measure the corn, and it was then to be paid for by the bushel, no title passed to the vendee, and the property was liable to the execution, was error. Whether title passed or not was a question of intention, and was for the jury. Graff v. Fück, 11 R. 85.

S. agreed in writing to buy of L. five bales of cotton weighing 480 pounds each, at eleven cents a pound. At the time the cotton was in bulk on L.'s premises, and he was to haul it to M.'s gin, and after it was ginned and packed, to haul the bales to *Change of possession and delivery, what sufficient as against creditors and subsequent purchasers, see note, 97 D. 340-343.

Canton. He hauled a portion to the gin, and it was ginned and packed, but before it was hauled to Canton it was attached by a creditor of L. Held, that title had not passed to S. Smith v. Sparkman, 30 R. 537.

60. Where the sale is conditional. — On conditional sales the title to the goods remains in the vendor, until the performance of the condition, as against creditors of the vendee. Barrett v. Pritchard, 13 D. 449; Hussey v. Thornton, 3 D. 224; Lucy v. Bundy, 32 D. 369; Ross v. Story, 44 D. 121; Parris v. Roberts, 55 D. 415; Cole v. Berry, 36 R. 511; Leais v. McCabe, 44 R. 217; and the vendor, in each case of non-performance, may re-possess himself of the goods even as against creditors of the vendee. Aukman v. Mallory, 25 R. 478; and the condition is not waived by the seller's merely taking the purchaser's notes for the price. Heinbockle v. Zuphanna, 51 R. 59.

Title to a chattel passes by delivery thereof to a person under a promise by him either to return it or pay a sum of money therefor on a certain day, and he may sell the chattel before that day. Dearborn v. Turner, 33 D. 630.

Where goods are sold and delivered on a written order, what is used to be accounted for and the balance returned, title to the whole passes on delivery, and parole evidence of a contrary understanding is inadmissible. Hotchkins v. Higgins, 52 R. 582.

A conditional sale and delivery of chattels passes no title until conditions are performed, although the vendor knew the purchaser was a dealer, and had no use for the chattels except for resale; and a party who purchases the chattels in good faith from the vendee acquires no right thereto as against the original vendor, if no laches can be imputed to the latter in asserting his claim. Sargent v. Metcalf, 66 D. 368.

Where the vendor of personal property expressly stipulates that title shall not pass to vendee until the price is paid, a sale by the latter, before performance of the condition, to a third person who had no notice of the stipulation, conveys no title. Bailey v. Harris, 74 D. 312.

On the sale of a dam, reserving an unborn foal, the foal remains the property of the seller, even as against one who innocently buys the dam from the first purchaser before the birth of the foal. Andrews v. Cox, 43 R. 68.

61. — or executory.* — In case of a sale and delivery of goods title passes to the vendee, but in case of a mere contract for a sale, the title remains with the original owner. Jennings v. Gage, 58 D. 476.

Where, on an executory contract for a sale at a future time, an agreement is made, whereby the goods pass into the possession of the bargainee, the sale is not completed so as to subject the goods to attachment at the suit of the bargainee's creditors, until the act contemplated is done, or the condition performed. Reed v. Upton, 20 D. 545.

A contract to deliver goods, not in case, at a future day, will not operate to vest title to the goods in the proposed purchaser, upon their being tendered to him, if it is provided in the contract that the goods are to be thereafter produced by cultivating the earth, they to be of certain qualities or grades, and to be delivered at a specified time to the vendee. He has a right first to examine them and determine whether they are of the required standard or not. If he refuses them, the title will not pass. Rider v. Kelley, 76 D. 176.

Retention of property delivered under an executory contract is an admission that the contract has been performed. Reed v. Randall, 86 D. 305.

A sale of personal property to be subsequently acquired conveys no title to such property when acquired, which is valid at law against the vendor or his voluntary assignee, unless after acquisition possession of such property is given to the vendee, or taken by him. Williams v. Briggs, 23 R. 518. But if, after acquisition by the vendor, the vendee, by delivery from, or by consent of, the vendor takes possession of the property under the conveyance, the title to the property both in law and equity vests in the vendee without further conveyance or bill of sale. Cook v. Corthell, 23 R. 518.

A sale of fish hereafter to be caught, passes no title to the fish when caught. Lois v. Pew, 11 R. 357.

A manufacturer cannot recover the value of an article manufactured until the property has passed from him to the customer. Moody v. Brown, 56 D. 640. That the work is inspected and approved by the purchaser as it proceeds, and that installments of the price are paid from time to time, make no difference. Andrews v. Durant, 62 D. 55.

It is competent, however, for the parties to the contract to agree in express terms that the property in an unfinished vessel shall pass from the builder and vest in the purchaser on the payment of installments of the price, if such be their meaning and intention. Hall v. Green, 71 D. 96.

Title to manufactured property is changed from manufacturer to customer only by the assent of both parties. Moody v. Brown, 56 D. 640.

A mere order given for the manufacture of an article does not affect the title. Id.

Under an executory contract to build a thing not yet in being, where no time is fixed when the property shall vest in the person for whom the thing is being built, a court cannot say, as a matter of law, that because the contract contains a provision for payment of the price by installments according to the progress of the work, it was the intention of the parties that the property in the unfinished article should vest in the party for whom it was built upon payment of the first installment; and especially would this be so where, under the contract, he was not bound to accept the article until after completion and inspection under terms provided in the agreement. Hall v. Green, 71 D. 96.

Contract to manufacture and furnish articles from materials to be supplied by the purchaser does not vest the title in him until completion and delivery, and meantime, even though completion is delayed by his unexcused default to furnish the materials as agreed, the articles are at the manufacturer's risk. In the event of their being burned, he cannot recover for labor and materials. McConike v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 75 D. 420.

When the vendor has done everything he was to do under an executory agreement for the manufacture and sale of a specific chattel, which was to be manufactured in accordance with the terms of the agreement, and has given notice thereof to the purchaser, the general property in the chattel vests in the purchaser, and the chattel is at his risk. Coddard v. Binney, 15 R. 112.

A agreed to build a buggy for B, and to deliver it at a time certain. B gave directions as to the style and finish of the buggy, and it was built in compliance with his directions, and marked with his monogram. Before the buggy was finished B called to see it and in response to an inquiry of A, asking if he might sell the buggy, replied that he would keep it; when the buggy was finished, A notified B and sent him a bill for it. B retained the bill and promised "to see" A "about it." The buggy was afterward destroyed by fire while in A's possession. Held, in a suit by A for the price, that the agreement was not a contract of sale within the Gen. Stats., chapter 105, § 5; and that the property in the buggy had passed to B, and he was liable. Id.

Where one contracted for articles to be manufactured, and to pay the price partly in installments during the progress of the work, and the balance on completion, and the manufacturer fraudulently representing that the work was substantially completed, obtained the price in full, without delivery, and then made an assignment in insolvency, — held, that the title had not passed as against creditors. Shaw v. Smith, 40 R. 170.

62. — or incomplete. — 1. General rules. — If some act remains to be done by the vendor before delivery, the property does not vest in the vendee, but continues at the vendor's risk. McDonald v. Hewett, 8 D. 241; Pleasants v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726; Lupin

v. Marie, 21 D. 256; Jennings v. Flanagan, 20 D. 683; Cleveland v. Williams, 94 D. 274.

This rule is applicable to a contract of sale evidenced by the following memorandum; "Sold to A load of Pine creek lumber, within the neighborhood of five thousand feet of plank, at fifteen dollars and fifty cents, and expenses, taking a note at six months, with interest;" as a measurement is necessary to ascertain the price of such load, and the amount for which the note is to be given. Nicholson v. Taylor, 72 D. 728.

Where a person bargained for some corn in pens on the bank of a river, at one dollar per barrel, to be subsequently measured, and the corn is destroyed by flood before being measured, the loss must fall on the seller, and the purchaser may recover money advanced upon the price. Williams v. Allen, 51 D. 709.

Where the sale is of a quantity of things by count, measure or weight, their number, quantity or weight must be determined before the sale is perfect, in the absence of an express intention to the contrary; and the same rule applies when delivery is to be made of the sold articles by installments. Prescott v. Locke, 12 R. 55.

An agreement to deliver a certain quantity of oats of a specified quality on the cars when demanded, accompanied by present payment, but the identity of the oats not being ascertained, does not vest title to the oats in the purchaser. Hubler v. Gaston, 42 R. 794.

Where there is a usage that coöperage necessary on a delivery of flour to the vendee at a warehouse is to be done by the storer at the vendor's expense, it does not constitute a case where something remains to be done by the vendor to complete the contract. Pleasants v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726.

Warehouse rent due is no obstacle to delivery of the flour in such a case where the usage is to charge it to the vendor, and not to make it a lien on the flour. Pleasants v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726.

Title to personal property passes by delivery, although there remains something to be done to ascertain the value at the agreed rates, unless by the terms of the contract of sale this was to be done before delivery. Burrows v. Whitaker, 27 R. 42.

2. Illustrations. — Where one purchased and paid for a quantity of hay, to be weighed out of a mow when he should see fit to move it — held, that the property did not vest in him before the weighing, so as to enable him to maintain trover. Davis v. Hall, 14 D. 373.

A vendor sold corn in his crib before his death, and appointed an agent to measure and deliver it, which the agent did after the death of the principal, but before it was known to the parties. In an action by the administrator of the deceased vendor to recover the value of the corn, the jury were charged as follows: "If you find from the evidence that the corn in question, that is, the hundred bushels of corn, was in a bulk with other corn, and had not been measured out and separated from the bulk, so that the same could be identified previous to the death of Hall [vendor], then the sale was incomplete, and you will find for the plaintiff the value of the corn as proved." Held, that the charge was correct. Cleveland v. Williams, 94 D. 274.

Action of trover against executors for goods claimed by plaintiffs under a verbal contract whereby the testatrix, for a valuable consideration, agreed to sell and convey to them all the personal property she then had and all that she might thereafter acquire and die possessed of. Held, 1. That the contract was inoperative to pass title to the subsequently acquired property, and that plaintiffs could recover for the conversion of such goods only as testatrix had when the contract was made; 2. That the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs to show which these were. Wilson v. Wilson, 11 R. 518.

Defendant agreed orally to buy of plaintiff what walnut spokes he should saw at his mill, not exceeding 100,000, at $40 per thousand, to be delivered at the mill in lots of 10,000 each, subject to defendant's selection, each lot to be paid for on delivery. Nothing was said about counting, but each party understood that he was to count them after selection. The defendant selected the first lot but did not count them. The plaintiff afterward counted those selected and charged them to defendant, but did not inform defendant of the number. The spokes having been burned, — held, in an action for their value, that the sale was not perfected, and that the title to the property remained in plaintiff. Prescott v. Locke, 12 R. 55.

F. agreed to sell, and H. to buy, two hundred cords of hard wood, to be taken thereafter from piles containing an indefinite quantity of hard and soft wood, and to be measured when taken. Held, that the measurement was necessary to complete the identification and determine what wood belonged to the purchaser, and no title passed to any portion of the property, until it was measured and thus severed and identified from the rest. Hahn v. Fredericks, 18 R. 119.

Defendant agreed to buy of plaintiff all the lumber he should deliver at a specified place on D. river, before a certain time; the prices were agreed on for the good and for the cull. Defendant was to cull and pile, and the lumber was to be counted on the bank or estimated in the raft at that place. The delivery was commenced, and a portion was culled and piled, but before it could be counted or estimated it was carried away by a freshet. In an action to recover the contract price of the amount so delivered—held, 1. That the evidence sustained a finding of delivery and acceptance; 2. That delivery of the whole amount contracted for was not necessary to pass title to that delivered. Burrows v. Whitaker, 27 R. 42.

G. agreed to sell to B. 1,000 cords of wood "to be delivered from G's pier [in Michigan] over the rail of the vessel * * * and to be delivered from time to time to B's vessel as wanted during the season of navigation; said wood to be piled as taken from vessel, and to be measured and paid for when piled on B's dock in Milwaukee." One cargo of wood was thus delivered on the vessel and lost with the vessel. Held, that the contract as to such cargo became an executed sale, and the title vested at once in B., and the piling and measurement having been rendered impossible, either by B's fault or by the act of God, B. was liable for the cargo. Gill v. Benjamin, 54 R. 619.

63. — In cases of sales of goods to arrive.* — A contract for the sale of five hundred bales of cotton at a specified price per pound, to be delivered on its arrival before a certain future day, payment to be made on delivery, the cotton to be weighed and tare to be allowed, is an executory contract, and the title does not pass until delivery. Russell v. Nicoll, 20 D. 670.

The vendor is not liable for non-delivery until the arrival of the goods, in such a case. Ib.

"Sold," means "contracted to be sold," in such a contract. Ib.

Unless the goods arrive within the specified time, the vendor is not bound to deliver, nor the vendee to receive them. Ib.

The vendor is not bound to deliver part of the goods on their arrival within the time, unless all are received, for the contract is entire. Ib.

Where the owner of corn, to arrive at a depot, gives an order for a portion of it, that is a sufficient identification of it, and the first to arrive will be the corn meant. Sahman v. Mills, 51 D. 630.

4. Stoppage in Transit.

64. The right of stoppage, generally.† — Stoppage in transitu is a right which a vendor of goods upon credit has to retake them, upon the discovery of the insolvency of the vendee, at any time before they have been delivered to him, or before any third person has acquired a bona fide right to them. Jones v. Earl, 99 D. 338. S. P., Hovatt v. Davis, 7 D. 681; People v. Haynes, 28 D. 530; Newhall v. Vargas, 29 D. 489.

Stoppage in transitu does not rescind the contract of sale; it simply restores the vendor to his lien, by placing him in the same position as if he had never parted with the possession. Newhall v. Vargas, 33 D. 617; Patten's Appeal, 84 D. 479.

The right of stoppage does not make the delivery conditional, but is only a lien which the vendor, under certain circumstances, may enforce to secure the price. People v. Haynes, 28 D. 530.

The vendor has the same right to the proceeds as he had to the goods where his right is asserted after they are converted into money, under an order of the court issuing the attachment, but before an appropriation of the proceeds or an adjudication of the rights of the parties. Hause v. Judson, 29 D. 377.

Admission of proprietorship in purchaser does not affect the right of stoppage in transitu, whether the admission is made by the vendor or his agent. Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188.

A consignor can stop goods in transitu only in two cases: 1. Where he has received no consideration; 2. Where the consignee is insolvent, but not where they have been shipped to pay a precedent debt. Wood v. Roach, 1 D. 276.

Such right does not arise on the death of the buyer unless his estate is insolvent. MacTier v. Frith, 21 D. 262.

An unpaid vendor of goods, in case of the vendor's insolvency, may reclaim them while on their passage to the vendee, not only against the vendee himself, but also against his creditors, by stopping them while in their transit. Sawyer v. Joslin, 49 D. 768.

Goods in the hands of an agent of the vendee are subject to the right of stoppage where they are in his hands merely for the purpose of being forwarded, and not for the purpose of safe custody and disposal by him. Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188.

The Louisiana court will recognize the right of stoppage in transitu arising from a sale of goods in New York to a vendee in New Orleans, who becomes insolvent before the goods are delivered. Blum v. Marks, 99 D. 725.

Where goods are sold on condition that title shall not pass until they are paid for, the vendor retains the right of stoppage in transitu as against the vendee, or an innocent third person who purchases of the vendee before the arrival of the bill of lading or the goods. Pattison v. Culton, 5 R. 199.

A factor or agent who purchases goods for his principal, and makes himself liable to the original vendor, is so far considered in the light of a vendor as to be entitled to stop the goods in transitu. Newhall v. Vargas, 29 D. 489.

Where a merchant, pursuant to a previous general agreement, had shipped goods to a party on credit, who after the shipment became insolvent, the shipper has still a right to a stoppage in transitu, for the credit is understood to be predicated on the supposed ability of the consignee to pay at the expiration of the credit. Stubbs v. Lund, 5 D. 63; Chapman v. Lathrop, 16 D. 433; Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188.

Insolvency means general inability to pay, evidenced by the stoppage of payment, when the term is used with reference to the right of a vendor to stop goods in transitu. Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188; O'Brien v. Norris, 77 D. 284.

To entitle vendors to the right of stoppage the insolvency of the vendee must have come to their knowledge after the sale. O'Brien v. Norris, 77 D. 284.

The seller of goods may stop them in transit on account of the purchaser's insolvency existing before, but not known to the seller until after the sale. Loeb v. Peters, 35 R. 17.

A firm in Portland shipped certain goods in their vessel to a Liverpool firm on current account. The latter, on receipt of the cargo, on which they made advances pursuant to agreement, wrote to the Portland firm that they would find freight or ship a return cargo. They accordingly put on board a cargo shipped on account and risk of the Portland firm, bills of lading being signed by the master, deliverable to the said firm, and the goods were charged to their account. Previously to the shipping of the return cargo, the Portland firm had executed a bill of sale to the plaintiffs, purporting to convey all the cargo then consigned as aforesaid. The vessel being detained by contrary winds after the shipment, the Liverpool firm heard of the failure of the Portland firm, and thereupon, by certain threats, induced the master to give up the bills of lading (excepting one which he delivered at Portland, which was endorsed to the plaintiff) and to sign other bills deliverable to the defendant or assigns, their agent. Held, in replevin, that the defendant must recover, as the Liverpool firm had so far a control over the goods after they had been placed on board, and the first set of bills of lading had been signed, as to give them a right to change their destination, or they might at least stop them in their transit; and that if the bill of sale to the plaintiffs could, in any event, operate to pass the property in the return cargo, it must be subject to the claims of the Liverpool firm. Isley v. Stubbs, 6 D. 29.

65. When the goods are deemed to be in transit. — Goods shipped are in transitu until taken possession of on behalf of the consignee. Naylor v. Dennie, 19 D. 319. Unless he shall have before sold them, and assigned the bills of lading to the purchaser. Stubbs v. Lund, 5 D. 63. But the receipt of the goods by the master of the vendee's ship, to be transported to the place of the vendee's residence does not end the transit. Newhall v. Vargas, 29 D. 489.

Transit is not completed so as to give the vendee constructive possession, and thus determine the vendor's right of stoppage, by the arrival and delivery of the goods to a consignee residing at an intermediate point, by whom they were to be forwarded to the vendee. Hepp v. Glover, 35 D. 206; Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188.

Transit is at an end whenever the goods, in pursuance of the original destination given them by the consignor, have come into either the actual or constructive possession of the consignee. Sawyer v. Joslin, 49 D. 768.

Landing of goods upon a wharf is a delivery, terminating the transit and divesting the right of stoppage, when by such landing all the duties and responsibilities of the transportation line in regard to the goods ceased, and no duty or responsibility was cast upon the wharfinger, and the goods lay on the wharf, subject to the control and direction of the consignee only, and it appears that merchants in the course of business received their goods at the wharf. Id.

Whether final delivery determining the right of stoppage has been effected is to be decided according to the intention of the parties in each case by examining whether they contemplated any further and more absolute reduction into possession on the part of the vendee. Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188.

A merchant fitted out a vessel and directed the captain to pursue a certain voyage. The captain sailed to Madeira, and there disposed of his cargo, in part payment for wine which he purchased, paying the balance by bills drawn on the owner, and then sailed to Charleston with the wine. Held, that the vendors of the wine, the vendee having become insolvent, had a right to stop the goods in transitu, as there had been no actual or constructive delivery to the vendee. Parker v. McIver, 1 D. 656.

B. & Co., of New York, sold on credit, and consigned in the ordinary way to "Geo. T. Hull, Youngstown, Ohio, A. & G. W. R. R.," goods which arrived at the Youngstown station and were transferred by the railroad company's agent to its freight depot, where they awaited payment of charges as a condition precedent to their removal by draymen to Hull's place of business. On the evening of the day of the arrival of the goods they were seized in attachment at the suit of the creditors of Hull. Held, that B. & Co. might assert the right of stoppage in transitu. Calahan v. Babcock, 8 R. 63.

66. How the right may be exercised. *—The right of stoppage in transitu

* When and by whom stoppage in transit may be exercised, see note, 19 R. 87-92.

is ineffectual unless actually exercised. MacTier v. Frith, 21 D. 262.

To invest the vendor with the property and the possession of goods after they have been delivered to a carrier, there must be an actual stoppage by a positive exertion of the right by the vendor or his agent. People v. Haynes, 28 D. 530.

Chancery may enforce the right of stoppage, especially when the goods are already under the control of that court by an attachment in chancery. Hause v. Judson, 29 D. 377.

Charges and expenses of the forwarder in whose hands the goods were attached and by whom they were sold, under the chancellor's order, must be first paid out of the proceeds in such a case. Id.

The vendor is not obliged to refund what may have been received in part payment to entitle him to exercise his right of stoppage. Newhall v. Vargas, 29 D. 489.

A vendor may ratify an undirected act of his correspondent in claiming the goods, and thereby make a valid stoppage in transitu. Id.

Notice to the carrier, or to any one having charge of the goods before the transit ends, is sufficient, and does not cease merely by the interposition of a claim on the part of the consignee. Id.

Part payment made on account of goods cannot be recovered back by the vendee after a stoppage in transitu; but the vendee may have the benefit of such payment in extinguishing a proportionate amount of the vendor's claim for the balance due him on the contract price. Newhall v. Vargas, 33 D. 617.

A party by whom stoppage in transitu is effected need not have special authority from the vendor; this right may be exercised by commission merchants, to whom the goods have been shipped by the vendor to be forwarded to the purchaser. Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188.

The vendor has a right to intervene in an action by a purchaser from the person to whom they have been sold against a forwarding merchant to whom they have been shipped by the seller to be forwarded, and who refuses to deliver them on demand, on the ground that he has stopped the goods in transit for the seller, the latter having ratified his acts. Id.

Filing a claim in an attachment case to a fund in court arising from the sale of the goods under an interlocutory order of court is a sufficient exercise by the vendor of the goods of the right of stoppage in transitu. O'Brien v. Norris, 77 D. 284.

Upon demand by a vendor of goods upon credit, during the continuance of the right of stoppage in transitu, the carrier becomes liable for conversion if he declines to deliver the goods to the vendor, or delivers them to the vendee. Jones v. Earl, 99 D. 338.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Notice by vendor of goods clearly informing the carrier that it is the intention and desire of the former to exercise his right of stoppage in transitu, is sufficient to charge the latter. And notice to an agent of the carrier, who is in the possession of the goods in the regular course of his agency, is notice to the carrier. Ib.

A claim of a vendor to exercise the right of stoppage is superior to the lien of attaching creditors, when the former shows that he had the right of stoppage, and duly exercised it. Blum v. Marks, 99 D. 725.

A vendor may exercise the right of stoppage when he proves that at the time of the sale he was not aware of the insolvency of the vendee; and the discovery of such insolvency before delivery entitles him to exercise the right, though the goods are attached by creditors of the vendee. Ib.

67. What will defeat it.*—Stoppage in transitu can only take place while goods are on their way; if they arrive at their place of ultimate destination, and come into the possession of the vendee, there is an end of the vendor's rights over them. Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 189.

The right ceases where the goods are shipped on board a vessel, appointed by the vendee to be transported, not to his residence or to be received by him, but to other markets. Newhall v. Vargas, 29 D. 489; Rowley v. Bigelow, 23 D. 607.

The vendee may defeat the right of stoppage by sale of the goods to a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration, accompanied by a transfer of the bill of lading; it is not necessary that the purchaser be ignorant of the fact that the goods have not been paid for; if he takes bona fide, without a knowledge for any such circumstances as would render the bill of lading not fairly and honestly assignable, he acquires a good title as against the consignor. Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188; but the purchaser's knowledge of the original insolvency bears in the question of his good faith. Loeb v. Peters, 35 R. 17.

The right of stoppage is not absolutely defeated by a mortgage or pledge of the goods by the purchaser; for if the mortgage is made bona fide, the vendor may still resume his interest in them, subject to the rights of the mortgagee, and will have a right to the residue which may remain after satisfying the mortgagee's claim. Chandler v. Fulton, 60 D. 188.

A vendor delivered to the vendee a bill of parcels for goods lying in public store, together with an order on the store-keeper for their delivery. Held, that the vendor had not the right of stoppage against a person purchasing bona fide for a valuable consideration. Hollingsworth v. Napier, 2 D. 268.

* When the right to effect stoppage in transitu ceases, see note, 60 R. 51-57.

Plaintiff sold goods to C and delivered them to a carrier. Defendant, a constable, holding an execution against C, levied on, and seized the goods while in the carrier's possession and paid the freight charges thereon. Plaintiff demanded the goods from defendant, without paying or tendering the amount of the freight charges, and being refused, brought replevin. Held, 1. That plaintiff's right of stoppage in transitu was not terminated by the levy and seizure; but 2. That the lien for freight charges, to which defendant had rightfully succeeded, was prior to plaintiff's right, and that plaintiff could only bring replevin after discharging that lien. Rucker v. Donovan, 19 R. 84.

The vendor of goods shipped them by defendant's railroad to the vendee as consignee, with bill of lading in the usual form. While the goods were in transit the vendee became insolvent, and the vendor notified defendant to stop the goods. Shortly after such notification the vendee indorsed the bills of lading, in the usual course of business, to plaintiff, who, in good faith and without knowledge of the insolvency or of the stoppage, advanced money thereon. Held, that plaintiff, on tender of the freight and charges, was entitled to receive the goods from the carrier as against the vendor. Newhall v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 21 R. 713.

S shipped goods by railroad to R at A station. When the goods arrived there R paid the freight charges, receipted for the goods, and told the company's agent that he would leave the goods with him until he could send for them. Thereupon L, a creditor of R, attached the goods. Afterward the agent received notice from S not to deliver the goods to R. Held, that it was too late for S to exercise the right of stoppage in transitu. Sangstaff v. Stitz, 60 R. 49.

68. What will not.—The vendor's right of stoppage is not superseded by an attachment of the goods by a creditor of the vendee, while in transit in the hands of a common carrier or forwarder. Hause v. Judson, 29 D. 377; Naylor v. Dennie, 19 D. 319; Hepp v. Glover, 35 D. 206. And a demand of the goods by the vendor, while in the hands of a levying or attaching officer, is a sufficient claim of them; and this, without reference to the question whether the goods but for the levy or attachment would probable have reached the vendee, and thus have destroyed the vendor's right. Sawyer v. Joslin, 49 D. 768.

A sale under a f. fa. in attachment proceedings, of goods which were subject to vendor's lien or right of stoppage, will not operate to the prejudice of the vendor so as to defeat his prior right, but he will be entitled, by intervening in the attachment proceedings, to have the proceeds applied to the satisfaction of his debt in preference to the attaching creditors. Hepp v. Glover, 35

D. 204. S. P., O'Brien v. Norris, 77 D. 284.

The right of stoppage is adverse to the consignee, yet is not defeated by a relinquishment by him of the consignment. Naylor v. Denzie, 19 D. 319.

The right is not affected by taking bills drawn by the master upon the vendee; nor by the receipt of a commission by one who becomes responsible for the value of goods shipped to another. Newhall v. Vargas, 29 D. 439.

The right of stoppage is not defeated by showing that the vendee was actually insolvent at the time of the purchase, unless it be shown that such insolvency was known to the vendor, and he contracted with such knowledge. O'Brien v. Norris, 77 D. 284.

III. WARRANTIES.

69. Implied warranties, generally.*—Warranties, in sales of personalty, are of two kinds: express and implied. Osgood v. Lewis, 18 D. 317.

Implied warranties arise by operation of law, and they exist without any intention of the seller to create them. They are conclusions or inferences of law, pronounced by the court upon facts admitted or proved before the jury. Id.

Implied warranties are of two kinds: 1. Those untinctured by actual fraud or deceit, as a warranty of title; 2. Those where fraud and deceit are their very essence, as where a seller knowing of the unsoundness of an article, uses artifice to conceal such defect from the buyer. Id.

In all sales of goods there is an implied warranty that the article corresponds in specie with the commodity sold, unless there are facts and circumstances showing that the buyer took upon himself the risk of determining both the quality and the kind of the goods purchased by him. Borrekins v. Besan, 23 D. 85.

Where goods are sold on inspection, there is no standard but identity, and no warranty implied other than that the identical goods sold, and no others, shall be delivered. The name given to them in the bill of parcels is then immaterial, for faith was placed, not in the name, but in the quality and kind discovered on the inspection; but if there be fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation, the case is different. Carson v. Baillie, 57 D. 659.

No implied warranty of the manufacturer exists in a sale between merchants. Dickinson v. Gay, 83 D. 656.

Merchants are bound by the legal usages of merchants as to sales between themselves. Id.

Sales of goods "to arrive by" a certain time do not import a warranty that the goods shall arrive by the day named, and evidence that by the custom of merchants the words "to arrive by" a certain time, mean "deliverable by" that time, is inadmissible as tending to change the legal effect of the contract. Rogers v. Woodruff, 13 E. 276.

Implied warranties in sales generally, discussed. Kohl v. Lindley, 89 D. 294.

70. Warranty of title.*—In a sale of personal property there is an implied warranty in respect to the title of the vendor; but it is otherwise as to the quality or soundness of the thing sold. Defreeze v. Trumper, 3 D. 329; Chism v. Woods, 3 D. 740; Perley v. Balch, 34 D. 56; Lile v. Hopkins, 51 D. 115; Fawcett v. Osborn, 83 D. 278; Burt v. Dewey, 100 D. 482; and a promise to refund the money paid is implied if the seller has no title. Barton v. Faherty, 54 D. 503. But no warranty of title is implied where an agent, public or private, sells. Forsythe v. Ellis, 20 D. 218. This warranty is broken immediately, if the vendor has no title, and, therefore, in such case the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of the sale. Chancellor v. Wiggins, 39 D. 499.

The law does not imply a warranty of title to personal property not in the vendor's possession at the time of sale, and claimed by another. Scott v. Hix, 62 D. 458; Huntingdon v. Hall, 58 D. 765. And the seller's subsequent acquisition of a good title will not inure to the benefit of the vendee. But where the vendor is, at the time, in possession of the thing sold, he is held to an implied warranty of title. Scranton v. Clark, 100 D. 430.

A warranty of title is implied on the sale of an unnegotiable chose in action, and the purchaser acquires the right, and assumes the risk of its value; where it is, in fact, void, the buyer is entitled to recover the price, although the seller was innocent of any fraud, and ignorant of the defect. Accordingly, when a land warrant was sold, and it was subsequently declared void, the purchaser may recover back the consideration paid. Boyd v. Anderson, 3 D. 762.

One who sells personal property that he does not own, is liable in assumpsit on his warranty. Strong v. Barnes, 34 D. 684.

The fact that a horse is branded with the letters "U. S." is not per se proof of title in the United States. Plummer v. Newdigate, 87 D. 479.

The seller must be held to warrant his title where his sale of an exclusive right to manufacture and sell a particular article was procured upon the representation that he owned the exclusive right thereto, and that he acquired it from another under a written agreement which he exhibited. Costigan v. Hawkins, 94 D. 583.

*See note on implied warranties in sales of chattels, 24 E. 151-153.

*Implied warranty of title, on sale of chattels, see note, 62 D. 460-468.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A sale of standing timber, by the owner of the freehold, is not a sale of a chattel interest, but of an interest in land, and is not controlled by the doctrine of warranty of title in sales of personal property. Slocum v. Seymour, 13 R. 432.

On a sale of chattels, announced as made by virtue of a mortgage, there is no implied warranty of title. Harris v. Lynn, 37 R. 253.

71. Warranty of genuineness.—A vendor is responsible for the genuineness of a bill or note, which he sells without indorsing. Thompson v. McCullough, 77 D. 644.

One who sells negotiable bonds impliedly warrants their genuineness, and in case they are forged, is liable for the return of the purchase-money, without any offer to return such bonds, and although the vendee has resold the bonds at a greater price. Smith v. McNair, 27 R. 117.

On the sale of accounts there is an implied warranty that they are genuine and owing. Gilchrist v. Hilliard, 38 R. 706.

A warranty is implied on a sale of drugs by a druggist. Jones v. George, 42 R. 689.

A vendor of personal property does not impliedly warrant that the article sold is of the species or kind contemplated by the parties, where the sale is on inspection, and the vendee's knowledge is equal to that of the vendor. Lord v. Gross, 80 D. 504.

A statement made in good faith at the time of the sale, by the vendor, that seed is of a certain kind, such seed, with respect of kind, not being ascertainable by inspection, will lay a ground from which a jury, or a court having power to pass upon facts may infer a warranty as to kind. Wolcott v. Mount, 20 R. 425, affirming same case, 13 R. 438; Van Wyck v. Allen, 25 R. 136.

The plaintiff, a market gardener, bought Wakefield cabbage seed, of the defendant, in 1881, which produced a good crop. The next year he asked him if he had "any more Wakefield cabbage seed, same as in 1881." The defendant replied that he had some of the old stock, and produced some seed in envelopes, part of the old stock, which the plaintiff bought. It was impossible to distinguish Wakefield cabbage seed by its appearance. The plaintiff planted the seed, and the crop was not Wakefield cabbage, and was almost worthless. Held, that the defendant was not liable in damages. Shieler v. Baxter, 58 R. 738. See to the contrary, White v. Miller, 27 R. 13.

At an auction sale, the auctioneer stated that the article offered was "blue vitriol, sound and in good order." It had the appearance of that article, and by no examination practicable at the time could it be discovered that it was not. It was, in fact, what was known as mixed or "saltsburger vitriol," composed of a small portion of "blue vitriol," the residue being green vitriol, an article of much smaller value. The defendants having bid off the property, refused to take and pay for it, on ascertaining its true character, and it was sold again on their account. In an action to recover the amount of the loss—held, that upon these facts the jury might have properly inferred that there was upon the sale a warranty that the article sold was blue vitriol; that it was, at least, the duty of the court to submit the question of warranty to the jury, instead of directing a verdict for the plaintiff. Held, also, that there was a breach of the warranty; the article sold having only a small per cent of blue vitriol in it, and being not an inferior article of blue vitriol, but a different substance with a small admixture of blue vitriol. Hawkins v. Pemberton, 10 R. 595.

72. Warranty of soundness.—A sale of property for a sound price raises a warranty against all faults known and unknown to the seller; therefore, if a negro had about him, at the time of the sale, the seeds of a disorder which occasioned his death, the loss must fall on the seller. Timrod v. Shoolbred, 1 D. 620. But the rule does not extend to the moral qualities of a slave. Smith v. McCall, 10 D. 666.

It is true, as a general rule, that a sound price warrants a sound commodity; but where a purchaser is informed fully of all the circumstances, and has a fair opportunity for information, he shall be bound by his contract, however disadvantageous it may be. Whitefield v. McLeod, 1 D. 650.

No warranty is implied from a sound price on an executed sale of a chattel, and if there is no fraud or express warranty the buyer takes the risk of the quality and condition of the article. Moses v. Mead, 43 D. 676; Johnston v. Cope, 5 D. 423; Dean v. Mason, 10 D. 162; Eagan v. Call, 75 D. 653; Weimer v. Clement, 78 D. 411.

When there is no express warranty, and the vendor sells a thing as sound which is unsound, having a latent defect unknown to him, he is not answerable to the buyer; the law will not raise an implied undertaking to make good the defect. Westmoreland v. Dixon, 9 D. 763; West v. Cunningham, 33 D. 300; McFarland v. Newman, 34 D. 407; Eagan v. Call, 75 D. 653; Weimer v. Clement, 78 D. 411. But this rule is not universal, as where personalty is sold by sample, etc. Osgood v. Lewis, 18 D. 317.

In the sale of provisions for domestic use there is an implied warranty that they are sound and wholesome. Van Bracklin v.

* Warranty of soundness or fitness, when implied, see note, 6 D. 113-119.

Implied warranty that chattel is sound and merchantable, see note, 1 D. 84-95.

Warranty of soundness, whether implied from sound price, see note, 43 D. 680, 681.

Fonda, 7 D. 339. Otherwise on a sale of provisions bought to be sold again. Moses v. Mead, 43 D. 676.

A vendor of rice sold here is not liable under an implied warranty for a defect in its quality of soundness which is not discovered until its arrival abroad, and which, if it existed at the time of sale, might easily have been detected by an examination. Vanderhoof v. MacTaggart, 2 D. 667.

A manufacturer who sells goods of his own manufacture impliedly warrants that they are free from any latent defect growing out of the process of manufacture; but he is not liable for any latent defect in the material which he is not shown and cannot be presumed to have known. Hoe v. Sartorn, 78 D. 163.

The difference between the doctrine of the civil law and that of the common law in respect to implied warranties discussed. Id.

When one sells another's horse without his knowledge, and warrants his soundness, and the owner subsequently accepts the purchase-money, he makes himself liable on the warranty. Lane v. Dudley, 5 D. 523.

A vendor is liable for selling a blind horse at a sound price, without declaring his blindness, if it was such as not to be discovered at first view. Hughes v. Robertson, 15 D. 104.

A warranty of soundness of a horse is not broken by a curable and temporary injury existing at the date of the sale, not injuring him for immediate service. It seems, however, that the warranty is broken if the infirmity, although not permanent or incurable, renders the animal less fit for present use. Roberts v. Jenkins, 53 D. 169.

73. Warranty of quality.—In the contract of sale the law implies no warranty as to the quality of the goods sold, although it may imply a warranty of title where the vendor has possession at the time of sale. Lanier v. Auld, 3 D. 680; Erwin v. Maxwell, 9 D. 602; Hyatt v. Boyle, 25 D. 276; Getty v. Rountree, 54 D. 138. Accordingly, where one sells what was supposed to be barilla, but which turned out to be kelp, an inferior article much resembling it, and of little value, he does not warrant the genuineness of the article in the absence of an express warranty or fraud. Sweet v. Colgate, 11 D. 266.

Merely representations as to the quality of goods sold do not constitute a warranty. Wetherill v. Nelson, 59 D. 741.

There is no implied warranty in a sale of baled hemp, that the interior of the bales corresponds with the exterior. In the absence of fraud, the vendee cannot recover damages from the vendor, on account of a difference between the interior and the exterior of the bales. Salisbury v. Stainer, 33 D. 437.

* Warranty of quality in executory contracts of sale, see note, 86 D. 812-814.

An implied warranty of quality in a sale is not raised by the fact that the seller knew the purpose for which the goods were intended, or that the goods were not present to be judged of by the defendants, if the bad quality could not have been detected by an examination, and it was necessary to put them in use before their unfitness could be discovered. Dickson v. Jordan, 53 D. 403.

Implied warranty of quality does not arise where purchaser orders goods from the seller, and has no opportunity of seeing them; in such a case the purchaser constitutes the vendor his agent, to select for him, and only has a right to a fair exercise of the vendor's judgment in place of his own, and he has no cause of complaint because of a defect in the goods unless there be fraud. Id.

A seller is not answerable for the quality of an article that has been inspected and received by the buyer, provided it be in specie the thing for which it has been sold. Jennings v. Gratz, 23 D. 111.

The practical test for determining whether an article is in specie, what it was sold for, is that it be merchantable under the denomination affixed to it by the seller. Id.

A sale of tobacco as being of "Parkin's crooked brand," imports no warranty as to the quality of the tobacco, further than that it is of that brand, and though the purchaser agrees to pay the full price of a merchantable commodity, he cannot, on discovering it to be unsound and unmerchantable, offer to return it and resist an action for the price, if the tobacco is of the stipulated brand, and there is no express warranty, or knowledge of the unsoundness by the vendor. Hyatt v. Boyle, 25 D. 276.

Delivery of any tobacco not of that brand, however excellent its quality, would not in such a case, be a compliance with the terms of sale. Id.

When an article is sold for a sound price, the law will imply a warranty that it is what it is represented to be in regard to quality. Bailey v. Nichols, 1 D. 83.

A contract to deliver articles at a future day, whether they are to be manufactured or are already on hand, implies that they must be merchantable, at least of a medium quality of goodness. Howard v. Hoy, 35 D. 572. S. P., Rodgers v. Niles, 78 D. 290; Reed v. Randall, 86 D. 306.

A warranty of a fair and merchantable article is implied in an executory contract to deliver a quantity of corn. Babcock v. Trice, 68 D. 560.

Such implied warranty is not waived by acceptance of the corn by a warehouseman, or by the purchaser himself; and such an acceptance, even with opportunity of inspection and without complaint, only raises a presumption that the corn was of the quality contemplated by the parties. Id.

Where goods are sent by one merchant upon order of another, there is an implied warranty that the goods sent are such as were ordered; where goods are so sent without a special order, but upon a general engagement to forward goods, there is an implied warranty that all goods sent are valuable and merchantable. Brantly v. Thomas, 78 D. 264.

Tobacco is not merchantable where it is not well cured and in good condition when it is delivered, but is wet, sweaty, and rotten. Reed v. Randall, 86 D. 305.

Breach of contract to furnish in future a merchantable crop of tobacco, by delivering tobacco that is wet, sweaty, and rotten, is not a breach of warranty, but a mere non-compliance with such executory contract. Id.

The plaintiffs contracted to manufacture and deliver to the defendant "all the horn chains they manufacture." The chains manufactured and delivered were composed of round and oval links, the round links being hoof and the oval links being horn; and in an action to recover the contract price, — Held, 1. That the words "all the horn chains they manufacture" did not imply a warranty that the chains should be made wholly of horn, but that they should be the article known in the market as "horn chains;" 2. That the contract called for articles of a fair merchantable quality and of good workmanship, but not for articles of the first quality. Sweet v. Shumway, 3 R. 471.

The plaintiff, at Mobile, Alabama, ordered from defendant at Council Bluffs, Iowa, through his agent at Mobile, "choice sugar-cured, canvassed hams." The plaintiff had no opportunity to inspect them, but they were shipped at Council Bluffs, and payment was demanded and made while they were in transit. Held, that the hams were warranted to conform to the order, and defendant was liable for a breach. Forchheimer v. Stewart, 54 R. 30.

A pork packer in Dubuque, Iowa, sold to a dealer in Pottsville, Pa., "five car-loads fully cured sweet pickled shoulders, f. o. b. Dubuque." Upon arrival at Pottsville the goods were found to be unmerchantable. In an action upon the implied warranty, the court charged that the defendant was bound to furnish pork that was "sweet and sound and in fit condition to be sold in the trade." Held, error. Ryan v. Ulmer, 56 R. 210.

74. Warranty of adaptability to use intended."—A warranty that a chattel is fit for a particular use is ordinarily implied, when it is sold for such a use.

* See note on the implied warranty that article manufactured will answer the purpose intended, 24 R. 104-114.

Beale v. Olmstead, 58 D. 180; Best v. Flint, 56 R. 570; Stinch v. Hathaway, 58 R. 327.

The principle of implied warranties is directed only against those secret defects against which the most skillful cannot always guard; and where the seller was not guilty of any fraud, deceit, misrepresentation, or concealment, and the buyer had opportunity, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, to acquire a knowledge of any fact necessary to enable him to form a correct estimate of the value of the thing he is about to purchase, the law will not raise an implied warranty that the thing should answer the purpose for which it was bought. Carnochan v. Gould, 19 D. 668.

Knowledge by the vendor that tobacco is bought for sale, imports no warranty, it seems, that it is suitable for that purpose, where the tobacco is of the particular brand which the vendee contracted to purchase. Hyatt v. Boyle, 25 D. 276.

The law implies no warranty in the sale of a Durham cow, that she will prove suitable for breeding purposes, although the price paid for her indicates that it was for that purpose that she was bought. Scott v. Renick, 35 D. 177.

A warranty of fitness of an article for a specific purpose cannot be implied from a knowledge on the part of the seller that the article is intended for such purpose, except where the vendor is a manufacturer. Bartlett v. Hoppock, 88 D. 428.

Upon the sale of a live cow by a farmer to retail butchers, there is no implied warranty that she is fit for food, although he knows that they buy her for the purpose of cutting her up into beef for immediate domestic use. Howard v. Emerson, 14 R. 608.

The vendor of an article for a particular purpose does not impliedly warrant it against latent defects unknown to him, and which have been produced by the unskillfulness of the manufacturer or previous owner, without his knowledge or fault, except where the sale is, of itself, equivalent to a positive affirmation that the article has certain inherent qualities inconsistent with the alleged defects. Bragg v. Morrill, 24 R. 102.

Thus, where defendant sold to plaintiff a shaft for the purpose of driving machinery, and defendant was not the maker of the shaft, but had turned and prepared it for the pulleys, and the shaft afterward broke by reason of a defect in the original manufacture, not caused by defendant, and not discoverable by any ordinary inspection or examination, — held, that there was no implied warranty, and that defendant was not liable. Id.

In executory contracts to furnish articles for a specific purpose, there is an implied warranty that the article delivered shall answer the purpose for which it is designed, inasmuch as the purchaser has not an opportunity of inspecting or testing it. If found defective, he may return it in a reasonable time, and recover its price if paid. Fisk v. Tank, 78 D. 737.

In case of an executory contract for the manufacture of articles to be delivered at a future day, there is always an implied warranty that the articles delivered shall answer the purpose for which they were designed. Woodle v. Whitney, 99 D. 102.; S. P., Getty v. Rountree, 54 D. 138; Brenton v. Davis, 44 D. 769; Rodgers v. Niles, 78 D. 290; Pease v. Sabin, 91 D. 364; Snow v. Schomacker Manuf. Co., 44 R. 509; Poland v. Miller, 48 R. 730.

But the manufacturer is not bound to furnish the best that are or can be made, but only such as are usually made and used, and as are reasonably fit for the purpose. Harris v. Waite, 31 R. 694.

The manufacturer of an article, according to specifications furnished by his employer, does not impliedly warrant that it will answer the purpose for which it was intended by the projector. In such case the risk is on the latter. Richetts v. Sisson, 35 D. 141.

A chattel was sold with a warranty that it was fit for a particular purpose, and that, if it was not, the vendor would make it so. Held, that the purchaser could maintain an action on the warranty although he had offered to return the chattel, the right to return being in pursuance and not in avoidance of the contract. Kimball & Austin Manuf. Co. v. Froman, 24 R. 558.

Defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff as many boxes as they should need to pack manufactured tobacco during a certain season at a specified time, and did furnish such boxes. It is customary for tobacco dealers to rely on the manufacturers of boxes for the selection of proper material and not to test the boxes received to ascertain if they are suitable. The boxes furnished by defendant were of unseasoned wood, which caused the tobacco packed therein to mould and deteriorate in value. Held, 1. That the defendant was liable as upon an implied warranty, that the boxes were suitable for the purpose of packing manufactured tobacco for loss from their not being suitable, and 2, that the measure of his liability was the damage done to the tobacco by its moulding. Gerst v. Jones, 34 R. 773.

A farmer bought of a miller a sack of bran for his cows. Before it was removed from the mill two copper clasps accidentally fell into it, without negligence on the miller's part, and one of the cows swallowed them and was killed thereby. The bran was part of a quantity on hand open to inspection. There was no express warranty. Held, that the buyer had no remedy against the seller. Lukens v. Freund, 41 R. 429.

75. When the maxim caveat emptor applies.*—Caveat emptor is a maxim which enters into every purchase where the contrary is not stipulated, and equity can not relieve against it. Lighty v. Short, 24 D. 334.

Warranty of quality is generally not implied in executed sales of goods, but in the absence of fraud or express warranty the rule is caveat emptor. Beirne v. Dord, 55 D. 321; Wetherill v. Nelson, 59 D. 741.

No fraud arises upon the sale of unsound personal property, where the unsoundness was of a nature to be perceived by the eye, and no attempt at its concealment has been made. Stewart v. Dugan, 28 D. 348; Eagan v. Call, 75 D. 653.

The rule of caveat emptor requires that the vendee shall guard against latent defects, by demanding a warranty, or bear the loss himself. Welsh v. Carter, 19 D. 473; Dickson v. Jordan, 53 D. 403; Brown v. Gray, 72 D. 563; Bartlett v. Hoppock, 88 D. 428; Kohl v. Lindley, 89 D. 294.

A sale of a spurious and worthless article, fraudulently made to resemble a valuable commodity for which it is sold, will not authorize an action by the vendee against his vendor, who is ignorant of the fraud, and has given no warranty. Welsh v. Carter, 19 D. 473.

The fact that the vendor has a remedy over against the person from whom or through whom he obtained an article, does not make him liable to his vendee for defects therein, in the absence of fraud or warranty. Id.

The rule of caveat emptor applies to every sale of chattels where the possession at the time of the sale is not in the person selling, if there is no express warranty of title; but where the possession is in the party selling, and he sells the chattel as his own, and for a fair price, the law implies a warranty of title. Long v. Hickingbottom, 64 D. 118.

A purchaser of goods must attend to those qualities of articles he buys which are supposed to be within reach of his observation and judgment, such as where the articles are equally open to the inspection of both parties; but this rule does not apply where the purchaser has ordered goods of a certain character, and relies on the judgment of the seller, or where goods of a certain described quality are offered for sale, and when delivered do not answer the description given in the contract. Brantley v. Thomas, 73 D. 264.

The rule of caveat emptor applies to a purchase of depreciated bank bills by a banker or broker who deals in such bills as an article of commerce; and if a bill purchased by him, after ample opportunity to examine it and satisfy himself as to its value, turns out to be worth less than the price paid for it,

* Caveat emptor, rule of, when applicable to sales of chattels, see note. 90 D. 424-431.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

the vendor is not bound to make it good. Hinckley v. Kerating, 74 D. 102.

Unless the vendee gives notice or offers to return personal property, his remedy to recover damages on the ground that the article furnished does not correspond with the contract, where it is executory, does not survive his acceptance of the property after opportunity to ascertain the defect. Reed v. Randall, 86 D. 305.

Where an article, manufactured in accordance with a special contract, is accepted and retained by the vendee, he will be liable for the full contract price, there being no warranty, and the defects, if any, being obvious and patent; and in such a case a judgment obtained by the vendor for an unpaid balance of the contract price is a bar to an action by the vendee to recover for a breach of the contract. Gibson v. Bingham, 5 R. 289.

On a sale of personal property, where the purchaser inspects for himself the specific goods sold, and there is no express warranty, and the seller is guilty of no fraud, and is not himself the manufacturer of the goods sold, the doctrine of caveat emptor applies, although the seller may suppose that the goods are bought for the purpose to which the purchaser applies them. Hight v. Bacon, 30 R. 639.

76. When it does not apply. — The doctrine of caveat emptor is founded upon the idea that a purchaser sees what he buys, and exercises his own judgment. Where he has no opportunity of exercising this judgment, but relies upon the judgment of the party with whom he deals, the tendency of the modern decisions is to imply a warranty of quality. Brantley v. Thomas, 73 D. 264.

The exception that where there is no opportunity for inspection of an article by the buyer, there is an implied warranty of its quality, applies only where the inspection is, morally speaking, impracticable, as where goods are sold before arrival or landing. Hyatt v. Boyle, 25 D. 276.

That the inspection would be inconvenient or difficult, is not sufficient in such a case. Id.

Defects visible and easily discovered will not prevent the vendee's recovery therefor, if the seller has disguised them, and by his false statements has induced the vendee to buy. Hanks v. McKee, 13 D. 265.

Asthma in a slave is not a disease of such visible character that the vendee is bound to know the stage to which it has reached. Id.

The exception of a certain disease named in a bill of sale with warranty, will not render the sale binding if the violence of the disease was so misrepresented as to induce the vendee to buy. Id.

The rule as to visible defects does not apply where the property sold was not present at the sale, and where the vendee was obliged to rely upon the representations of the vendor. Id.

The rule of caveat emptor does not cover a fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation by the vendor of any material fact inducing the purchaser to buy. Winds v. Morrison, 67 D. 668.

Executory contracts of sale must be filled by good, lawful merchandise, of suitable quality and kind. The rule is caveat venditor, not caveat emptor. If the vendor sues, after being notified of the defects, his recovery, if at all, must be on a quantum meruit only. Howard v. Hoey, 35 D. 572.

In the sale of a horse, the buyer has a right to inquire if the horse is injured in any way, and the seller, if he makes any representation, is bound to disclose the truth, and the whole truth, as far as he possesses any knowledge upon the subject, and this he must do, not partially, but fully and positively. Baker v. Seahorn, 55 D. 724.

It is erroneous to instruct that the rule of caveat emptor applies to a case, if there is any evidence in the case which requires a determination by the jury of the question whether there was fraud in the sale. Hadley v. Clinton County Importing Co., 82 D. 454.

An instruction that the rule of caveat emptor applies to a case, accompanied by general remarks concerning fraud in the sale, is calculated to mislead a jury in a case where there is evidence of fraud proper to be considered by the jury. Id.

Good sense and law more readily authorize a finding that the vendor is bound to disclose a latent intrinsic defect in the article sold, more peculiarly within his knowledge, than extrinsic facts affecting its value, as to which the means of knowledge was equally accessible to both parties. Id.

Whether or not failure of vendor to disclose a material latent defect known to the vendor and unknown to the vendee constitutes a fraud, is generally a question of fact upon which a jury should be allowed to pass. Id.

Omission to disclose a latent and material defect known to the vendor and unknown to the vendee, is merely evidence of fraud, the effect of which the circumstances may strengthen or destroy. Id.

77. What amounts to an express warranty. — To constitute a warranty, neither the word "warrant" nor any particular form of words is necessary; it is sufficient if the language used was made and received as a warranty. Beeman v. Buck, 21 D. 571; Kinley v. Fitzpatrick, 34 D. 108; Randall v. Thornton, 69 D. 56; Weimer v. Clement, 78 D. 411.

Any affirmation of the quality or condition of the thing sold, not uttered as matter

* Representations of vendor, when construed to be warranties. see notes. 15 R. 382-386.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

of opinion or belief, made by the seller at the time of the sale, for the purpose of assuring the buyer of the truth of the fact affirmed, and inducing him to make the purchase, if so received and relied on by the purchaser, is an express warranty. Osgood v. Lewis, 18 D. 317; Chapman v. Murch, 10 D. 227; Randall v. Thornton, 69 D. 56; Hahn v. Doolittle, 86 D. 787.

A warranty, to be valid, must be made at the time of sale; or if made afterwards, must be upon a new consideration. Towell v. Gatewood, 33 D. 437.

The vendor's statements ought to be regarded as a warranty of quality, when they form the sole basis of the sale, there being no opportunity to examine the chattel, and no examination in fact attempted; when they are positively made with reference to matters upon which the vendor professes, and is supposed to have, knowledge; or when the chattel was bought for a particular use, and the vendor knew that the vendee would not buy an inferior article. Beale v. Olmstead, 58 D. 150.

A sale note or bill of parcels describing goods sold, or designating them by a name well understood, is to be considered a warranty that the goods are what they are so described or designated, even where the goods are examined by the vendee at or before the sale, if they are so prepared and present such an appearance as to deceive skillful dealers. Henshaw v. Robins, 43 D. 367. S. P., Hastings v. Lovering, 13 D. 420; Osgood v. Lewis, 18 D. 317; Borrekens v. Bevan, 23 D. 85; Kearly v. Duncum, 73 D. 179.

A description of property sold as in "good order and condition" is equivalent to a representation that it was in such condition, and the seller would be guilty of fraud if he knew it was not, although the description is contained in a contract of sale signed only by the purchaser and his surety. Bryant v. Crosby, 58 D. 767.

Affirmation that a jack is a good and sure foal-getter, made at the time of the sale is such a representation of fact as amounts to a warranty. Lamme v. Gregg, 71 D. 489.

A statement is a contract of sale, descriptive of the thing sold, if intended to be part of the contract, is a condition, on the failure of which the purchaser may repudiate, or, if a rescission has become impossible, it may be treated as a warranty, for the breach of which damages may be recovered. Wolcott v. Mount, 13 R. 438.

A statement in an advertisement of sale of railroad bonds, that "the road is in successful operation, and earning net more than the interest on all its bonds," is a warranty that the road was on a paying foundation, and regularly and habitually earning net more than the interest on all its bonds. Blake v. Watson, 29 R. 693.

If the facts relied upon to prove an express warranty rest in parol, it is the province of the jury to determine whether such facts amount to an express warranty; but the court must determine whether an agreement in writing contains an express warranty or not. Osgood v. Lewis, 18 D. 317.

Whether an affirmation amounts to a warranty is a question for the jury, and a bill of sale containing the alleged warranty should be submitted to the jury for determination. Kinley v. Fitzpatrick, 34 D. 108.

Whether a statement by the seller at time of sale that a "cow is all right" amounts to a warranty of soundness of the cow is a question for the jury. Tuttle v. Brown, 64 D. 80.

The vendor's statements should be submitted to the jury to determine whether they constitute a warranty of quality, unless it is apparent that they were understood by the parties at the time as amounting to nothing more than recommendations and matters of opinion merely, and the vendee was still left to understand that he must examine and judge for himself and unless there is a fatal variance. Beale v. Olmstead, 58 D. 150.

It is a question of fact, to be determined from all the circumstances of the case, whether a representation, descriptive of the article sold by a name by which it is known in the market, is an expression of judgment or opinion only, or was intended as a warranty. Wolcott v. Mount, 13 R. 438.

The vendor of a mare and a mule had them both in a single stall where defects were not easily discoverable. The buyer being about to examine them, the vendor said that the mule had once kicked, but was sound. The buyer being inexperienced, and relying on this representation in the purchase,—held, that the representation was a warranty covering even visible defects. Kenner v. Harding, 28 R. 615.

Defendant sold a fertilizing preparation, in bags with tags attached, stating the chemical ingredients. He also issued circulars, using the words, "highest standard," "under my own name and guarantee," "prepared under my inspection and control," "compounded of the purest materials;" and referring by name to the chemist who made the analysis, adding "whose name gives a warrant for its high character," etc. Held, an express warranty, not dependent upon the correctness of the chemical analysis. Robson v. Miller, 32 R. 518.

Where a piano manufacturer offers by letter to sell pianos of his manufacture, stating terms, and directing attention to an accompanying circular, on the front page of which is conspicuously printed, "Every piano warranted for five years," these words constitute a warranty that each piano sold has no inherent defect of materials or workmanship that will cause it to break or give way in five years, but not a warranty of style or grade. Snow v. Schomacker Manuf. Co., 44 R. 509.

On the sale of a patent right to a churn, manufactured by the seller, he exhibited a sample of it, stating that it would produce butter in from three to five minutes; could be operated by a child five or six years old; that it was made of juniper wood, and that the dasher was nickel-plated; whereas in fact it would not produce butter in less than ten minutes, was too heavy for children to work it; was made of white pine and painted, and the dasher was of polished iron. Held, a valid warranty, and the court could not pronounce the discrepancies so plain and obvious as to avoid it. Tabor v. Peters, 49 R. 804.

78. What does not. — A naked averment of a fact is neither a warranty itself, nor evidence of one. It may with other circumstances be taken into consideration, but the jury must be satisfied from the whole, that the vendor actually, and not constructively consented to be bound for the truth of his representation. McFarland v. Newman, 34 D. 497.

No express warranty arises from a mere unfounded naked affirmation of soundness in the sale of a chattel, but for a willful misrepresentation, the remedy is by action ex delicto. Weimer v. Clement, 78 D. 411.

A warranty of goods after the sale has been completed is void, unless supported by a new consideration. Summers v. Vaughan, 9 R. 741.

Where, after a contract for the sale of a horse was made, and as the purchase-money was about to be paid, the seller, in reply to a question asked by the purchaser, said that the horse was sound, the affirmation was held not to be a warranty of quality, having been made after the contract had been entered into and not having been intended as such. Erwin v. Maxwell, 9 D. 602.

A statement in a bill of sale describing tobacco sold as "good first and second rate" tobacco, accompanied by any other assurance of quality, can only be regarded as what, in the opinion of the vendors, was its appropriate designation, and not as an undertaking or warranty of its quality. Towell v. Gatewood, 33 D. 437.

A warranty is not created by descriptive words in a bill of sale of a vessel, contained in a carpenter's certificate incorporated therein, respecting the capacity of the vessel. Randall v. Thornton, 69 D. 56.

79. Mere expression of opinion not enough. — To make an affirmation at the time of a sale a warranty, it must appear by evidence to have been so intended, and not to have been a mere matter of judgment and opinion. Erwin v. Maxwell, 9 D. 602; Sweet v. Colgate, 11 D. 266; Kinley v. Fitzpatrick, 34 D. 108; Lanane v. Gregg, 71 D. 489.

A warranty may be created without the use of any particular words or form of expression; but there is a distinction as to the legal effect of expressions when used in reference to a matter of fact, and when used to express an impression or opinion. Towell v. Gatewood, 33 D. 437.

A positive representation relating to a matter of fact constitutes a warranty; as that a ship is an American or French ship, or that the crew consists of so many hands. But where the representation relates to that which is a matter of opinion or fancy, as, for example, the value of a horse or painting, it is to be regarded as an expression of opinion rather than such a verification of a fact as will amount to a warranty, unless that idea is excluded by an express warranty, or such other declaration as leaves no doubt of the intention to make a warranty. Id.

A statement by a vendor that hogs sold are "suitable and proper for the New York City market" does not constitute a warranty, but is a mere expression of opinion. Bartlett v. Hoppock, 88 D. 428.

80. Effect of express warranty. — An express warranty of property cannot be fairly construed to intend an exclusion of the natural implied warranty of soundness. Houston v. Gilbert, 5 D. 542.

Scienter of the vendor is immaterial when there is an express warranty of the goods, and an offer to return them in due time after discovering their unsoundness. Hyatt v. Boyle, 25 D. 276.

An express warranty includes all defects embraced within the language of the warranty, although of a nature so obvious to the senses, that the buyer might have informed himself of their existence by examination. Stucky v. Chyburn, 34 D. 590. Contra see Connersville v. Wadleigh, 41 D. 214; Fisher v. Pollard, 75 D. 740.

A purchaser's knowledge of the existence of a defect does not exempt the seller from liability upon his express warranty of the soundness of a chattel. Stucky v. Chyburn, 34 D. 590.

Failure of the vendee of personal property to return the same upon a breach of a covenant of warranty within the time stipulated for such purpose, vests the title absolutely in him. Johnson v. McLane, 43 D. 102.

Plaintiff can recover in an action for price of chattels warranted, but which do not conform to the warranty, no more than the actual value of the chattels at the time of the sale. Tuttle v. Brown, 64 D. 80.

81. Parol warranties. — In the absence of fraud, accident or mistake, it is incompetent to show a parol warranty of agricultural implements sold by a written contract containing no warranty. Mast v. Pearce, 43 R. 125.

Where the parties to a bill of sale of a ship reduced their agreement to writing by a bill of sale—Held, that no action would lie on a parol warranty made at the time of sale, and when no fraud was alleged. Munford v. McPherson, 3 D. 339.

A slave having been sold, and a memorandum given, setting forth that "for the consideration of three hundred dollars," the slave was sold, and that the seller "would warrant and defend the slave against the claims of all persons," but nothing was stated as to the soundness of the slave. Held, that the buyer could not be permitted to prove and recover on a parol warranty of soundness. Smith v. Williams, 4 D. 564.

IV. SALES BY SAMPLE.

82. What constitutes a sale by sample. — Every sale of packed cotton is a sale by sample, of necessity, and by established usage. Boorman v. Jenkins, 27 D. 158.

Where any sale of cotton is claimed to be an exception to this rule, the burden of proof rests upon the party asserting that fact. Id.

83. What does not. — A sale by sample does not take place when the purchaser of several bales of hemp cuts open and examines some of them and has ample opportunity to do so with the rest. In such a case there is no implied warranty that the bales not examined correspond with those examined. Salisbury v. Stainer, 32 D. 437.

84. The warranty implied.* — A sale by sample is in judgment of law a warranty that the bulk of the commodity corresponds in kind and quality with the sample. Beebe v. Robert, 27 D. 132. S. P., Bradford v. Manly, 7 D. 122; Boorman v. Jenkins, 27 D. 158; Brandley v. Thomas, 73 D. 264; Dickinson v. Gay, 83 D. 656; Foot v. Bentley, 4 R. 652; but this exception to the common law rule of caveat emptor, though well established, stands on no principle. Moses v. Mead, 43 D. 676.

A sale by sample, in the absence of fraud or of circumstances indicating that the sample is to be taken as a standard of quality, implies no warranty of quality, but only that the goods are of the same kind as the sample and merchantable. Boyd v. Wilson, 24 R. 176; Fraley v. Bispham, 51 D. 486.

A warranty that a bulk of goods corresponds to the sample in quality is implied by law, where the circumstances attending the sale satisfy the jury that the parties intended a sale by sample; but not when the exhibition of a portion may have been merely intended to aid the buyer in judging in the quality of the lot. Beirne v. Dord, 55 D. 321.

A sale by sample, and warranty of quality implied, are questions of intent to be judged by the jury. The mere facts that a sample was shown, and that personal examination of the bulk by the buyer was not practicable, are not conclusive. Id.

Evidence of a usage of the local market respecting sales by sample is not admissible as tending to show what was the intent of the parties to a particular sale, in their employment of a sample in their negotiations. Id.

There is no implied warranty against a latent defect in manufactured goods sold by sample by a merchant, who is not a manufacturer, where both the sample and the bulk of the goods contain such defect, and which is unknown and undiscoverable by examination; and evidence is inadmissible to show that by usage of merchants the seller is responsible therefor. A commission merchant who makes such sale, but who is not authorized to sell on credit, must account to the consignor for the price, without deduction for such defect. Dickinson v. Gay, 83 D. 656.

When property is sold by sample, the sample, and not the name, or other description by which the property is designated, is the sole standard by which the property is to be tested. Mante v. Gross, 94 D. 62.

85. Rights of purchasers. — The drawing of fresh samples by a purchaser of packed cotton to ascertain if they correspond with the first samples, does not make it any the less a sale by sample, and the vendor is liable on his warranty, if the bulk of the cotton does not correspond with the samples. Beebe v. Robert, 27 D. 132.

The vendor's ignorance of the manner in which goods sold by him have been packed will not exempt him from liability for the difference between the value of the packages in their actual condition and what it would have been if the packages had been uniform and corresponded with the samples by which the sale was effected. The measure of damages in such cases is the difference in value of the actual contents and the contents represented to be in the packages at the time and place of sale. Fuller v. Cowell, 58 D. 676.

On a sale by sample, delivery of goods to a carrier will not constitute delivery to the consignee so as to pass title, and make the consignee liable for them, if they do not correspond in quality and quantity with the order; but to entitle him to recover in such a case, the consignor must show that the consignee actually received and accepted the goods. Barton v. Kane, 84 D. 728.

On a sale by sample, alleged defects of quality in goods sent to the purchaser are waived, and acceptance is presumed, if the purchaser does not return or offer to return them, or notify the seller of his non-acceptance of them. Id.

The fraudulent procuring of the adoption of a sample in a sale by sample will preclude the party who has practiced such fraud from complaining that he is denied any advantage of his wrong. Maute v. Gross, 94 D. 62.

The defendants orally agreed to buy of the plaintiff two car-loads of barley by sample. The barley was in the plaintiff's elevator on a public railway track in Minneapolis leading to a point near the defendants' brewery. The defendants requested that the barley be sent down to their brewery, and the cars were sent accordingly, and the defendants inspecting the grain, and finding it inferior to the sample, refused to accept it, and so notified the plaintiff. Held, that there was no delivery and acceptance. Taylor v. Mueller, 44 R. 199.

V. REMEDIES BETWEEN BUYER AND SELLER.

86. Rights of the seller, generally.

—A vendor cannot treat a sale as valid and recover judgment for the price, and at the same time repudiate the sale for fraud, and proceed to recover the goods from third persons to whom they have been assigned for value. Lloyd v. Brewster, 27 D. 88.

A vendor of goods to be paid for by note in futuro, if such note is not given, may sue immediately for a breach of the special agreement and recover the value of the goods as damages, though he cannot sue for goods sold and delivered until the term of credit expires. Hanna v. Mills, 34 D. 216.

A tender of the purchase price after default by failure to make payment at the time agreed upon, is insufficient unless the costs and expense of the vendor in taking care of the property up to that time be also tendered. Coffman v. Hampton, 37 D. 511.

A vendee of goods merely contracted to be sold, but never actually delivered, has no right to the possession of them until the sale is consummated, and if, before consummation of the sale, he obtains possession surreptitiously, and without the consent of the vendor, the latter may recover it again without a rescission of the contract. Jennings v. Gage, 56 D. 476.

87. Election of remedies. —A vendor of goods on whom a fraud has been practiced, may elect either to affirm the sale, and proceed as a judgment creditor, or to avoid the sale and follow the goods into the hands of one who has not parted with value on the faith of them. Lloyd v. Brewster, 27 D. 88.

The vendor may elect to consider the contract at an end if the vendee disavows all property in the goods and refuses to pay for them. Mackinley v. McGregor, 31 D. 522.

The seller, upon refusal of the purchaser to receive and pay for goods sold, may keep the goods and recover by proper action the difference between their value at the time and place of delivery and the contract price ; or he may sell them with due precaution and diligence, and then sue for and recover the difference between the price received and the contract price; or he may, upon making an actual or constructive delivery of the goods, recover the full contract price. Webber v. Minor, 99 D. 688.

88. Seller's right of action for the price. —1. The right of action. —A party who violates the provisions of the patent law by making and selling a patented article cannot maintain an action to recover the purchase price thereof. Bell v. Bouney, 56 D. 601.

A party to whom credit is originally given by the vendor is liable for the payment to him of the amount credited. Wallace v. Wortham, 57 D. 197.

The Maine act of 1851, c. 211, sec. 16, denies the right to maintain any action of which spirituous liquors may be regarded in any manner as the subject-matter. Lord v. Chadbourne, 66 D. 290.

No action can be maintained for the value of liquors held in violation of, and for the purpose of violating that act. Id.

An action cannot be maintained for the price of goods sold to be paid for by a specific article of personal property, unless the buyer has refused to deliver the specific article after a proper demand. McBain v. Austin, 82 D. 705.

A proper demand sufficient to sustain action for price of goods sold by partnership, and to be paid for by a specific article, cannot be made by one partner without an order from his copartner, if the latter made the sale, and stipulated with the buyer that the article should not be delivered except upon his order, and the buyer was unaware of the partnership. Id.

The vendor may, notwithstanding his exercise of the right of stoppage, maintain an action against the vendee for goods bargained and sold, provided he be ready and willing to surrender the goods according to the terms of the original contract. Patten's Appeal, 84 D. 479.

Where goods are sold to one for the use and benefit of another, by whom they are received and used, the latter cannot be held therefor merely upon his acknowledgment of the correctness of the account and his oral promise to pay it. Hendricks v. Robinson, 31 R. 382.

If one sells goods in fact to a second, supposing that the sale is really to a third through the second as his agent, and solely in reliance on the third, although the second sells them to the third, the first cannot recover therefor from the third. Stoddard v. Ham, 37 R. 369.

Where a seller of goods gives credit to the buyer, until the latter shall be able to ship them to a certain place and receive returns, he cannot maintain an action for the price thereof, until sufficient time has elapsed for the returns to be received; but a mere gratuitous extension of delay, made after the contract was otherwise complete, will not affect the seller's right to sue. Bradford v. Marbury, 46 D. 284.

2. Form of action.—The value of an article sold may be recovered, either in debt or indebitatus assumpsit, provided the vendor was to be compensated in money; and it is not necessary that a price should be agreed upon for an article sold and delivered in order to maintain either of those actions. Jenkins v. Richardson, 22 D. 82.

Where the vendor of goods cannot recover on a written contract of sale thereof, and there has been a delivery of some of the goods sold, he may recover the value of the goods so delivered on a quantum valebant. Bain v. Norton, 60 D. 618.

Indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold and delivered does not lie where none or a part only of the goods have been accepted by the purchaser; the seller's remedy is an action of special assumpsit for goods bargained and sold, not for goods sold and delivered. Atwood v. Lucas, 89 D. 713.

Delivery to and acceptance by purchaser of any portion of goods bargained for will satisfy the statute of frauds; but to authorize the maintenance of a suit for goods sold and delivered, there must be a delivery and acceptance of all the goods sued for. Id.

Fraud will vitiate any contract, and if the contract be void, on the ground of fraud, the party may waive it, and bring an action of assumpsit. Accordingly, where on a sale the vendor takes the note of a third person, payable at a future day, in payment, at his own risk, and there is a fraudulent representation by the vendee as to the note, the vendor may bring his action immediately for goods sold and delivered. Willson v. Force, 8 D. 195.

89. Matters of defense.—1. In general.—Damages for expense incurred by the vendee, in sending for and not obtaining the chattels sold, may be recouped in an action by the vendor for the price. Cole v. Swanton, 52 D. 238.

The vendor cannot recover the price of goods actually delivered, although they were received and used by the vendee, where, by the contract of sale, the vendor was to deliver a certain quantity in each of three successive months, and the only quantity delivered was less than required by the contract. Catlin v. Tobias, 84 D. 183.

The defendant cannot avoid payment on the ground that the sale was in fraud of the seller's creditors. Gary v. Jacobson, 30 R. 514.

In an action to recover the value of goods sold by a verbal contract, void by statute of frauds, the vendor proved delivery to the vendee, whereupon the vendee offered the contents of a telegram which he had attempted to send to the vendor, to show that he declined to accept the goods. The offer was rejected, on the ground that the vendor had not been shown to have received the telegram. Held, on appeal that the acts of the vendee at the time of the receipt of the goods, and his bona fide attempts to communicate his rejection of them to the vendor, were material and competent to rebut any presumption of acceptance arising from their retention. Caulkins v. Hellman, 7 R. 461.

2. Illegality of the sale.—The seller's mere knowledge that the buyer is purchasing a thing with criminal intent, to put it to an unlawful use, does not defeat his action for the price, on the principle of denying relief to a party in pari delicto. Thus one who sells stock to a corporation, although he knows that the corporation is purchasing to sell again at a speculation, contrary to a penal provision in the charter, may nevertheless recover, on an implied assumpsit, the value of the stock; otherwise when the contract provides for the illegal use of the thing sold, or when the seller does any act to promote it. Tracy v. Tabnag, 67 D. 132. S. P., Wallace v. Lark, 32 R. 516.

In an action for the price of a billiard table it is no defense that it may be used for gambling, unless it was sold under a contract that it was so to be used; and knowledge of such intended use will not be inferred from the fact that it was accompanied by a pool set and rules for its use. Brunswick v. Vallean, 32 R. 119.

It is no defense to a note given for a horse that the horse was purchased for use in, and was actually used in, the Confederate service in the civil war. Wallace v. Lark, 32 R. 516.

Goods were sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant. In an action for the price,—held, that the fact that plaintiff was a wholesale dealer, and, during the time when the goods were sold, had not paid the special tax imposed by act of Congress of 1864, ch. 173, sec. 79, did not invalidate the sale or prevent a recovery. Larned v. Andrews, 8 R. 346.

3. Want of title in vendor.—The purchaser of goods cannot set up vendor's want of title as a defense to an action for the price, if the true owner has not recovered the property, unless the vendor fraudulently represented himself to be the owner, knowing such representation to be false. Case v. Hall, 35 D. 606. S. P., Sumner v. Gray, 28 D. 39.

In an action for the price of personal property, it is a valid defense that the purchaser discovered after the sale that the vendor had

* Sale of goods for illegal purpose, when a defense to action for the purchase price, see note, 32 R. 122-127.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

no title, and being threatened with suit by the true owner, paid him the price, the vendor being insolvent. Matheny v. Mason, 39 R. 541.

4. Objections to the consideration.—A purchaser from a trespasser who has cut logs on another's land, without license, having notice of that fact, and expressly assuming the risk, cannot resist an action for the price, on the ground that there was no consideration, or that the consideration was unlawful. Baker v. Page, 26 D. 540.

Partial failure of consideration, or breach of warranty, or deception in the quality or value of goods sold, may be shown in mitigation of damages, in an action to recover the purchase price. Perley v. Balch, 34 D. 56.

Mere inadequacy of consideration without warranty or fraud is no defense to the payment of a bill or note given for the purchase-price of goods, and since the unsoundness of the article sold relates only to the adequacy of the consideration, this can furnish no defense. Eagan v. Call, 75 D. 653.

5. Breach of warranty.—In an action for the price of articles sold, the defendant, by way of equitable defense, may give evidence of a warranty of the articles, and a breach thereof, without his having offered to return the articles, or his having given notice to the plaintiff to take them away. Steyleman v. Jeffries, 7 D. 626.

Wherever a defendant can maintain a cross action for damages on account of a defect in personal property purchased by him, or for a non-compliance by the plaintiff with his part of the contract, he may, in defense to an action on the note given for the purchase money, claim a deduction corresponding with the injury sustained. In the case of real estate, the rule may be otherwise. Peden v. Moore, 21 D. 649.

Defendant, in an action for the agreed price of goods, is entitled to an allowance in the assessment of damages of the difference between the contract price and the value, where the property proves inferior in quality to that which the vendor expressly agreed to furnish; but he is not entitled to a further allowance of the amount which he has lost by losing the sale of the property at a profitable advance. McAlpin v. Lee, 30 D. 609.

A vendee may show breach of warranty in an action for the price of goods sold, in reduction of damages, but must make out such a case as would warrant a recovery in an action therefor. Mizer v. Coburn, 45 D. 230.

A vendee may recoup his damages for breach of warranty of quality in an action by the vendor on a promissory note given by the vendee for the price. Getty v. Rowntree, 54 D. 133.

Breach of warranty is a defense under the general issue in assumpsit on promissory notes given for the purchase price of the property warranted, though executed subsequent to the time the contract of warranty was made. Falconer v. Smith, 55 D. 611.

The degree of polish of machinery will not alone entitle defendant to deduction from the amount of notes given for the purchase price of the machinery, unless it is a material, substantial defect, and something more than a mere matter of fancy, except the polish was contemplated by the parties at the time of the original contract, and so formed a part of the consideration thereof. Id.

Inferiority in quality of an article sold to that which it was represented to be, is not a defense in assumpsit for the price, if the article has been received and used. Allisons v. Noble, 13 D. 230.

Breach of warranty of quality of chattels cannot be set up by way of defense, recoupment, or counterclaim, by the accommodation indorser of a note given for the price of the chattels in an action against him thereon. Gillespie v. Torrance, 82 D. 355.

A claim for damages for breach of warranty in a sale does not rest upon a failure of the consideration of the contract on which the action is founded, but is a distinct claim which may be set up by way of defense or counterclaim in an action for the price, or by a separate action, the election to do which rests in a principal, and cannot be made by a surety; though, it seems, a surety would be relieved in equity in case of insolvency of his principal. Id.

6. Fraud or false representations.—False representations by a vendor, which are not shown to have induced the purchase, and the falsity of which the vendee might have discovered with diligence, do not constitute a fraud avoiding a promissory note given for the purchase-price. Williams v. Hicks, 19 D. 693.

In an action for the price of goods sold with warranty, fraud may be set up, under the general issue, though the fraud consisted in representations as to the quality of the goods, which were not covered by the warranty. Connersville v. Wadleigh, 41 D. 214.

The vendee may prove in defense, deceit on the part of the vendor, and that the article is of no value; or he may show a partial unsoundness, in mitigation of damages. Harmon v. Sanderson, 45 D. 272.

Proof that the chattel was valueless, and that the representations made at the time of the sale were fraudulent, is necessary to warrant a verdict for defendant, however far the evidence might have extended in mitigation of damages. Id.

Unsoundness or fraud may be given in evidence as a defense, answering the whole demand or in mitigation of damages, in a suit on an original contract of sale, either upon a warranty as to the goodness of the article sold or upon a fraudulent misrepresentsentation of its value. Principle applied to a building contract. McTorkle v. Doby, 47 D. 560.

Pecuniary injury sustained from fraudulent misrepresentations as to the quality of an article sold may be set up in an action by the vendor on a promissory note given for the purchase price, not as a matter of set-off, but as an equitable defense pro tanto, springing from failure of consideration. Price v. Lewis, 55 D. 536.

The vendee may set up willful misrepresentation and deceit to resist a recovery, and by proving a failure of the consideration, show that in equity and good conscience the plaintiff ought not to recover. Wetner v. Clement, 78 D. 411.

A vendor is guilty of fraud which may be pleaded as a defense to an action for the price when the thing sold has a latent defect of which he is aware, but which he fails to disclose to the vendee, though he knows that the latter is acting upon the supposition that no such defect exists. In this case, it is error to strike out an answer setting up such defense. Cecil v. Spurger, 82 D. 140. Contra see, Frenzel v. Miller, 10 R. 62.

90. Rules of pleading. — A complaint which alleges that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a specified sum, for goods sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant at his request, at, etc., and that there is now due to plaintiff from defendant a sum specified, for which he demands judgment, is sufficient under the New York code of procedure. Allen v. Patterson, 57 D. 542.

In an action on a contract of sale of a quantity of "sound rice," the seller, in order to recover on the contract, must show that the rice was sound. Russ v. Norton, 60 D. 618.

A plea substantially avers false warranty and damages for its breach when it avers that the seller's representations of the quality of the goods sold, upon which the defendant relied in purchasing, were untrue, and that the seller knew them to be untrue at the time of making them, and knowingly made them with intent to defraud the defendant, and sets out various particulars in which the representations proved to be untrue. Cunningham v. Smith, 60 D. 333.

A plea averring untrue representations of quality is defective, and properly rejected, if it does not aver a warranty of the quality of the goods, nor knowledge in the plaintiff of the falsity of his representations, nor the use by him of any fraud or art to disguise or conceal the true quality of the goods. Id.

Denial of a sale of a horse raises an issue only on the sale in point of fact, and not on the legality of such sale. Finley v. Quirk, 36 D. 93.

Facts tending to establish the defense that a sale was made on Sunday, and is therefore void, constitute new matter by way of defense, and must be pleaded affirmatively. Id.

91. What evidence is admissible and sufficient. — Evidence that glass sold as German cylinder glass was not such as would be known in the market among those conversant with the trade, as answering to that description, is admissible in an action for the price, but evidence that it was not merchantable is inadmissible. Mizer v. Coburn, 45 D. 230.

General usages of trade are competent evidence in an action for the price of goods; such as a usage that where glass is sold in boxes the risk of broken glass is on the buyer. Id.

A sale and delivery of goods may be established by the deposition, with the bill of goods annexed, of one who was employed in the vendor's store at the time of the purchase, and who went to the vendee's store with the bill and identified a portion of the goods. The vendor's book of original entries need not be produced. Smith v. Smith, 60 D. 51.

To maintain a general count of indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, proof of an actual delivery to and acceptance by the purchaser of the goods sued for is essential. Atwood v. Lucas, 89 D. 713.

Where property is sold and delivered to be paid for upon a resale if the property is not returned in a reasonable time, a resale will be presumed. Blow v. Spear, 97 D. 412.

In an action to recover the purchase-money of an article made under contract, the defense was that the article was not like the sample. Held, that evidence was admissible of the difference in the results produced by the sample and the imitation, as corroborative of their inherent difference. Tilton v. Miller, 5 R. 373.

92. What is not. — Evidence of a sale of goods to be paid for by a "satisfactory note" will not support a declaration on a sale for the purchaser's note "to the order of, and indorsed by, a person who should be satisfactory" to the vendor, there being no evidence of a usage attaching such meaning to the words used at the sale. Hanna v. Mills, 34 D. 216.

No warranty is implied on a sale of chattels for a sound price, that they are merchantable or sound; and evidence that they are not as good as articles usually sold for that price, is inadmissible in an action for the price. Mizer v. Coburn, 45 D. 230.

In an action for the price on a sale by sample, where the defense is set up that the goods were inferior to the sample, and unfit for use, it is erroneous to admit evidence on the part of plaintiff that other goods of the same kind were sent by him at the same time to other purchasers, who made no complaint of their quality. Barton v. Kane, 84 D. 728.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Common reputation is not admissible to show that the seller of goods, which were bought for an illegal purpose, knew the purpose to which they were to be put, nor to show his intention to participate in the wrongful act. Hedges v. Wallace, 92 D. 497.

93. Amount recoverable. — The plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount the articles were worth at the time of the sale, without regard to their subsequent value. Hill v. Hill, 1 D. 206.

A vendee who accepts a consignment of goods upon which the prices are marked, is presumed to have taken them at the vendor's prices as marked, or as stated in an accompanying invoice, unless it should appear from a custom with which both are acquainted, or from the course of previous dealing between the parties, that the vendee had a right to reduce the prices according to the estimated value of the goods at the place of consignment. Mitchell v. McBee, 36 D. 264.

If, on a sale, credit is stipulated for, there can be no recovery except for the sum due according to the contract, when the suit is commenced. Bradford v. Marbury, 46 D. 264.

A vendor or workman may recover what the thing or work is worth, where it is of some use and value to the employer or vendee, though improperly done and not within the stipulated time. Davis v. Fish, 48 D. 387.

The stipulated price of chattels actually delivered may be recovered, after deducting damages sustained by non-delivery, when the vendor cannot deliver the whole of the quantity sold. Cole v. Swanston, 52 D. 288.

The measure of damages for breach by a vendee of a contract of purchase, in refusing to receive property when it is tendered him under the contract, is the difference between its contract price and its market value at the time it was tendered. Rider v. Kelley, 76 D. 176; Pittsburgh etc. Ry Co. v. Heck, 19 R. 713; Dwiggins v. Clark, 48 R. 140.

The vendee is not bound to pay for an article, valueless as purchased, and for the purpose for which it was purchased; and it is no answer for the vendor to say, in an action by him upon a note given for the price, that the vendee has something which can be made useful in some different manner, or for some other purpose. Cragin v. Fowler, 80 D. 680.

Vendors who sue for price of goods obtained by fraud can recover only what is due at the commencement of the action; although they might have treated the sale as a nullity, and reclaimed the goods at once, while in the possession of the vendee, before the term of credit had expired. Jacobs v. Shorey, 97 D. 586.

94. Sellers' right of action for buyers' refusal to complete purchase.* — If a vendee has accepted a portion of a quantity of goods contracted for, and they prove inferior to those stipulated for, he cannot for this reason refuse to accept the residue; but if the residue prove inferior, he may refuse to accept them. Cohen v. Platt, 25 R. 203.

A purchaser signed and delivered to the seller a written agreement to buy shares of stock from him on specified terms. The seller did not sign but orally agreed to sell on those terms. The seller tendered the stock and requested the price, but the purchaser declined to fulfill. In an action to recover the purchase price—held, that the action was maintainable; that the seller might thus sue, or he might sell the stock, apply the proceeds and recover the balance; or retain the stock and recover the difference between the contract price and the market price as damages. Mason v. Decker, 28 R. 190.

95. — for deceit of buyer in inducing the sale.† — Trespass, replevin, or trover may be sustained by a vendor whose goods have been obtained from him by a fraudulent purchase. Cary v. Hotelling, 37 D. 323.

Possession of the true owner cannot be divested by a tortious or fraudulent taking. Id.

A fraudulent vendee of goods and his assignee thereof for benefit of creditors are liable to a joint action by the vendor to recover possession. Nichols v. Michael, 80 D. 259.

Where one buys goods intending not to pay for them, the vendor may recover the goods from his assignee. Belding v. Frankland, 41 R. 630.

A vendor may maintain replevin for goods which he has been induced by fraud to sell, against a purchaser from the vendee who was a conspirator in the fraud, or who had notice of it, although the vendor transferred the vendee's note for the price for value, and never reclaimed it, the note not having been negotiated by the vendor with such knowledge or under such circumstances as to amount to an affirmation of the sale. Manning v. Albee, 92 D. 736.

A contract for the purchase of goods on credit, made with intent on the part of the purchaser not to pay for them, is fraudulent; and if the purchaser has no reasonable expectation of being able to pay, it is equivalent to an intention not to pay. Talcott v. Henderson, 27 R. 501.

But where the purchaser intends to pay and has reasonable expectations of being able to do so, the contract is not fraudulent.

* Remedy of manufacturer when purchaser refuses to accept the goods, see note, 56 D. 642-647.

although the purchaser knows himself to be insolvent and does not disclose it to the vendor, who is ignorant of the fact. Id.

Where a vendor rescinds a sale of goods on credit for fraud, the remedy is trover or replevin, and assumpsit will not lie until the expiration of the term of credit, unless the goods have been converted into money or money's worth. Kellogg v. Turpie, 34 R. 163.

Where one knows himself to be insolvent, and buys goods on credit, concealing that fact and intending not to pay, and falsely representing himself to be a mayor, the seller may recover the goods from him. Des Farges v. Pugh, 53 R. 446.

96. Buyer's right of action, generally. — The vendee must show that he was ready to pay according to the stipulations of his contract of purchase, before he can sustain an action against the vendor for non-performance, and this is true whether the vendor was ready and able to perform or not. McGehee v. Hill, 29 D. 277.

Trover or detinue cannot be maintained by a purchaser against his vendor, until he has paid or tendered the entire consideration for the property bought. Jennings v. Flanagan, 30 D. 683.

One who receives and sells stolen property may be held liable for damages in a civil action, although it does not appear that the felon has been prosecuted for the theft. Rogers v. Hyde, 54 D. 300.

The price paid for a stolen chattel may be recovered from the thief, in assumpsit, although the thief has not been tried for the felony. Barton v. Faherty, 54 D. 503.

The buyer may recover for breach of contract without showing his readiness to pay the purchase money, where a mutual contract had been made between buyer and seller for the sale and purchase of a horse, but before the execution of the contract the seller disposes of the horse to another party. Harris v. Williams, 67 D. 253.

The vendee may recover a chattel from the vendor retaking possession for non-payment of an installment of the purchase-money, but not rescinding the contract, upon paying the balance due, where the contract makes the price payable in monthly installments, and provides that, upon default as to any installment, the vendor may retake the property and at his option terminate the contract, there being nothing to indicate that time is of the essence of the contract. Miller v. Steen, 89 D. 124.

In a sale of a drug establishment, if the purchaser has no knowledge of the business and relies on the seller's statements as to the value, and the seller knows of such reliance, and those statements are false, to the purchaser's injury, although the seller believed them true, the purchaser may be relieved. Bower v. Fenn, 35 R. 662.

97. Buyer's action for seller's failure to deliver. — 1. Right of action and defenses. — A special action on the case is the only proper action to bring against vendors who wrongfully detain and sell goods already sold to another. Patten's Appeal, 84 D. 479.

The vendee may at any reasonable time, after vendor has stopped goods, enforce his claim to them by payment of the purchase-money, according to the terms of the original contract. Id.

Where goods have been ordered of a firm, the purchaser's acceptance at thirty days received, the goods separated from the common stock and packed, and the invoice delivered, it is a closed contract, and the title to the goods vests in the purchaser, subject to the vendor's right of stoppage in transitu, or to abandon the contract for the insolvency of the purchaser. And where the sellers afterwards refuse to deliver the goods because cash was not paid instead of an acceptance given, they will be liable in damages. Barker v. Mann, 96 D. 373.

Acceptance and use of wares or goods without complaint, furnishes a strong presumption of a waiver of all objections on account of defective construction or delay in delivery. Davis v. Fish, 48 D. 387.

A vendor contracting to deliver goods at the depot of a common carrier cannot excuse non-performance by proving that the vendee did not furnish a place at the depot for the deposit of the goods, as this is the vendor's duty. Eckel v. Murphey, 53 D. 607.

The right of action of the buyer for the seller's failure to deliver part of the goods is not waived by the parties subsequently contracting anew for a sale of such goods, including the quantity already delivered. McKnight v. Dunlop, 55 D. 370.

2. Demand and refusal. — On a promise to deliver goods, a demand before action brought is indispensably necessary. Benners v. Howard, 1 D. 583.

A contract to deliver cumbrous articles on demand, is, in legal construction, a contract to deliver on reasonable demand; and evidence showing a reasonable demand proves necessarily a demand at the proper place. Higgins v. Emmons, 13 D. 41.

The silence of a party on a demand of the articles which he has contracted to deliver on demand, is equivalent to a refusal. Id.

3. Readiness to receive and pay. — In an action on a breach of agreement to deliver goods, where the defendant agreed to deliver to the plaintiff or his agent at a certain place, payment to be made on delivery, it is sufficient to aver that the plaintiff has at all times been ready to receive the goods and pay for the same at the place stated, without saying he was to pay at the particular time stipulated for the delivery. Porter v. Rose, 7 D. 306.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Where two acts are to be done at the same time, as where one agrees to sell and deliver, and the other to receive and pay, in an action for the non-delivery it is necessary for the plaintiff to aver and prove a readiness to pay on his part, whether the other party was at the place ready to deliver or not. Ib.

The purchaser has no action for the breach of an executory contract of sale, by the terms of which the purchaser is to send for the goods and pay for them upon delivery, and the seller is to deliver them upon receiving payment, without showing that he, the purchaser, has paid or tendered the purchase price, or was ready and able to do so, or that the seller has done something to discharge him from that duty. Grandy v. McCleese, 64 D. 574.

Denial of an executory contract of sale by the seller does not relieve the purchaser from the necessity of proving his readiness and ability to pay or tender the purchase price, though such conduct of the seller will relieve the purchaser from the obligation of actually paying or tendering the money. Ib.

Proof of purchaser's readiness and ability to pay the purchase-money at another time and place cannot avail the purchaser in his action for the breach of an executory contract of sale, the terms of which provide for payment at the time and place of delivery, even if this fact was known to the seller, and a fortiori if it were not known to him. Ib.

4. Damages, interest, etc.—The measure of damages for breach of contract in failing to deliver a steam-engine, which the delinquents had been paid for, is the amount of its estimated value as made by the parties, or if they had fixed no price, then its actual value. Davis v. Fish, 48 D. 387.

The measure of damages in an action against the seller for failure to deliver goods sold is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time of default. McKnight v. Dunlop, 55 D. 370; Cohen v. Platt, 25 R. 203.

Speculative profits, or anticipated profits, on the sale of goods purchased will not be allowed in an action against the vendor for failure to deliver the same, where the vendor notified the purchaser promptly of his refusal, and where no reason is assigned why the purchaser could not have bought the same class of goods immediately in the same market. Barker v. Mann, 96 D. 373.

Damages for breach of contract to sell goods where purchaser could have supplied the like goods in the same market, would include the purchaser's necessary expenses, and compensation for his time and trouble in making the purchase, and any advanced price which he was forced to pay. Ib.

Damages for failure to deliver goods sold where the seller was informed at the time of sale that the purchaser had already contracted for their resale, and where he purchased them with a view to perfecting such resale, should include any damage which the purchaser suffered by reason of the vendor's failure to complete his contract; but where the resale is prospective or uncertain, it is too indefinite to be the subject of damages. Ib.

The plaintiff in an action for breach of contract to deliver wheat is not entitled to interest from the date of the contract, but only from the time of its breach. Bracelet v. Edgerton, 100 D. 211.

5. Illustrations.—W. contracted with R. for the sale of salt to arrive, the contract being in these words: "Cincinnati, October 13, 1862. Sold J. H. Rogers one thousand sacks coarse Liverpool, and two thousand sacks fine Liverpool salt, at $2.10 per sack, to arrive by the 15th of November." In an action on such contract by the purchaser against the seller, for failing to deliver the salt—held, (1) that the words "to arrive by the 15th of November" are words of condition and description only, and do not import a warranty that the salt shall arrive by the day named; (2) in such action, testimony offered by the purchaser to show that by the custom of merchants the words "to arrive by the 15th of November" meant "deliverable by the 15th of November" was properly excluded. Rogers v. Woodruff, 13 R. 276.

Under a contract for the sale of 500 tons of coal at a specified price, to be delivered on the cars by the defendant at their place of business, as plaintiffs might order, between the 12th September (the date of the contract) and the 31st March following, provided that not more than 200 tons should be ordered "in any one month;" the first order, made in September, being for 200 tons, the defendants were entitled to one month from the date of the contract within which to make the delivery, and to a like period for each successive order of 200 tons. Johnson v. Allen, 56 R. 34.

A failure to deliver any part of the quantity ordered would not terminate the contract, unless the plaintiffs elected so to consider it; and a partial delivery being accepted, they could not carry the deficiency over into the next month, and demand it in addition to the maximum quantity specified for each monthly delivery. Ib.

Plaintiffs having ordered 200 tons during each of the months of September and October, could only order 100 tons in November, which would exhaust the contract; and the defendants' failure to deliver each month the full quantity ordered, was a separate breach accruing at the end of each month. Ib.

The coal being mixed by the defendants at a railroad station where they alone were engaged in the business, and being intended, as they knew, for sale by the plaintiffs in Tuscaloosa, the nearest market, the measure of plaintiff's damages for a breach is the difference between the contract price and the market price in Tuscaloosa, with cost of transportation added; and this is to be estimated for each separate breach, on each partial delivery. Id.

After the contract was exhausted by the maximum orders during the months of September, October and November, any subsequent deliveries accepted by the plaintiffs must be applied to the several breaches in the order of their occurrence, beginning with the first. Id.

98. Buyer's action for defect in quality. — A vendor is liable in an action on the case for unsoundness of personal property, which was known to him, and not disclosed to the buyer, where there is no express warranty, and nothing said of the soundness. McFarlane v. Moore, 3 D. 752.

The purchaser, to recover the purchase money paid or damages on the sale of any article or commodity, on the ground that it is inferior in quality to what it was represented to be, must allege and prove either fraud or an express warranty. Towell v. Gateswood, 33 D. 437.

A vendee cannot accept delivery of property under an executory contract, retain it after having had an opportunity of ascertaining its quality, and recover damages if it be not of the quality or description called for by the contract. Reed v. Randall, 86 D. 305.

A vendee, having without protest accepted tobacco bought under an executory contract, cannot, after waiting for more than a year and a half after its delivery, maintain an action to recover damages on the ground that the tobacco was in a bad condition when delivered, not having been properly cured, and being wet, sweaty, and rotten. Id.

The price of goods at the place of delivery is the measure of damages in an action against a seller for negligently putting up the goods, in consequence of which they were lost. Bailey v. Shaw, 55 D. 241.

One who puts it out of the power of the owner to show quality and value of the property whose value is sought to be recovered, by artifice and concealment, is liable for the value of the best quality of such goods. Id.

Where parties to a contract for the sale of wheat agree upon a person to inspect and grade it, and that if, upon inspection by him, any of it should prove to be inferior to No. 1, the seller should pay the difference in value, it being left with the purchaser to call on the inspector if he considered any wheat of an inferior grade, the purchaser can only be allowed damages on account of the inferior quality of the wheat which he had inspected according to the contract. Brackets v. Edgerton, 100 D. 211.

In construing a contract which provides that certain machinery shall be set in position by a specified time, and if any of it should prove defective, or in any manner fail to answer the purposes intended, on a trial of twenty days, the manufacturer should make it good by repairing the defects—held, that without such provision the vendor could not, as a matter of right, repair defects in the machinery after it was delivered to the purchaser, nor could the latter require him to repair it; that after the expiration of the twenty days such rights ceased; nor was the vendee bound to give the vendor notice of defects discovered after the twenty days expired. His right of action for damages accrued to him from a breach of the contract, if defective machinery had been delivered, and a failure to remedy such defects within the twenty days mentioned in the contract. The vendee need not repair, or even use the machinery, to enable him to avail himself of his right to damages. Fisk v. Tank, 78 D. 737.

99. — or quantity. — The quantity of chattels purchased having, by mutual mistake, been supposed to be greater than it really was, the vendee may recover the excess paid by him, or may compel the vendor to make good the deficiency; but the vendee cannot recover remote damages, resulting from such deficiency, as where, while still subject to the mistake, he paid excessive duties on such chattels. Hargous v. Ablon, 45 D. 481.

100. Buyer's action for fraud or deceit in inducing the purchase. —

1. When actionable. — An action for selling one article for another will not lie, except where there is fraud or a warranty. Welsh v. Carter, 19 D. 473.

Where a vendor sells a horse, sound or unsound, he is not liable to an action by the vendee, although he knew that the horse was unsound when he sold him; but where the vendor makes false representations, calculated to throw the vendee off his guard, and to induce him to assume a risk which he would not have assumed if they had not been made, such vendor is liable, although he sold the horse with all faults, or sound or unsound. West v. Anderson, 21 D. 737.

In the sale of a horse, if representations as to his soundness are false, are not believed to be true when made, and are made to induce a purchase, and a damage results from them, they are actionable; nor is it necessary, to constitute the fraud, that a material fact should be directly misrepresented intentionally; if a false impression is produced by words or acts in order to mislead, it is sufficient. Howard v. Gould, 67 D. 728.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

Defendant having a horse which had glanders, and being so informed, and probably believing so, offering to trade him, being asked if his horse had the glanders, replying that some said that he had the distemper, but that plaintiff could examine him, is liable to an action for the false representations, as his answer amounted to an affirmation that he did not believe that the horse had the glanders; and having undertaken to answer the questions put to him, he was bound to make a full disclosure. Id.

Where the thing sold is a note and mortgage, the maker of which is known by both parties to be insolvent, and the vendor represents the mortgage to be good, as an inducement for the vendee to buy, and the latter, relying upon such representation, does buy, the vendor is liable to the purchaser for the consideration paid, if it turns out that mortgagor has in fact no title to the mortgaged premises. Hahn v. Doolittle, 86 D. 757.

False and fraudulent representations, calculated and intended to mislead and prevent examination and inquiry as to the quality and character of a stock of goods, made by a seller to a purchaser unacquainted with such goods, who exercising ordinary prudence, is induced to make the purchase, relying upon the representations, and is thereby deceived, are actionable. Stewart v. Stearns, 56 R. 496.

A false affirmation by a vendor as to a matter whereof the vendee might have ascertained the truth or falsehood, by ordinary vigilance and attention, is not a cause of action. Moore v. Turbeville, 5 D. 642.

An action for false representation will not lie for vendor's misrepresenting the value of the thing sold, nor where the purchaser might, by the exercise of common prudence, have ascertained the truth, and saved himself from injury. Page v. Parker, 80 D. 172; Ellis v. Andrews, 15 R. 379; Graffenstein v. Epstein, 33 R. 171; Chrysler v. Canaday, 43 R. 166.

2. Scienter. — The distinction between a warranty and fraud in a sale of an unsound article is, that if there is a warranty the contract is broken whether the vendor knew of the unsoundness or not; but if he represented the article to be sound knowing the contrary, and the vendee was thereby defrauded, an action will lie though there is no warranty; but the scienter must be distinctly alleged and proved, and the action must be based on the fraud. Bartholomew v. Bushnell, 52 D. 333.

An action for deceit in a sale, whether of provisions or other articles, can only be maintained where a willful, false affirmation or representation is proved, or is necessarily presumed from the circumstances attending the transaction, and from the situation of the parties. Emerson v. Brigham, 6 D. 109.

A vendor is liable in an action for deceit in the sale of a horse, on account of his false and fraudulent representations of soundness, whether the representations were that the horse was sound, or that he was sound so far as the vendor knew, provided at the time of the sale he knew the horse to be unsound. West v. Emery, 44 D. 356.

The seller is not guilty of fraud in misrepresenting the condition of goods sold, unless he knew that his representations were false. Bryant v. Crosby, 58 D. 767; Kingsbury v. Taylor, 50 D. 607.

Mere silence of a vendor who has knowledge of a latent defect in a chattel sold, that is, such defect as could not be discovered by the exercise of ordinary diligence, constitutes a deceit for which he is liable in damages; proof of the scienter and a suppression veri is sufficient. Brown v. Gray, 72 D. 563.

Mere silence of a vendor who has knowledge of a patent defect in a chattel sold, discoverable by the exercise of ordinary diligence, does not make him liable in damages as for a deceit; there must be a misrepresentation or concealment; there must be proof of the scienter and a suggestio falsi. Id.

A fraudulent representation in the sale of an article consists in some recommendation of it, or statement in regard to its good qualities, which is known to be untrue. Page v. Parker, 80 D. 172.

Fraudulent concealment is intentionally omitting to disclose some bad quality, or some fact relating to the property, known to the vendor and unknown to the purchaser, which it is material that the latter should know to prevent being defrauded. Id.

3. Matters of procedure. — The form of action in case of a fraudulent misrepresentation of quality of an article sold is ex delicto to recover damages for the tort. Price v. Lewis, 55 D. 636.

In an action for fraud in a sale, it is unnecessary to set forth the contract or the consideration, as that is a matter relating only to the damages. Barney v. Dewey, 7 D. 372.

A fraudulent intent on part of the vendor in improperly concealing a material fact to the damage of the vendee, will be presumed in an action by the vendee for damages. Hadley v. Clinton County Importing Co., 82 D. 454.

An instruction that concealment by the vendor of a material latent defect known to vendor and unknown to vendee, constitutes fraud on the part of the vendor, is erroneous, since this does not constitute fraud as a matter of law, but is merely evidence of fraud. Id.

It is competent, in an action against a vendor for failure to deliver flour by a cartain agreed date, for him to show that the vendee had said, after the written agreement had been made, that if the tide did not rise in the river over which the flour was to be transported, it need not be delivered by that time. The effect of this evidence is a question of fact for the jury. Bryon v. Hunt, 70 D. 262.

The plaintiff bought certain pretended shares in a corporation fraudulently organized, induced thereto by the alleged false and fraudulent representations of the defendant "that said corporation was all right, and would immediately prosecute the development of its property, and the business for which it was organized." Held, that it was properly left to the jury to interpret these statements, in connection with all the circumstances of the case. Bradley v. Poole, 93 D. 144.

Knowledge on the part of plaintiff of the condition of the corporation, — Held, to be insufficient ground, in the particular case, for setting aside a verdict in his favor rendered in an action brought by him to recover money obtained by false and fraudulent representations made in the sale of stock. Id.

4. Damages recoverable. — An instruction as to the measure of damages in an action against a vendor of diseased horses for fraudulent concealment of the facts respecting such disease, and for the rescission of the contract on account of such fraud, to the effect that the plaintiff is entitled to the cost price of the animals that have died, with interest, and to the difference in value between those yet living which are diseased and sound animals of the same quality, with interest, and also to compensation for necessary care and attention bestowed upon the animals, is sufficiently favorable to defendant. Wintz v. Morrison, 67 D. 658.

The vendor of diseased animals is liable for damages for communication of such disease to other animals purchased at the same time, and also, it seems, for the communication of such disease to other animals of the purchaser, in an action by such purchaser for fraud in concealing the fact that they are so diseased. Id.

Where plaintiff, in consideration that defendant would appoint him master of a certain vessel, agreed to purchase of him an eighth interest in such vessel at her cost price, and paid to defendant an eighth of what the latter represented to be such price, but subsequently learned that the cost price of the vessel was much less than defendant had represented it to be — held, that the defendant, in misstating such price, had misrepresented a material fact within his knowledge, by which plaintiff was deceived to his detriment, and that plaintiff might recover the difference between the sum so paid and one eighth of the actual cost of the vessel; and this, notwithstanding the actual value of the share purchased equaled or exceeded the sum so paid for it. Fredergast v. Reed, 96 D. 539.

101. Buyer's action for breach of warranty. 1. Right of action, generally. — The proper remedy for breach of a warranty is an action ex contractu. Price v. Lewis, 55 D. 536.

A purchaser having paid the purchase money for goods sold to him with a warranty, is not precluded from maintaining an action on the warranty, although he made payment after notice from a purchaser from him that the goods were defective, but before the extent of the damage was ascertained. Boorman v. Jenkins, 27 D. 158.

In case of warranty, direct or implied, if the article purchased proves defective or unfit for the use intended, the purchaser may, without returning or offering to return it, and without notifying the vendor of its defects, bring his action for the recovery of damages, or if sued for the price, may set up and have damages allowed to him, by way of recoupment from the sum stipulated to be paid. Pisk v. Tank, 78 D. 737; Borrekins v. Bevan, 23 D. 85; Getty v. Rountree, 54 D. 138.

One who has suffered in the purchase of goods by reason of a false warranty may sue in tort for the deceit and set forth the false warranty as the means of injury. Carter v. Glass, 38 R. 240.

2. Warranty of title. — A warranty of title in a chattel is broken whenever the purchaser is actually dispossessed by a better title whether there is a recovery at law or not. Read v. Staton, 9 D. 740.

An action cannot be maintained for a breach of warranty, whether express or implied, unless there has been a recovery by the real owner. It is necessary in such a case for the pleading to show that the vendee has been evicted or lawfully deprived of the use and possession of the property. Hynson v. Dunn, 41 D. 100.

An action on an implied warranty of title may be maintained by a vendee of wood, where he has paid for it, but can obtain no title thereto. Brown v. Pierce, 93 D. 57.

A vendee of personal property who is compelled, in order to retain the property, to discharge an incumbrance existing, unknown to him at the time of the purchase, may bring assumpsit for money paid against the vendor within the statutory period of limitation, after discharging the incumbrance. Sargent v. Currer, 6 R. 524.

A vendee of chattels, in case of failure of title to a portion thereof, is not bound to rescind the contract in toto, but may retain so much as he has secured a title to, and recover damages for the loss of the residue. It is optional with him to recoup such damages in action against him for the purchase-money, or to bring an action therefor; and such option is not defeated by a transfer of the claim against him, and the bringing of an action in the name of the transferee, except in cases where an indorsee or transferee of negotiable paper acquires a title discharged of all equities, and valid against all defenses. McKnight v. Devlin, 11 R. 715.

3. Warranty of soundness.—In an action on the case for selling one article for another, there must be either an express warranty or fraud on the part of the vendor. A sound price does not imply a warranty of soundness, nor does a description of goods in a bill of parcels amount to a warranty. Seixas v. Woods, 2 D. 215; Fleming v. Slacum, 9 D. 224; Dean v. Mason, 10 D. 162.

In an absolute sale with warranty where there is no subsequent agreement by the vendor to take back the articles, the vendee is put to his action upon the warranty for any unsoundness of the articles, unless the vendor knew of such at the time of the sale. Allen v. Anderson, 39 D. 197.

A vendee declaring on breach of warranty cannot recover on the ground of fraud, because the vendor, knowing the article to be unsound, represented it to be sound, if no warranty is proved; nor is the vendor thereby estopped from denying a warranty, whether the declaration is in tort or assumpsit, and although there is an allegation of scienter, and that the vendor fraudulently and falsely warranted the article. Bartholomew v. Bushnell, 52 D. 338.

Upon breach of warranty of soundness of a horse, the purchaser may return the horse and recover the price paid, with interest from the time of the return. Kuntzman v. Weaver, 59 D. 740.

4. *Warranty of quality.—If a seller of goods affirms them to be of a particular quality, and the buyer receives them upon the credit of such affirmation, and they afterwards appear to be of a different quality, the purchaser may return the goods and recover back the money had and received; or he may have his action without a return of the goods, if he gives notice to the seller where they are deposited. And the same rule exists where there is a warranty of soundness. Rutter v. Blake, 3 D. 550.

A vendor who affirms his goods to have a certain quality which they do not possess, and when such quality would increase their value, is liable to an action, although he did not know the affirmation to be false. Thompson v. Tate, 3 D. 678.

The vendee's remedy for breach of warranty of quality is to retain the chattel and sue on the warranty, or if sued for the price, to recoup his damages. Getty v. Rountree, 54 D. 138.

*Warranty of quality, vendee's remedy on breach of, see note, 54 D. 146.

Where goods are sold with warranty of quality, the purchaser on discovering a breach is not bound to rescind, but may use the goods and rely on the warranty. Brigg v. Hilton, 52 R. 63.

Whenever an article sold has some latent defect which is known to seller, but not to the buyer, the seller is liable for this defect, if he fails to disclose his knowledge on the subject at the time of the sale. If his knowledge is proved by direct evidence, his responsibility rests upon the ground of fraud; but in a case where the probability of knowledge on his part is so great that the court will presume his existence without proof, he is held responsible upon an implied warranty. The only difference between these two classes of cases is, that in one the scienter is actually proved, in the other it is presumed. Hoe v. Sanborn, 78 D. 163.

Upon an executory contract of sale, with a warranty as to the quality of the article contracted for, the purchaser is not bound to return, or offer to return, the article on discovering that it is of an inferior quality, but he may retain and use the property, and have his remedy upon the warranty. But the purchaser in an executory sale cannot rely upon a warranty as to open, plainly apparent defects, any more than he could upon a sale of goods in present. Day v. Pool, 11 R. 719.

Upon a sale of a machine, with a written warranty, and a provision that in case of failure of the machine to answer the purpose, the warrantors were to have notice "at once," in order that they might cause it to work well, or furnish another that would work well, such notice is a condition precedent to an action for breach of the warranty. Lewis v. Hubbard, 27 R. 775.

When one buys machinery, with a warranty, but receives and puts it in operation with knowledge that it is defective, he cannot recover damages for the breach during the time of such use. Nye v. Iowa City Alcohol Works, 33 R. 121.

It is no defense against a warranty of a kiln of brick, that the defect might have been discovered if the buyer had gone on top of the kiln. Meckley v. Parsons, 55 R. 261.

In an action for breach of warranty, it appeared that the plaintiff purchased rosin from the defendant at Wilson, N. C., to be sold by him in some other market than Wilson, of which defendants had notice, and the rosin failed to come within the description warranted. Held, 1. That the contract of defendants was to deliver the rosin at any usual market to be named by the purchaser, the purchaser taking on himself the risk, trouble and expense of the transportation; 2. That the knowledge by the vendor of the purpose which the vendee had in view in making the purchase, was an essential element in estimating the damages likely to be sustained by a breach of warranty. Leeds v. Roundtree, 28 R. 309.

102. — pleading. — A declaration alleging a failure of title in the vendor of a chattel, although it sets out no express warranty of the title, will be good after verdict upon the ground of the implied warranty. Payne v. Rodden, 7 D. 739.

An averment of scienter is unnecessary in an action of assumpsit for breach of warranty of soundness. Wren v. Wardlaw, 12 D. 60; Bremen v. Buck, 21 D. 571; Bartholomew v. Bushnell, 52 D. 338; Trice v. Cochran, 56 D. 151.

An averment of fraud and deceit is immaterial where there is an express warranty. Osgood v. Leeds, 18 D. 317.

A declaration for breach of warranty of title must show that plaintiff has been deprived of the thing sold by title paramount, although such deprivation need not be alleged in these precise terms. Salle v. Light, 39 D. 317.

Plaintiff may declare upon an express promise, without alleging fraud, in which case he is bound to prove an express warranty, and cannot establish his right to recover by proof of fraud merely. West v. Emery, 44 D. 356.

A declaration upon an express warranty, absolute in its terms, is not supported by proof of a warranty of soundness to the extent of the vendor's knowledge. Ib.

A declaration for breach of warranty may be in tort or assumpsit, at the election of the plaintiff. Bartholomew v. Bushnell, 52 D. 338.

The pleading of a party who relies on a mere general warranty of quality of goods sold need not state whether the warranty is express or implied. A general averment that the vendor warranted the articles to be of a good quality is sufficient, and proof of a warranty of either kind will support the averment. Hoe v. Sanborn, 78 D. 163.

A declaration for breach of warranty of soundness of a horse, which alleges that the horse was unsound, is sufficient without specifying the particular kind of unsoundness. Wheeler v. Wheelock, 78 D. 617.

It is no variance to prove that the seller represented and warranted the animal to be sound, so far as he knew, and that in fact he knew him to be unsound, in an action for false and fraudulent representations of the soundness of the horse, joined with a count for a false warranty of soundness with knowledge of the unsoundness. Ib.

103. — evidence. — In an action on a warranty on the sale of a chattel, where there is no substantive allegation of fraud, evidence of fraud is inadmissible. Dean v. Mason, 10 D. 162.

In an action to rescind the purchase, upon the ground of unsoundness concealed at the time of the purchase by the vendor, brought after the property has ceased to exist, as in the case of the death of a slave, the evidence should disclose the nature and extent of the unsoundness, whether easily detected or not, and whether the loss of the property was due to the unsoundness. Stewart v. Dugin, 28 D. 348.

Where, in an action for breach of an alleged warranty of the quality of a lot of tobacco purchased by the plaintiff of the defendants, the plaintiffs introduced in evidence a bill of sale of the tobacco signed by the defendants, which recited that it was "good first and second rate tobacco," and proved by parol that it was not such tobacco, parol evidence is admissible on the part of the defendant to show that the bill of sale was not intended as a warranty of the quality of the tobacco, but was simply a receipt. Towell v. Gatewood, 33 D. 437.

Declarations of a slave, made to an attending physician, as to the illness under which she is suffering at the time, the manner of the attack, and the progress of the disease, are admissible in evidence on the question of soundness or unsoundness, in an action for breach of warranty of soundness. Allen v. Vancleave, 61 D. 184.

A conversation between the buyer and seller of a cow, after the sale, in which the buyer said, "You said the cow was all right," to which the seller replied, "Well, she is all right," is admissible as evidence of an admission of a warranty at the time of the sale. Tuttle v. Brown, 64 D. 80.

Where a breach of warranty that machinery should be put into a steamboat, "adapted for and suitable for the boat," is claimed in a suit, and plaintiff offers proof tending to show that it did not answer the purposes intended, the defendant may prove in rebuttal that it was the weakness of the boat, and not defective machinery or unskillful workmanship, which caused the failure in the operation of the machinery. Fisk v. Rank, 78 D. 737.

A stipulation in a contract is not a warranty of the strength of a boat, by a party to such contract, when it provides that such party will furnish to the other party to such contract, and place in a certain steamboat, machinery adapted to and suitable for the boat, and that would drive her from twelve to fifteen miles per hour. The vendee of the machinery is to furnish suitable machinery, but the vendor takes the risk of the boat being strong enough to endure the weight, shock of running the machinery, and of its friction when in motion. Ib.

Declarations of the vendor at time of sale, limiting the effect of statements in an advertisement concerning the article sold, are admissible in an action by the vendee for a breach of warranty. Hadley v. Clinton County Importing Co., 82 D. 454.

Where defendant's possession of personal property is accompanied by such circumstances as rebuts the presumption of ownership, it is error to instruct the jury, in an action for breach of the implied warranty of title on a sale thereof, that possession is prima facie evidence of ownership, and that the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove title in another, such instruction being calculated to mislead. Bryen v. Eiggs, 85 D. 304.

Burden of proof is upon plaintiff in an action for breach of the implied warranty of title to show ownership in some other person where the defendant was in possession at the time of the sale, unless the circumstances attending the possession rebut the presumption of ownership created thereby. Id.

Conversations between the vendee and other persons at the time of the sale tending to show the vendee's knowledge of the real quality of the article may be regarded as part of the res gestae connected with the issue of warranty or no warranty; their admission is within the sound discretion of the court, and whether admitted or rejected, it is not error. Bartlett v. Hoppock, 88 D. 428.

In an action against a vendor for false and fraudulent representations in the sale of a chattel, it is unnecessary for plaintiffs to aver or prove the negotiation or payment of a note given as the consideration of the contract, for when it was delivered the contract was complete, and the plaintiffs had a right of action immediately. Evidence of subsequent negotiation of payment of the note is, nevertheless, admissible as proof of the value of the consideration, and which may well be considered by the jury in estimating the damages. Morehouse v. Northrop, 89 D. 211.

Plaintiffs must not only prove false representations but must also prove that defendant knew them to be false, in an action on the case for certain alleged false and fraudulent representations in a sale of a chattel. Id.

In an action on a warranty of soundness of a horse, testimony as to the soundness of the horse by a witness who saw it about the time of the sale, and especially while in the possession of the purchaser, is competent to go to the jury upon that question. Kunzman v. Weaver, 59 D. 740.

The fact that a horse proved to be "balky" on trial, three or four days after purchase, is evidence to show that he was "balky" at the time of purchase, for the purpose of establishing a breach of warranty of soundness and gentleness. Finley v. Quirk, 86 D. 93.

In an action for breach of warranty of a horse, the value of the horse cannot be proved by evidence that since the commencement of the action a good and responsible party offered a certain sum for him, which sum was refused. Id.

An action will lie for breach of an implied warranty of title to a horse in vendor's possession without a judicial eviction, as required in express warranties; but to entitle the plaintiff to recover, the proof of breach should be peculiarly satisfactory. Plummer v. Newdigate, 87 D. 479.

The ex parte act of a military officer in seizing a horse claimed to belong to the United States can have no effect on the question of ownership without strong proof that his act was right. Id.

In an action by a purchaser of a horse against the seller for breach of warranty of title, an order of a United States provost-marshal directing the seizure of the horse as the property of the United States, if proved to have been duly executed and delivered, is admissible to explain how and under what circumstances the horse was surrendered to the federal authorities. Johnson v. Frieble, 96 D. 508.

104. — amount of recovery.* — The rule of damages in cases of warranty differs from the rule in cases of deceit and fraud in this: that in warranty the vendor is answerable for all defects covered by the warranty, whether he knew of them or not; while in deceit he is only answerable for the particular defects concerning which he knowingly misled the purchaser to his injury. The rule will be the same only when the warranty covers precisely the same ground as do the false, fraudulent, and material representations. Page v. Parter, 80 D. 172.

Damages for the keeping of a horse before plaintiff's offer to return him, cannot be recovered in an action for false affirmation. West v. Anderson, 21 D. 737.

An unsound horse warranted sound may be sold by vendee, and damages for deceit will be the difference between what the horse sold for and what he would have been worth if as warranted, if common prudence and discretion were exercised in the sale. Woodward v. Thacher, 52 D. 73.

Costs and expenses of suit cannot be included in damages for a mere breach of a contract of warranty. Bartholomew v. Bushnell, 52 D. 338.

Vendor, in suit by purchaser to rescind sale for fraud, having transferred purchaser's notes to third persons, so that he cannot deliver them up to be cancelled, is liable for the amount in money. Wims v. Morrison, 67 D. 658.

Seller who warrants things sold as fit for a certain purpose is liable for any injury sustained by the buyer in consequence of its unfitness; and the measure of damages is not simply the difference in value between the article contracted for and the article received. Milburn v. Belloni, 100 D. 403.

* Measure of damages, in cases of breach of warranty of soundness, see note, 40 D. 303-305.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The vendee of a chattel can recover nominal damages only for breach of the implied warranty of title, where a judgment for the value of the chattel is recovered against him by the true owner, but the judgment is not satisfied. Burt v. Dewey, 100 D. 482.

105. The right to rescind, generally. — A vendor, by bringing suit and obtaining judgment for the purchase-money, ratifies and confirms the sale, so that it cannot be set aside at his instance. Nelson v. Carrington, 6 D. 519.

Rescission must be in toto , or not at all, even when several articles are sold at a distinct price for each, and although fraud in the sale is shown. Voorhees v. Earl, 38 D. 588.

Rescission of a sale, where the vendee cannot pay the purchase-money, may be made by agreement of the parties, and when made, will cut out liens subsequently acquired against the vendee. Mount v. Harris, 40 D. 89.

An endorser compelled to pay a note is subrogated to the right of the creditor to maintain an action to rescind the sale as simulated and fraudulent, against a subsequent purchaser of the property for which the note was given. Groves v. Steel, 46 D. 551.

Fraud does not of itself render a sale void, but only voidable at the election of the vendor. Until avoided or rescinded, the contract of sale remains in force, and the title to the property passes to the vendee. The vendor may, if he sees fit, set aside a sale on the ground that it was procured by fraud; but unless a rescission is made, the sale takes effect and the property passes. Brown v. Pierce, 93 D. 57.

The sale of a number of articles at the same time, if a separate price be agreed upon for each, though all be included in one conveyance or bill of sale, may be rescinded as to part, and the price paid recovered back, and be enforced as to the residue. Costigan v. Hawkins, 94 D. 553.

One party purchased of another, for the sum of one thousand dollars, the exclusive right to manufacture and sell a certain self-rising flour, together with a lot of chattels and fixtures. The value of the latter, as estimated by the parties, was two hundred dollars, and it was understood that the balance of the one thousand dollars was paid for such sole right to manufacture and sell. The purchase was made upon the representation of the seller that he owned such exclusive right, having acquired it from another, and in proof of which he exhibited a writing purporting to be executed by the latter transferring such right. He in fact, however, did not own any such exclusive right, and no such writing was ever really executed. Held, that upon these facts a cause of action existed in favor of the purchaser for damages for breach of the seller's contract, or that the purchaser might aver the sale of the right to manufacture, etc., from the sale of the chattels, and rescind as to the former alone, recovering the purchase price thereof for entire failure of consideration. Id.

106. What amounts to rescission. — In a warranty sale conditioned to return the articles upon a breach of the warranty, an offer to return is equivalent to an acceptance by the vendor; the sale is thereby rescinded and the vendee may maintain an action for money had and received, or defend an action brought for the purchase-money. Allen v. Anderson, 39 D. 197.

Mutual cancellation of a contract of sale, the vendor taking back the subject-matter, and the vendee taking back notes given in consideration, will, as between the parties, as effectually revert the title in the vendor as would the most formal conveyance; and the presumption of possession by the vendor makes his title good against creditors and bona fide purchasers. Tomlinson v. Roberts, 68 D. 367.

Where, by mutual annulment of the contract of sale, the seller has become revested with title to property sold, as a horse, for instance, by taking it back and returning the consideration, it is as competent for him to contract with the vendee for the letting of the horse, as with any other person, and the vendee's possession under such letting is not fraudulent as to the possession of the vendor. Id.

Vendor's detention of part of a lot of sugar after the vendee's failure, where the latter obtained the other part before such failure, does not annul the sale, but the vendor holds the sugar as security for the payment of the stipulated price. And the subsequent sale of the part detained cannot work a rescission of the sale. Patten's Appeal, 84 D. 479.

Neither stoppage of goods sold, while in transitu, nor the exercise of the analogous right of detention before any transitus has commenced, operates as a rescission of the contract of sale. Id.

107. When the seller may rescind. — To authorize the vendor of goods to disaffirm the sale, and to recover against the purchaser with notice, the concurrence of three facts must be shown, 1st, the purchaser must have been at the time of the sale insolvent, or in failing circumstances; 2d, he must have had at the time a preconceived intention not to pay for the goods, or no reasonable expectation of being able to do so; and 3d, there must have been, on his part, an intentional concealment of these facts, or a fraudulent representation in reference to them. LeGrand v. Eufrasia Nat. Bank, 60 R. 140.

Mere inadequacy of price, unless it be so gross as to amount to evidence of actual fraud, is not a ground for avoiding a sale, although the court might refuse to decree a specific performance. Osgood v. Franklin, 7 D. 513.

A vendor's mistake as to the purchaser's ability to pay, as where he sells to one reputed, and believing himself to be, solvent, but who is in fact insolvent, will not avoid the sale or furnish ground for relief in equity. Lupin v. Marie, 21 D. 256.

A sale of goods, tainted with fraud on the part of the vendee, is voidable by the vendor as to the vendee, and as to those claiming under him with notice. Rowley v. Bigelow, 23 D. 607; Thurston v. Blanchard, 33 D. 700; Knobles v. Lord, 34 D. 525; Hoffman v. Noble, 39 D. 711.

The vendor may treat as void a sale made to one who purchases with a preconceived design not to pay for the goods bought. Thompson v. Rose, 41 D. 121; Oswego Starch Factory v. Lendrum, 42 R. 53; unless the property has passed to the possession of a bona fide holder for value. Nichols v. Michael, 80 D. 259. But to have that effect the intention of the buyer must have been never to pay for them; and whether or not that was his intention is a question for the jury. Bidault v. Wales, 64 D. 205.

Though a party injured may avoid a sale as against a fraudulent purchaser, yet this cannot be done when the rights of third persons have intervened. This exception, however, does not embrace the general creditors of the purchaser seizing the property by attachment or execution, or taking it by assignment as security for a pre-existing debt. Bidault v. Wales, 64 D. 205.

Where goods are sold for cash, and delivered, the vendor taking the vendee's check for the price, which on presentment four days thereafter is dishonored, the vendor may rescind the contract and reclaim the goods. Hodgson v. Barrett, 31 R. 527.

Where a sale was made by means of false representations of the vendee, and the goods, after coming into his possession, were attached by his creditors—held, that the vendor had a right to rescind and reclaim the goods from those who attached them. Buffington v. Gerriah, 8 D. 97.

A vendor cannot rescind a contract of sale and reclaim the goods on the ground of fraud, unless it appears that he was induced to part with such goods by deceptive assertions and false and fraudulent representations of the vendee; and the fact that the vendee was insolvent, and the goods liable to immediate attachment by his creditors, which was unknown to the vendor, is no ground for rescission. Cross v. Peters, 10 D. 78.

A purchase made to defraud the vendor by selling the goods for a less price and without paying for them, may be treated as void by him, and he may reclaim the goods; but he must promptly disavow the contract after having notice of the fraud. Mackinley v. McGregor, 31 D. 522.

The vendor may rescind the sale and recover the goods on obtaining knowledge of falsehood, where credit was obtained on recommendation of third persons, materially false, and so known to the vendee, so long as the goods remain in the vendee's hands, or are not passed from him on a new and valuable consideration. Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 52 D. 46.

A cloth covering of the bed of a billiard-table, which can be removed without injury to the table, and which the vendor sold under a contract of sale which he had a right to rescind, is not so annexed thereto and inseparable but that it may be removed, as against the owner, by one who was induced by fraudulent representations of a partner of the keeper of a billiard-room to sell it to such partner. Perkins v. Bailey, 96 D. 689.

Such vendor may rescind the sale and remove the cloth, although at the same time he sold to the same vendee another table, and took a mortgage on both tables as security for his entire demand. Id.

The owner of a billiard-table who, under an executory contract for the sale of it to the keeper of a billiard-room, leaves it in such keeper's possession, has no right of action against a person who takes from it a removable cloth covering, which, by fraudulent representations of a partner of such keeper, such vendor had been induced to sell to such partner, and to put thereon. Id.

The right of the vendor of goods to rescind the sale, for fraud on the part of the vendee, is not defeated by his having obtained judgment for the price in ignorance of the fraud. Kraus v. Thompson, 44 R. 182.

108. When the buyer may rescind.

— If a purchaser, who has been deceived in a contract of sale without any fault on his part, chooses to rescind the contract, he will be entitled to do so; but in order to do this effectually, so as to entitle him to recover back the whole of the consideration money paid, he must give the vendor notice, within a reasonable time, of the cause of rescission, and tender a return of the property, if within his power. But this is not necessary where the plaintiff's claim to damages is founded on an express warranty, but only where there is an implied warranty, arising from mistake. Fowler v. Williams, 4 D. 579.

In some cases the purchaser of property may, at his option, on account of fraud practiced by the seller, rescind, and by action of indebitatus assumpsit recover back the price; or by an action of deceit or other proper action recover his damages; but he can, in no case, maintain indebitatus assump- as for the purchase-money, without a previous offer to rescind and a demand of repayment. Warner v. Wheeler, 6 D. 717.

The purchaser of counterfeit bank bills may recover the amount paid for them upon discovering them to be counterfeit and immediately returning them, where both parties are brokers equally skilled in detecting counterfeits, and equally innocent; and where the purchaser passes the notes away bona fide after receiving them, and they are returned to him as counterfeit two months afterwards, and he immediately takes them up and tenders them to the seller, he may recover, notwithstanding the delay in returning the bills, there being nothing to show laches on his part. Buck v. Doyle, 45 D. 176.

The purchaser of a chattel cannot, by his own act alone, return and revest the property in the seller, and recover the price when paid, on the ground of a total failure of consideration; nor, by the same means, protect himself from the payment of the price, on the same grounds. Harman v. Sanderson, 45 D. 272.

A purchaser of goods becoming insolvent cannot vacate the contract of purchase by agreement with the vendor, after proceedings in insolvency have been commenced, so as to cut off the assignee's right to pay the price, and take the goods. Arnold v. Delano, 50 D. 754.

A purchaser is authorized to rescind a contract for the sale of a horse, and return the horse for breach of an express warranty of soundness, although there was no express agreement to that effect, and no fraud. Bryant v. Ibburgh, 74 D. 655.

Rescission of a contract cannot be made after the property purchased under the contract has been received in packages, and after using a portion of it which was not put in a case, it being a very small portion, and after credit has been given by buyer to seller on his book-account, if it should afterwards appear upon examination, that there was only a difference in quality in the goods delivered and those called for in the contract. Hoadley v. House, 76 D. 167.

Rescission of contract can be made after the property purchased has been received from the seller by the buyer, and after credit has been given to the former by the latter upon his books, if it afterwards appears that it is not of the same kind or class as that called for in the contract. Id.

A contract cannot be rescinded if at the time the articles were delivered under it to the purchaser by the seller, the former could have discovered, by using ordinary diligence that they were not of the kind he bargained for. If the articles are packed in barrels and the barrels are headed up, the purchaser need not open the packages to examine the goods. He must, however, as soon as the cause of rescission is discovered, give notice of his rescission, and return the property. Id.

A sale may be rescinded where the articles were to be delivered at a future day, and those sent are not merchantable, and the purchaser notifies the seller to take the property back on account of its inferiority. Howard v. Hoy, 35 D. 572.

A vendee has the right to return a defective corn cultivator, manufactured under an executory contract, and to recover money paid on it, with interest, where he has received the cultivator under such contract, kept it long enough to give it a fair examination and trial, and found it to be vitally defective. Woodle v. Whitney, 99 D. 102.

A vendee cannot rescind an executed contract of sale, in the absence of fraud, because the goods are not as warranted, unless he has reserved that right. His sole remedy is by action on the warranty. Voorhees v. Earl, 38 D. 588.

Willful misrepresentation of quality is not sufficient to avoid a sale of personal property, unless the defendant was deceived by it, and unless it formed an inducement to him to make the purchase. Commerseville v. Wadleigh, 41 D. 214.

A suspicion of fraud upon the vendee is sufficient to induce equity to rescind a sale, when coupled with gross inadequacy of price, and the pressure of pecuniary embarrassment. Lester v. Mahan, 60 D. 530.

Concealment by a vendor of horses of the fact that they have a contagious disease of a fatal character, to his knowledge, such disease not being discoverable by such examination as a careful man would make before buying, entitles the purchaser to rescind the contract, and to recover damages for the fraud, especially where such concealment is accompanied by actual misrepresentations accounting for any suspicious appearances in the animals. Wintz v. Morrison, 67 D. 658.

Where on the sale of a horse known by the seller to be unsound in a certain respect the seller conceals the defect, and gives evasive and artful answers to inquiries, with the intent to deceive, and thereby deceives and injures the purchaser, the latter may rescind. Croyle v. Moses, 35 R. 654.

Defendant bought a harvesting machine, reluctantly, upon solicitation of the plaintiff, and upon the stipulation that if it did not work to his satisfaction he might return it. Held, that his right to reject was absolute and his reasons could not be investigated. Wood Reaping etc. Machine Co. v. Smith, 45 R. 57.

109. Putting in statu quo. — To entitle a vendee to rescind, and recover back the consideration, he must place the vendor in the same situation as before the sale, or offer to do so. Conner v. Henderson, 8 D. 103; Hynson v. Dunn, 41 D. 100.

A vendee of personal property cannot treat the sale as void on account of the fraud of the vendor, and still retain the consideration. Johnson v. McLane, 43 D. 102.

110. Return of goods or price. — To rescind a contract of purchase, the vendee must return the property, unless it be entirely worthless to both parties. Perley v. Balch, 34 D. 56; Burton v. Stewart, 20 D. 692.

The purchaser of goods with warranty, wishing to rescind for breach of the warranty, must, as a general rule, restore all the goods received under the contract. Clark v. Baker, 45 D. 199; Ware v. Houghton, 93 D. 258.

An offer to return goods sold with a warranty, either express or implied, is not necessary before bringing an action for damages for the breach of such warranty. Boorman v. Jenkins, 27 D. 158.

A purchaser of goods with warranty cannot return the same and recover the price, on breach of the warranty, but must sue upon his warranty, if the vendor had no knowledge of the unsoundness, and does not consent to take the article back, and the contract itself reserves no right to return it. Kase v. John, 36 D. 148.

Where there is an express or implied warranty, the vendee of goods may show a partial failure of consideration, in defense of an action against him for the purchase money, without returning the goods; but if he would rescind the sale and recover back the purchase-money, he must within a reasonable time return the goods, or offer to return them; unless the goods are wholly worthless, in which case the vendee is never under obligation to either return or offer to return them. Brantley v. Thomas, 73 D. 264.

The return of an article by the purchaser for purpose of repair, where it is defective, is not effective for the purpose of rescission, even though the vendor neglects to repair the article. Kase v. John, 36 D. 148.

A party wishing to rescind a sale of a jack, for fraud, by tendering him back to the seller, must do so absolutely, by leaving him in the seller's stable or upon his premises, and must not, after the seller's refusal to accept him, take him home and use him as his own. McCulloch v. Scott, 56 D. 561.

One whose tender of a chattel for the purpose of rescinding the sale is refused, and who takes it back and uses it as his own, thereby waives the benefit of his tender, and his remedy is an action at law for damages. In such a case his bill for a rescission must be dismissed without prejudice to such action. Id.

Where a purchase is infected with legal fraud, the purchaser is entitled to hold the property until reimbursed the purchase money. McCaskey v. Graff, 62 D. 336.

Where a purchase is infected with actual fraud, the purchaser is not entitled to hold the property until repaid the purchase price. His title may be treated as absolutely void. Id.

The tender of return of animals to the vendor, in an action for fraudulent concealment of the fact that they are diseased, is not necessary to entitle the vendee to recover his damages; nor is it necessary to entitle him to rescind the contract if the animals are entirely worthless. Watts v. Morrison, 67 D. 658.

A vendor rescinding a sale for fraud must restore the consideration if it has been paid. Thurston v. Blanchard, 33 D. 700.

A return of the consideration is necessary only when vendor seeks to avoid the contract under which he has parted with his goods. Jennings v. Gage, 56 D. 476.

A vendor, to whom the vendee has given his negotiable promissory note for goods, is not bound to tender such note at the time of rescinding the contract; it is sufficient if he produce it upon the trial, and deliver it into the custody of the court. Nichols v. Michael, 80 D. 259; Thurston v. Blanchard, 33 D. 700.

The vendor must return money already paid on rescinding the sale of a chattel for non-payment of an installment of the price when due, under a provision in the contract, where there is nothing in the contract clearly indicating that money already paid shall be forfeited by such default; and if the vendor rescinds and retakes the property without refunding the money already paid, the vendee may recover the money. Miller v. Steen, 89 D. 124.

111. What lying by, or acquiescence will defeat the right to rescind.

— Where the buyer of a clock agrees to pay for it at the expiration of a year, on condition that it performs to his satisfaction, the contract to pay becomes absolute at the end of that time, unless, within a reasonable time, he offers to return it and gives notice of his dissatisfaction. If the residence of the seller is unknown, or if he resides in another state, the buyer must, in order to excuse his failure to give notice and to offer to return, show that he used due diligence to ascertain the seller's residence. Dewey v. Erie Borough, 53 D. 533.

The seller of a machine is under no obligation to receive it back, or make it all right, under an agreement so to do at time of sale, if it should prove not to be a good machine, unless called upon to perform within a reasonable time after the sale. Osborn v. Stanley, 85 D. 347.

A vendee is not bound to receive and pay for property that he has not agreed to purchase; but if after delivery it is found on examination to be unsound, or not to answer the order given for it, he must immediately return it to the vendor, or give him notice to take it back, or he will be presumed to have acquiesced in its quality. Reed v. Randall, 86 D. 305.

A purchaser of slaves at a sale under a void order of the probate court cannot plead as an excuse for failure to rescind, by returning or offering to return the slaves, the fact that he did not discover the defect of title until after emancipation of the slaves, and that he could not then return them. Ware v. Houghton, 93 D. 258.

The defendant bought of the plaintiff hats, caps, collars and gloves, by an order classifying the goods according to kind, style and price per dozen. The parties understood that each article was to be itemized and carried out at one-twelfth of the price per dozen. In the printed heading of the bill rendered by the plaintiff was a statement that "all claims must be made in three days." Some of the articles did not conform to the order, but were not returned for a month. Held, 1. That the contract was apportionable, and the defendant could not be held for goods not conforming to the order; 2. That he was entitled to a reasonable time to return such goods; 3. That the question of reasonable time was for the jury. Cohen v. Pemberton, 55 R. 101.

112. Seller's right to sell again and claim deficiency.—The vendee's refusal to take away the goods entitles the vendor, after proper notice, to sell them on account of the vendee. Gilly v. Henry, 13 D. 291. S. P., Coffman v. Hampton, 37 D. 511; Patten's Appeal, 84 D. 479.

The vendor should, before selling the goods, notify the vendee that he will sell them, and in selling them he ought to dispose of them to the best advantage, so as to obtain the best price he can. He is not bound to give to the vendee notice of the time and place of the sale; and if he gives such notice, he may postpone the sale to another day, if, in his judgment, there be good cause for so doing. Rosenbaum v. Weelen, 98 D. 737.

If a vendee refuse to fulfill his contract, the vendor may resell the goods without any notice to him, and look to him for the loss that he may have sustained by reason of the refusal. West v. Cunningham, 33 D. 300; Atwood v. Lucas, 89 D. 713.

If the vendee of goods unreasonably refuse to accept them, the vendor is under no obligations to allow them to perish on his hands, or to become reduced in value, but may sell them at auction, and hold the vendee responsible for the difference between the sum realized from such sale and that which was agreed to be paid by the vendee. Van Horn v. Rucker, 84 D. 52. S. P., as to the damages, McCombs v. McKennan, 37 D. 505.

A resale made after a vendee's refusal to complete his purchase is not conclusive in fixing the extent of his liability; he may show that the sale was unfair or was under circumstances calculated to prevent a full price. West v. Cunningham, 33 D. 300.

The right to resell is not defeated by the acceptance by the vendor of a portion of the consideration, prior to the removal and sale by him of the articles delivered. McCombs v. McKennan, 37 D. 505.

A resale of a part of a lot of sugar by the vendor after the vendee has obtained the other part, even if wrongful, places the parties in a different situation from their original position. Patten's Appeal, 84 D. 479.

The vendor may resell at any time, and in any state of market, goods which the vendee refuses to accept, according to the contract of sale, and the fact that he refrains from selling them for two months upon a falling market will not prevent him from recovering in an action against the vendee for the deficiency. Rosenbaum v. Weelen, 98 D. 737.

A cargo of Virginia wheat was sold to a brewer, who knew it to be southern wheat, which is generally more or less heated, though it is not injured thereby for flour, however it may be unfit for malting. A sample of the wheat, taken in the usual manner from the cargo, was exhibited to the buyer before the purchase, which was found adapted for malt. He received part of the cargo, but, finding some of it heated, and unfit for malting, he refused to receive the remainder, though it was good, merchantable wheat, and equal to any southern wheat. The residue of the cargo was tendered and notice given the buyer that unless he received and paid for the whole, the residue would be sold at public auction, and he be held responsible for any deficiency. Held, that the sample was a fair specimen of the quality; that a contract and delivery of a part transferred the property; and that the subsequent sale of the residue of the wheat at auction was not a waiver of the contract; the vendor being, by the refusal of the buyer to accept the wheat, at liberty to abandon it, or dispose of it bona fide as the buyer's agent to the best advantage. Sands v. Taylor, 4 D. 374.

1. School districts. — School districts are quasi corporations for building and repairing schoolhouses and certain other purposes. Andrews v. Estes, 26 D. 521; Gaskill v. Dudley, 39 D. 750.

A voluntary neighborhood school is not within the statute relating to the districting of townships in Pennsylvania. Martin v. McCord, 30 D. 342.

A school district is liable to be sued without any express statute giving the action. McLoud v. Selby, 27 D. 689.

An execution against a school district may be levied on the individual property of an inhabitant thereof. McLoud v. Selby, 27 D. 689; without first resorting to corporate property. Gaskill v. Dudley, 39 D. 750.

An inhabitant whose property is taken under such an execution cannot impeach the judgment upon which it issued. McLoud v. Selby, 27 D. 689.

Where two records of a school district were kept, from only one of which it appeared that a committee had been duly elected at a meeting of the district, and the clerk who made the records testified that both were made by him soon after the meeting from loose memoranda kept at the meeting, — held, that the records were not contradictory, and both being originals, that the election of the committee was duly proved. Williams v. School District, 32 D. 243.

A school district employed a contractor to repair and improve a schoolhouse, under the direction of the architect of the improvements, who was employed by the district, as to the manner of executing the work. The contractor was not to begin work until vacation. By permission of the architect he began it before, and he negligently injured one of the pupils in the execution of it. Two of the school board visited the building after the work was begun, but did not order it stopped. In an action by the injured pupil against the district, held, 1. That the district was not liable for the contractor's negligence. 2. That the permission of the architect, being outside his authority, did not bind the district; 3. That the knowledge and inaction of the two members of the board did not render the district liable. School District of Erie v. Fuses, 42 R. 627.

2. School district officers. — A warrant for the annual town meeting held by law, for the purpose of choosing officers, contained articles "to choose all necessary town officers, and "to choose all necessary committees," and the statute allowed either of two modes of choosing committees. It was held under these articles the town was authorized to determine which mode should be pursued, and to pass a vote, "that each school district choose their own committees," this being one of the modes provided by statute. Williams v. School District, 32 D. 243.

The clerk of a school district elected under the Rev. Stat., c. 23, sec. 27, is competent to act as such, although he has removed into an adjoining district in the same town, and another has been chosen in his stead, but not sworn. Id.

A school treasurer and his sureties are liable on his bond for school funds deposited by him in a bank, which are lost by the subsequent insolvency of the bank, although he was guilty of no negligence in failing to ascertain its financial condition. State v. Powell, 29 R. 512.

A school district treasurer deposited school money in a bank to his own individual credit, directing the bank to pay out of it certain school district bonds about maturing, payable at that bank. The bank failed and the money was lost. Held, that the treasurer was liable for it in an action on his bond. Ward v. School District, 35 R. 477.

A county school superintendent, willfully or corruptly refusing a license to teach to one lawfully entitled, is liable in damages. Elmore v. Overton, 54 R. 343.

3. Meetings of school officers. — The proceedings of a school district meeting are void where the statute requires even seven days' notice of the meeting to be given, and only six days' notice is given. Hunt v. School District, 39 D. 225.

Where a statute requires the warrant for a school district meeting to specify the business to be done at such meeting, no business not so specified can be legally transacted thereat. Id.

The law requiring the secretary of a school district to record all proceedings of the board and of the district meetings in separate books, to be kept for that purpose, is directory only, and proceedings of the board are not void simply because they were recorded on loose sheets of paper instead of in a bound book. Higgins v. Reed, 74 D. 305.

Under a statute authorizing the district school board, in conjunction with the county superintendent, to dismiss any teacher for incompetency, cruelty, negligence or immorality, these officers do not constitute a court, but may adopt their own procedure. School District v. McCoy, 46 R. 92.

4. Taxes for school purposes. — A statute required that a school district tax should be assessed within thirty days after the clerk of the district should certify to the assessors the sum to be raised. This was held to be directory merely. Pond v. Negus, 3 D. 131.

If an illegal assessment be made, the same or succeeding assessors may make a new assessment, for which purpose the district clerk may issue a second certificate. Id.

A law declaring a tax on the polls and property of persons of one color for the exclusive education of children of that color is unconstitutional. Puitt v. Gaston Co., 55 R. 638.

5. — how levied. — The provision of the revised stat., c. 23, sec. 37, that an assessment of a school district tax shall be made within thirty days after the clerk of the district shall certify to the assessors the sum voted by the district to be raised, is directory, and does not prohibit an assessment after the expiration of that period. Williams v. School District, 32 D. 243.

The omission, through an error of judgment or mistake of law, of an assessor to assess on an individual a school district tax, does not invalidate the assessment as to other persons. Id.

Where one of three assessors fails to attend and act in assessing a tax, after proper notice, the other two may proceed without him. Id.

The list of persons taxed required by the Iowa code to be posted, by the secretary of a school district, at three or more places in the district, showing the amount of tax due from each, is admissible in evidence in an action of trespass, wherein the defendants justify as school officers by showing that a schoolhouse tax was levied upon all the property in the district, including the plaintiffs; and that for the purpose of collecting said tax they levied upon and sold the property for which the suit is brought. Higgins v. Reed, 74 D. 305.

6. Warrant for collection of school tax. — Whether a warrant under which a meeting was called that elected a committee to levy a school tax is regular or not, cannot be inquired into in an action to recover back money paid for the tax. Williams v. School District, 32 D. 243.

That such committee was a committee de facto is sufficient to sustain the tax. Id.

Where there is a failure to collect a school tax during the year in which it is levied, the power and authority conferred by the warrant do not expire with the year, where the tax levied is upon personal property. If the warrant first issued be lost, its place may be supplied by a new one, and such warrant protects not only the secretary to whom it was issued, but also his successor in office. Higgins v. Reed, 74 D. 305.

In trespass against the school officers for taking and selling personal property in payment of a schoolhouse tax, the defendants may give in evidence a bond for the delivery of the property executed by the plaintiff. Id.

7. Enforcement of warrant. — Evidence on the part of the plaintiff in an action against a school district to recover the amount of a tax paid for building a schoolhouse, that there was already a sufficient schoolhouse in the district, is inadmissible. Williams v. School District, 32 D. 243.

The return of a constable upon a warrant issued to warn a town meeting, that he had warned the inhabitants to meet at the time named therein, dating his return less than fourteen days before the meeting, is not conclusive to show that the required notice of fourteen days before the meeting has not been given. Id.

8. Powers and duties of collector. — Whether a collector of taxes has been duly elected and sworn is a question that is not open to a plaintiff in an action against a school district to recover a tax which he has paid such collector. Id.

9. Powers and duties of school trustees. — School trustees are not mere ministerial officers bound to obey the illegal resolutions of the district. Baker v. Freeman, 24 D. 117.

A school trustee deriving his official character from a general law and the election of the people of a given district is as much a public agent as if he were the immediate agent of the state or of one of its political divisions. Ogden v. Raymond, 58 D. 429.

Equity will interfere and control the action of school trustees in changing school districts, if a plain violation of the law, gross injustice, oppression, or corruption is shown. Metz v. Anderson, 76 D. 704.

Acquiescence in an unwarrantable act of school trustees in consolidating districts constitutes a good ground for the refusal of equitable interference. Ib.

A school director's right to hold office cannot be inquired into on a bill to enjoin the collection of a tax levied by them. The remedy is by quo warranto. Ib.

The plaintiff obtained a contract for building a schoolhouse for the district of which he was a director, and took part in the proceedings of the board which let the contract. Held, that the contract was void, on the ground that it was against the public policy to allow the plaintiff, while holding a fiduciary relation to the district, to place himself in an antagonistic position and obtain the contract for himself, from the board of which he was a member. Pickett v. School District, 3 R. 105.

A negotiable note made by school trustees, for the proper purposes of their office, and purporting to be their individual obligation, but with the addition to their signatures of their official description, is binding upon the school corporation. School Town etc. v. Kendall, 37 R. 139.

Two persons who had brought a suit against a school district to divest it of certain property purchased by it, being elected directors of the district, discharged counsel employed by their predecessors to defend it, and allowed a decree to pass against the district by default. Held, that it should be set aside. Noble v. School Directors, 57 R. 832.

Under a statute authorizing school district boards to provide "necessary appendages" for schoolhouses during the time that schools are taught, there is no authority to purchase a stereoscope and stereoscopic views. School District v. Perkins, 30 R. 447.

The right to prescribe a general course of instruction and to direct what books shall be used being reposed by the legislature in a school committee, no power of revision being conferred upon any other tribunal, includes the power to make injudicious and ill-advised selections. Donahoe v. Richards, 61 D. 256.

A school committee, by expulsion or otherwise, may enforce obedience to all regulations within the scope of their authority, to select and prescribe what books shall be used in schools. Ib.

A district school board has power to make a rule suspending any pupil absent without satisfactory excuse, six half days in four consecutive weeks. King v. Jefferson City School Board, 36 R. 499.

A school committee which was authorized by statute to adopt all requisite measures for the regulation of the school, excluded children from the school for absence, contrary to the rules thereof. Held, valid, although such absence was pursuant to the command of their Roman Catholic parents and their priest, and for the purpose of attending religious services on a holiday of the church. Ferriter v. Tyler, 21 R. 133.

Under a statute authorizing school directors to make and enforce all needful rules and regulations for the government, management and control of the schools, not inconsistent with the laws of the land, school directors made a rule that no pupil should, during the school term, attend a social party, and expelled the plaintiff for a violation of that rule by permission of his parents. In an action for damages for such expulsion—held, that the directors had exceeded their powers, but inasmuch as there was no malice, willfulness or oppression, they were not liable. Dritt v. Snodgrass, 27 R. 343.

The trustees of free public high schools had statutory authority to direct what branches should be taught, and to adopt and enforce all necessary rules and regulations for the management and government of the schools. A candidate for admission passed a satisfactory examination in all the required branches except grammar, and was refused admission on account of that deficiency. His father did not wish him to study grammar. Held, that a rule or regulation denying him admission on that account was unreasonable, and that mandamus would lie to compel his admission to study the other branches. Trustees of Schools v. People, 29 R. 55.

10. Their liability. — School trustees are liable in trespass for assessing an illegal tax voted by the district to change the site of its schoolhouse, and for issuing a warrant to collect such tax. Baker v. Freeman, 24 D. 117.

Statutory powers and duties of a superintending school committee relative to the expulsion of pupils being of a semi-judicial character, for an honest though erroneous decision they are not liable to the expelled pupil. Donahoe v. Richards, 61 D. 256; unless they act wantonly or maliciously. McCormick v. Burt, 35 R. 163.

The plaintiff, a scholar in a public school in the city of New York, was injured by falling into an excavation carelessly left open in the school yard by workmen in repairing the school building. The repairs had been ordered by the school trustees of the ward, who acted gratuitously, and were under the direction of the superintendent of school buildings. No personal negligence was shown in any of the defendants. Held, that neither the trustees nor the superintendent were liable. Donovan v. McAlpin, 39 R. 649.

11. The school fund. — The penalty for not paying school money loaned when due, provided by the Illinois school laws, is imposed only on the borrower, is not assignable, and is not a part of the contract contained in the bond or mortgage given to secure the money loaned, and must be enforced by a special count. Bradley v. Snyder, 58 D. 564.

12. School lands. — The disposition of school lands provided for by the Wisconsin revised statutes, chapter 24, is a contract of sale, and not a sale; and therefore, allowing such a contract on credit is not repugnant to the constitutional provision prohibiting a sale on credit. Smith v. Mariner, 68 D. 73.

A contract to sell school land as soon as the purchaser shall pay therefor may be assigned under the code. But the assignment does not have to be recorded in the office of the commissioner, nor would its being filed there operate as notice to third persons. Consequently a judgment against a holder of such a contract, who prior thereto had assigned the same, does not affect the title of the assignee, although the plaintiff had no notice of such assignment. Churchill v. Morse, 92 D. 422.

13. School buildings. — A school district cannot change the site of its schoolhouse, without the consent of the school commissioners. Baker v. Freeman, 24 D. 117.

The use of a public schoolhouse for other than school purposes is unlawful and may be enjoined at the suit of any one injured thereby. Spencer v. Joint School District, 22 R. 268.

The petition for an injunction to restrain the use of a public schoolhouse, for other than school purposes, alleged that the plaintiff was "a resident of the school district and a taxpayer therein, that his children attended school in the said schoolhouse, and that, by the improper use of the building complained of, the books of his children were torn, soiled, carried away, lost and misplaced," etc. Held, that plaintiff showed such a personal and private injury and interest as would enable him to maintain the action. Id.

A statute authorizing school directors to grant the temporary use of public schoolhouses, when not occupied by schools, for religious, literary and other meetings, and for evening and Sunday schools, is not unconstitutional. Nichols v. School Directors, 34 R. 160.

14. Compensation of teachers. — In quantum meruit for services rendered as a school-teacher, evidence is admissible to prove that the defendant contracted with the plaintiff individually, and not as a public officer. Ogden v. Raymond, 58 D. 429.

Teachers' wages are not subject to deductions for recognized holidays. School District v. Gage, 33 R. 421.

15. Rights of pupils, generally. — Between a schoolmaster in a public school and the parents or pupils, there is no privity of contract. Spear v. Cummings, 34 D. 63.

A schoolmaster in a public school is not responsible to a parent for refusing to receive and instruct his child. Id.

A pupil cannot be excused from reading in a duly prescribed text-book because of conscientious religious scruples; and if expelled for refusal to read in such book, he has no action for damages. Donahoe v. Richards, 61 D. 256.

The trustees and faculty of a public university may not refuse admission or exclude students because they are members of a Greek letter fraternity or other secret college society. State v. White, 42 R. 496.

The legislature may authorize each common school district to admit or exclude children non-resident in the district. State v. Joint School District, 56 R. 653.

16. Separation of white and colored children. — An action is not maintainable against school directors, by one who withdraws his children from school because such directors erroneously admitted colored children. Stewart v. Southard, 49 D. 463.

A statute establishing separate systems of schools for white and colored children is not in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and where appropriate schools for colored children are maintained, such children may be lawfully excluded from schools established for white children. Ward v. Flood, 17 R. 405; Cory v. Carter, 17 R. 738.

District school directors are bound to furnish equal school facilities for blacks and whites, and where they have furnished three months' instruction for the whites, but none for the blacks, and show no intention to do so, and but a few days more than three months remain of the school year; and they have the funds to do it, they may be compelled by mandamus to do so, and may not proportion the school term according to the respective number of scholars in each class. Maddox v. Neal, 55 R. 540; State v. Duffy, 8 R. 713.

17. School discipline.* — 1. Right of teacher to suspend or expel pupil. — Expulsion from school is the proper remedy for persistent disobedience of a pupil. Guernsey v. Pitkin, 76 D. 171.

In matters where the board of control of public schools have made no regulations for the government of the schools, the teachers stand in loco parentis, and have inherent power to suspend pupils, for cause, and mandamus will not lie to compel such a teacher to reinstate such a suspended pupil. State v. Burton, 30 R. 706.

* See note on the authority, duties, and powers of teachers, 76 D. 164-167.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

2. Right of teacher to chastise pupil. *—A schoolmaster's authority extends to the infliction of corporal punishment upon his pupils, subject to the qualification that he may not inflict punishment of a nature to produce lasting injury to body or health. State v. Pendergrass, 31 D. 416; but he must not chastise wantonly and without cause, and the chastisement must be proportionate to the offense and within the bounds of moderation, or the schoolmaster will be liable for an assault and battery. Anderson v. State, 75 D. 774.

He may punish a pupil for all acts of the latter which are detrimental to the good order and best interest of the school, whether such acts are committed in school hours, or after the pupil has returned home, or while he is engaged in the service of his parent. Lander v. Seaver, 76 D. 156; and this right is not affected by the fact that a pupil, voluntarily in the school is of lawful age and therefore not entitled to attend the school. State v. Miner, 24 R. 769.

A school teacher is not authorized to inflict excessive chastisement; nor to chastise except for a specific offense which the pupil understands; nor to chastise a pupil for refusing to study a branch from which his father had excused him. State v. Miner, 32 R. 128. But the teacher of a public school has the right moderately to chastise a pupil for refusing to render an excuse for absence from school without leave. Damenhoffer v. State, 35 R. 216. Or for fighting, against the school rules, although away from the schoolhouse and not in school hours. Hutton v. State, 59 R. 776.

The proper test of excessive punishment is the general judgment of reasonable men. Patterson v. Nutter, 57 R. 818.

A schoolmaster acts judicially in determining the necessity of punishment, and the extent to which it should be administered, and will be liable only when he punishes under pretext of authority, to gratify malicious feelings. State v. Pendergrass, 31 D. 416.

3. Action for assault and battery against teacher.—A school teacher is not liable to an action or information for assault and battery, for having chastised, in moderation, a disobedient pupil. State v. Miner, 24 R. 769.

A schoolmaster is liable in damages for an excessive punishment of a pupil, even though he acted in good faith and without malice in inflicting it, and considered it necessary, and not excessive; but in case of doubt, he is entitled to the benefit of it. Lander v. Seaver, 76 D. 156.

In a prosecution for assault and battery, where the relation of schoolmaster and scholar, parent and child, master and apprentice, or any similar relation is established as a defense, the legal presumption is that the chastisement was proper, and to warrant a conviction this presumption must be rebutted by showing that it was excessive, or without any proper cause. Anderson v. State, 75 D. 774.

It is a question for the jury to determine whether the instrument used by a schoolmaster to inflict punishment upon the pupil is a proper one for such purpose. Lander v. Seaver, 76 D. 156.

To rebut the presumption or proof of malice in punishing a pupil, it is competent for the schoolmaster to prove that the instrument used by him in punishing the pupil was such as was generally used for such purposes by other teachers in the vicinity. Id.

It is competent for a schoolmaster, who is defending himself in an action of trespass for assault and battery upon a pupil, to prove that at a former trial of the same case the plaintiff made no claim that the punishment inflicted was excessive, and that then plaintiff only claimed that the master had no right to inflict the punishment, because the offense of the pupil was not committed in school hours. Id.

If evidence that a schoolmaster acted maliciously in administering the punishment should be given by those prosecuting him, evidence that the schoolmaster was ordinarily mild and moderate would be admissible. Id.

Where excessive punishment of a pupil is charged against a schoolmaster, evidence that the ordinary management of the latter was mild and moderate is not admissible. Id.

4. What rules are reasonable.—The reasonable requirements of a teacher must be obeyed by his pupils. Guernsey v. Pitkin, 76 D. 171.

The requirement to write compositions is reasonable, and teacher may expel a pupil who persistently refuses to comply with the rule. Id.

A rule of a public school, that every scholar on returning from recess shall bring in a stick of wood for the fire, is not "needful for the government" of the school. State v. Board of Education, 53 R. 282.

A public school teacher may make a rule forbidding scholars from quarrelling and using profane language on their way home, and to punish them for disobedience of it. Deakins v. Gose, 55 R. 367.

A school regulation that the doors shall be locked and no scholars admitted during the opening exercises of the morning session, a period of fifteen minutes, is reasonable, but due regard must be had to the weather, and the age, health and comfort of the excluded pupils. The detention of scholars for a short time after the close of sessions,

* Power to inflict corporal punishment, see note, 31 D. 419.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

for fault or misconduct, is reasonable, and even if exercised mistakenly, it does not amount to false imprisonment unless malicious. Fertich v. Michener, 60 R. 709.

18. Course of study and text books.

1. In general.—A father directed his child, who attended a public school, to study only certain of the subjects taught in the school. The teacher, with notice of such direction, required the child to study other subjects, and whipped him for not doing so. Held, an unlawful assault. Morrow v. Wood, 17 R. 471.

An act of the legislature providing that certain state officers shall contract on behalf of the state, with a designated individual, for furnishing the state for fifteen years with suitable text-books for the use of the public schools of the state, within specified maximum prices, of a certain size and quality, and to be approved by a designated commission, is constitutional. Curryer v. Merrill, 33 R. 450.

Under the provision of the school law allowing instruction in "such other branches, including vocal music and drawing," as may be prescribed by the directors or voters, any modern language may be taught. Powell v. Board of Education, 37 R. 123.

A rule that pupils in a public high school shall employ a certain period in the study and practice of music, and provide themselves with certain books therefor, is valid, and an expulsion for unexcused disobedience thereof will be sustained. State v. Webber, 58 R. 30.

2. Reading the Bible in public schools.

The requirement that the Protestant or any version of the Bible be read in public schools, and imposition of the penalty of expulsion in case of refusal, is not in violation of either the letter or spirit of the constitution. Donahoe v. Richards, 61 D. 256.

The requirement that the Bible be used in public schools merely as a reading-book is not an interference with religious belief. Id.

The requirement of the use of a particular version of the Bible as a reading-book by pupils who may conscientiously believe it to have been erroneously made, is not an imposition of hurt, molestation, or restraint upon religious worship or sentiments, nor of a religious test; nor is it a subordination or preference of any sect or denomination to another within the constitutional provisions of Maine. Id.

The constitution of Ohio does not enjoin or require religious instruction, or the reading of religious books in the public schools of the state. Board of Education v. Minor, 13 R. 233.

The legislature having placed the management of the public schools under the exclusive control of directors, trustees, and boards of education, the courts have no rightful authority to interfere by directing what instruction shall be given, or what books shall be read therein. Id.

A statute providing that the Bible shall not be excluded from the public schools, but that no pupil shall be required to read it contrary to the wishes of his parents or guardian, is constitutional. Moore v. Monroe, 52 R. 444.

SCIRE FACIAS.

[Includes the nature, and course of procedure under the writ, generally, and its use to revive a judgment; which latter topic is also treated incidentally under JUDGMENT.]

Against bail, see BAIL, 7, 23-25.

To enforce mortgage, see MORTGAGES, 72.

To revive a judgment, see also JUDGMENT, 129.

When necessary, effect, etc., see EXECUTION, 22.

1. General nature of the proceeding.—The forty-fifth chapter of 13 Edward I., giving a writ of scire facias, is in force here by virtue of the provisions of the act of November 6, 1829, which adopts the common and statute laws of England which are of a general and not a local nature, with certain exceptions and provisos. Union Bank v. Powell, 52 D. 367.

2. Power to issue the writ.—Courts cannot acquire jurisdiction by the process of scire facias over disputed questions relative to grants. Scire facias is always founded upon a record, and issues from and is made returnable to the court where the record is kept. Walker v. Wells, 63 D. 252.

Courts have no jurisdiction of a bill to set aside a patent, which bill alleges that the complainants are the heirs of a certain person who "gave in for a draw" at a land lottery; that their devisor's name was improperly written; that a third person procured a grant to himself through the use of their devisor's name; and that the defendant had since purchased the land thereby acquired at sheriff's sale. This although defendant had purchased it with full knowledge of these facts. Id.

3. In what cases it will lie.—Scire facias would afford no adequate remedy as a means of inquiring into the manner in which a grant had been issued, as it only reaches such matters as appear upon the face or within the body of the grant. Walker v. Wells, 63 D. 252.

Scire facias will lie to recover for a newly discovered breach of an agent's bond, which had passed into judgment, where the bond was given by the agent to secure his accounting and payment of sums collected by him to an insurance company in whose employ he was. The company had no means of discovering that the agent had received the money at the time of the rendition of the former judgment; and the fraudulent concealment, upon its discovery, constituted a new breach and such concealment is a sufficient reason for not including the sum in the original pleading and judgment. Johnson v. Provincial Ins. Co., 86 D. 49.

4. Use of the writ to revive a judgment.*—1. In general.—A pending scire facias is not transferred by the act transferring "all suits and causes pending" in one court into another, but may be prosecuted to judgment in the former court, where the record is. Dougherty's Estate, 42 D. 326.

A judgment against an heir under the act of 1784, c. 11, sec. 3, subjecting lands acquired by descent to the ancestor's debt, to be valid, the scire facias must be served personally on the heir, and, if a minor, with general guardian, upon the guardian also. Combs v. Young, 26 D. 225.

A creditor has no right to call upon a person or his heirs for the rents and profits of a tract of land received by them prior to the time that he acquired a lien on such land by judgment or otherwise. Ib.

Where the defendant in an action was personally served and suffered default, being at the time subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and subsequently a writ of scire facias was issued to give effect to such judgment, and served upon him, by leaving it at his last place of abode, he having in the mean time removed out of the jurisdiction of the court, such service is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the defendant in such scire facias proceeding. Adams v. Rowe, 25 D. 266.

A judgment rendered in such a proceeding is not open to an examination in the courts of the state to which the defendant has removed, where it is attempted to be enforced against him by suits in those courts. Ib.

A judgment on scire facias reviving a judgment is conclusive as to the existence of the debt, as respects innocent purchasers, though the original judgment was in fact satisfied, and the judgment reviving it was confessed by an attorney without authority. Irvine v. Nixon, 51 D. 559.

A defendant in scire facias cannot avail himself of any ground of defense which was open to him in the suit of which that is a continuation, semble. Smith v. Eaton, 58 D. 746.

An objection that the service of scire facias to revive a judgment was void, because instead of having a sheriff's return of service upon it, it had an acknowledgment signed by the administrator, that it was personally served upon him, and that consequently the judgment was a nullity, cannot be made so as to defeat an action of ejectment brought by a purchaser on execution under the judgment. Draper v. Bryson, 57 D. 257.

2. Who may issue—when may issue.—A clerk of court has no power or authority to issue scire facias. Its issuance is a judicial act based upon a suggestion entered of record and it must be awarded by the court. Frierson v. Harris, 94 D. 220.

Scire facias before an execution is necessary, only when the judgment is signed under the statute of Charles II., after the first vacation, so that the execution cannot be tested during the life time of the party who died. Dibble v. Taylor, 42 D. 368.

Scire facias may be had to make executors or administrators parties to the judgment, in case the defendant dies after interlocutory judgment, and a second scire facias is necessary to give them opportunity to plead no assets, or other matter, in their defense. Ib.

Scire facias may be had against personal representatives, where there is only one plaintiff or defendant, who dies after final judgment and before execution, but is not necessary if execution be taken out in such time that it may be tested in his life time. Ib.

A judgment creditor seeking to subject the real estate of a judgment debtor, who has died after judgment, to the payment thereof, must, before taking out execution, cause the heirs to be summoned by scire facias, to show cause why execution should not issue. Frierson v. Harris, 94 D. 220.

3. When may not issue.—Scire facias issued upon a final judgment, rendered upon the execution of a writ of inquiry, on a judgment by default, to revive the judgment against the personal representatives of the debtor, will be inoperative if it appears that after the judgment by default and before the final judgment, the judgment debtor had died. Carter v. Carrier, 24 D. 585.

The object of a scire facias, issued against an administrator, is to enforce a lien previously established and fixed upon the property of deceased, and where there is no such lien the scire facias is powerless. Ib.

If a judgment is signed in the lifetime of the defendant, no scire facias is necessary, to have execution against him during the vacation after the judgment term; and if defendant dies after final consideration and before entry, judgment may be entered as at common law, and no scire facias is necessary, to have against him an execution which at common law would properly have been tested in his lifetime. Dick v. Taylor, 42 D. 368.

* See an important monographic note on scire facias to revive a judgment, 94 D. 221-246.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Scire facias cannot issue to revive a judgment against the heirs of a deceased judgment debtor. It should issue to show cause why execution should not be issued against the real estate of the ancestor, descended to the heirs. Frierson v. Harris, 94 D. 220.

To authorize the issuance of scire facias to subject real estate in the hands of the heir to the satisfaction of a judgment against the ancestor, a suggestion must be made upon the record of the fact that real estate has descended to the heir; and without this the scire facias is irregular and void. Id.

4. Effect of the proceeding.—An action of scire facias is not original, but is wholly dependent upon a liability previously created by a judgment. Carter v. Carriger, 24 D. 585; and is the continuation of an action already commenced, whenever it is used to carry into effect a former judgment against a party to it. So held, in a scire facias against one who had been charged as a trustee in a process of foreign attachment. Adams v. Roe, 25 D. 266; and in a scire facias to revive a dormant judgment. Irwin v. Nixon, 51 D. 559.

The revival of a judgment by scire facias continues its vitality, with the lien and other incidents, from the time of its rendition. Irwin v. Nixon, 51 D. 559.

5. Sheriff's return.—A sheriff's return to a scire facias cannot be controverted. Blythe v. Richards, 13 D. 672.

6. Rules of pleading.—The writ is properly said to run in the name of a person or the government from whom the command on the face of the writ appears to emanate. Johnson v. Provincial Ins. Co., 86 D. 49.

An objection to the writ, that it is not tested in the name of the people, will not be allowed as an objection that the style of the writ was not in the name of the people, or that it did not run in their name. The courts will not permit the amendment of an objection which is purely technical, and which, as amended, would tend to overthrow substantial justice. Id.

1. What sufficient.—Several co-signers of a sealed instrument may adopt the same seal. Ludlow v. Simond, 2 D. 291.

Where a seal or scrawl is not affixed to some of the names of the obligors in a bond which indicates upon its face an intention to seal it, it will be presumed that those obligors against whose names no seals appear, adopted the seals affixed by the others, and all will be bound, but the presumption may be rebutted by plea and proof. Davis v. Burton, 36 D. 511.

A printed impression of a seal is not a seal, and a contract of insurance having thereon such impression is not, therefore, a sealed instrument. Mitchell v. Union Life Ins. Co., 71 D. 529.

2. When a scroll is sufficient.—A scroll annexed to a signature is not sufficient to make a sealed instrument, unless it appear from some expression in the body of the instrument that it was intended as such. Austin v. Whitlock, 4 D. 550.

Wax, wafers, or something capable of receiving an impression is, by the law of New Jersey, necessary to constitute a seal, except in instruments for the payment of money, on which a scroll, ink, or other device, affixed by way of seal, is made by the statute to have the same effect as if sealed with wax. Perrine v. Cheeseman, 19 D. 388.

To constitute a sealed instrument under the statute, it must express in its body that it is sealed, and the persons executing it must affix scrawls by the way of seals. Grimsley v. Riley, 32 D. 319.

A flourish in the continuation of the last letter of a name upon the affixing of a signature, is not such a scrawl as will constitute a seal, where it is not made by way of seal, though the instrument to which the signature is affixed expresses on its face that it is sealed. Id.

3. Effect of unnecessarily affixing seal.—Affixing a seal, when unnecessary to the validity of a contract, will not vitiate it. Robinson v. Crowder, 17 D. 762; Price v. Alexander, 52 D. 526.

4. When objection of "no seal" must be taken.—The word "seal," embraced in brackets, and appearing in a copy of an instrument embodied in the record on appeal, imports that the proper seal is affixed to the original, unless objection is taken at the trial on this ground. Touchard v. Crow, 81 D. 108.

SEDUCTION.

[Includes both the civil action, and the criminal prosecution for seduction. Abduction of a woman for immoral purposes is under ABDUCTION; and the effect of seduction to aggravate damages in actions for breach of promise to marry, is under MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.]

I. THE CIVIL ACTION.

II. THE CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.

L. THE CIVIL ACTION.

1. Who may sue.*—At the trial it appeared that the injured girl, who was the sister of the plaintiff's wife, was at the time of the seduction, taking care of the plaintiff's household, without paying board, during the sickness of the plaintiff's wife, upon an understanding with the plaintiff, but with no agreement with her father or herself as to the payment of wages, or for any definite period of service. Held, that this did not establish the relation of master and servant so as to give a right of action to the plaintiff. Blanchard v. Haley, 21 R. 535.

A guardian cannot, as such, maintain an action for the seduction of his ward. Id.

2. Time within which to sue.—In case of seduction, followed by repeated sexual intercourse, the statute of limitations attaches to the first act of intercourse. Franklin v. McCorkle, 57 R. 244.

3. Right of female seduced to sue.†—No action can be maintained by an unmarried woman for seducing her, under pretense of a design to marry her, there being no allegation of a promise of marriage. Paul v. Frasier, 3 D. 95; Weaver v. Backert, 44 D. 159; even if seduction is followed by impregnation. Roper v. Clay, 59 D. 314.

Where a female has been seduced while a minor, her father has a right of action for such seduction after she attains her majority. This right of action is not taken away or negatived by the provision of the statute which gives to an unmarried female the right to prosecute an action for her own seduction. Stevenson v. Bellmap, 71 D. 392.

A statute authorizing a woman to prosecute an action in Indiana, for her own seduction, gives her no right of action where the seduction was accomplished in another state, although the illicit intercourse continued in Indiana. Buckles v. Ellers, 37 R. 156.

4. Father's action founded on loss of service.‡—1. When the action may be brought.—If a daughter living with her father and in his service, though above the age of twenty-one, be seduced, case per quod servitium amittit will lie in favor of the father, and any slight service will be sufficient to raise the inference that she was his servant. But if she is not in his actual service when the injury is done, the action cannot be sustained. Mercer v. Walsley, 9 D. 486.

The father may recover for the seduction of a minor daughter residing with defendant, having left her father's house with his consent and license to appropriate her time and money to her own use, and not intending to return. Boyd v. Byrd, 44 D. 740.

A father may maintain an action for the seduction of his minor daughter, though she did not reside with him at the time, if she was subject to his control and he was entitled to command her services. Hornketh v. Barr, 11 D. 568; unless he has divested himself of his right to control her and to require her services. Emery v. Gowen, 16 D. 233.

The seduction of a female apprentice, while she is a minor and after her master turns her away, or after, with the consent of the master, her return to reside with her father, gives the latter a cause of action against the seducer. Id.

A father's liability to a third person for lying-in expenses of a daughter seduced under age, while a de facto servant to another, and after a voluntary relinquishment by the father of all claim to her services, and although he has been at no actual expense, entitles him to maintain an action on the case for the injury. Clark v. Fick, 20 D. 639.

Such a voluntary relinquishment without a consideration is a mere revocable license, and as the father may recall the daughter into his service at pleasure, the relation of master and servant still subsists. Id.

Where a suit is instituted in the father's name, in such a case, the fact whether he authorized it or not, cannot be inquired into on the trial. Id.

An action for seduction is not maintainable upon the relation of parent and child, but solely upon that of master and servant. White v. Nellis, 88 D. 282.

An action for the seduction of a daughter over the age of twenty-one may be maintained, if the relations of master and servant exists between the parent and child. The slightest acts of service are sufficient to constitute such relation. Vossell v. Cole, 47 D. 136.

The old idea of a loss of services, which lay at the foundation of an action for seduction, has given way to the more enlightened and refined views of the social relation. Stevenson v. Bellnap, 71 D. 392.

A ruling to the effect that an action for seduction cannot be maintained unless it is followed by pregnancy or sexual disease is erroneous. Abrahams v. Kidney, 6 R. 220.

In an action for seducing the plaintiff's daughter, it appeared that she was employed by a third person, but that the plaintiff required her to spend a part of every Sunday at home, and that while there she did work for him. Held, that she was his servant, so that he could maintain the action. Kennedy v. Shea, 14 R. 584.

A father may maintain an action for the seduction of his minor daughter while in the defendant's service if he retained the right to receive her services. Exemplary damages are proper. Evidence of the defendant's pecuniary condition is competent. The fact that the sexual intercourse was procured by force does not take away the right of action. Lavery v. Crooks, 38 R. 768.

2. When not.—An action for seduction cannot be maintained by a father, where his daughter is above the age of twenty-one years, unless she is actually in his service. Nickleon v. Stryker, 6 D. 318; nor when the daughter is of full age and not living in the father's family, but in the actual employment of another person, though working under a contract made by her father, who was to receive her wages. McDaniel v. Edwards, 47 D. 331.

A daughter of the age of nineteen years, with the consent of her father, went to live with her uncle, for whom she worked when she pleased, and he agreed to pay her for her work, but there was no agreement for her continuance in his house for any time. While at her uncle's house she was seduced and got with child, and immediately afterwards returned to her father's house, where she was maintained, and the expense of her lying-in paid by him, though if the misfortune had not have happened, she had no intention of returning to her father. It was held that there was such a constructive service on behalf of the father as entitled him to maintain the action for seduction. Martin v. Payne, 6 D. 288.

An action for seduction is founded on the loss of services, real or supposed, and cannot be maintained in favor of a step-father for seduction of his step-daughter after she has left his family and service, even though she returned and was maintained by him during her confinement. Bartley v. Richmyer, 53 D. 338.

5. When the mother may sue.—An action may be maintained by a mother for the seduction of her minor child, although the seduction took place in the lifetime of the father, and the loss of service happened after his death; the loss of service being the ground of the action. Coon v. Moffatt, 4 D. 392.

A mother cannot maintain trespass for the seduction of her daughter, per quod servitium amittit, committed in the lifetime of the father, with whom the daughter resided, though after her father's death she remained with her mother, who bore the expense of her lying-in, and supported her and her child. Logan v. Murray, 9 D. 422; Vossel v. Cole, 47 D. 136.

*When the mother may sue, see note, 4 D. 408.

The mother of an infant daughter is entitled, after the father's death, to the daughter's services, and can therefore maintain an action for her seduction, even though she is in the actual service of another person at the time of the seduction. Furman v. Van Sice, 15 R. 441.

A woman, whose husband had been absent and not heard from for more than seven years, brought an action for the seduction of her daughter, thirty-one years old, who had always lived with her, assisted in household work, did errands, and from the time she was fifteen years old worked in a neighboring factory, paying her wages to the mother, who used them in the support of the family. Held, maintainable. Davidson v. Abbott, 36 R. 767.

6. Form of action. — Actions for seduction are founded in pure wrong upon the rights of the master in the person of the servant, for which trespass or case will lie. Fairmount Ry Co. v. Stabler, 93 D. 714. But where a man illegally enters the house of another, and debauches his daughter, the father may have an action of trespass q. c. f., and lay the loss of services as consequential, or he may at his election bring case per quod, etc. Mercer v. Wainalea, 9 D. 486.

7. Declaration or complaint. — An action for seduction is founded upon the supposed loss of service by the plaintiff, and it must be alleged and proved that the relation of master and servant existed between plaintiff and the person seduced, when the injury was committed. Vossel v. Cole, 47 D. 136.

8. Matters of defense.† — The connivance of a parent in the seduction of his child, is a bar to an action therefor. Vossel v. Cole, 47 D. 136.

Where a former husband brings suit against the seducer of his divorced wife for damages resulting from such seduction, and the offense of the defendant was the result of collusion between the plaintiff and his wife, or of connivance on the part of the plaintiff, evidence of such collusion would bar the action; but evidence of collusion between the husband and wife in bringing the suit is not admissible in bar of such action. Rea v. Tucker, 99 D. 539.

The acquittal of a defendant on an indictment for seduction, on the ground of his subsequent marriage with the person seduced, does not affect a civil action brought against him by her father to recover damages for loss of her services by reason of the seduction. Echar v. Kistler, 53 D. 551.

The consent of the party seduced does not bar the right of the parent in bringing action for seduction by loss of service, nor will it serve to mitigate the offense of the seducer. McAuley v. Birkhead, 55 D. 427.

An action for the seduction of plaintiff's daughter cannot be defeated by proof of an indenture of the daughter to defendant, whereby the father lost the right to her services, if such indenture was procured as one of the means of accomplishing the seduction. Dain v. Wyckoff, 72 D. 493.

Although the female cannot be interrogated herself as to acts of unchastity with others, yet third persons may be called to testify to their own criminal intercourse with her, and the time and place. Watry v. Ferber, 86 D. 789.

It is no objection to the maintenance of the action that the sexual intercourse between the daughter and the defendant was had by force. Kennedy v. Shea, 14 R. 584.

9. Evidence for plaintiff, generally.* — Continued attentions for several months, followed by improper intercourse, warrant the inference of seduction. Clark v. Fitch, 20 D. 639.

To sustain the action, it is not necessary to show that the defendant used deception, flattery, or false promises to accomplish his purpose; it is sufficient if the seduction resulted from the solicitation, importunity, or from any means or arts used by the defendant. Reed v. Williams, 73 D. 157.

In an action for the seduction of a minor daughter, proof of the sexual intercourse followed by pregnancy, confinement and childbirth, all while the daughter was living with the father, is sufficient. Leucher v. Stetten, 31 R. 104.

An action for seduction of a daughter may be maintained upon proof that in consequence she became nervous and excitable, and did not appear to be herself, without proof of pregnancy or sexual disease. Blagge v. Illsley, 34 R. 361.

10. — as to loss of service. — It is immaterial where the seduction happened, if the daughter was frequently assisting in her father's family. Wallace v. Clark, 5 D. 654.

The wounded honor of the family and the laceration of the parental feelings may be regarded in estimating damages. When the father of the seduced female is the plaintiff, no acts of service need be proved if she be a minor; but if she be of age, it must appear that she resided in her father's family, and some acts of service, however slight, must be proved. Emery v. Gowan, 16 D. 233.

To support the action by a parent actual or constructive loss of service, or payment of expenses, must be proved. Clark v. Fitch, 20 D. 639.

A father cannot recover for the seduction of his minor daughter without showing loss of service. Ogborn v. Francis, 43 R. 394.

The action cannot be maintained upon proof of seduction merely; but the plaintiff must show that a direct injury to his rights as master resulted therefrom. White v. Nelson, 88 D. 232.

A parent may maintain an action for seduction of his minor daughter, on proof that a venereal disease was communicated to her by the act, rendering her sick and unable to work. Id.

11. —in aggravation of damages.* —The damages are very much in the discretion of the jury; where the act of seduction is proved, all the aggravating circumstances that follow come in by way of increasing the damages. Stevenson v. Bellnap, 71 D. 392.

Evidence of a promise of marriage previous to the seduction of a daughter, is not admissible in an action by the father. Clark v. Fisch, 20 D. 639; and if it be received, though the jury are cautioned not to consider it in giving damages, the verdict will be set aside. Gillet v. Mead, 22 D. 578.

The female may be asked whether the defendant paid his addresses in an honorable way. Gillet v. Mead, 22 D. 578.

Evidence that the defendant procured an abortion to be made is admissible in aggravation of damages, if such fact is charged in the declaration; and evidence of an offer of marriage by the defendant, after action brought, is not admissible in mitigation. White v. Mortland, 22 R. 100.

If defendant visited plaintiff's daughter as a suitor, and used arts, flatteries, persuasions, and promises of marriage to induce her to have connection with him, these facts may be considered in aggravation, and to increase the plaintiff's damages. This evidence does not refer to a promise of marriage, or a breach thereof, evidence of which cannot be given in this action, either as a basis of it or as affecting the damages. Stevenson v. Bellnap, 71 D. 392.

Plaintiff may give in evidence the terms upon which defendant visited his house, and that he was paying his addresses to the daughter upon the promise, and with the intention, of marriage. Id.

The plaintiff may recover damages on account of his wounded feelings, and on account of his anxiety as a parent of other children, whose morals may be corrupted by the example. Id.

Evidence of defendant's pecuniary ability, and also of the plaintiff's pecuniary circumstances, is admissible, and should be considered by the jury in estimating the damages.

* Evidence of pecuniary circumstances of defendant, when admissible, see note, 36 R. 445, 446.

Evidence of promise of marriage in action by father, see note, 22 D. 578-582.

Groble v. Margrave, 38 D. 88; McAuley v. Birkhead, 55 D. 427; Clem v. Holmes, 26 R. 793.

Evidence of what defendant had told the plaintiff he was worth is incompetent, and so is evidence of his general reputation for chastity. Watson v. Watson, 51 R. 111.

12. Evidence in mitigation of damages.—1. In general.—In an action by a father for loss of daughter's services, defendant's marriage with her, after the birth of the child, is not a bar to the recovery of exemplary damages, but may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages. Eicher v. Kistler, 53 D. 651.

Evidence of plaintiff's general moral character, and of his character for chastity in particular, is not admissible in mitigation of damages. Dain v. Wyckoff, 72 D. 493.

General evidence of plaintiff's reputation as a man of profligate principles and dissolute habits is admissible in an action for the seduction of his daughter, but evidence of a particular fact in this respect is not admissible, such as that some time before the alleged seduction he had labored under the venereal disease. Reed v. Williams, 73 D. 157.

The evidence as to the condition in life and pecuniary circumstances of the respective parties is admissible in an action for the seduction of either a wife or daughter. Rea v. Tucker, 99 D. 539.

Evidence that the plaintiff's marriage with his reputed wife was void is, in an action for the seduction of his reputed daughter, admissible on the defendant's part to rebut a presumption of actual service by showing that the plaintiff was not legally entitled to her services; and in mitigation of damages. Howland v. Howland, 19 R. 331.

2. Character of the seduced woman for chastity.—The defendant cannot give in evidence her whole moral character, but if the plaintiff ask for damages done to his feelings and the reputation of his family, then it may be proper to inquire into her character for chastity. Wallace v. Clark, 5 D. 654.

The defendant is always permitted to prove that the general character of the servant or prosecutrix for chastity is bad; and this must be done by general evidence of her reputation in that respect, and not by evidence of particular instances of unchastity. Watry v. Ferber, 86 D. 789.

The question of character is involved in the consideration of the measure of damages; and evidence, therefore, of the character and acts of the female seduced is admissible, which would not be admitted as to other witnesses. Shattuck v. Myers, 74 D. 236; Corder v. Forehand, 14 D. 317.

Evidence of plaintiff's adultery is admissible in mitigation of damages, but not as a bar to the action, where such plaintiff and husband sue another for damages for a criminal intimacy with the wife of the former. Rea v. Tucker, 99 D. 539.

Defendant may prove, in mitigation of damages, that the wife of plaintiff had been guilty of adultery with other persons before her connection with the defendant, where the plaintiff and husband has brought suit against her seducer for damages. Id.

In an action brought under a statute for damages for the plaintiff's own seduction, evidence of the plaintiff's previous unchastity, although unknown to the defendant or the public, is admissible in mitigation of damages. Love v. Masoner, 32 R. 522.

13. Instructions. — At the trial of an action for seducing the plaintiff's daughter, the admission of evidence that she worked for her father after the seduction furnishes the defendant no ground of exception, if the judge instructed the jury that the plaintiff could not recover unless the relation of master and servant existed between him and his daughter at the time of seduction. Kensedy v. Shea, 14 R. 584.

14. Damages recoverable. — The rules relating to excessive damages are very liberal. It is only under extraordinary circumstances that the court will interfere upon that ground. Stevenson v. Belknap, 71 D. 392.

Exemplary damages may be allowed. McAulay v. Birkhead, 55 D. 427. This right is not affected by the statute giving the daughter an action for the same seduction, in which she may recover damages, although it may result in defendants having such exemplary damages twice assessed against him in a civil suit. Stevenson v. Belknap, 71 D. 392.

Injuries to the daughter and to her father are separate and distinct, and there is nothing incompatible or inconsistent in the idea that both grew out of the same act by defendant; or, under a statute giving each an action therefor, that exemplary damages should be allowed in each case. Id.

II. THE CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.

15. What constitutes the offense. — "Character," in the statute prescribing that a woman be "of previously chaste character," signifies that which the person really is, in distinction from that which she may be reputed to be. Andre v. State, 68 D. 708.

A promise to marry a female which is the inducement to sexual intercourse is sufficient, under a statute providing that any man who, under "promise of marriage," seduces any unmarried female of previous chaste character shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. It is not necessary that the promise should be a valid and binding one between the parties. Kenyon v. People, 84 D. 177.

A statute made it felony for any person, under promise of marriage to have illicit carnal intercourse with a female infant of good repute for chastity. Held, that the promise need not be a valid one, in fact, if the infant understood it to be valid; and that the indictment need not allege that the defendant was unmarried at the time. Callahan v. State, 30 R. 211.

16. Evidence — Burden of proof. — A child, alleged to have been born of the alleged intercourse, cannot be exhibited to the jury as corroborative evidence for the prosecution on account of its resemblance to the defendant. State v. Danforth, 30 R. 387.

An indictment for seduction is not supported by proof that the defendant accomplished his purpose by force, and he is entitled to such an instruction if there is any evidence of force. State v. Lewis, 30 R. 407.

On a prosecution for seduction of a woman of "good repute for chastity" the state must affirmatively prove such reputation. Zabriele v. State, 39 R. 610; Oliver v. Com., 47 R. 704.

On an indictment for seduction the prosecution must prove the actual personal chastity of the complainant, although the statute is silent as to character or repute. Folk v. State, 48 R. 17.

17. Matters of defense, generally. — Plea, that at the time of the alleged seduction defendant was lawfully married, whereof prosecutrix had notice. Held, that the plea was good. Wood v. State, 15 R. 664.

18. Bad character of prosecutrix. — The chaste character of a female is presumed. Andre v. State, 68 D. 708.

To establish the unchaste character of an unmarried female it is not necessary to prove that she has been guilty of previous sexual intercourse; it is sufficient to show that she has been guilty of obscenity of language, indecency of conduct, and undue familiarity with men, and the like. Id.

"Previous chastity," in the statute, would signify mere actual chastity or freedom from sexual intercourse; but "previously chaste character" does not signify merely this, but also purity of mind and innocence of heart. Id.

Evidence of the general reputation of a female for want of chastity is inadmissible in a prosecution for seduction, under a statute which provides that any man who, under promise of marriage, seduces any unmarried female of "previous chaste character" shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. By "chaste character" the statute means actual personal virtue, and not reputation, and requires evidence of specific acts of lewdness for impeachment. Kenyon v. People, 84 D. 177.

*See monographic note on seduction, as a crime, 87 D. 406-411.

A statute provided for the punishing of the seduction of any unmarried woman "of previously chaste character." Held, that "character" in the statute referred to moral qualities and not to reputation, and evidence of reputation was not admissible upon the issue of character, but only to impeach or corroborate testimony regarding particular acts of unchastity. State v. Priser, 31 R. 155.

An unmarried female may reform and gain a character for chastity, within the meaning of section 4209 of the Iowa Revision of 1880, making the seduction of a female of "previously chaste character" a crime, where she has become unchaste by sexual intercourse. State v. Carron, 87 D. 401.

Evidence that a mother's house was one of ill-fame is irrelevant on the question of the daughter's chastity, in a prosecution for the seduction of the daughter, who was a minor, residing with her mother. Kenyon v. People, 84 D. 177.

The question of the previously chaste character of the prosecutrix is one of fact for the jury, in a prosecution for seduction. State v. Carron, 87 D. 401.

Evidence of previous acts of lewdness and unchastity by the complainant with other men is admissible. State v. Patterson, 57 R. 374. Contra, see State v. Brassfield, 51 R. 234.

19. Corroboration of prosecutrix.—Corroborative evidence is not confined to proof of the illicit intercourse, but extends to proof of other material facts, such as the illegitimacy of the child, the regular and frequent visits of the defendant to the female, his being alone with her at late hours of the night, and his confessions made to others on the subject, and an instruction to this effect is correct. Andre v. State, 68 D. 706.

The language of the statute concerning corroborative evidence was, "unless she be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense:" Held, that the court was justified in modifying a requested instruction, "that this corroborating evidence should be of a character that goes directly to the commission of the offense," by striking out "to the commission of" and inserting "to strengthen and corroborate the testimony of the injured person, and to point out the defendant as having committed" the offense. Id.

Declarations of the injured party, made out of court, are admissible on the trial to show that the testimony of such party as given at the trial agrees with such declarations. State v. De Wolf, 20 D. 90.

A defendant having attempted to discredit the testimony of the prosecuting witness by showing that she had concealed the transaction for more than a year, and assigned as a reason therefor her fear of the defendant, evidence by the prosecution that the prosecuting witness was deaf and dumb, and that such persons have a sense of inferiority to other people, and as a class are easily intimidated, and that they are credulous and submissive, and that such was the character of the prosecuting witness, is inadmissible. Id.

Statements by a prosecutrix made soon after the occurrence, detailing the circumstances, are admissible in corroboration of her testimony on the trial, but not as independent evidence. Phillips v. State, 49 D. 709; Laughlin v. State, 1 D. 444.

It is competent to introduce evidence of the good character of the person seduced, she being a witness for the prosecution. Turney v. State, 47 D. 74.

The corroboration of a seduced female's testimony as to her chastity, or being unmarried, is not required, but only as to the promise of marriage, and the intercourse, under a statute providing that no conviction shall be had because of the seduction of an unmarried female, under promise of marriage, "on the testimony of the female seduced, unsupported by other evidence." Kenyon v. People, 84 D. 177.

20. Instructions.—An instruction, that certain supposed instances of conduct not involving sexual intercourse rendered the female no longer chaste or virtuous in law, is properly refused, as it takes too much from the jury, and such a proposition cannot be laid down as a sequence of law. Andre v. State, 68 D. 706.

21. Conviction.—A defendant may be found guilty of fornication on indictment for seduction. Dinabey v. Com., 55 D. 542.

However beneficial such labor may be, he cannot recover therefor. Bartholomew v. Jackson, 11 D. 237. A party is only entitled to wages when he has stipulated for them, or when, by implication, the person who received the services promised to pay for them. Jacob v. Ursuline Nuns, 5 D. 730.

To constitute liability on an implied contract, where work is performed by one, the benefit of which is received by another, there must not only be no restrictions imposed by law upon the party sought to be charged against making, in express terms, a similar contract to that which is implied, but the party must also be in a situation where he is entirely free to elect whether he will or will not accept of the work, and where such election will or may influence the conduct of the other party with reference to the work itself. Zottman v. San Francisco, 81 D. 96.

Where a son supports his decrepit parents in his own house, the presumption that it is gratuitous may be overcome by declarations by the parent of an intention to pay; but the parent's declarations, not in the son's presence, cannot prove a contract more favorable for himself. Miller's Appeal, 45 R. 394.

Services rendered a person during his last illness as nurse and housekeeper are not deemed to be gratuitous, but, on the contrary, there is an implied contract that the party receiving such services is to pay a fair compensation therefor. The fact, if it were shown, that the nurse or housekeeper lived with the man she was nursing and taking care of, as his concubine, does not impair or lessen her claim for wages, unless it be alleged and shown that concubinage was the motive and cause of their living together in the first instance, and the services rendered were merely incidental to that mode of living. Succession of Pereuilhet, 8 R. 595.

If services are rendered at the request of a party, he is liable to pay therefor, although the services were rendered in expectation of a legacy. Roberts v. Swift, 1 D. 295.

2. — as between parties occupying a personal relation. — A promise to pay for services rendered between members of same family will not be presumed. Williams v. Hutchinson, 53 D. 301.

Where children work for their parents after arriving at age, the law implies no contract on the part of the parent to pay for the services. Poorman v. Kilgore, 67 D. 425.

A son may recover from his father's estate an amount equal to the value of personal services rendered in the lifetime of his parent as overseer upon his plantation, when it appears that there was an understanding that the services were not to be gratuitous, and there was no provision made for the son in his father's will. Price v. Price, 34 D. 608.

A neglect to sue until after the death of a parent, by a son who had rendered certain services in the lifetime of the former, in expectation that provision would be made for him in the parent's will, by way of reward, is not such neglect as will bring the demand within the statute of limitations, so as to bar an action for its recovery. Id.

A daughter may recover, as upon an implied contract, for necessary services rendered by her to her insane mother with the intention of charging for them. Reardo v. Misplay, 59 R. 13.

If a grandparent receives his grandchild into his family as a member of it, no presumption is raised of a promise on the part of the grandparent to pay the grandchild for services such as a child generally renders as a member of the family. Dodson v. McAdams, 60 R. 408.

Where the grandparent declared several times that he intended to give her a part of his property as he would his children, and that she should be paid for the services, — held, not sufficient to prove a promise to pay for her services. Id.

Such services are not gratuitous, but are presumed, in the absence of evidence of an express promise, to be rendered as a recompense for the care and protection extended to the child. Id.

A promise to pay for work and labor is not implied where the conduct, situation, and mutual relations of the parties do not show that a claim for payment would be just. And therefore, where nephews worked for their bachelor uncle for many years without any contract for compensation, and on his death inherited from him an amount largely exceeding a reasonable compensation, no contract for compensation will be implied. Weir v. Weir, 39 D. 487.

An infant at the age of eleven years was taken into the family of his uncle, and remained, without any contract, until his majority, working for his uncle and receiving his maintenance from him. On coming of age he remained with his uncle for five years, working his farm on shares three months of each year, and the rest of the time working for him without any contract, and furnishing his own clothing, washing, and medical attendances. Held, that a contract might be implied on the part of his uncle to pay him the reasonable value of such services after majority. Morton v. Rainey, 25 R. 311.

Plaintiff resided with her brother for many years, being supported and cared for by him during that time as a member of his own family, and after his death sued his administrator for services rendered by her for her brother while she so lived with him. Held, that the presumption, created by the near kinship of plaintiff and deceased, that no payment was intended for such services, could only be overcome by clear and satisfactory proof of an express contract to pay for them. Hall v. Finch, 9 R. 559.

3. Interpretation of express contracts for services.—When an express contract is in force, the law does not recognize an implied one; and when services are performed under an express contract, the action to recover for such services must be under the express contract, and that only, unless in consequence of the fault or consent of the defendant. Wake v. Merrill, 16 D. 238.

A contract for service must be certain and definite as to the nature and extent of service to be performed, the place where, and the person to whom it is to be rendered, and the compensation to be paid, or it will not be enforced. Parsons v. Trask, 66 D. 502.

An oral promise of a decedent that if his niece would live with him and his wife, he would give her a good home as long as he lived, and provide for her at his death, and she should never want as long as she lived, is too indefinite for enforcement. Wall's Appeal, 56 R. 238.

A special contract fixing the terms and conditions on which one party shall serve another is, in the absence of proof altering or rescinding it, conclusive. Wallace v. Floyd, 72 D. 620.

One will serve on old terms if he agree to serve another for a specified time at a stipulated sum and he continues longer in service, in the absence of a special bargain altering or enlarging the original agreement. Ib.

In an action for services, it is no defense that the services were rendered while the claimant was an employee of a third person in another line of business, and both during and out of the business hours of such third person. Wallace v. De Young, 38 R. 108.

4. Breach by employee, and its effect.—A contract to serve for three months at an agreed salary per month is entire, and if the service is left before the expiration of the three months, no recovery can be had. Wright v. Turner, 18 D. 35.

Where one represents himself as a workman, he impliedly covenants that he will skillfully perform the work upon which he is engaged. If, from want of skill upon his part, the work upon which he is engaged prove valueless, he is not entitled to a recovery for his labor. McDonald v. Simpson, 38 D. 45.

5. Rules for pleading.—To recover the value of services, no demand is necessary. Norris v. School District, 28 D. 182.

6. — of evidence.—The most satisfactory proof of the standard of value of services is that which the parties fix for themselves. Wallace v. Floyd, 72 D. 620.

7. Claims for extra services.—A statute provided that "eight hours' work done in any one day shall be deemed a lawful day's work, unless otherwise agreed by the parties." Plaintiff, under a contract for a fixed price per week, worked sixteen hours per day. Held, that he could not recover double the agreed price. Luske v. Hotchkiss, 9 R. 314.

8. Quantum meruit.—One who engages to serve another for a specified time for a certain sum cannot, against the consent and without the fault of the other, leave his service before the expiration of the time, and recover on a quantum meruit. Stark v. Parker, 13 D. 425.

When one performs services for another, under a mutual understanding that the latter will make compensation therefor by a legacy in his will, such services are not gratuitous, and if the recipient of them does not give the expected legacy, an action lies against his representative for their value. Martin v. Wright, 28 D. 468.

SET-OFF—COUNTERCLAIM.

[Includes the common-law right to offset one cross-demand against another; the doctrine of the set-off of judgments; and the modern practice, introduced by the codes of procedure, of interposing counterclaims. For matters of set-off or counterclaim peculiar to any particular form or cause of action, see its title.]

I. SET-OFF OF CROSS-DEMANDS.

II. SET-OFF OF JUDGMENTS.

III. PROCEDURE.

IV. COUNTERCLAIM.

I. SET-OFF OF CROSS-DEMANDS.

1. General principles.—A set-off means a cross-claim on which defendant might sue the plaintiff, and is not allowable if no such cross-action would lie thereon. Annan v. Houck, 45 D. 133.

The law of set-off before judgment is regulated entirely by statute. Chandler v. Drew, 26 D. 704.

Under the act of 1705, a defendant who establishes a set-off in excess of plaintiff's demand has no lien upon the latter's real estate for the payment of such excess. It can only be made a lien by judgment in scire facias. Ramsey's Appeal, 27 D. 301.

The defendant is not bound to set off his debt against the plaintiff's demand, except in suits before a justice of the peace. Morton v. Bailey, 27 D. 767.

Mutual debts do not extinguish each other per se, unless by some positive act or agreement of the parties the intention to satisfy and discharge their respective debts is clearly indicated. Post v. Carmalt, 37 D. 484.

3. Jurisdiction at law. — The courts of law in Pennsylvania have adopted the equitable doctrine of setting off mutual demands, wherever it is possible. Morgan v. Bank of N. A., 11 D. 575.

The right of set-off before judgment is statutory entirely, and exists only in cases provided for by the statute. Annam v. Houch, 45 D. 133.

A cross-demand may be set off in an action at law. Downs v. Jackson, 85 D. 289.

3. — in equity. — The right to an offset in chancery exists independently of statute, and is controlled only by the general principles of equity. Jeffries v. Evans, 43 D. 158.

Courts of chancery exercised a jurisdiction upon the subject of set-offs before the statutes of set-off existed. Blake v. Langdon, 47 D. 701.

The English statutes of set-off were passed mainly to obviate the necessity of a resort to chancery in every case of mutual independent claims upon both sides. Id.

The plaintiff was located and doing business in Washington City, and recovered judgment in a court of Baltimore. The defendant had a claim for damages growing out of the same transaction. Held, that the mere fact that the plaintiff was a non-resident of Baltimore did not give the court of equity of that city jurisdiction to restrain the judgment against the defendant and to enforce the set-off. Smith v. Washington Gas Light Co., 100 D. 49.

4. Law of place. — Where the law of a state where a contract was made gave a party a right to plead a certain matter by way of set-off, the party, when sued in another state, may plead the same by way of set-off, although such right of set-off is not given under the laws of the latter state; for the right of set-off relates to the merits, and not to the form of proceeding. Vermont Bank v. Porter, 5 D. 157.

A set-off allowed by a local law is regarded as part of the remedy, and consequently is admissible against claims sued on in this state by persons belonging to other states or countries, although it would not be admissible by the law of the country where the debt which is sued was contracted. Davis v. Morton, 96 D. 345.

The laws of set-off and of tender belong rather to the remedy than to substance, and therefore are always regulated by the laws of the state in which the action is brought, and not by the law of the place where the obligation sued on was made. Id.

A set-off should be allowed against a note executed in Tennessee, and sued on in Kentucky, where it is allowed by the law of the latter state, but would not have been allowed by the law of Tennessee. Id.

5. What demands may be set off, generally.* — Nothing can be set off unless it can be sued upon; and any claim coming within the statute can be set off if it can be sued. Wallace v. Finnegan, 90 D. 243.

Legal claims only can form subjects of set-off, or be filed in bar to any action at law; they must be such as the party could sue for and recover at law. Milburn v. Guyther, 50 D. 681.

All moneyed demands for which either indebitatus assumpsit or debt will lie constitute valid set-offs. Jenkins v. Richardson, 22 D. 82.

A defendant may set off a note of plaintiff without surrendering collateral securities, since his right to sue on the note is an absolute one, not in any way affected by his possession of the securities, and a court of law has no power to enforce such equities in the securities as may result to the plaintiff from the allowance of the set-off. Wallace v. Finnegan, 90 D. 243.

The value of a note received for collection and converted is subject of set-off, and is not unliquidated damages. Gunn v. Todd, 64 D. 231.

If the transferrer of a promissory note payable to bearer undertakes to guarantee the payment of it, upon delivery to the transferee, he may be liable on such special contract to him, and such liability is the subject of set-off. Orenshaw v. Jackson, 50 D. 361.

A debtor is entitled to set-off in equity payments made by him to discharge indebtedness of the plaintiff to a third person, and this, although the debtor showed no authority to make the payments. Lofland v. Maulk, 12 D. 106.

Where a judgment has been satisfied by a levy upon the property of one defendant, the claim which accrues to him may be set off in an action brought against him by his co-defendant, or by his assignee, where, under the statute, the latter is subject to the same set-offs as the former. Kershaw v. Merchants' Bank, 40 D. 70.

The unascertained value of services and materials stipulated to be applied in part payment of a debt is properly the subject of a set-off, under the proper plea or notice in assumpsit on the debt. Manville v. Gay, 60 D. 379.

In an action by or against a trustee, money due to or from a cestui que trust may always

* What demands are available as offsets, see note, 12 D. 152-157.

be pleaded as a set-off. Nickerson v. Gilliam, 77 D. 583.

Where, after the defendant has been defaulted, a subsequent attaching creditor is allowed to defend, he may be allowed a claim of the defendant against the plaintiff in offset to the plaintiff's claim, where there is no other claim on which either the plaintiff or defendant can desire to make application of such offset. Woodbury v. Woodbury, 90 D. 555.

A town tax is not a contract, express or implied, which can be applied upon a debt owed by the town to the individual owing the tax. Johnson v. Howard, 98 D. 568.

An obligor may plead a set-off, although he has given a bond to secure the payment of the cause of action, not reserving the right of set-off. Van Sandt v. Does, 50 R. 759.

6. What may not be. — The defendant in an action cannot set off a bond, executed by the plaintiff to a third person (without mentioning "assigns") for the use of another, and transferred by the obligee to the defendant. Wolf v. Beales, 9 D. 425.

Goods held by a consignee are not subject of set-off in an action by the consignee against the consignor for a balance due on account of acceptances paid for the defendants and goods sold to them prior to the commencement of the suit. Parks v. Ingram, 55 D. 153.

The statute applies as well to a sum attempted to be set off as to one upon which an action is to be brought. Nolan v. Blackwell, 86 D. 206.

Plaintiff lent defendant money with a United States bond as collateral security. After the maturity, but before payment of the note, the bond was stolen from plaintiff. Held, in an action on the note, that the defendant could not set off or recoup the value of the bond. Winthrop Savings Bank v. Jackson, 24 R. 56.

A town summoned as trustee or garnishee of an individual cannot set off taxes assessed by it on him against the debt due from it to him. Hubbard v. Clark, 22 R. 432.

A debt due to a municipal corporation for taxes cannot be offset by any debt due by the corporation. Thus a tax due for one year cannot be compensated by an overpayment of taxes made by the debtor the year previous. New Orleans v. Davidson, 31 R. 228; Gatling v. Comm'rs of Carteret, 53 R. 432.

A person lawfully taxed by a municipal corporation cannot set off a debt due him from the corporation against the tax; nor will equity enjoin the collection of the tax until the debt is paid; nor because of a failure to recover the debt through the ordinary legal remedies; nor because of irregularities in the notice of time and place of sale. Flanagan v. City of Fernandina, 21 R. 292.

7. What may be recouped.* — Damages may be recouped in action on a sealed instrument, as well as on an unsealed one, by showing a partial failure of consideration, under 2 New York Revised Statutes, page 406, section 77; but notice of the defense is necessary, and it cannot be pleaded where it does not go to the whole consideration. Van Eype v. Harrison, 40 D. 314. Or by an employer, in an action for wages for service in a family, for the seduction of his daughter. Bixby v. Parsons, 44 R. 246. Or for a failure to execute a contract at the time stipulated, in an action to recover the contract price. Abbott v. Gatch, 71 D. 635. Or in an action for the price of an engine, for delay in not furnishing it by a stipulated time; and the damages should be estimated by the value of the use of the engine during the period of delay, not by the profits which would have been realized from running it in connection with the machinery it was intended to drive. Griffin v. Coleer, 69 D. 718.

A and B traded horses, each fraudulently representing his horse to be sound. A sued B for his (B's) fraud. Held, that B could recoup damages for A's fraud. Carey v. Guillou, 7 R. 494.

8. Demands not yet due not subjects of set-off. — Payment of debt not yet due cannot be enforced by way of set-off until it is due. Hayes v. Hayes, 73 D. 709.

A debt not due cannot at its face be offset against another at its face where they bear different rates of interest. Halleck v. Guy, 70 D. 643.

A note given by A to B, and not yet due, cannot, in equity, be set off against a note given by B to A, upon which A has brought an action for the benefit of C, to whom he assigned it, although C knew, at the time of the assignment, that A was insolvent, and A was subsequently declared a bankrupt. Spaulding v. Backus, 23 R. 391.

The assignment of a non-negotiable demand, arising on contract, before due, defeats a set-off by the debtor of an independent cross-demand, on which no right of action had accrued at the time of the assignment. Fuller v. Steiglitz, 22 R. 312.

9. Unliquidated demands. — Uncertain or unliquidated damages arising on a breach of contract cannot be made the subject of a set-off, either in a court of law or equity. Dugan v. Cureton, 31 D. 727; Drew v. Towle, 59 D. 380; Smith v. Washington Gas Light Co., 100 D. 49. But a decree may be deferred, to enable the claimant to have it liquidated. Nims v. Rood, 34 D. 669. Nor can cross-demands for unliquidated damages be set off against each other. Christian v. Miller, 23 D. 251. Accordingly, on a bill of discovery, and for an account of arrears of rent, the defendant cannot be allowed to set off damages for the breach of a covenant on the part of the grantor to allow him sufficient common of pasture and estovers. Livingston v. Livingston, 8 D. 562.

* See monographic note on recoupment in actions for breach of contract, 46 D. 320-327.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Unliquidated damages for a tort arising out of a different transaction are not allowable as a set-off. Accordingly, in an action for goods sold and delivered, the defendant cannot set off a claim arising from the fact that other goods consigned to the plaintiff for the defendant were sent by the plaintiff to other persons. Gogel v. Jacoby, 9 D. 339.

A set-off of a claim for unliquidated damages for breach of an agreement in no way connected with the mortgage debt, such demand not being a proper subject of set-off at law, cannot be allowed in a suit in equity to foreclose a mortgage, where there is no peculiar equity to take the case out of the general rule; and an allegation that the complainant has put some of his property out of his hands, and is threatening to do so with the rest, is not sufficient to raise such an equity. Jennings v. Webster, 35 D. 722.

The rule as to set-off in equity, as at law, is, that there must be mutual debts between the parties, and it does not apply to unliquidated damages for breaches of covenants. Duncan v. Lyon, 8 D. 513.

Damages for a breach of covenants in a deed may be set off in an action of assumpsit for the consideration, where the amount of such damages is to be ascertained by mere calculation. Drew v. Towle, 59 D. 380.

A right of action for breach of warranty is not the subject of set-off; the debt must be for a money demand, and of a liquidated nature, and for which debt, or indebitatus assumpsit, or some other action ex contractu will lie. Crenshaw v. Jackson, 50 D. 361.

10. The demands must exist when suit is brought. — A debt or demand to be used as a set-off must exist at the commencement of the suit, and must have at that time belonged to the defendant. Smith v. Ever, 60 D. 73. Therefore a demand once barred by the statute of limitations, and afterwards revived by a new promise, cannot be pleaded, at law, as a set-off in an action commenced during the existence of the statutory bar. Lee v. Lee, 76 D. 681.

So a person is not entitled to a set-off against a bankrupt, unless it existed when the bankruptcy happens; nor against an administrator, unless entitled to the set-off against the decedent. Shepherd v. Turner, 18 D. 631.

A defendant who offers a promissory note, negotiated to him as a set-off, must show that he received it in the proper time. Its mere possession by him, indorsed in blank, affords no presumption of such fact. Smith v. Ever, 60 D. 73.

11. The demands must be mutual. — In equity, as at law, a set-off is only allowed where there is a mutuality in the demands, and the amounts are liquidated and certain. Smith v. Washington Gas Light Co., 100 D. 49; Annan v. Houck, 45 D. 133. Therefore, in an action to recover a debt due a partnership, a debt due from one copartner cannot be set off. Gregg v. James, 12 D. 151.

In equity, where demands are in reality mutual, they may be set off, though they are not nominally mutual. Thus where a note executed to a firm has become the separate property of one of the partners, a demand due to its maker by this partner may be set off against the judgment obtained by him on the note in the firm name. Foot v. Ketchum, 40 D. 678.

The statutory right of set-off is designed to prevent an unnecessary multiplication of suits, and allows the defendant to oppose in the same suit his debt against the plaintiff to plaintiff's debt against him; but defendant cannot set off his debt against a stranger to the action, against plaintiff's debt against him, or litigate in plaintiff's action a claim of which plaintiff is ignorant, not being a party to it, and one of the contracting parties to which is no party to the action. Trafford v. Hall, 82 D. 589.

The statutory right of set-off attaches to claims legally transferable, only while they constitute mutual debts of the parties to the suit. The status of such claims, as mutually binding the parties in the same right and capacity at the time of action brought, determines this right; before this period the right is collateral to and not attached to them, and contingent upon their existence as mutual debts down to the period of the suit. Id.

12. — and in the same right. — To authorize a set-off, the debts must be between the parties in their own rights, and must be of the same kind or quality, and be clearly ascertained or liquidated. Smith v. Washington Gas Light Co., 100 D. 49; Coffman v. Hampton, 37 D. 511.

A set-off can only be made against the real party in interest. Flournoy v. City of Jeffersonville, 79 D. 468.

A set-off necessarily flows from a contract, and the injury flowing from an independent tort cannot be averred in defalcation of a demand founded on contract, nor as a substantive defense, commensurate with the injury inflicted on the defendant, since it in no way touches the consideration of the contract sued on. Price v. Lewis, 55 D. 536.

Under an ordinance to raise supplies, taxes were assessed upon plaintiff's property by a municipal corporation, and the treasurer of the corporation being about to enforce payment under the provisions of a general ordinance requiring all taxes to be "paid in specie or in the notes of specie-paying banks," plaintiff offered as payment a debt of equal amount with the taxes due him by the corporation. Held, that the plaintiff had no right, legal or equitable, to compel the corporation to receive the debt as payment or satisfaction of the taxes, or as a counterclaim, or as a set-off or discount. Trenholm v. Charleston, 16 R. 732.

A town summoned as trustee or garnishee of an individual cannot set off taxes assessed by it on him against the debt due from it to him. Hibbard v. Clark, 22 R. 432.

13. No set-off between joint and separate debts.* — A joint debt cannot be set off against a separate one, nor a separate debt against a joint one, either at law or in equity. Milburn v. Guyther, 50 D. 681; Dart v. Sherwood, 76 D. 223; Richardson v. St. Joseph Iron Co., 33 D. 460; Henderson v. Lewis, 11 D. 733. But in particular cases in equity, joint and separate debts may be set off against each other, as where the debts are in reality mutual, though prosecuted in the names of others nominally interested. Blake v. Langdon, 47 D. 701.

A and B formed a copartnership, A furnishing capital, and B paying him a certain sum every year in lieu of his profits. Subsequently, A and C formed a copartnership as successors of A & B, C being the active partner. The firm of A & B continued only for the purpose of closing their business. C, at the request of B, from time to time paid debts, with property of A & C, due from A & B, and charged the same to A & B upon the books of A & C. C received from B a note signed with firm name A & B, and for the purpose of paying a note due from a third person to A & B, executed a negotiable note to B alone. This note was sued upon in the name of an indorsee while the statute existed allowing the makers of negotiable notes the benefit, as against indorsees, of all legal and equitable defenses to the notes; and on a bill in equity by A & C against B and the indorsee, — held, the charges on the books of A & C to A & B, and the note held by A & C, signed by A & B, could be set off against the note signed by A & C to B, and sued upon in the name of the indorsee, it appearing that B was insolvent. Id.

If B under the above facts would seek in such case to avoid the contract entered into between himself and A, upon the ground of inequality, he should file his cross-bill setting forth the facts upon which he claims relief. Id.

One of several defendants is entitled to set off a debt due him individually from the plaintiff. Stewart v. Coulter, 14 D. 680.

A debt due one of two joint obligors may be set off under their joint plea in an action of debt brought by the administrators of the obligee on the joint bond. Pücker v. Patrick, 12 D. 54.

"He" does not mean "he and others," in a statute permitting defendant to "plead discount of any claim he may have against the plaintiff." Milburn v. Guyther, 50 D. 681.

In an action on an undertaking against a principal and surety, the principal may set off a demand due him from the plaintiff. Raymond v. Green, 41 R. 763.

14. — nor against suit for price of exempt property. — A housekeeper, with a family, sold his only cow to enable him to buy one that gave milk, the purchaser knowing at the time the object of the sale. Held, that the seller was entitled to recover the whole price of the cow in money from the purchaser, and the latter could not set off against it any debt he might hold against the former. Mulliken v. Winter, 87 D. 495.

15. Actions by or against carriers. — In an action by a common carrier for freight of goods transported and delivered, the defendant may recover, over and above the freight so earned, a balance for damage to goods carried, occasioned by the carrier's negligence. Schwinger v. Raymond, 38 R. 415.

16. Actions upon negotiable instruments. — In an action by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, the latter cannot set off a bill of exchange on which the plaintiff is responsible, unless it appear that the defendant had received such bill before notice of the indorsement of the note to plaintiff. Ritchie v. Moore, 7 D. 688.

The maker cannot set off against the indorsee of a promissory note, although discredited, demands which he may have against the indorser, the payee. Chandler v. Drew, 26 D. 704.

The maker of a note indorsed when overdue cannot set off an independent demand due him from the indorser at and before the indorsement, where the indorsee took it bona fide, without notice, and for value. Annan v. Houck, 45 D. 133.

A maker of a note may set up against the indorsee after due any defense he has against the payee. Cochran v. Wheeler, 26 D. 732.

In an action by the payee upon a promissory note, the consideration of which was an agreement, signed by the plaintiff, to convey to the defendant, on or before January 1, 1866, two thousand five hundred dollars of the capital stock of the King Gold Mining Company, at subscription price, — held, that the defendant might defend against the action by showing that no transfer or tender of the said stock was made to him until after August, 1866, and might recoup his damages arising from the plaintiff's failure to perform his agreement. Hill v. Southwick, 11 R. 250.

Defendant, for valid consideration, assumed and promised to pay the debts of R., which included three promissory notes held by N. Afterward, and before maturity, N. duly transferred these notes to plaintiff. Held, in an action on the notes, that the de-defendant could set off a claim held against N. Barlow v. Myers, 21 R. 582.

17. Actions respecting real property. — A vendee claiming a set-off against the purchase price on account of claims held against the vendor, the account should be sent to a commissioner, if the evidence justifies it. Clarke v. Curtis, 37 D. 625.

Where plaintiff was the owner of one third of land and her infant child the owner of two thirds, and an order of court had been made confirming her sale of the land, the vendee will not be entitled in an action for the purchase-money to set up a discount for the infant's share. Martin ad. Bobo, 40 D. 557.

A vendee may recoup damages for fraudulent misrepresentations by the vendor as to the condition of the land sold and its adaptability for the use for which the vendor knew that the vendee wanted it, in an action for the price, where the vendee trusted to the representations in making the purchase. Van Epps v. Harrison, 40 D. 314.

A vendor's fraudulent misrepresentations as to the price paid by him for the land sold are admissible in evidence by way of recoupment in an action against his vendee for the purchase-money. Id.

A recoupment of damages for a breach of a covenant of quiet enjoyment implied in a lease is allowable in an action for the rent reserved. Mayor etc. of New York v. Mabie, 64 D. 538.

18. What demands may be set off in actions where partners are parties. — In an action against a partnership, a set-off of a debt due an individual member of the firm will not be allowed. Ritchie v. Moore, 7 D. 688.

The debt due from one partner cannot be set off against a debt due to the firm; hence one partnership may prove a debt against another, though one of the partners is a member of both firms. Ward v. Brandt, 13 D. 352.

Mutual credits are a ground of set-off in equity, though not at law. Hence a decree in favor of the plaintiff seeking a partnership account may be set off against a judgment at law in favor of the defendant in the decree and against the plaintiff. And this right of set-off is not affected by the fact that, by the decree, balances were made payable to other partners also, provided the partners are entitled severally under the decree. Lockwood v. Bates, 12 D. 121.

One member of a firm will be allowed in equity to offset his own judgment against an insolvent debtor seeking to enforce a judgment against such firm. Jeffries v. Evans, 43 D. 158.

In an action against a surviving partner, upon a partnership debt, he may set off a debt due him individually from plaintiff. Lewis v. Culbertson, 14 D. 607.

A defendant may set off in a suit by a surviving partner upon a debt due the firm a debt due to him by such surviving partner individually. Holbrook v. Lackey, 46 D. 726.

19. Right of set-off as between principal and agent. — A executed his promissory note to B, in 1861, payable in United States currency. In 1862, A gave B certain claims, also payable in United States currency, for collection, directing him "to exercise his discretion as to procedure to be taken in enforcing collection." B accepted payment of the claims in confederate currency. In an action against A, on the note, brought in 1868, by the administrator of B, — held, that the full amount of the collected claims in United States currency was a valid set-off. Mangum v. Ball, 5 R. 488.

In an action on a bond for the faithful and honest discharge of the obligor's duty as agent, the defendant may set off his services as such agent. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. v. Jameson, 31 R. 775.

20. — principal and surety. — A counter-demand arising from a payment of money to a principal cannot be set off against the sureties in an action brought by them, unless the plaintiffs are shown to be legally responsible for the sum paid. Bunting v. Ricks, 32 D. 699.

21. What demands may be set off in actions by assignees. — The trustee of an insolvent debtor stands, in regard to cross-demands, in the same position as the debtor himself; and therefore, in a suit by such trustee to recover from administrators with the will annexed, a legacy given to the insolvent's wife, payments made by the defendants for the insolvent are available as an equitable defense. Krause v. Beitel, 23 D. 113.

A debtor may set off against an assignee a draft drawn by the assignor in his favor before he received notice of the assignment, although the liability of the assignor did not become complete until after he received notice of the assignment. Northampton Bank v. Balliet, 42 D. 297.

Where a corporation put money in the hands of its general agent, as trustee, for safe-keeping and disbursement in the business, and afterward made a general assignment for creditors, — held, that he could not offset a debt due him from the corporation. First Nat. Bank v. Barnum Wire etc. Works, 55 R. 660.

22. — in actions against assignees. — Where an insolvent assigns, for the benefit of his creditors, a note past due, a court of equity will not set off against such note in the hands of the assignee an acceptance of the insolvent which was not due at the time of the assignment. Lockwood v. Beckwith, 72 D. 69.

23. — in actions by personal representatives. — A debt accruing in the testator's lifetime cannot be set off against a debt which accrues to the executor, after the death of the testator. Mills v. Lumpkin, 44 D. 677; Patterson v. Patterson, 17 R. 384.

A claim against an insolvent estate of a decedent may be offset in chancery against one in favor of the estate, although the claimant, owing to an agreement of the administrator to allow it, neglected to present his claim to the commissioners on the estate. Nims v. Rood, 34 D. 669.

Where an estate of a decedent is notoriously insolvent, set-off is not allowed in suits by or against his executor or administrator, if the debt sought to be set off was not due at the time of the death of the testator or intestate, although it became due before the commencement of the suit; otherwise if the estate is solvent. Boeler v. Exchange Bank, 45 D. 665.

A debt due from a decedent cannot be set off by the defendant in an action brought by an administrator to recover the difference between the sum at which he bid off, at orphan's court sale, part of the real estate of the decedent, and the sum at which it sold on a resale, made necessary by his refusal to comply with his bid. Singerly v. Swain, 75 D. 581.

The burden of proof is on defendant pleading a set-off to show that his claim filed in set-off is due from the plaintiff in the same right with the cause of action declared on in the writ; and if the plaintiff describes himself in the writ as administrator of the estate of a deceased person, and declares upon a promissory note signed by only one person, and running to him as administrator of that estate, this will not be sufficient to afford a presumption that his claim is in his representative capacity. Lovell v. Nelson, 87 D. 706.

24. — in actions against personal representatives. — In an action by a husband and wife for a bequest made to the wife "for her own use," which is the same as a bequest for her separate use, a debt due from the husband to the testator cannot be set off. Jamison v. Brady, 9 D. 460.

A legacy, now payable, cannot be set off in equity against legatee's debt to the estate not yet due. Hayes v. Hayes, 73 D. 709.

Upon a creditor's exhibiting a claim against an estate, the administrator is not bound to set off against such claim a debt due the estate from the creditor. Morton v. Bailey, 27 D. 767.

A set-off will be applied on unsecured rather than secured claims presented by the same creditor against a decedent's estate, and the representative of the deceased debtor cannot require its application to the secured debts. Putnam v. Russell, 42 D. 478.

25. — in actions by or against banking corporations.* — The appointment of a receiver of a bank does not affect the right of its debtors to set off demands held by them against the bank when it stopped payment. In re Middle District Bank, 19 D. 452.

A debt which becomes due after the stoppage of payment may be set off. Id.

An indorser has the same right of set-off in such a case as the principal debtor, if he is unindemnified and is compelled to pay because the principal cannot but not otherwise. Id.

Overdrawing is a debt due the bank, and bills held bona fide when the bank stopped payment by the person so overdrawing may be set off against such debt. Id.

Bills obtained by a debtor after the stoppage of payment of a bank cannot be set off against debts due it. Id.

A debtor of a bank may set off its notes against a claim of the assignee of the bank, provided he was the owner of the notes sought to be set off, at the time when he received notice of the assignment; but if he acquired them after notice of the assignment, they cannot be set off against the assignee. Northampton Bank v. Balliet, 42 D. 297.

In an action by a national bank on negotiable paper discounted by it, the defendant may set off the amount of usurious discounts on other transactions. The interest paid by the defendant beyond that authorized by the act of Congress belongs to him, and the bank can hold it only for his use. Lucas v. Government Nat. Bank, 21 R. 17.

In the absence of facts entitling it to equitable relief, a bank, in an action by the administrator of its deceased customer to recover a deposit due to the intestate in his lifetime, cannot set off a claim against the deceased not due until after his death, the statute of set-off not permitting such a course. Jordan v. Nat. Shoe etc. Bank, 30 R. 319.

A depositor in an insolvent savings bank, who also owes it for borrowed money, cannot set off his deposit against such debt, although the deposit consisted of the borrowed money. Hannon v. Williams, 38 R. 378.

26. — in actions against the government. — The drawer of a draft, accepted for his accommodation, delivered it to the state in payment of his debt to it. He afterward filed a bill against the state and the acceptor to set off against such draft a demand due from the state to him and growing out of a distinct transaction. Held, that the bill could not be maintained. Raymond v. State, 28 R. 382.

II. SET-OFF OF JUDGMENTS.

27. What judgments may be the subject of set-off. — A judgment to be set off must be owned absolutely by the party seeking to set it off. People v. Common Pleas, 28 D. 495. It is not sufficient that he had an equitable interest in it. Lee v. Lee, 76 D. 681. But under the Alabama code a transferred judgment may be subject of set-off in the hands of the owner, whether he has the legal title or not. Skipper v. Stokes, 94 D. 646.

* Offsets in favor of depositor in insolvent bank, see note, 33 R. 333, 334.

A judgment may be purchased for the purpose of set-off if it be done bona fide, but not where the nominal assignee is a mere trustee. People v. Common Pleas, 28 D. 495.

An insolvent debtor cannot object to a want of consideration for the assignment of a judgment against him, which the assignee has obtained for purposes of set-off. Id.

The subject-matter of an original suit may be used as a set-off by plaintiff, during its pendency, when he is sued by his adversary; and if it is a final judgment, it is a set-off as a judgment. Gunn v. Todd, 64 D. 231.

Where an indorsee of a bill sues the maker thereof, a judgment against the payee obtained by the maker in another separate and distinct action, and after payee had negotiated the bill, cannot be available as a set-off against the indorsee's suit, unless the original payee still owns the draft sued on, or has some beneficial interest in the suit. Thatcher v. Mills, 65 D. 95.

A judgment in favor of a defendant for costs, based upon a finding of one of several issues in his favor, is not void, even if erroneous, and while unreversed, is to be treated, for the purpose of set-off, as a valid judgment. Porter v. Liscom, 83 D. 76.

28. What may be set off against a judgment. — The assignee of a judgment takes subject to right of set-off existing at the time of the assignment, although he be a purchaser for a valuable consideration and without notice. Porter v. Liscom, 83 D. 76; People v. Common Pleas, 28 D. 495.

To a judgment there can be no set-off of a debt not in judgment. Thorp v. Wegfarth, 93 D. 789.

A national bank association was organized from a state bank. Such association recovered judgment for a debt due it, and afterwards became insolvent. The debtor then procured notes of the original state bank, which the association was liable for, to pay his debt. Held, that he had no right of set-off against the judgment. Id.

29. Settling off one judgment against another.* — Judgments of different courts may be set off against each other by the court in which one of the judgments was recovered. People v. Common Pleas, 28 D. 495.

Costs are included in such cases, the attorney's lien for his costs being subordinate to the equities of the parties. Id.

* Set-off of one judgment against another, see note, 18 D. 729-731.

The judgment of a justice may be set off against a judgment of a court of record, if the time for appeal has expired. Cox v. State Bank, 14 D. 417.

Mutual judgments may be set off, whether obtained in the same court or in different courts, even after an assignment of one of the judgments, if such assignment was made so promptly as to excite a reasonable suspicion that it was done to prevent the set-off. Duncan v. Bloomstock, 13 D. 728; Hovey v. Morrill, 60 R. 315; although the parties to the two records are not identical, and although one of the judgments has been assigned to a third person for a valuable consideration, and without notice of the existence of the other judgment, provided the right of set-off existed at the time of the assignment. Graves v. Woodbury, 40 D. 296; provided the rights of third persons are not affected thereby; but where the rights of an equitable assignee for value would be affected, this right cannot be exercised. Ramsey's Appeal, 27 D. 301.

Third persons cannot take advantage of an irregularity in the assignment of a judgment, if the assignor makes no objection. Id.

It is competent for courts of law, in the exercise of their legitimate and incidental powers, on motion, to order one judgment to be set off against another, between the same parties in the same court; and such an order is not subject to revision on error. Scott v. Rivers, 21 D. 646. And the larger judgment will be discharged pro tanto by the smaller. Skrine v. Simmons, 91 D. 771.

A judgment founded on contract may be set off against one founded on tort. Puett v. Beard, 44 R. 290. But to a judgment ripe for execution, there can be but one answer, to wit, payment pure and simple. Thorp v. Wegfarth, 93 D. 789.

The right to set off one judgment against another does not arise until judgment is actually entered on both sides; and therefore there can be no set-off in a case where a claim which has been referred is assigned before judgment is entered upon the report of the referee. Graves v. Woodbury, 40 D. 296.

A judgment in favor of a sole plaintiff may be set off against a judgment in which he is joint defendant, under the Iowa revision of 1860, which abrogates all distinctions between joint and joint and several liabilities. Ballinger v. Tarbell, 85 D. 527.

A person may receive money due on a judgment rendered in favor of himself and several others, co-plaintiffs, but he cannot, without authority from his co-plaintiffs, set off a judgment due to him and them jointly against another judgment held by the defendant in such joint judgment against him alone. Corwin v. Ward, 95 D. 93.

A proceeding by petition and motion is sufficient to bring into court the assignee of a judgment, against which a right to set off another judgment rendered in the same action exists, and such assignee will be bound by an order made therein directing a set-off. Porter v. Liscom, 83 D. 76.

An assignment of a judgment to one who has illegally furnished money to carry on the action is subject to the right of the judgment debtor to set off a judgment against the assignor. Puett v. Beard, 44 R. 280.

Where a judgment debtor has no property save a judgment for less than the amount exempted by statute from execution, the defendant in that judgment may not satisfy it by set-off of another judgment. Id.

III. PROCEDURE

30. Under what plea a set-off may be given in evidence.—The notice or plea of set-off should contain the substance of a declaration. Brady v. Hill, 13 D. 503.

The plea of set-off, which professes to go to the whole action, where the amount of the set-off is less than the amount sued for, is demurrable. Kershaw v. Merchants' Bank, 40 D. 70.

31. Filing items of set-off.—Items of set-off, filed and withdrawn, may be filed anew in the discretion of the court. Mineral Point R. R. Co. v. Keep, 74 D. 124.

32. Sufficiency of notice of set-off.—A notice of set-off need not be as precise and formal as a declaration, but it must describe with reasonable certainty the demand sought to be set off. Lewis v. Culbertson, 14 D. 607; and the party cannot, on the trial, prove a claim of a different character. Gogel v. Jacoby, 9 D. 339.

33. Proceedings to establish set-off in equity.—The onus of proving the existence of debts sought to be set off by the defendant is not thrown upon him where the plaintiff excepts to the defendant's sworn account filed in answer to the bill. Lofland v. Maull, 12 D. 106.

A party seeking to establish the right of set-off in equity, beyond that given by the statutes of set-off, must affirmatively show the existence of those facts necessary to raise the equity. Lockwood v. Beckwith, 72 D. 69.

The consideration of a debt by simple contract sought to be set off must be alleged in equity as well as at law. If it is not so alleged, the decree on a bill taken pro confesso will be reversed. McKean v. Reed, 12 D. 318.

The set-off for money advanced is available in chancery as against a bond and mortgage on which suit is brought, and a cross-bill is not necessary for its assertion. Chapman v. Robertson, 31 D. 284.

A set-off exceeding complainant's demand may be set up in the answer to a bill under the New York Revised Statutes, and a decree may be made for any balance found due the defendant. Jennings v. Webster, 35 D. 722.

34. How far equity follows the law.—Set-off in equity is governed by the same rules as at law. McDonald v. Neilson, 14 D. 431; Jennings v. Webster, 35 D. 722; Hayes v. Hayes, 73 D. 709; Lee v. Lee, 76 D. 681. Therefore equity will not allow a set-off of debts accruing in different rights. Robbins v. McKnight, 45 D. 406; nor set off mere cross-demands. Downs v. Jackson, 85 D. 289; unless there exist special equities growing out of the transaction itself which require it. Lockwood v. Beckwith, 72 D. 69; Mills v. Lamplin, 44 D. 677.

IV. COUNTERCLAIM

35. General nature and requisites.—A counterclaim, in order to constitute a set-off in equity, must be mutual, or it will not be allowed. Bunting v. Ricks, 32 D. 699.

Under Indiana code a counterclaim is more than recoupment at the common law, and embraces also the cross-bill in equity against the plaintiff. Woodruff v. Garner, 89 D. 477.

36. What may be interposed as a counterclaim, generally.*—In an action on a note, a counterclaim for use and occupation cannot be the subject of set-off, where the possession is adverse, and the relation of landlord and tenant has never subsisted between the parties. This is so under the Minnesota statute. Folsom v. Carli, 80 D. 456.

A breach of an agreement to forbear to bring suit upon a note for a reasonable time cannot be made available by way of counterclaim. Newkirk v. Neild, 81 D. 383.

In a suit by a grantor to rescind a conveyance on the ground of fraudulent representations, a counterclaim denying the fraud, and alleging that the plaintiff has wrongfully kept the defendant out of possession, and asking judgment for possession and for rents and profits, is good on demurrer. Woodruff v. Garner, 89 D. 477.

Causes of action cannot be joined in a counterclaim which cannot be united in a complaint. Id.

37. Claims arising out of torts.—Where a contract is basis of a transaction, and a breach of it may amount to a trespass, or entitle the injured party to an action for negligence, fraud, or otherwise, in form ex delicto, such party is not deprived of his right to plead a counterclaim as a set-off against the action. The wrong-doer is not allowed to deprive the injured party of the advantage of the contract by having tortiously violated it. Folsom v. Carli, 80 D. 456.

In an action for damages for assault and battery, defendant cannot set up, by way of counterclaim, a libel published by the plaintiff of and concerning the defendant. Macdougall v. Maguire, 95 D. 98.

An objection to a libel set up in an answer

* Counterclaim, scope and office of, under the codes, see note, 80 D. 452-492.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

as a counterclaim, in an action for an assault and battery, is not waived by a failure to demur, and evidence to support it is inadmissible. Id.

A laid down B's fence, and turned his cattle in upon B's pasture-land. Held, that B might waive the tort and set up a claim for pasturage of the cattle as a counterclaim in an action of contract brought against him by A. Norden v. Jones, 14 R. 782.

38. How the counterclaim should be interposed. — An answer does not set up a counterclaim where it alleges that the contract in a complaint upon a note for money borrowed was usurious, and that a certain sum, less than the principal, has been "paid on the note," if the law makes a note given on a usurious contract of loan valid to secure the repayment of the principal sum loaned, and no more. No statements of such an answer can be taken as true without proof. Schmitz v. Schmitz, 88 D. 681.

39. Necessity of a reply. — A set-off is admitted by failure to reply. Gunn v. Todd, 64 D. 231.

Where the defendant in an action sets up a counterclaim in his answer, the court has no authority to grant plaintiff leave to discontinue the action, except as to his own claim or demand. McLeod v. Bertschy, 14 R. 755.

VI. REMEDIES UPON SHERIFFS' BONDS.

I. NATURE AND DURATION OF THE OFFICE.

1. Election, qualifying, etc. — One notoriously acting as sheriff may rightfully be intrusted with the collection of parish taxes, whether he be a sheriff de jure or not. By so acting he becomes a de facto sheriff, and his sureties are bound for the faithful performance of his duties. Police Jury v. How, 20 D. 294.

The constitutional prohibition against the re-election of sheriffs does not apply to those persons who hold such office at the time of the adoption of the constitution, but only to such as should be elected under it. State ex rel. Dunning v. Giles, 52 D. 149.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

sheriff will be liable for all the damage thus done, however remote or unexpected. Id.

A sheriff is the proper officer to execute all writs returnable to court, unless another is appointed, by special order, for that purpose. Washington v. Sanders, 21 D. 336.

A writ placed in a sheriff's hands on Sunday is not considered officially received by him on that day, nor is it officially in his hands until Sunday has expired. Whitney v. Butterfield, 73 D. 584.

Where a sheriff receives one writ of attachment on Sunday, and another against the same defendant is placed in the hands of a deputy at a quarter past twelve on Monday morning, and without the sheriff's knowledge, and the first levy is made under the last writ at one o'clock on Monday morning, the sheriff is not guilty of negligence in executing the first writ, where no other special circumstances are shown why more diligence should have been used in executing the writ. Id.

A sheriff is incompetent to act when he is a party to the record or interested in the suit; and in such case, the execution of process by him or his deputy is unlawful and void. Stewart v. Magness, 88 D. 598. But a sheriff who is a member of a banking corporation may serve process thereon, because, not being personally liable, he is not a party to the action. Adams v. Wisconsin Bank, 10 D. 88.

5. Powers and duties in respect to executions. — The sheriff is the agent of the law, and not of the execution creditor, except for certain purposes, and the latter is bound by his acts only within his lawful authority. Sims v. Campbell, 16 D. 595.

A sheriff having applied to one execution the money which of right belonged to another, the court has no jurisdiction to compel the creditor receiving the money to pay the same to the other execution creditor; but the latter must pursue his remedy against the sheriff. Washington v. Sanders, 21 D. 336.

A sheriff, in executing a f. fa. must be governed by the sum indorsed on the back of the writ, and not by that contained in the body of the writ. The indorsement on the writ is the official act of the prothonotary, and is presumed to be right until the contrary is shown. Com. v. McCoy, 34 D. 445.

A sheriff who pays the amount of the execution to the plaintiff without intimating that he had advanced the money cannot keep the judgment alive to sue the defendant upon the same as assignee either in law or in equity. Whittier v. Hemmway, 38 D. 309.

Where a sheriff of Mississippi, having acquired a special property in goods by attachment, brings the goods into the state of Louisiana, without authority of law or of the parties litigant, for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose, he thereby divests himself of any special property in them, and the original owner may assume control over them in the latter state, or they may be seized at the suit of one of his creditors. Dick v. Bailey, 46 D. 561.

The receipt by a sheriff of money due on a judgment when he has no execution in his hands is unauthorized, and neither discharges the judgment nor binds his sureties; yet if he subsequently pays the money to the plaintiff's attorney of record, a receipt thereof by the attorney in satisfaction of the judgment discharges the debt, if the payment was made in lawful money. Chapman v. Conoles, 91 D. 508.

6. — and sales thereunder.* — A sheriff of one county has no authority to levy on and sell land situated in another county. Stephenson v. Doe, 46 D. 489.

7. — in respect to arrests and custody of prisoners. — The sheriff of a neighboring state has not the right to pursue and recapture in Vermont a prisoner held on civil process, who has in such neighboring state escaped from his custody. Bromley v. Hutchins, 30 D. 465.

8. Bonds of indemnity.† — A sheriff, called upon to execute a writ of attachment or execution, may demand indemnity of the plaintiff in the writ, it seems, before he can be required to seize property in the possession of third persons claiming to be the owners; and if he is not indemnified on demand, and thereupon returns the writ nulla bona, an action for a false return cannot be maintained against him, although it should turn out that the goods belonged to the defendant in the writ. Long v. Neville, 95 D. 199.

A sheriff, called upon to serve a writ by attaching property or arresting the person, has a right to demand an indemnity of the plaintiff in the writ, it seems, before executing the writ, if there is reasonable doubt as to the ownership of the property or the identity of the person. Id.

A sheriff levying upon goods as the property of A, in which B claims a partnership interest, may, on refusal of plaintiff upon request made, to indemnify him, either return the writ nulla bona, or refuse to sell anything but the interest of the defendant in the goods. Patterson v. Anderson, 80 D. 579.

A sheriff, under the statutes and decisions of Louisiana, cannot demand an indemnity bond upon a seizure of goods and demand for release. He must either call a jury to determine whether the goods belong to the defendant or act at his own peril. Dunlap v. Freret, 63 D. 590.

A sheriff who takes an indemnity from a defendant in custody, and acknowledges satisfaction on the execution, is liable to the plaintiff for the whole debt. Treasurers v. McDowell, 26 D. 166.

An agreement to indemnify a sheriff for an act to be done by him in plain violation of his duty is invalid; but in case of a disputed right in goods, bonds of indemnity given to induce a levy upon the goods are clearly lawful. Shotwell v. Hamblin, 55 D. 83; Collier v. Windham, 62 D. 767.

When a jury, called by a claimant to property seized under execution, fails to find a verdict, the officer is not entitled to indemnity before selling, and a bond so given to indemnify him is without consideration, and void. Mitchell v. Vance, 17 D. 96.

A bond of indemnity is valid where there was a dispute about the appropriation of assets received on sales under various executions, and it was given by the defendant, one of the contestants, to induce the sheriff to pay over the proceeds to him. Shotwell v. Hamblin, 55 D. 83.

A sheriff may show by parol evidence, in an action on an indemnity bond, that the defendant, an execution creditor, purchased the property sold by the sheriff under various executions, and then entered into a settlement with the plaintiff by which he paid over to him only the excess over his debt and retained the balance, which the plaintiff receipted for him on the executions; such a settlement is in effect a payment; and such evidence does not contradict a return which recites that the property had been sold to the defendant, but does not say that the money had been paid over, nor the purport of such a return. Id.

Where a sheriff levies an execution upon sufficient property which is taken from his possession under a replevin suit, in which he obtains judgment, it is his duty to prosecute the sureties in the undertaking of the plaintiff in such replevin suit, and he is not entitled to indemnity from the plaintiff in the execution as a condition of his prosecuting the undertaking. Swezey v. Lott, 78 D. 160.

Sureties in a bond of indemnity have the same justification and defense as the officer in an action of trespass against the officer and the sureties for wrongful levy. Hutchinson v. Lord, 60 D. 381.

A sheriff attached goods as the goods of B, in an action by A against B. C afterward claimed the goods, and although A offered a bond of indemnity, the sheriff surrendered them. The statute made no provision for a bond of indemnity in such cases. A recovered judgment in the attachment suit, and being unable to make anything on the execution, brought action against the sheriff.

Held, that although the offered bond of indemnity was good at common law, the sheriff was not liable at all events, but that the burden was on him to show that the goods did not belong to B. Wadsworth v. Walliker, 24 R. 788.

A statute substituting sureties, on an undertaking indemnifying a sheriff against a levy, as defendants in an action against him for such levy, is not unconstitutional. Hein v. Davidson, 48 R. 612.

9. — and other security to sheriff. — An implied promise of indemnity arises, where a person gives a sheriff a writ with directions to serve it in a particular manner. Ranlett v. Blodgett, 43 D. 603.

An agreement with or security executed to a sheriff or other officer to induce him to omit the levy of a writ or performance of other duty will not protect the officer against a party at whose suit the writ issued; and the agreement, being without consideration so far as concerns the officer, cannot be enforced by him or for his benefit, and is also void from considerations of public policy. Cole v. Parker, 71 D. 439.

A bond taken by an officer to induce him to omit a levy of a writ or performance of other duty required by law, being void as against public policy, is not such a security as plaintiff in the writ, or other person, by adopting, can render valid. Id.

10. Right to fees, and how enforced, generally. — Where an execution is paid to the creditor before levy or service, and that fact is indorsed on the writ, the officer is not entitled to fees, for he has performed no act to earn any; and as there is nothing due on the writ, no levy can be made. Barnard v. Stevens, 16 D. 733.

11. Poundage. — If an officer levy under an execution, he is entitled to fees for poundage as well as travel, though the parties compromise before a sale. Barnard v. Stevens, 16 D. 733. But he is only entitled to the statutory poundage and fees on executing a judgment. Croft v. Brandt, 17 R. 213.

A sheriff levied on property under execution, and charged for expenses in keeping and watching the property, for boxing it, for cartage, storage, insurance, and for services in preparing it for sale. Held, that these charges were not allowable. Id.

On a levy on lands, the sheriff is not entitled to poundage until sale or collection of the debt. Peck v. City Nat. Bank, 47 R. 577.

12. Commissions. — A defendant in an execution is not liable to a sheriff for his commissions, where, after a levy on, and advertisement for sale of, the lands of the defendant, the judgment is satisfied by a payment to the plaintiff. Gordons v. Maupin, 47 D. 118.

sheriff will be liable for all the damage thus done, however remote or unexpected. Id.

A sheriff is the proper officer to execute all writs returnable to court, unless another is appointed, by special order, for that purpose. Washington v. Sanders, 21 D. 336.

A writ placed in a sheriff's hands on Sunday is not considered officially received by him on that day, nor is it officially in his hands until Sunday has expired. Whitney v. Butterfield, 73 D. 584.

Where a sheriff receives one writ of attachment on Sunday, and another against the same defendant is placed in the hands of a deputy at a quarter past twelve on Monday morning, and without the sheriff's knowledge, and the first levy is made under the last writ at one o'clock on Monday morning, the sheriff is not guilty of negligence in executing the first writ, where no other special circumstances are shown why more diligence should have been used in executing the writ. Id.

A sheriff is incompetent to act when he is a party to the record or interested in the suit; and in such case, the execution of process by him or his deputy is unlawful and void. Stewart v. Magness, 88 D. 598. But a sheriff who is a member of a banking corporation may serve process thereon, because, not being personally liable, he is not a party to the action. Adams v. Wiscasset Bank, 10 D. 88.

5. Powers and duties in respect to executions. — The sheriff is the agent of the law, and not of the execution creditor, except for certain purposes, and the latter is bound by his acts only within his lawful authority. Sims v. Campbell, 16 D. 595.

A sheriff having applied to one execution the money which of right belonged to another, the court has no jurisdiction to compel the creditor receiving the money to pay the same to the other execution creditor; but the latter must pursue his remedy against the sheriff. Washington v. Sanders, 21 D. 336.

A sheriff, in executing a f. fa. must be governed by the sum indorsed on the back of the writ, and not by that contained in the body of the writ. The indorsement on the writ is the official act of the prothonotary, and is presumed to be right until the contrary is shown. Com. v. McCoy, 34 D. 445.

A sheriff who pays the amount of the execution to the plaintiff without intimating that he had advanced the money cannot keep the judgment alive to sue the defendant upon the same as assignee either in law or in equity. Whittier v. Hemmway, 88 D. 309.

Where a sheriff of Mississippi, having acquired a special property in goods by attachment, brings the goods into the state of Louisiana, without authority of law or of the parties litigant, for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose, he thereby divests himself of any special property in them, and the original owner may assume control over them in the latter state, or they may be seized at the suit of one of his creditors. *Dick v. The receipt by a sheriff of money due on a judgment when he has no execution in his hands is unauthorized, and neither discharges the judgment nor binds his sureties; yet if he subsequently pays the money to the plaintiff's attorney of record, a receipt thereof by the attorney in satisfaction of the judgment discharges the debt, if the payment was made in lawful money. *Chapman v. making a crop with negroes levied on, the proceeds of which are brought into court for the benefit of the creditors, but only to the expense of keeping them. Price v. Cutts, 74 D. 52.

13. Right to reimbursement for expenses incurred. — Where the sheriff is bound to board his prisoners, the compensation provided therefor by law is an "emolument," not to be changed during his term. Apple v. County of Crawford, 51 R. 205.

14. Formal requisites of return. — The return to a summons signed by a deputy, without mentioning the sheriff's name, is void. Duch v. Edwards, 26 D. 414.

An unsigned return of a sheriff is admissible in evidence in an action against him, and binds the sheriff the same as if it had been properly signed. Rudy v. Com., 78 D. 330.

15. Conclusiveness of return. — The plaintiff is not estopped from showing the falsity of a return, in an action against a sheriff because of offering the return in evidence, but he must prove the judgment, writ, and return, and then show the return to be false. Dunkap v. Freret, 63 D. 590.

When it is shown by prima facie evidence that a sheriff's return is incorrect, the burden of proof is upon the sheriff to show its correctness. Id.

III. LIABILITIES.

16. In general. — A sheriff is no further bound by an official bond than he would be without it. Forsythe v. Ellis, 20 D. 218.

For clerk's tickets, delivered after the 1st of June, in any year, the sheriff is not bound to account until the 1st of November of the next year. Coplin v. McCalley, 19 D. 748.

A sheriff assuming to act virtute officii, warrants that he is possessed of such authority, and if not authorized, is liable to persons who have suffered damage, from steps undertaken under the belief that he was. So a sheriff is liable to purchasers at a sale assumedly made under proper authority, from a court which does not in fact exist. Stoney v. Shultz, 27 D. 429.

A sheriff is liable for defects in the title of chattels sold under an execution. Forsythe v. Ellis, 20 D. 218.

A sheriff or other state officer having a vessel in custody under state law must not surrender it upon federal process; for if he does so, he is liable to the creditor in the state court. Keating v. Spink, 62 D. 214.

Damages against an officer for a neglect of duty on mesne process are estimated by the injury sustained, and not by the amount of the debt. Kirksey v. Pryor, 48 D. 47.

The judgment in a suit against the debtor is prima facie evidence of the measure of the injury sustained, without producing the note on which the judgment was recovered. Id.

In mitigation of damages for a neglect of duty, the officer may prove any facts which show that the creditor has not suffered. Id.

17. How far protected by process.* — A void process will not justify acts done under it previous to being set aside. Coltraine v. McCaine, 24 D. 256; but an irregular process will. State v. Page, 40 D. 608.

A sheriff has nothing to do with the propriety of the process under which he acts, provided the court had jurisdiction, and the process is regular upon its face. Keniston v. Little, 64 D. 297.

An officer, sued for taking property, may justify by showing an execution against his adversary which is regular upon its face. Clay v. Caperton, 15 D. 77.

18. Liability for wrongful levy. — A sheriff is liable in trespass to the owner of property sold without authority. Forsythe v. Ellis, 20 D. 218.

19 — for neglect to levy.† — Where an execution is placed in the hands of a sheriff before his term of office expires, and he has the means and opportunity to levy it upon the property of the defendant, but neglects to do so, he and his sureties are liable for the damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of such neglect. State v. Roberts, 21 D. 62.

A sheriff is liable for failing to levy a mortgage fa. fa. upon the mortgaged property, although it belongs to a third person, and is in his possession adversely to the mortgagor, and the mortgage lien is superseded in consequence of a failure to record it, where the process commands him to levy upon and sell the property, designating it by full description. Wallace v. Holly, 58 D. 518.

Where a sheriff receives an execution to levy and return according to law, and without the creditor's consent delivers the same to a deputy, and informs the debtor that the writ is out against him, who, in consequence of the information, avoids the service of the writ, such officer is liable in damages for not serving and returning the writ. Isham v. Eggleston, 19 D. 714.

Whether the sheriff performed the service himself, or procured it to be done by another officer, to whom it was directed, would be of no importance; for if performed by any one in the manner required by law, and without prejudice to the plaintiff, it would be a complete answer to the action. Id.

In an action against the officer for failing to serve and return the writ, the creditor may show, without any allegation to that effect in his declaration, that the execution failed of service, that he has sustained damage by reason of the defendant's not retaining the execution in his hands, or in consequence of some act or omission of duty in regard to it, for which he would have been liable if he had retained it. Id.

20. — for moneys collected. — An action against a sheriff does not lie for money made by him under execution until demand made therefor; and the statute does not begin to run in his favor until such demand is made. Wright v. Hamilton, 21 D. 513; for the reason that he cannot acquit himself by paying the money into court, but only by its payment to the plaintiff in execution, and the sheriff is not bound to seek the plaintiff to make a tender. De la Garza v. Booth, 91 D. 328.

A sheriff is liable for interest on such money only from the time the demand is made. Wright v. Hamilton, 21 D. 513.

A sheriff is presumed to have collected the amount of a f. fa. which he has held in his hands for several years without returning, and the burden of proving that he did not collect it is upon him or his sureties. Com. v. McCoy, 34 D. 445.

An officer who collects money under an invalid process must pay the same, and his securities are responsible for its misapplication. Rollins v. State, 53 D. 151.

The statutory penalty is not recoverable of a sheriff refusing to pay over money collected on execution, where he acts in good faith in such refusal, being unable to decide between conflicting claimants of the money. Johnson v. Gorham, 65 D. 501.

A sheriff collecting money, and of his own accord depositing it in a bank which subsequently fails, is personally liable to the plaintiff in execution therefor. Phillips v. Lamar, 73 D. 731.

A deposit by a sheriff to the credit of his official account is prima facie evidence only that the money came to his hands in some official transaction. Stair v. New York Bank Co., 93 D. 759.

21. — for failure to make debt or costs out of goods levied on. — A sheriff negligently losing the property upon which he has levied is liable to the owner therefor; and no demand of restoration is necessary if the owner pays the plaintiff his debt. The loss of the property is enough, whether it occurs before or after payment. Conover v. Com., 12 D. 451.

A sheriff selling attached goods at a private sale before judgment is liable to account to the creditor only for what he has received, where the sale was for a fair price, and was necessary to prevent loss of the goods. Lovett v. Pike, 66 D. 248.

A sheriff is answerable to the plaintiff in execution, as for conversion of goods sold, where, after the sale, he retains possession until payment of bid, and then refuses delivery to purchaser, who was plaintiff in execution, and who offered indemnity; but on the other hand, delivered possession to a person claiming to be the partner against whom the purchaser afterwards established his title to the goods. Patterson v. Anderson, 80 D. 579.

22. — for failure to make return.*

— A judgment against a sheriff for not returning an execution will not be enjoined merely because the judgment debtor has obtained an injunction to stay proceedings on the judgment upon which such execution issued; and where the sheriff applies for an injunction against the judgment against himself, the court may inquire into the grounds on which the debtor obtained the first injunction. Fowler v. Lee, 32 D. 172.

A court of equity will not arrest an execution of the judgment against the sheriff unless it would be unjust and unconscientious to enforce it. Id.

The amount of an execution is prima facie the measure of damages against a sheriff, who, through mere neglect, fails to collect the money on it or to return it; and the damages cannot be mitigated by merely showing that the original debtor was solvent and able to pay. Evans v. Governor, 54 D. 172.

If, after the neglect of a sheriff to collect money on a writ or to return it, the plaintiff should cause subsequent executions, upon which the succeeding sheriff could have made the money, to be returned to await his remedy against the prior sheriff for the default, this constitutes no bar to his action for such default, and does not reduce the damages. Id.

In an action against a sheriff for not returning an execution, where no excuse is shown for his not prosecuting the undertaking in replevin, except the absence of an indemnity for costs, the sheriff is liable for the amount of the debt, and has no counterclaim for expenses in the replevin suit, although they may be within the terms of the bond to indemnify him. Swaney v. Lott, 78 D. 160.

Though a sheriff and his deputies are regarded as one officer, for many purposes, this rule cannot be extended so far as to make the sheriff chargeable with notice of all that has come to the knowledge of any of his deputies. Where, therefore, an execution is delivered to a deputy sheriff, who returns it unsatisfied because he could find no property upon which to levy, and the sheriff, without notice of the senior execution in the hands of his deputy, levies a junior execution upon the property of the same defendant, he will not be liable to the senior execution creditor for having first satisfied the junior execution. Russell v. Lavton, 80 D. 769.

23. — for false return. — Where a subsequent attaching creditor acts as auctioneer at the sale of the premises levied upon under a prior execution, and does not disclose that he has levied on the same prem-issa, and the officer's return stated that he had advertised the place of sale, which was not true, the attaching creditor, having obtained judgment, may maintain an action against the sheriff for a false return, and recover the amount of his judgment and interest, that being less than the sum realized on the execution sale. Whitaker v. Sumner, 19 D. 298.

An action against a sheriff for a false return on a f. fa. cannot be sustained without showing a judgment to authorize its issuance; and a mere memorandum of the clerk, showing the date and amount of an award of judgment, is not sufficient evidence of a judgment for that purpose. Tombeckee Bank v. Godbold, 20 D. 80.

The misconduct of a sheriff in falsely returning the service of a writ which he never served is not of itself sufficient ground for setting aside the judgment founded upon such false return. Fowler v. Lee, 32 D. 172.

24. — for acts of subordinates. — The sheriff's officers being his known and recognized deputies, he will therefore be held liable civilly for their misconduct in the execution of a writ. Hazard v. Israel, 2 D. 438; King v. Chase, 41 D. 675; State v. Moore, 61 D. 563; and when responsible, suit may be brought against him and his sureties on their bond. Forsythe v. Ellis, 20 D. 218.

But a sheriff is liable for his deputy's acts only in the ordinary execution of his office; hence he is not liable for acts performed by the deputy out of the usual course, under instructions from the plaintiff or his attorney. Gorham v. Gale, 17 D. 549; or for neglect of any duty which the law does not require him officially to perform. Harrington v. Fuller, 36 D. 719. For where the sheriff has no redress against the deputy or his sureties, he ought not to be liable for the deputy's acts. Gorham v. Gale, 17 D. 549.

A sheriff and his deputy are one person in law, so far as to make the former responsible for the acts of the latter, but not so far as to require impossibilities of the sheriff, or to impose unconscionable exactions. And the mere omission of a deputy to inform the sheriff that he has process in his hands is not such negligence as to charge the sheriff in case a writ last in hand was executed first. Whitney v. Butterfield, 73 D. 584.

The acts of a deputy are not to be regarded as acts of the sheriff, in the sense of either agency or identity, but rather in the sense of official relation and of responsibility cast by law upon the sheriff for the acts of his deputy; that is, for what the deputy does, the sheriff is made responsible, the same as if he had officially done the same thing. Flanagan v. Hoyt, 86 D. 675.

Although a sheriff is liable for a trespass committed by his deputy alone, he cannot be sued therefor jointly with the deputy, nor will an action lie against him after a judgment against the deputy, upon which execution has been issued. Campbell v. Phelps, 11 D. 139.

A deputy sheriff, in levying upon property, acts for his principal, and if he fails to sell as directed by the writ, or by any act of his suffers the property to be eloiigned, or rights to be acquired in it by others, preferable to plaintiff in the writ, his principal is liable for its value. Governor etc. v. Vanmeter, 33 D. 221.

The sheriff remains liable for property wrongfully taken by his deputy, and sold, as long as the property in the goods taken or the money received from their sale remains unchanged. But when the owner of the goods sues the deputy for the trespass, recovers judgment, and takes out execution against him, the property in them becomes changed, and the deputy no longer holds in his official capacity, but in his own absolute right, and the sheriff is no longer responsible. Harrington v. Fuller, 36 D. 719.

Trespass on the case for a mere non-feasance of the deputy will not lie against the sheriff; this is never sufficient to make the latter a tort-feasor ab initio. Abbott v. Kimball, 47 D. 708.

A sheriff making a deed ratifies the levy and sale by his deputy, for the purchaser's protection, though the deputy acted without any regular appointment. Brooks v. Rooney, 56 D. 430.

25. — for failure to make arrests. — A sheriff who refuses to execute a ca. sa. will not be protected because the writ was erroneously dated, so that at its date the person whose name it bore teste was not a judge of the court from which it issued, as such defect is a mere irregularity, and does not render the process void. Jordan v. Porterfield, 63 D. 301.

Negligence in serving a capias is committed by a sheriff when the person to be arrested is on a temporary visit in the state, and resides out of the state, and the officer has information of that fact, and also that the party will be at a certain place on a certain day, and the officer fails to be there to arrest him, and gives no excuse why he was not there, and the party succeeds in leaving the state without being arrested, by reason of the said failure of the officer. State v. Troutman, 75 D. 459.

A sheriff living in a city is guilty of gross negligence and disregard of official duty, where he refuses to execute a writ of arrest with proper diligence, when it is placed in his hands at an early hour in the evening, with the request and demand that he execute it, and with notice that the party named in the writ is at a hotel and will depart before morning; for the statute authorizes the officer to break into any house or inclosure at any time, whether night or day, to execute the writ, after first giving proper notice of it, and of his purpose to execute it. Phillips v. Ronald, 96 D. 216.

The sheriff and his sureties are at all events liable for nominal damages for a refusal by the sheriff to execute a writ of arrest with reasonable and proper diligence, and if such reasonable discharge of his duty would have secured plaintiff's debt or any part of it, the damages should be increased to that extent. The measure of damages in such case is the probable loss sustained by plaintiff. Id.

26. — for permitting prisoner to escape. — In an action against a sheriff for an escape and false return, on mense process, the plaintiff can recover no more than he might have done in the original action, and his actual recovery ought to be the amount of his loss, in consequence of the escape. Potter v. Lansing, 3 D. 310; Russell v. Turner, 5 D. 254.

If the plaintiff, having sufficient security from the defendant for his debt, relinquish it, after knowledge of the escape, the sheriff, in an action against him, may avail himself of this fact in mitigation of damages; and where the jury, in such a case, gave nominal damages only, the court refused to set aside the verdict. Russell v. Turner, 5 D. 254.

Where a defendant is taken in execution, and the sheriff allows the prisoner voluntarily to escape, he cannot afterward lawfully retake or detain him without a new authority from the plaintiff; but he can lawfully retake or detain the prisoner after a negligent escape. Lansing v. Fleet, 1 D. 142.

When the prisoner is voluntarily permitted to escape, his voluntary return and assent to custody will not prevent the liability of the sheriff for the escape. Id.

A sheriff who, knowing that the judgment is unsatisfied, permits the defendant to go at large by the direction of the plaintiff's attorney, acting merely under his general authority, is liable for an escape. Kellogg v. Gilbert, 6 D. 335.

A sheriff may permit a prisoner to go within the jail liberties without taking security; and if the prisoner, without his knowledge, goes beyond the limits, but returns again, the sheriff cannot be held liable for an escape. Peters v. Henry, 5 D. 196.

If a sheriff, who has a prisoner in custody on a ca. sa., necessarily takes him out of the county in obedience to a habeas corpus ad testificandum, and returns with him when the exigency of the writ is answered, and without unnecessary delay, he will not be liable as for an escape, should the prisoner stroll about, and sometimes be out of his view. Hassam v. Griffin, 9 D. 184.

On the appointment of a new sheriff, the prisoners remain in the custody of the old sheriff until they are delivered to his succesor. Hence, if the old sheriff omit to assign over to the new sheriff a prisoner who has been permitted to go within the liberties, this is not an escape for which the old sheriff is liable, as long as the prisoner remains within the limits. Hempstead v. Weed, 11 D. 244.

A sheriff's return of a rescue on a writ is not conclusive evidence in his favor in an action against him for an escape. Whitehead v. Keyes, 81 D. 672.

By opposing a defendant's discharge from custody, under the insolvent law, the creditor does not waive an existing right of action against the sheriff for a previous escape. Dash v. Van Kleeck, 5 D. 291.

27. Liability of strangers assisting sheriff. — If an officer, in executing a process, be a trespasser, those who aid him or act by his command are trespassers. Elder v. Morrison, 25 D. 548; Hooker v. Smith, 47 D. 679.

If a stranger aids an officer in doing a legal act, but the officer, by reason of some improper act, becomes a trespasser ab initio, the stranger does not thereby become a trespasser. Where a sheriff has power to do a particular act, his authority is a justification to all who come in his aid. Elder v. Morrison, 25 D. 548; Hooker v. Smith, 47 D. 679.

Men are bound to know the law if they obey his unauthorized commands; or if they disobey his lawful commands, they act at their peril. Elder v. Morrison, 25 D. 548.

Indemnifying an officer does not confer on him any authority which he did not have before. Id.

One who, in aid of an officer, and in obedience to commands which he had no power to make, lays hands on another, is liable for an assault and battery. Id.

IV. UNDER-SHERIFFS, DEPUTIES, ETC.

28. Appointment of deputies. — A warrant appointing a deputy sheriff, if filed with the clerk, is valid, although not indorsed by him. Haines v. Lindsey, 19 D. 586.

Farming the office of sheriff to a deputy, who is to discharge all the duties of the office and receive all the emoluments, in consideration of a gross sum paid to the sheriff, is not prohibited in Virginia. Salling v. McKinney, 19 D. 722.

29. Powers, duties, and liabilities of deputies. — A deputy sheriff cannot make a valid attachment of chattels already attached by another deputy of the same sheriff, although the value may be more than sufficient to satisfy the first attachment. Vinton v. Bradford, 7 D. 119.

A deputy sheriff has the power to make conveyances of lands sold under execution. Haines v. Lindsey, 19 D. 586.

The acts of a deputy sheriff de facto are good as to third persons. Brooks v. Rooney, 56 D. 430.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The authority of a deputy sheriff continues after the expiration of a sheriff's term with respect to all duties which may be performed by deputy, unless the authority is revoked or the sheriff dies. Tyree v. Wilson, 58 D. 213.

Where the defendant was induced to purchase certain real property by the representations of the plaintiff, at the time deputy sheriff, that there were no liens on the same, when at the time the deputy sheriff had in his hands an execution binding the property, or it was in the hands of the sheriff, within the knowledge of the deputy, who purchased the same when sold under the execution, — held, that the deputy sheriff was estopped from setting up the title obtained under the execution sale, to the prejudice of the defendant, and that he will be compelled to convey to the defendant the title so obtained. Gill v. Denton, 17 R. 8.

Seem, that a sheriff's sale is not within the statute of frauds. Warfield v. Dorsey, 17 R. 582.

30. The deputy's bond, and how enforced. — The sureties of a deputy are responsible only for his defaults in his official duties. Gorham v. Gale, 17 D. 549.

If an officer appoints a deputy who agrees to pay the principal a specific sum, and perform the duties of the office, this is a sale of the office; and a bond for the performance of such an agreement is void. Salting v. McKinney, 19 D. 722.

A bond given to a sheriff for faithful performance of duty by a deputy, conditioned "that the said sheriff shall not sustain any damage or molestation whatever, by reason of any act done or any liability incurred by and through said deputy," means that the sheriff shall not sustain any damage, that is, any actual damages, through the deputy. Although a judgment has been recovered against the sheriff for a default of the deputy, yet, so long as the sheriff has not paid it, his right of action against the sureties is not complete. Gilbert v. Wiman, 49 D. 359.

The sureties on a deputy sheriff's bond of indemnity are liable by subrogation to sureties on sheriff's official bond, when the sheriff's sureties have been compelled to pay money collected by the deputy sheriff; but not paid over to his principal. Brinson v. Thomas, 67 D. 224.

A judgment against a sheriff, for the neglect of his deputy to pay over moneys collected on execution, is conclusive as to the fact of the deputy's neglect, not only against the deputy who defended the suit, but also against the sureties on a bond given by the deputy to the sheriff, conditioned to indemnify and save the sheriff harmless from "all actions, suits, troubles, costs, charges, damages, and expenses whatsoever on account or by reason of any malfeasance, misfeasance, or non-feasance" of the deputy, although the sureties had no notice of the suit. Chamberlain v. Godfrey, 84 D. 690.

V. MATTERS OF PRACTICE IN ACTIONS BY OR AGAINST SHERIFFS.

31. Rules of pleading. — A count in case in an action against a sheriff, alleging misfeasance by which plaintiff lost his debt is properly joined with a count in trover and conversion against him individually, for goods belonging to plaintiff, and detained by the defendant. Patterson v. Anderson, 80 D. 579.

In an action against a sheriff for a violation of his duty in the service of an attachment, if he relies on matters occurring after its issuance and operating to dissolve it, such matters must be specially pleaded. McComb v. Reed, 87 D. 115.

32. — of evidence. — When an officer is guilty of negligence in not serving a writ, the onus is on him to show that the defendant was insolvent, and that plaintiff was not damaged by his neglect. State ex rel. Jenkins v. Troutman, 75 D. 459.

Evidence that a defendant against whom a writ is directed was indebted to others than the plaintiff is not material upon a question of his insolvency, and should not be allowed. Id.

A sheriff refusing to execute a writ is presumed to have known his duty, and to have acted in willful violation of it. Chapman v. Thornburgh, 76 D. 571.

33. Summary motions against sheriffs. — The remedy under the Texas statute, by motion against a sheriff and his sureties, for failure or refusal to pay over money collected on execution, is not cognizable in any court but that from which the execution issued. But this statutory remedy is cumulative only, and not exclusive, and an action may be maintained against the sheriff and his sureties on his official bond in the court of a county other than that in which the execution issued; but in such an action the damages allowed on the statutory remedy by motion are not recoverable. De la Garza v. Booth, 91 D. 328.

The statute giving the remedy by motion against a sheriff and his sureties for failure or refusal to pay over moneys collected on execution is penal in its character, and should be strictly construed and followed, and therefore if it designates a tribunal for and mode of enforcement of the remedy, it is not enforceable in any other mode or tribunal. Id.

VI. REMEDIES UPON SHERIFFS' BONDS.

34. The right of action, generally.* — A sheriff and his sureties are liable on the official bond of such officer for torts com-

A sheriff who, having an execution against the goods and chattels of one person, levies upon and sells those of another, is not guilty of a breach of the condition of his official bond; and his sureties are not thereby rendered liable. State v. Conover, 78 D. 54.

35. Who may sue.—A suit upon a sheriff's bond is properly brought in the name of the state. State v. Moore, 61 D. 563.

36. Liability of the sureties.—The sheriff's bond is an annual bond, and his sureties are liable for his defaults during the time only between the giving the bond passed by them, and the execution of the next year's bond. Heutt v. State, 14 D. 259.

A sheriff's recognizance is conditioned for the discharge of his official duty, and for the payment to suitors and parties interested in the execution of writs and process, the money belonging to them which shall come to his hands. To this extent his sureties are bound, but no further. Com. v. Swope, 84 D. 518.

The plaintiff in a suit against the sureties of a sheriff must show the damage sustained by him though the sheriff's neglect or failure in the performance of his duty. Com. v. McCoy, 84 D. 445.

Fees of officers are not recoverable in an action against the sureties of a sheriff to recover money collected by him on an execution, except where such fees were previously advanced by the plaintiff. Id.

Property attached, but not sold after judgment, is, in contemplation of law, in the hands of the sheriff until the return day of the renditioni exponas; and the sheriff's securities are liable for his loss of it, though their bond be made only the day before the return. Garrett v. Hamblin, 49 D. 53.

The application for a writ of attachment by a plaintiff is not such an interference as will make the sheriff who executes it his agent so as to release his sureties. Rollins v. State, 53 D. 151.

A sheriff's sureties for his first term are liable for a deputy's default, after the expiration of a second term of the same sheriff, in collecting and not paying over money made on a renditioni exponas issued on an execution levied by the deputy during such first term, where different sureties were given for the second term, and the same deputy again qualified, and was never removed, but continued to serve as deputy for such sheriff's successor, and as such returned the renditioni exponas "satisfied." Tyree v. Wilson, 58 D. 213.

The sureties of a sheriff are not discharged from their obligation to the county by the neglect of the county commissioners to deduct from sums due said sheriff the amount which they had previously determined to be his indebtedness to the county. Com. v. Brice, 60 D. 79.

In an action under a statute to make the sureties of a sheriff parties to and bound by a judgment of amercement against their principal, such judgment is not conclusive on the sureties, but only prima facie evidence of liability. Graves v. Bulkley, 37 R. 249.

The sureties of a sheriff are liable: For money collected by him after return day of the execution, but while he had property of the defendant in execution in possession by virtue of a levy made when the execution was in full force. Evans v. Governor, 54 D. 172.

For his trespass committed in seizing property exempt from execution. State v. Moore, 61 D. 563.

For trespass committed by the sheriff, in taking the property of one in attempting to execute a valid process of execution against another, although it seems the sureties would not be liable if the sheriff had taken the property without any process. Holliman v. Carroll, 84 D. 606.

For a sheriff's failure to give notices prescribed by law; though it does not follow that because the duty to advertise is official, that the duty to pay is also official. Com. v. Swope, 84 D. 518.

For a breach of official duty occurring after the expiration of his term of office; as where in his official capacity he receives during his official term notes for part of the purchase-money of land sold on partition, and after his official term refuses to deliver them to the proper parties, but converts them to his own use by collecting the money due on them and surrendering them to the maker. Brooks v. Skillen, 88 D. 458.

For redemption money received by him after his term has expired, upon land previously sold by him. Elkin v. People, 36 D. 541.

The sureties of a sheriff are not liable: For money collected by him, after his successor had been appointed and had qualified, upon an execution which he had failed to deliver to such successor in office, even though the execution debtor has been compelled to pay the amount a second time. McDonald v. Bradshaw, 46 D. 385.

To a printer, for advertising notices, rules, audits, inquisitions, and sales ordered by the sheriff, though it was a part of his official duty to cause such advertisements to be made, and for the neglect of which his sureties would have been responsible. Com. v. Swope, 84 D. 518.

37. Rules of pleading.—In a suit on a sheriff's bond, where a special breach is assigned, a plea of covenants performed is inappropriate; and the jury may inquire of damage if a better plea be not filed. Potts v. Com., 20 D. 213.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The declaration in an action against the sureties, on the official bond of a sheriff, for neglect to levy an execution, must aver that such neglect was after the execution of the bond, and that, at the time, the defendant had property upon which the sheriff might have levied. State v. Roberts, 21 D. 62.

38. Matters of defense.—Sureties by signing a sheriff's bond thereby acknowledge him to be an officer de facto, and they cannot, for any informality or defect in his appointment, be permitted to deny that he is such an officer. Police Jury v. Haw, 20 D. 294.

Sureties of a sheriff whose election is void, and whose induction into office was illegal, but who assumes its duties, and becomes sheriff de facto, cannot, having voluntarily bound themselves for the faithful performance of his duties, absolve themselves from their obligation by insisting that he was not sheriff. Jones v. Scanland, 44 D. 300.

The sureties on the official bond of a sheriff are released if, subsequently to the time that they go upon his bond, an act is passed which at once curtails the duties and emoluments of his office. Roman v. Peters, 38 D. 222.

A sheriff paid the surplus of a sale on execution, to another than the person entitled thereto, by order of the military authorities in Missouri. In an action on the sheriff's bond, — held, that the section of the state constitution providing that no person should be prosecuted for any act done in pursuance of military authority was void, as impairing the obligation of contracts, in so far as it applied to acts done in violation of the sheriff's bond. State v. Gatsweiler, 8 R. 119.

39. Amount recoverable.—The measure of damages in an action on a sheriff's bond for the conversion of notes received by him in his official capacity is the value of the notes, and it cannot be urged in mitigation, even by the sureties, that the plaintiff may still resort to the maker for payment, the collection and surrender of the notes by the sheriff having been unauthorized. Byrds v. Skillen, 88 D. 458.

A sheriff and his sureties in an action on his official bond are liable for all money he may return as received from a sale, though it may exceed the amount that the purchaser was required by the terms of the sale to pay in cash. Id.

The measure of damages in an action against a sheriff upon his bond for a failure or refusal to pay over money collected on execution is the amount so collected and not paid over, with interest from time of demand of payment. De la Garza v. Booth, 91 D. 328.

V. LIABILITY FOR COLLISIONS.

1. Rules for Avoiding Collisions.

2. Actions for Collision.

I. THE TITLE AND OWNERSHIP OF VESSELS.

1. Title to vessels, generally.—Part owners of distinct fractional portions of vessel are tenants in common of the vessel. McLellan v. Cox, 58 D. 736; not joint tenants. Knox v. Campbell, 44 D. 139; nor partners in trade. Milburn v. Guyther, 50 D. 681; Hopkins v. Forsyth, 53 D. 513; Donald v. Hewitt, 73 D. 431. For there may be joint property in a steamboat without the existence of a partnership. Donald v. Hewitt, 73 D. 431. But as respects earnings of the vessel, they are partners on any voyage on which it is sent by them. Donnell v. Walsh, 88 D. 361.

Part owners of a vessel using the same in trade, and participating in the profits springing therefrom, will be considered partners, and, as such, liable for responsibilities incurred in that trade. Jones v. Pitcher, 24 D. 716; Carroll v. Waters, 13 D. 316.

The holders of the legal title to a vessel are not considered liable as owners, if they have parted with both possession and control of the vessel, and only retain the title for the purpose of securing future payments of the purchase-money. Jones v. Pitcher, 24 D. 716.

Property in a vessel follows the keel, and if one repairs his vessel with another's materials, the property in her remains in him. Perkins v. Pike, 66 D. 267.

To prove the ownership of a vessel, it is not necessary to produce the register of the vessel or a certified copy thereof, but evidence of possession and acts of ownership are clearly competent. Stearns v. Doe, 74 D. 608.

The evidence of a name and port painted on the stern of a vessel is admissible to show to what port she belongs, and the latter affords prima facie evidence of the residence of her owner. Id.

2. Registration.—The certificate of registry of a vessel is not competent evidence to prove or disprove its ownership by any particular person; but the oath of a party made to procure such registry is evidence against him of the facts therein stated. Lincoln v. Wright, 62 D. 316.

The register of a vessel is not evidence of title, even against the person named in it as owner, without extraneous proof that it was made with his authority or assent, and even then is not conclusive; and it is not evidence in his favor at all, being nothing more than his declaration. Bradbury v. Johnson, 66 D. 264.

3. Enrollment. — The indorsement upon the enrollment of a boat is simply made for the purpose of giving notice of a pre-existing statutory lien, and is not designed to evidence the declaration of a new trust. Donaki v. Hewitt, 73 D. 431.

4. Who are deemed to be owners. — Where one hired a vessel for the period of six months, agreeing to bear all the expenses except that of repairing, and to pay to the owners one half the earnings, and sailed in her himself as the master, — held, that the hirer was so far the owner of the vessel as not to be charged with barratry. Taggard v. Loring, 8 D. 140.

If a vessel is let to the master, on the shares, he victualing, manning her, and paying a part of the port charges, and having absolute control of her, but yielding as compensation for the use a part of the net earnings, the liability of the general owners ceases. The master in such a case is the owner pro hac vice. Thompson v. Snow, 16 D. 263.

If the owners of a vessel let her to the master, accepting as their compensation for her use a certain portion of the net profits, this does not create a partnership. Id.

An owner pro hac vice of a vessel is one who has the entire control and direction thereof, so that the general owner, for the time being, has no right to interfere in its management. Emery v. Hersey, 16 D. 268.

Where a master runs a vessel on shares, pays all expenses, has entire control of her course of employment, and makes all contracts in respect to her employment in his own name and of his own behalf, he is pro hac vice owner, and may maintain an action to recover damages in the nature of demurrage. Wordin v. Bemis, 85 D. 255.

A master of a vessel becomes owner pro hac vice, and not a partner of the owner, where he sails her under a contract at the halves, — he to victual and man her, and the owner to have half of her earnings. And the freight money earned during the continuance of such contract belongs to the master alone, and may be held under a timely foreign attachment against him. Bridges v. Sprague & P. Iron Co., 99 D. 788.

The general owners of a vessel are not liable for damages occasioned by a collision, happening through the fault or negligence of the master of the vessel who controls her pro hac vice and is sailing her "on shares." Somes v. White, 20 R. 718.

5. Relative rights and liabilities of joint or part owners. — 1. Rights and liabilities, generally. — Owners of a majority of the interest in a vessel have right to control her, and to direct the manner of her employment. Gray v. Allen, 45 D. 523.

A negotiable note given for supplies for a vessel given by one of two joint owners, who was also the master, jointly in his own and the other owner's name, but without authority of the latter, is void as to him; but both owners are liable to the promisee on the general counts. Wilkins v. Reed, 19 D. 211.

A part owner of a ship is answerable to his co-owner for ordinary negligence, and for not taking such care of his co-owner's property as he takes of his own. Ralston v. Barclay, 12 D. 483; and in a home port, cannot be allowed to incur an expenditure for repairs, without the knowledge and consent of the other, and then recover from him his proportion of the expense. Benson v. Thompson, 46 D. 617; but he may commit barratry against the other owners. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 56 R. 31; and acting as agent for all the owners concludes all the part owners. Chouteau v. Goddin, 90 D. 462. Yet a ship's husband, being also part owner, cannot by mere virtue of such relation bind the co-owners by obtaining bail for the release of the vessel from seizure under civil process for collision and for repair. Mitchell v. Chambers, 38 R. 167.

Part owners of ships are tenants in common, holding distinct but undivided interests; and each is deemed the agent of the others as to ordinary repairs, employment, and business of the ship, in absence of any known dissent. Elder v. Larrabee, 71 D. 567.

Each part owner of a vessel is, in general, liable in solido for cost of making repairs or for necessities actually supplied to the vessel in good faith. Id.

The authority of a part owner of a vessel to bind his co-tenants therein for necessary repairs, though ordinarily implied, is not conclusively presumed, but is subject to be modified, controlled, or negated by facts or circumstances to the contrary. Id.

The owner of a two-thirds interest in a boat has the right to continue her in her usual employment, and is not liable to the other part owners for any loss sustained by reason of such employment. Thoms v. Southard, 26 D. 467.

An agreement with some of the owners of a vessel, that freight shall be carried thereon for a compensation, which is to redound to the sole benefit of those owners with whom the agreement is made, will not bind the owners who were not parties thereto, to any liability for the loss of the freight that may be shipped thereunder. Jones v. Sims, 33 D. 312.

2. Actions by and against. — A part owner of a ship may maintain an action on the case against his co-owner, to recover his proportionate share of the damages recovered against a sheriff, on account of his tortious taking and detaining of the vessel. Knox v. Campbell, 44 D. 139.

Part owners of a ship cannot sue separately for their respective shares of the proceeds of the sale of the whole vessel, or for freight in the hands of a third party. Milburn v. Guyther, 50 D. 681.

A bill in equity asking the delivery of the possession of a vessel, brought against part of the owners in possession, by the other part owners, without charging that the defendants are unwilling to employ the vessel, without averring that the plaintiffs seek the possession for the purpose or with the intention of employing her, and without mentioning any object whatever for which they ask the possession, cannot be sustained. Southworth v. Smith, 71 D. 72.

An injunction to compel part of owners in possession of a vessel to deliver her specifically to the other part owners will not be granted by either a court of equity or admiralty, when the bill praying for such injunction contains no averment of any injury meditated by the part owners who have possession of the vessel. Id.

Repairs to a vessel in the home port, by order of one part owner, if made by a person knowing who the other owners are, will be presumed to have been made on the credit of the part owner employing him, if he had opportunity to consult the other owners but neglected to do so, unless he can show that they all assented to the repairs; and his remedy is against the owner employing him alone, or against the vessel itself by proceedings in rem. Elder v. Larrabee, 71 D. 567.

An action at law for a breach of contract for building a vessel may be brought by one party against the other, although both are to be part owners. The rule that equity must be resorted to by part owners for the adjustment of their affairs only applies to cases relating to the vessel's earnings and disbursements, when no settlement has been made or account stated. Ripley v. Crooker, 74 D. 491.

6. Sales of vessels. * — The sale of a vessel and cargo, abroad at the time, by a bona fide bill of sale, is valid against the vendor's creditors, provided the vendee takes possession thereof without delay, upon the return of the vessel. Portland Bank v. Stacey, 3 D. 253.

The purchaser of a ship at sea takes her subject to all encumbrances on her, and to all lawful contracts made or to be made by the master, as to the employment of the ship, before notice of the transfer. Portland Bank v. Stubbs, 4 D. 151.

A perfect transfer of a ship at sea may be made by assignment and delivery of a grand bill of sale and other documents relating to the ship. Actual delivery of possession is necessary only when it is possible, as when the ship is in the country of its owner at the time of the sale. Southern Bank v. Wood, 74 D. 446.

A change of the papers relative to the registry of a vessel is not necessary to pass the title to a purchaser; the object of the registry act is to regulate and establish the national character of the vessel. Begley v. Morgan, 35 D. 188.

The transmission of a bill of sale by mail is equivalent to a delivery to the vendee, and the transfer of title is perfected from the instant that the letter containing the bill is mailed, so as to entitle the vendee to the possession of the ship as against attaching creditors of the vendor, though the bill of sale is not received by the vendee prior to the levy of the attachment. Id.

A sale of a vessel may be ordered by the state courts, at the instance of a part owner desirous to end the joint ownership. State v. Judge Watts, 26 D. 507.

7. Bills of sale. — Blanks of a bill of sale of a ship after its execution and delivery were filled out by consent of vendor and vendee. It was held that the bill of sale was not thereby affected, as a deed after execution may be altered in a material part with the consent of the parties without affecting its validity. Woolley v. Constant, 4 D. 246.

8. Mortgages of vessels. — An equitable mortgage is created by an indorsement at the time of her sale, on a ship's register, which is thereupon retained by the vendor, that the vessel shall not be sold until the notes given for her purchase-money have been paid. Welsh v. Usher, 29 D. 63.

Such equitable mortgage will be enforced against creditors who obtain a subsequent legal lien, as by attachment, but not as against subsequent purchasers for value, without notice. Id.

An unrecorded mortgage of a vessel is invalid, according to the Maine statute of 1839, chapter 390, unless delivery and possession accompany the mortgage. Greeley v. Waterhouse, 36 D. 730.

A vessel used exclusively in North Carolina waters was enrolled under the act of Congress. It was mortgaged, and the mortgage was recorded in the custom-house, as required by the act, but not registered as required by the state law. Held, that the recording was valid. Lawrence v. Hodges, 53 R. 436.

gage is given on a ship at sea, the mortgagee is bound to take possession as soon as practicable on her return to port. Portland Bank v. Stabbe, 4 D. 151.

A ship at sea bound to a port in Massachusetts was mortgaged in another state by a deed of mortgage stipulating for the possession by the mortgagor until default in payment of the notes for which the security was given. Upon the arrival of the vessel in Massachusetts, she was attached in an action against the mortgagor and another part owner. Subsequently, and within a reasonable time after the mortgagee was entitled by the terms of the mortgage to take possession, his agent gave notice of his claim by memorandum on the certificate of enrollment at the customhouse. It was held that the mortgagee had a valid title, but that the attaching officer was entitled to the possession of the vessel on account of the interest of the part owner, and for that purpose might maintain trover against the agent who had replevied her. Badlam v. Tucker, 11 D. 202.

The owner of a vessel is not liable for supplies furnished after he has sold her, if she ceases to be in his possession or employment, although she is mortgaged to him and remains enrolled in his name. Brooks v. Bondsey, 28 D. 313.

The owner of a vessel liable for supplies is he who has control and management of her and the right to receive her earnings, having also some claim or title. Therefore, a mere mortgagee or pledgee, having no control of the navigation of a vessel or right to her earnings, is not liable for supplies. Duff v. Bayard, 39 D. 73.

A bona fide mortgagee is deemed a purchaser within the meaning of the ninth section of the chapter on boats and navigation (R. S. 205), providing that liens therein given shall not be enforced against a purchaser, without notice thereof, unless suit shall be instituted within one year from the cause of action accrued, or unless such notice be indorsed on or attached to the enrollment of the boat. Halbert v. McCulloch, 79 D. 556.

Claimants under a mortgage upon a boat, against which an attachment has issued, do not preclude themselves from the right to assert their claim to the property, or to contest the validity of the attachment, by executing a bond to the effect that they would pay such sum as might be adjudged in the action, or to have the boat forthcoming for the satisfaction of such judgment, whichever shall be ordered. Ib.

The holders of a bill of sale of a vessel, absolute on its face, but intended as a mortgage, may maintain an action for its conversion against a person claiming under a barratrous sale by the master, notwithstanding the fact that, on learning of the barratrous sale, they abandoned her to the underwriters and received payment as on a total loss. Clark v. Wilson, 4 R. 532.

10. Validity and enforcement of bottomry bonds. — To constitute a bottomry, where more than legal interest is reserved, it is essential that the money lent and interest should be put at risk. If they are payable at all events, or if there is collateral security given for them, which is payable at all events, no matter by what name the contract is called, it is not a bottomry. Jennings v. Ins. Co. of Pennsylvania, 5 D. 404.

Bottomry is a contract by which the owner of a ship hypothecates or binds it as security for the repayment of money advanced for the use of the ship. It is a contract in the nature of a mortgage of the ship, and the interest to be paid is generally called "marine interest." Braynard v. Hoppock, 88 D. 349.

One essential feature of bottomry is, that the money lent is at the risk of the lender during the voyage, and that the repayment thereof depends on the event of the successful termination of the voyage. It is the very essence of the contract that the lender runs the risk of the voyage, and that both principal and interest be at hazard. Ib.

It is not bottomry if money loaned is to be repaid at all hazards; for the principal and extraordinary interest reserved is not put absolutely at hazard by the perils of the voyage. The lender must run the maritime risk, to earn the maritime interest. Ib.

There can be no personal responsibility in valid bottomry. The money must be advanced on the faith of the ship, and at the sole risk of her loss or safety. So if by the terms of the contract the owner binds himself personally to repay the loan, it is not a bottomry loan. Ib.

If a vessel is lost at a time when money on bottomry loan becomes payable, the lender cannot recover either principal or interest; and where her arrival in safety entitles him to repayment, he is confined to the security of the ship, and cannot enforce his claim personally against the owner beyond the value of the pledged fund which may come into his hands. Ib.

A loan is not a bottomry loan where collateral security is given for its absolute repayment, as where insurance policies and the vessel itself are assigned as security. Ib.

A contract of loan, falsely called bottomry, is usurious and void, where it reserves to the lender a greater interest than the lawful rate, claiming it as "marine interest." Ib.

Money collected by the lender on securities collateral to a usurious loan, falsely called bottomry, may be recovered by the borrower in an action properly brought for that purpose. Ib.

Where a bottomry bond executed by the master, after the usual recital and clause hypothecating the vessel for the payment of the money advanced, contained the following clause: "And for the better performance of all the covenants and agreements herein contained, I, the said N. B." (the obligor), "for the consideration aforesaid, do grant, bargain, and sell the said ship John, and premises, to the said G. R." (the obligee), "his executors," etc., with the usual proviso that on payment, etc., the whole was to be void, — held, that these words did not destroy the character or operation of the bond. Robertson v. United Ins. Co., 1 D. 166.

Valid bottomry bonds may be executed by the owner of a vessel at the home port, if the money obtained thereon is given on maritime risks, and at the hazard of the lender, although not applied to the purposes of the ship or of the voyage. Greeley v. Waterhouse, 36 D. 730.

The recited consideration of a bottomry bond may be inquired into, and contradicted by the creditors of the owner of the vessel. Id.

II. EMPLOYMENT OF VESSELS.

11. Liability as carriers of merchandise. — 1. In general. — In the contract of affreightment it is not a tacit or implied condition that the ship is seaworthy, as it is in insurance. Forbes v. Rice, 4 D. 589.

A contract to carry goods is not dissolved by the existence of temporary obstructions to the prosecution of the voyage. Hand v. Baynes, 33 D. 54.

Dangers of navigation do not include dangers arising from a canal's becoming impassable. Id.

A vessel supplied with proper ventilators is not liable for damage to goods caused by "sweating of the hold." Montgomery v. Ship Abby Pratt, 54 D. 562.

Goods receipted for in good order found to be in a damaged condition at the end of the voyage renders the vessel liable, unless it can be shown that the damage resulted from the act of God, inevitable accident, or the public enemies. Id.

Article 3204, section 11, of code of Louisiana, gives a shipper sustaining loss through the fault of the master or crew a privilege upon the vessel for the amount of such loss. Tardos v. Ship Toulon, 74 D. 435.

Where a cargo is transported by water, and there is no specific agreement between the shipper and carrier in respect to the particular wharf or spot at the port, where the cargo shall be landed, or any known custom of the port, the shipper or his agent must be there ready to receive the cargo, on notice of the arrival of the vessel, and upon his failure to do so, the carrier may treat the contract as broken, land the cargo at the usual place, if there is any such, or procure a suitable place at the expense of the shipper, or await his or his agent's tardy movements, and rely upon obtaining compensation in an action for the breach of the implied contract to receive the cargo in a reasonable time. Wordin v. Bemis, 85 D. 255.

Delivery is essential to the discharge of a contract of affreightment, and as there can be no delivery without the act of two parties, it is indispensable that the freighter should be apprised when and where the ship-owner or his agent is ready to hand over the goods. Morgan v. Dibble, 94 D. 264.

2. Liability of the owners. — The owner of a ship carrying goods on freight upon a circuitous voyage is bound to have her in a state of repair at every port where she may be; and he is liable to the freighter for any damage to the goods for want of such repairs, no matter whether the defect in the ship was known or unknown to the ship-owner. Putnam v. Wood, 3 D. 179; Whitall v. Brig William Henry, 23 D. 483.

Several hogsheads of gin were received on board by the master of the vessel, to transport from Hartford to Boston, at usual freight, and were stowed on deck, and thrown overboard by reason of tempestuous weather. It was held that the owners were liable, unless such stowage was authorized by consent of the shipper, or by custom. Barber v. Brace, 8 D. 149.

Where by the usage of the place goods shipped on freight are consigned to the master for sales and returns, the owners of the vessel are liable for the payment of the proceeds to the shippers. Emery v. Hersey, 16 D. 268.

The owners of vessels as carriers are liable: For damage to goods caused by improper stowage. Montgomery v. Ship Abby Pratt, 54 D. 562.

For goods stolen on the voyage which were shipped on a contract with the master, without their knowledge, and which were not put on the freight list, although one of the owners was on board as supercargo, but not shown to have been exclusively attending to the shipment of the cargo. Ward v. Green, 16 D. 437.

For the master's negligence, though they are not on board the vessel at the time the accident happened, where the master entered into an agreement within his authority to transport certain goods, and fails, through his negligence, to deliver them. Kelly v. Benedict, 39 D. 530.

3. Liability of the master. — Where a master received goods on board under a contract to deliver them at a certain port, and being with the shipper at a port short of destination, there refused to proceed with the goods, the shipper may replevy or maintain trover for the goods. Portland Bank v. Stubbs, 4 D. 151.

The master and owners of a ship are responsible for the goods which they have agreed to carry, if stolen or embezzled by the crew or any other person, although no fault or negligence may be imputed. Schieffelin v. Harvey, 5 D. 206.

The master and owner of a vessel may be severally held liable for loss of goods delivered for transportation, but they cannot be held so jointly. Patton v. Magraith, 33 D. 98.

A joint action of assumpsit cannot be sustained against the master and owner of a vessel, to recover for goods destroyed through negligence. Ib.

A master who sails a vessel on shares, and not the general owners, is liable to the shipper for the value of part of the cargo which was used for fuel during the voyage. Sproat v. Donnell, 45 D. 103.

The act of the master of a vessel in subjecting cargo to risk of being taken and condemned under the local laws of the port of discharge is not a ground for the recovery of damages against him, in the absence of proof that the cargo was so taken, or that any loss resulted therefrom. Gaither v. Myrick, 66 D. 316.

A cargo landed before sale and before reaching the port of destination will impose on the master of a vessel liability for charges of landing and reshipment to port of destination, and the shipper will not be liable therefor. Ib.

4. Deviation from prescribed route.—A deviation from a prescribed route is not justified by any ordinary or temporary obstruction. On discovering temporary obstructions to his voyage, the master should not take a route different from the one agreed upon, but should await their removal, or notify the shipper of the impracticability of proceeding. Hand v. Baynes, 33 D. 54.

The alteration in a voyage, whereby the vessel proceeded by sea, instead of through a canal, renders the carrier responsible for the loss of the property, although the canal was temporarily obstructed. Ib.

Where there has been unnecessary deviation, and injury to cargo ensues, the master and owner of the vessel are liable only for the damages actually resulting from the deviation or from a breach of the contract of affreightment. Souter v. Baymore, 47 D. 518.

A cargo must be carried according to the projected voyage by use of every reasonable and practicable method, and the master and owners will be responsible for every act not strictly in furtherance of this duty. Gaither v. Myrick, 66 D. 316.

The right to have cargo carried and delivered according to projected voyage is superior to power to sell vessel, and a claim for damages for a sale of the vessel before delivery of the cargo is not affected by the fact that the shipper knew that the vessel might possibly be sold. Ib.

5. Loss by fire.—The United States statutes of 1851, chapter 43, exempting the owners and charterers of vessels from responsibility for losses arising from accidental fires, does not apply to expressmen or other common carriers who avail themselves of steamboats and other vessels for the transportation of packages in the fulfillment of contracts under which they assume the common-law liability. Hill Mfg. Co. v. Boston & L. R. R. Co., 6 R. 202.

A loss of goods by fire on board the vessel upon which they are shipped, the fire happening by the neglect of the corporation owning the vessel, is not a loss incurred without the privity or knowledge of the owners of the vessel, under the United States statute of 1851, chapter 43, limiting the liability of ship-owners. Hill Mfg. Co. v. Providence etc. S. S. Co., 18 R. 527.

The jurisdiction of a state court over an action against a ship-owner for damage to goods by a fire on board the vessel, happening by the alleged neglect of the ship-owner, cannot be affected by subsequent proceedings instituted by the ship-owner in a federal court under United States statute, 1851, chapter 43, and the rules of practice in admiralty. Ib.

Where a cargo of cotton was received by a carrier for transportation on an inland river, in a steamboat carrying freight and passengers, and was destroyed by fire on the boat, the carrier cannot avail himself of an exemption from liability for loss by fire, if he neglected to protect the cotton on deck "by a complete and suitable covering of canvas, or other suitable material, to prevent ignition by sparks," as required, under penalty, by act of Congress, "for the safety of the lives of passengers," and this is so although the act was repealed before the trial of the cause. Grey v. Mobile Trade Co., 28 R. 729.

12. Right to freight.—Freight is a compensation for the transportation of goods from port to port, and is not claimable until the voyage is completed. Patsiparo Ins. Co. v. Biscoe, 28 D. 219; Griggs v. Austin, 15 D. 175; and when paid in advance must be repaid, if by reason of any event not imputable to the shipper the goods are not carried and delivered, unless there be a special agreement to the contrary. Atwell v. Miller, 69 D. 206; Griggs v. Austin, 15 D. 175; or unless delivery was prevented by dangers of the sea, or other unavoidable casualties. Hahverson v. Cole, 40 D. 603.

A ship-owner's right to freight rests in contract, and performance or excuse of performance of the conditions of the contract is necessary to entitle him to freight. Crawford v. Williams, 60 D. 146.

An agreement to waive the right to reclaim money paid in advance for freight is not to be inferred from a clause in the bill of lading, stating that the goods are to be delivered safely, "the dangers of the sea excepted." Griggs v. Austin, 15 D. 175.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Freight on merchandise lost by shipwreck or stranding, or by pirates or enemies, cannot be collected, and if wholly or partly paid in advance, must be refunded. Id.

An advance of freight means the same thing as a payment of freight beforehand, and neither implies a stipulation that the amount paid or advanced shall not be returned if the goods are not carried. Id.

If a cargo is delivered at the place of destination, the whole freight will be earned, no matter how deteriorated in value by the perils of the sea. Tio v. Vance, 30 D. 715.

It is not necessary to transport the cargo in the same vessel; in case of necessity arising from vis major during the voyage, the captain or owners have a right to repair, if it can be done within a reasonable time, or to employ another vessel and earn the freight. Id.

Owners are entitled to full freight, where, on an accident happening to the vessel the first day out necessitating repairs, she was repaired within ten days, and was ready to proceed, but the charterers refused to go on with the voyage. Id.

A vessel was chartered from New York to St. Domingo and return, the charterer to pay an entire sum for the whole voyage, in sixty days after the return of the vessel to New York. Arrived in sight of St. Domingo, the vessel was turned away by a British cruiser, because of a blockade of that point; thereupon she returned, with her original cargo, to New York, where the owners refused to deliver the cargo until freight was paid. In an action of trover to recover the value of the goods, — held, that no freight was due. Scott v. Libby, 3 D. 431.

A blockade of the port of destination dissolves the charter-party, and thus all claim for freight under it must be given up. No pro rata freight can be recovered, unless the goods have been accepted at a place short of the port of destination. Id.

The master may save freight where the vessel is wrecked or disabled in the course of the voyage, and cannot be repaired without great delay and expense, by forwarding the cargo by another competent vessel. Crawford v. Williams, 60 D. 146.

The fact that a shipper insures freight is a circumstance tending to show that he assumed risk of its loss, and taken in connection with parol evidence of a special agreement that the freight should be at his risk, is sufficient to be submitted to the jury as going to show an agreement to that effect, suppletory to that in the bill of lading. Atwell v. Miller, 69 D. 203.

The owner of a vessel who is also a carrier has a lien upon goods for their transportation, but it does not follow that he who has the title to the property employed in the transportation is necessarily the owner for the voyage. The owner of a vessel may lease it, give up all possession and control, reserving only rent, and in that case the lessee, although the lease assumes the form of a charter-party, becomes the owner for the term. Adams v. Homseyer, 100 D. 391.

The general owner may let his ship with a master and crew of his own choosing, and if there is evidence of intention to part with the possession, it is held to be a demise. But a covenant that he shall have the right to appoint the master to control and navigate clearly indicates an intention not to trust the property in the hands of others, but to control it by his own agents for the use of the charterer. Id.

Whatever agreement exists between the consignees of a cargo and the charterer of a vessel, for an appropriation of return freights, the right of the master to collect them from the consignees after delivery to them of the goods, at least to the amount due on the charter-party, cannot be questioned. The delivery of the goods to the consignees, and their acceptance of them under the bill of lading, raises an assumpsit against them to pay freights according to the stipulations of the bill of lading; and this implied obligation becomes a positive one when the goods are received with notice that the freights must be paid to the master, and not to the charterer. Id.

The consignee and receiver of a cargo is liable for the freight, although the master, owing to a dispute with the person who loaded the vessel about the price of trimming the cargo, sailed without signing the bill of lading, and he cannot deduct that price from the freight. Hatch v. Tucker, 34 R. 707.

13. — and how enforced. — A consignor who is the owner of goods shipped by general ship is liable for the freight, independent of the bill of lading, and whether the ownership appears upon the face of such bill or not. Grant v. Wood, 47 D. 162.

An owner shipping goods is not released from liability for freight on them by a clause in the bill of lading which provides that the consignee shall pay it, where the goods have been delivered by the captain without payment having been made. Id.

Where a master of a vessel takes in payment of freight a bill of exchange drawn by the consignee on the consignor, who is the owner of the goods, and the bill is by him dishonored, such owner is not released from his original liability. Id.

A master is not bound at his peril to enforce payment of freight from consignees. He may waive his right of lien, deliver the goods without receiving payment of the freight, and yet his right to resort to the shipper for compensation still remains. Wooster v. Tarr, 85 D. 707.

A shipper named in a bill of lading is liable to the carrier for freight, although he does not own the goods, and the carrier has waived his lien upon them; as he is the party with whom the owner or master enters into the contract of affreightment. Ib.

Partners in the earnings of a vessel should all be joined in an action to recover freight earned. Donnell v. Walsh, 88 D. 361.

14. Lien for freight.—The right to retain goods for freight does not exist where the parties have expressly regulated the time and manner of paying freight, in a charter-party, and especially if the cargo is deliverable before the arrival of the periods of payment. Chandler v. Belden, 9 D. 193.

The master of a vessel has a general lien on his cargo for freight and charges which passes by assignment. Everett v. Coffin, 22 D. 551.

Trover cannot be maintained against the assignee of the master, who has paid or become responsible for the freight and charges in such a case, before payment or tender by the plaintiff of the amount of the lien. Ib.

The subsequent fraudulent conduct of the master, in relation to the goods, cannot divest or affect the lien previously acquired by his assignee. Ib.

Such a lien is not waived by the assignee by mere failure to assert it when the goods are demanded, unless he distinctly puts his right to hold them upon some other ground. Ib.

A vendor is liable for freight and charges on goods stopped in transitu, while on board a ship belonging to his vendee, and the latter has a lien on the goods for the same. Newhall v. Vargas, 33 D. 617.

A lien for freight is not lost if the goods be taken from the possession of the owners in itinere, or by operation of law. Ib.

The vendor cannot set off against a lien for freight, any claim of his against the estate of his vendee, after a commission in insolvency has issued upon such estate. Ib.

A master of a ship has a lien on the cargo for freight to be paid thereon, and is not bound to part with any of the goods until entire freight is paid. Frothingham v. Jenkins, 52 D. 286.

Offering to give good security for the payment of freight is not payment. Ib.

The delivery of a part of goods shipped under one bill of lading to consignee does not defeat lien on remainder for whole of unpaid freight. Ib.

The delivery of a cargo and the payment of freight are concurrent acts, and neither party is obliged to perform without the other being ready. Ib.

A cargo of ice arrived at Washington, District of Columbia, in the middle of July. The consignee, wishing to inspect it before paying freight, proposed to the master of the vessel to proceed to deliver on receipt of the freight as fast as delivered, or to land the cargo, and store it in a convenient ice-house of the consignee on the wharf. The master refused to do either, demanding freight in full before delivery. The consignee refused this, and in consequence of the disagreement the ice melted in the vessel. Held, that the master was liable for the loss. Barker v. Schooner E. M. Wright, 47 R. 234.

15. Freight pro rata.—Pro rata freight is earned only where there is a voluntary acceptance at an intermediate port justifying the inference that further carriage was dispensed with. Western Transp. Co. v. Hoyt, 25 R. 175; Hunt v. Haskell, 41 D. 387; Gray v. Wain, 7 D. 642; Welch v. Hicks, 16 D. 443; Crawford v. Williams, 60 D. 146; Coffin v. Storer, 4 D. 54.

The master's refusal to repair his ship, or to procure others and send on the goods, entitles the owner to receive the goods at the intermediate port without paying freight pro rata. Welch v. Hicks, 16 D. 443.

Where a master at first refused to repair the ship and proceed with the voyage, or to procure other vessels and forward the goods, but afterwards consented to repair and proceed, under circumstances calculated to excite doubts of his sincerity, and the owner then received his goods, it is for the jury to decide whether the offer to repair was bona fide, and the acceptance was voluntary, so as to entitle the ship to pro rata freight. Ib.

Where freight is to be paid after the return of a vessel from a voyage, her return is a condition precedent, and freight pro rata itinere is not demandable if the vessel does not return. Hamilton v. Warfield, 20 D. 448.

A contract is indivisible in such case, the freight depending on the performance of the whole voyage. Ib.

If "dangers of the sea" are excepted in the charter-party in such case, pro rata freight is demandable if the loss occurs from such dangers, but not otherwise. Ib.

An agreement to pay pro rata freight in case of loss, in such a charter-party, refers only to a loss by perils of the sea. Ib.

The owner or master of a vessel is not entitled to freight pro rata on the cargo, where his vessel is wrecked on the voyage, and he transships the goods and forwards them to their destination under a contract for freight, which the owner of the goods is compelled to pay, largely exceeding the original freight for the whole voyage. Crawford v. Williams, 60 D. 146.

16. Average and contribution.—1. Generally.—Elements of a general average are a purpose, a means, and a result; a design to avert a common danger by a voluntary sacrifice, the issue of which is successful. Nimick v. Holmes, 64 D. 710.

The freight actually gained or earned at the time a voyage is broken up should be the basis for estimating a rule of contribution. Magrath v. Church, 2 D. 173.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Upon a contract of affreightment, where the shipper assumes the perils of the sea, and the owner is to receive a share of the profits in lieu of freight, if damage be caused by the perils of the sea, the loss is to be deducted out of the profits, so as to be sustained by the owner and freighter jointly. Putnam v. Wood, 3 D. 179.

If a vessel be captured during her voyage, the freight will be chargeable up to the day of such capture, in a settlement of proportion for general average. Leavenworth v. Delafield, 2 D. 201.

The amount on which a general average, in case of capture, is to be calculated, is the first cost or invoice price of the cargo, and charges at the port of departure; on the vessel, four fifths of its value at the same place; and on the freight, at one half agreed to be paid. Id.

The adjustment of a general average made by a broker on the protest and evidence furnished by the master may be set aside at the suit of owners of goods, by showing the culpable negligence or want of skill of the master. Chamberlain v. Reed, 29 D. 506.

The master, on an adjustment of general average, has a lien upon goods liable for contribution. Id.

Evidence that a shipper had received from underwriters the amount for which goods lost were insured is not relevant, in an action by the shipper against the owners of the vessel for general average, nor is the amount so received evidence of the value of the goods. Nimick v. Holmes, 64 D. 710.

In an action on a general average bond it is a good defense that the loss was occasioned by the unseaworthiness of the vessel. Cheraw & S. R. R. Co. v. Broadnax, 58 R. 733.

2. What are subjects of. — Expenses incurred for seamen's wages and subsistence are items of charge, proper to be included in the adjustment of general average. Barker v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 10 R. 726; Leavenworth v. Delafield, 2 D. 201.

Damage by application of water or steam in extinguishing a fire, or by tearing up part of the vessel in order to get at it, such fire not being caused by fault of the crew, is general average, whatever the means used to extinguish the fire may be, whether by fire-engines on land, or by means of steam, or by scuttling the vessel. Nimick v. Holmes, 64 D. 710.

Where a vessel, in consequence of damages, was obliged to seek a port of safety in order to refit, the wages and provisions from the moment of bearing away to the period of setting out again on her original voyage constitute a subject of general average, the proportion of which may be recovered in an action of assumpsit, by the owners of the ship against the proprietors of the cargo; and consequently it is a charge for which the insurers on the cargo are liable. Warden v. Le Roy, 2 D. 236.

No contribution is allowed for goods shipped on deck, and which had been thrown overboard, nor is the owner of the vessel liable as a carrier for the value of such goods. Smith v. Wright, 2 D. 162.

General average for the voluntary sacrifice of a cargo of lime, by scuttling a vessel, cannot be claimed where the lime was of no value, there being no possibility of saving it. Crockett v. Dodge, 28 D. 170.

Where a ship disabled by stress of weather puts into an intermediate port, and from her necessities part of the cargo is sold at a loss, its whole amount is not general average, but only such proportion as the general average charges bear to the whole amount disbursed. Hassam v. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co., 56 D. 591.

When a vessel puts into a port of distress, and there transships a portion of her cargo, the freight paid the substituted bottom is not an expense or loss to be contributed for in general average, where the transshipment is made for the purpose of earning full freight. Hugg v. Baltimore & C. Smelt. etc. Co., 6 R. 425.

A bark being in inevitable danger, without her fault, of collision with a steamer, changed her course so as to strike the steamer stem on, thereby probably saving herself from being sunk with her cargo. In consequence of the collision she was obliged to go for repairs into a port of a country where the duty of a steamer to keep out of the way of a sailing vessel was not recognized, and where she was compelled, at the suit of the owner of the steamer, by a decree of court, to bear half the damage to both vessels, and, therefore, to pay a certain sum to the steamer. In a suit in equity by the owner of the bark against the owners of her cargo for contribution, — held, that neither the expenses of the repairs rendered necessary by the collision, nor the sum paid to the steamer, nor the costs of defending the suit, was a subject for general average. Emery v. Huntington, 12 R. 725.

If a fire in a vessel at a city wharf is extinguished by the city fire department, acting under municipal authority, and not at the request or direction of the ship-master, the cargo saved is not liable to contribute to a general average loss. Wamsutta Mills v. Old Colony Steam. Co., 50 R. 325.

All damage directly resulting from a jet-tison should be contributed for, though it happen to articles described as perishable, and which remain in specie. Magrath v. Church, 2 D. 173.

Goods shipped on deck and lost by jettison are not entitled to the benefit of general average. Cram v. Aiken, 29 D. 503; Dodge v. Bartol, 17 D. 233.

Nor does the fact that it is customary for vessels plying between the ports between which the plaintiff's goods were being transported, to carry merchandise on deck when the hold is full, entitle the plaintiff to contribution from the owner of the vessel. Oram v. Allen, 29 D. 503.

Nor does the payment of full freight for goods stored on deck entitle their owner to contribution if they are lost by jettison. Ib.

Jettisoned goods stowed on deck of a steamer navigating Long Island Sound are entitled to the benefit of general average, especially if it is the usage to stow goods on deck. Harris v. Moody, 86 D. 375.

All property on board a vessel at time of jettison is liable to contribution, except that attached to the persons of the passengers. Ib.

Bank bills on board a steamer, for transportation, at the time of jettison, are property, liable to contribute to the general average loss, although they are carried in a crate for the owners by an express company, which by agreement pays the owners of the steamer a fixed sum annually for carrying a certain number of crates with their contents. Ib.

17. Charter-parties; their form, execution, and validity. — A vessel may be chartered for a voyage or for a time certain, without an instrument in writing. Taggard v. Loring, 8 D. 140. And the parol charterer, not the general owner, is answerable to the shipper of goods. Thompson v. Hamilton, 23 D. 619.

18. — Interpretation and effect. — Where a vessel is chartered for a voyage out and home for an entire sum, payable on her return, her return is a condition precedent to entitle the owner to freight; and if the vessel is lost before commencing the homeward voyage, no recovery can be had, either on the charter-party or on an implied assumption for the freight of the outward voyage. Nor if the freighter had accepted the outward cargo could he have recovered a pro rata freight, because of the entirety of the contract. Penoyer v. Hallett, 8 D. 239.

Where a charter-party stipulated that "if the vessel entered the port of Lisbon, the voyage should be determined," and the vessel having arrived at the outer port of Lisbon, remained a short time, and then proceeded to another port, — held, to be a question of fact for the jury whether the voyage was thereby terminated. Goddard v. Bulow, 9 D. 663.

The hire or rent of a vessel is due, when it depends alone on the will of the hirer or lessee to enjoy the thing, or when he has not been prevented from enjoying it by the lessor. Tio v. Vance, 30 D. 715.

19. — Rights and liabilities of the parties. — 1. Generally. — Where a vessel is chartered without any limitation of time, it is an indefeasible hiring for every voyage undertaken before notice from the owner of his intention to put an end to the contract. Outler v. Winsor, 17 D. 385.

Facts held not to render a charterer and owner partners. Ib.

A captain who is unable to obtain the cargo intended, on account of his vessel being ordered away by the officers of the government, is at liberty to act upon his best judgment for the interest of all concerned, and obtain a cargo at another place. Benson v. Atwood, 71 D. 611.

Defendant hired the plaintiff's barge, with captain and crew, for ten months, used her three months, and abandoned her at a dock, where she remained three months suffering from exposure. The plaintiff notified the defendant that unless he used the barge the plaintiff would do so for the rest of the term, crediting him with the net earnings. Defendant made no response. Held, that plaintiff could recover the amount unpaid on the contract, less such net earnings. Johnson v. Meeker, 48 R. 609.

2. Liability of the charterer. — When a vessel chartered for a voyage becomes disabled by an accident while loading the cargo, the freighter will not be bound bound by the charter contract, unless she is repaired and rendered fit for the voyage within a reasonable time, of which the jury are the proper judges. Purvis v. Tunno, 2 D. 664.

The shipper should look to the charterer in case of loss, and this rule is the same, whether the general owner is to receive of the charterer a proportion of the profits for the use of the vessel, or is to receive a determinate sum. Thompson v. Hamilton, 23 D. 619.

The refusal of a foreign government to permit a captain to take a cargo does not relieve the charterers from liability to the owners for a failure to do so, where the charter-party fails to provide for such a contingency. Benson v. Atwood, 71 D. 611.

Damages for a freighter's failure to supply a cargo according to the terms of the charter-party are to be ascertained by the jury, according to the liberal principles of interpretation usually applied to commercial contracts, upon consideration of all the circumstances, and of the real injury sustained by the owners. Ib.

A second charter-party executed by the owner after a breach of the first does not relieve the charterer from the consequences flowing from their breach of the first. Ib.

3. Liability of the owner. — The general owner of a vessel hired by another for a particular voyage by a contract of charter-party, stipulating that the hirer is to have the exclusive possession and management of the vessel, and the exclusive profits of the voyage, is not liable for the non-delivery of

* Liability of owner of vessel when it is hired to another, see note, 18 D. 87-90.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

goods shipped for such voyage after the execution of the charter-party. Pitts v. Brainerd, 13 D. 79.

False colors held out by the owner inducing a reasonable belief in the shipper that the vessel will sail on the owner's account and under his direction will render him liable, even without any fraudulent intent on his part. Ib.

Where the chartering and surrender of control and possession of the vessel are clearly proved, although the custom-house papers showing ownership of the same are not changed, it will not be sufficient evidence to show a fraudulent intent on the owner's part, or to warrant a reasonable belief that he is interested in the voyage, to prove that he was introduced by the charterer to certain merchants as owner, and did not disclaim any concern in the voyage, but made inquiries as to the prospect of procuring freight from said merchants. Ib.

20. Demurrage.—A delay in a voyage caused by a failure of the charterers to furnish orders, and by their default in furnishing a cargo according to the terms of the charter-party, is a proper subject of damages. Benson v. Atwood, 71 D. 611.

In estimating damage for a delay and loss of time, the sum agreed upon as demurrage is properly left to the jury as prima facie evidence. Ib.

Lay days provided for in a charter-party should be allowed a charterer, who, failing to load according to the terms of the contract, is sought to be charged for the extra time and delay in obtaining another cargo. Ib.

The time consumed in bringing a vessel nearer home will not be charged to the defendants, where, failing to obtain a cargo at the port of destination, according to the terms of the charter-party, she sails to another port for another cargo. Ib.

The cost of advertisement and protest made by a captain, to find out who the agent of the charterer is, is allowable in an action for delay in a voyage, through the charterer's failing to have an agent from whom the captain is to receive orders, according to the terms of the charter-party; such cost is not covered by an allowance for demurrage. Ib.

Demurrage includes the hire and maintenance of the crew; and in an action for delay through the owners having no agent at the port from whom the captain can receive orders, where the captain has to pay a bonus to a crew, which he discharges in consequence, such sum cannot be claimed in addition to the demurrage. Ib.

The expense of hiring an additional crew and port charges must fall on the charterer, where there is no one from whom the captain can receive orders at the port of destination, and he is ordered away by the government, and sails for another port, where he is compelled to pay port charges, and hires another crew at additional expense, in consequence of his own crew leaving. Ib.

Demurrage, strictly speaking, is a sum of money due by an express contract for the detention of a vessel in loading or unloading one or more days beyond the time allowed for that purpose in the charter-party. Wordie v. Bemis, 85 D. 255.

Demurrage being a certain sum due by force of an express contract, general assumpsit will lie for it. Ib.

Damages in the nature of demurrage are recoverable for the detention of a vessel beyond a reasonable time in unloading only, where there is no express stipulation to pay demurrage. Such damages are recoverable for a breach of the implied contract of the shipper that he will receive the goods in a reasonable time, and can be recovered only in special assumpsit. Ib.

Damages in the nature of demurrage cannot be recovered for an unreasonable delay to a vessel in discharging her cargo, when such detention is caused by an accidental and unexpected accumulation of vessels at the same dock where all must discharge and where each in turn does discharge her cargo. Ib.

The consignee of a vessel is not liable for demurrage if the bill of lading contains no provision for the payment thereof; and certainly not if he assigns the bill of lading before any of the cargo has been delivered. Gage v. Morse, 90 D. 155.

A contract to deliver freight at a port implies at a wharf or other convenient or customary place of discharge; and where a master was unable to bring his vessel to any wharf for several days on account of ice,—held, that he was not entitled to demurrage for such delay, although he notified the consignee, and although the consignee made a way through the ice for another vessel. Hodgdon v. New Haven etc. R. R. Co., 33 R. 21.

21. Duties and liabilities as carriers of passengers.—The law of the place where a contract is to be performed governs, although the law of the person's domicile against whom the contract is sought to be enforced differs; and where the owner of a ship, residing in New Orleans, had sent her to carry passengers from Vera Cruz to Havana,—held, that contracts made by the master within the scope of his authority were binding upon the owner, and that the same were governed by the laws of Mexico. Arayo v. Currell, 20 D. 286.

The owner of a vessel is liable for the torts of the master, within the scope of his employment, according to the laws of the country where the same are committed. Ib.

The master is liable as for a breach of duty for inhuman and indecent conduct towards the passengers, by himself and crew, where incited by him. Kearns v. Lissardi, 25 D. 197.

The owners of a vessel are liable for all breaches of duty of the master in his conduct towards passengers. Id.

The contract of passage is broken by depriving the passengers of the use of the cabin, or by failure to furnish them with the stipulated food, or by the permitting them to be molested by the seamen. Id.

The owners of a vessel are liable for the master's breaches of the contract of freight or of passage, and may be held, therefore, for such breaches, though they are involved in tortious acts, and though, by the law of the contract, the owner is excused from the consequences of the master's torts. Id.

Female passengers stipulate, in addition, for exemption from rude, indecent, or brutal behavior. Id.

22. — and their baggage. — The master of a vessel is bound to take care of the effects of a passenger who dies on board, and he is liable for a failure to do so. Such liability is not limited to the value of the vessel and freight earned. Malpica v. McKown, 20 D. 279.

Whether the owner and master of a vessel are liable for money brought on ship-board in a trunk without their knowledge, quære. Id.

23. Contracts for towage, generally. — A signal for a tow-boat, and its arrival in response, do not constitute a contract between the signaling vessel and the tow, by which the former engages to be towed by the latter to her place of destination. Clark v. Gifford, 26 D. 511.

Towing of a vessel is "transportation of property," within the meaning of the California statute giving a right of action for malperformance or non-performance of contracts for transportation. White v. Mary Ann, 65 D. 523.

The interpretation of a contract between a towing company and the master and owner of a boat to be towed, the relations of the parties, and their relative rights and obligations are questions of law and not of fact. Arctic Fire Ins. Co. v. Austin, 25 R. 221.

The defendant contracted to tow the plaintiff's barge, by means of a steam-tug, from Bay City, Michigan, to Buffalo, New York. After the voyage had been commenced, and been partly performed, it was voluntarily suspended and delayed by the defendants, the barge during the delay being exposed to none of the perils peculiar to the voyage. After the voyage was resumed, and while it was being duly prosecuted, a storm was encountered by which the barge was lost. Held, that the defendants, by the mere fact of the delay, did not become responsible for the loss of the barge, although the delay was unreasonable and unnecessary, and although, as the event proved, the barge, but for the delay, would probably have been safely towed to its place of destination. In such case, the storm must be regarded as the proximate and the delay as only the remote cause of the loss. Daniels v. Ballantine, 13 R. 264.

24. Liability of tow-boats as common carriers, generally. — The owner of a tug-boat is liable as a common carrier, it seems, in the towage of vessels. White v. The Mary Ann, 65 D. 523. Contra, Varble v. Bigley, 29 R. 435.

A tow-boat used in towing barges or other water-craft, which are loaded with freight, from one point to another on the river, is a common carrier, and the persons owning such tow-boat, who undertake to tow a barge loaded with freight or merchandise, from one given point to another on the Mississippi River, first giving a bill of lading for the transportation of the cargo on board of the barge, are liable for the delivery of the cargo at the port of destination, the same as if it had been placed on board the tow-boat herself. Bussey v. Miss. Valley Transp. Co., 13 R. 120.

The use of reasonable care and diligence only is required of one who, without expressly agreeing to insure against all losses or injuries that may arise, undertakes to tow a vessel out of a harbor, through the ice therein; such contractor is not liable to the same extent as a common carrier. Pa. etc. Nav. Co. v. Dandridge, 29 D. 543; Leonard v. Hendrickson, 55 D. 587; White v. The Mary Ann, 65 D. 523; Bussey v. Miss. Valley Transp. Co., 13 R. 120.

Plaintiff employed C., who was the owner of a scow, to transport thereon cattle and horses across the St. Lawrence River. C. employed defendant, who was the owner of a tug, to tow the scow across. The plaintiff had knowledge of the employment of defendant, and agreed to pay a portion of the contract price. By the negligent and unskillful management of the tug, several of the cattle were lost. Held, 1. That plaintiff could maintain an action against the defendant for the loss; 2. That a state court had jurisdiction of such an action; and 3. That the act of Congress of March 3, 1851 (5 U. S. Stats. at Large, 635), did not oust the state court of jurisdiction. Baird v. Daly, 15 R. 488.

The captain of a steam-tug, having a canal-boat in tow at the risk of its master and owner, is not master of the canal-boat, and has not such charge and control of the canal-boat that its master and crew can be deemed for the trip the servants and agents of the owner of the tug, so as to make the latter chargeable with negligence of the master and crew of the canal-boat. Arctic Fire Ins. Co. v. Austin, 25 R. 221.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Nor is the owner of the tug a common carrier, and so liable for the negligence of those in charge of the canal-boat. Id.

25. — for injuries to tow. — It is the duty of a flat-boatman, when a tug has a flat-boat in tow, to aid in managing the tow and to obey the directions of the pilot of the tug. But if the pilot fails to give sufficient orders, or fails to give them in time, negligence may be imputed to the master of the tug, as well in this as in any other respect. Hays v. Paul, 88 D. 569.

The time and sufficiency of necessary orders fall within the duty of a tug when a steam-tug takes a boat in tow, undertakes its management and control, and assumes to give the necessary orders. Id.

It is negligence on the part of a tug, where its officers, with a boat in tow, give the boat insufficient orders, or give them too late. Id.

One who uses a tug for towing must know the capacity of the tug and its practical effects upon the boats in tow. Id.

When the character and loading of a tow are visible and open, and her depth in the water and everything in regard to her are patent to all, it would be negligence on the part of the tow-boat captain to undertake to tow such a flat if too heavily loaded. Hays v. Paul, 88 D. 569.

A tow-boat captain is the best judge of what his tow-boat can do, and when asked to tow a craft too heavily loaded, or otherwise unfit to be towed, he should decline, or apprise the owner, and make special terms as to the risk. Id.

The towing of boats is an undertaking implying sufficient knowledge and skill to perform safely. Id.

Where a vessel in tow of a steamboat employed in the business of towage, through the negligence of the master and crew of such steamboat, comes in collision with another vessel, the owner of the towed vessel is not liable for damages occasioned thereby. Sproul v. Hemmingway, 25 D. 350.

The proprietors of steam tow-boats plying between New Orleans and the Gulf of Mexico are common carriers, and responsible as such. They are bound to bring the vessel towed safely to its destination, unless prevented by uncontrollable accidents, or such as are not within the control of human foresight or power. And they are liable for any damage caused to such vessel by neglect to procure the necessary means to secure its safe towage. Clapp v. Stanton, 96 D. 417.

The owners of a tow-boat are not common carriers, and if a boat which is being towed is injured, the onus is upon owners of such injured boat to show that the injury was caused by the negligence of those in charge of the tow-boat. Hays v. Millar, 18 R. 445; Brown v. Clegg, 3 R. 522.

When, however, evidence has been given to show that the injury was caused by the negligence or unskillfulness of those managing the tow-boat, evidence showing the general skill, competency, and carefulness of such persons is not admissible to rebut the evidence of particular negligence. Hays v. Millar, 18 R. 445.

26. Pilots, and the obligation to employ them. — The master is bound to secure the services of a pilot when entering a foreign port where pilots are employed, and must approach pilot ground with caution. McDowell v. General Mut. Ins. Co., 56 D. 619.

A state law requiring masters of vessels bound to ports in the state to accept the services of the first licensed pilot offering is not unconstitutional. Thompson v. Sprague, 47 R. 760.

Members of a board of pilot commissioners are not civilly liable for wrongfully revoking a pilot's license, such board being a quasi judicial body, intrusted with duties requiring the exercise of judicial discretion. Downer v. Lent, 65 D. 489.

The master has power to employ a pilot on a river steamboat, within the duration of his own term of service, for a longer term than one trip. Hight v. Robbins, 75 D. 118.

27. Quarantine regulations. — A quarantine statute applies to vessels having other contagious diseases on board as well as to those afflicted with the plague, although formerly only the latter class of vessels were subject to quarantine. Mitchell v. Rockland, 66 D. 252.

Health-officers cannot take possession and control of vessels in quarantine to the exclusion of the owners or their agents. Id.

A city is not liable for injuries to a quarantined vessel by negligence of health-officers, or their agent or servant, where they have unlawfully taken possession of the vessel. Id.

The president of a board of health, without lawful authority or necessity ordered the fumigation of a vessel laden with fruit coming from a foreign port. The master, claiming that the fruit would be ruined, was offered the opportunity to discharge the cargo, but at his own expense. He refused, and the fruit was damaged by the fumigation. Held, that an action would lie against the president therefor. Beers v. Board of Health, 48 R. 256.

III. THE MASTER AND CREW.

28. Powers and duties of master, generally. — Upon a general retainer for no particular voyage, the owners of a vessel may dismiss the captain at any time without cause assigned. Montgomery v. Henry, 1 D. 223.

The master is bound, when the ship becomes disabled during her voyage, to procure another vessel, if in his power, to bring the cargo to the port of destination; but he is not bound to seek another vessel out of the port of distress, or out of a port immediately contiguous thereto. Saltus v. Ocean Ins. Co., 7 D. 290.

The master of a vessel who is also part owner does not, by virtue thereof, have a special privilege, called or known as a sailing or master's interest, which will prevent the owners of a majority interest in the vessel from displacing him as master at their pleasure. Ward v. Ruckman, 93 D. 479.

A vessel of which defendant, a resident of New York City, was the nominal owner, was libeled in Buffalo, while in charge of J. S., the master and real owner, for a penalty incurred by carrying passengers without license. J. S., without defendant's knowledge, procured plaintiff to become bail for her release, and on appeal from the decree enforcing the penalty, plaintiff became bail on the appeal bond also. The decree was affirmed, and paid by plaintiff, who brought action against defendant to recover the money so paid, claiming as surety in the appeal bond. Held, that as the vessel was libeled in a home port, and within communicating distance with defendant, J. S. had no right to bind him; also, that plaintiff must be deemed to have made the payment as defendant in the decree, and not as surety on the appeal bond. Gager v. Babcock, 8 R. 532.

29. — as general agent of owners. — The master is the confidential agent of the owners at large, intrusted with the conduct and management of the ship. Ward v. Green, 16 D. 437.

The master of a general ship abroad has power to make contracts in relation to freight which will be binding on the owners. Id.

A general ship is one in which the master or owners engage separately with a number of persons, unconnected with each other, to convey their respective goods to the place of the ship's destination. Id.

The consignees selected by the ship-master or supercargo, in a foreign port, according to usage, and bona fide, are so far the agents of the owner of the ship and cargo that, upon the death of the captain or supercargo, his representatives are not responsible for the acts of such consignees after his death, not imputable to instructions given during his lifetime. Payson v. Donnell, 19 D. 213.

The master of a vessel may bind the owners so far as the usual employment of the vessel in the carriage of goods is concerned, but has no power to purchase a cargo on their account without an authorization for that purpose. Hewitt v. Buck, 35 D. 243.

The authority of a ship's husband to bind the owners is limited to contracts concerning the outfit, care, and employment of the vessel, and does not extend to the purchase of a cargo on their account. Id.

The powers and duties of ship-masters when in foreign ports, and in case of disaster, are very extensive. They are then the general agents of the owners so far as respects acts necessary to the successful prosecution of their voyage. Duncan v. Reed, 63 D. 635.

The master of a vessel in a foreign port, where there is no consignee, if he have no other means, may pledge the credit of the owners of the vessel for money needed to pay the officers and crew, and money so lent may be recovered of the owner, if the loan has been made in good faith and after due diligence to ascertain the necessity; and the questions of the necessity, good faith, and diligence are for the jury. Stearns v. Doe, 74 D. 608.

The owner of a vessel is liable for the acts of the master, although tortious, within the scope of his employment. Malpica v. McKown, 20 D. 279.

The master is the agent of the owner, who is liable for his defaults, although the whole vessel is chartered; unless the charterer engage the master and seamen, so that the hull only belongs to the owners. Purvis v. Tunno, 2 D. 664.

An owner of a vessel is liable for the master's contracts, when it appears that the vessel was in the employment of the owner, and the master was appointed by him, and that the latter acted within the scope of his authority. Reynolds v. Toppan, 8 D. 110; Ward v. Green, 16 D. 437.

The owner on board exclusively attending to the shipment of the cargo is not bound by the master's contracts, but to exempt himself from liability he must show that he was exclusively attending to that business. Ward v. Green, 16 D. 437.

The owner of a vessel is liable as a common carrier for the act of his agent, who, without his knowledge, receives goods for carriage, when the latter was accustomed to act for him generally in the capacity of master, and had entire charge of the vessel, although it was usually employed in transporting the goods of the owner only, and not those of other persons, except that, occasionally, when his own goods were insufficient to form a complete cargo, he had received and carried the goods of others, taking freight therefor, upon personal application being made to him for that purpose by the shippers. McClure v. Richardson, 33 D. 105.

If the registered owner of a vessel appoints her master, with an agreement that the master is to have the entire control of the vessel, and victual and man her, and make contracts of affreightment, and divide the gross earnings with the owner, the owner is liable on contracts of affreightment made by the master with shippers who have no notice of the arrangement between the master and owner. Oakland Cotton Mfg. Co. v. Jennings, 13 R. 209.

Actual notice to the master of a boat, of the existence of a lien against it, operates as constructive notice to its owners. Case v. Woolley, 32 D. 54.

30. Power to contract for repairs and supplies.—The authority of masters or commanders of steamers extends to the purchase of necessary supplies, and to that extent they may bind the owners; in general, however, they have no authority to bind either the boat or the owners, by purchases of other kinds; any such authority must be specially conferred by the owners. Calef v. Steamer Bonaparte, 38 D. 190.

The owner of a vessel is liable for supplies furnished for her use by the master's orders, where the credit is not expressly given to some one else. Duff v. Bayard, 39 D. 73.

A master may bind the owners for necessary supplies and repairs of their vessel, when he is their agent, but he cannot bind them where no agency, express or implied, exists. McLellan v. Cox, 58 D. 736.

A person may be the legal and registered owner of a vessel without being liable for supplies ordered by her master. Lincoln v. Wright, 62 D. 316.

A master hiring a vessel on shares, and having the sole control and management of her, and sailing, victualing, and manning her on his own account, is the owner pro hac vice, and has no agency or authority from the general owners to furnish her with supplies, and cannot bind the owners for them. McLellan v. Cox, 58 D. 736; Lincoln v. Wright, 62 D. 316.

In an action by the owner of a cargo against the owners of a vessel to recover for the contributory share for certain jettisoned cargo and expenses chargeable to the vessel and freight for certain bottomry bonds, in a general average contribution it appeared that the vessel and freight being insufficient to meet this contribution, the cargo was taken for the payment of the deficiency, and the owner of the cargo claimed indemnity of the owner of the vessel. Held, that the owners of the vessel were not bound by the acts of the master, it being conceded that no prudent owner, if present, would have made or authorized such expensive repairs as were made by the master without any special authority. Stirling v. Nevada Phosphate Co., 6 R. 372.

31. Power to bind vessel by bottomry bond.*—The owner of a vessel is not liable on a bottomry bond given by the master, unless the necessity of a loan at the time it was made is shown. Clark v. Laidlaw, 39 D. 526.

A bond itself is not evidence of the necessity of a loan, nor of the absence of other means of obtaining the money. This must be shown abundant, and otherwise than by the assertion of the master, as he cannot acquire an authority from his own assertion only. Ib.

Repairs to a vessel in a foreign port must be made without any unnecessary delay, and if the master of a ship lacks means to meet the expenses of such repairs, or cannot raise funds on the credit of the owners, he should hypothecate the vessel for that purpose. He cannot delay making the necessary repairs until he has received instructions from the owners to do so, without subjecting the latter to liability to the shippers for such delay. Rathbone v. Neal, 50 D. 579; Harned v. Churchman, 50 D. 573.

32. Power to draw negotiable instruments.—A master of a vessel has no power of buying and selling, incident to his office as master, and where he is authorized by a letter of instructions from the owner to draw bills for the purpose of making purchases for such owner, he acts as agent or factor, and not as master, in drawing such bills. Newhall v. Dunlap, 31 D. 45.

The master of a vessel has a lien upon property purchased by him with the proceeds of a bill drawn under a letter of instructions from the owner, upon which he is personally liable, by reason of its being drawn in his own name, though directed to be charged to the cargo of his vessel, and this lien is not divested by the owner's death. Ib.

Though the master of a vessel departs from the strict letter of his instructions in drawing a bill for purchases for a shorter date than he is authorized, if the owner or his administrator claim the proceeds, he cannot deny the agency. Ib.

33. Power to sell or dispose of vessel or cargo.—1. *When he may sell.—A master of a ship acts for the owners and insurers because they cannot act for themselves, and he is not justified in selling ship or cargo, except in case of extreme necessity. Pike v. Balch, 61 D. 248; Butler v. Murray, 86 D. 355; Gates v. Thompson, 99 D. 782; Saltus v. Everett, 32 D. 541; as where it cannot be carried to its port of destination, or would be worthless on its arrival there. Myers v. Baymore, 49 D. 586; or when the voyage is broken up by ungovernable circumstances; but the sale must be in good faith, for the good of all concerned, and in case of supreme necessity, which sweeps all ordinary rules before it. Pike v. Balch, 61 D. 248; and the master must employ due diligence to discover whether other available means of saving either were within his reach. Caldwell v. Western M. & F. Ins. Co., 36 D. 667.

Due diligence in such a case depends upon the facts. The master is invested with a discretion depending upon the circumstances, and if it appear that he exercised this power with ordinary good judgment, fairness, and

* Master's power to hypothecate ship, freight, or cargo, see note, 68 D. 641-643.

* Master's power to sell, see note, 68 D. 638-641.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

promptitude, the necessity of the sale will be presumed. Ib.

The duty of the master of a ship in case of a disaster is, to save her if possible, if not, to so dispose of the wreck that the owners may realize the most that can be saved therefrom; nor does his duty cease until the proceeds which may be saved are placed at the disposal of the owners. Duncan v. Reed, 63 D. 635.

Where a continuance of the voyage to the port of destination is impracticable, the master should, if possible, transship goods to such port, but if this cannot be done, a return or safe deposit may be made, and if possible the shipper consulted; and in any case, the master should do that which would be most conducive to the interest of all concerned. Gaither v. Myrick, 66 D. 316.

The master owning a part of a disabled vessel sold on account of injury is justified in making such sale under the same circumstances which would justify him if he were not such part owner. Prince v. Ocean Ins. Co., 63 D. 676.

A survey upon a disabled vessel is presumed to be correct, but is not conclusive, as it does not control the rights of the parties, but is to be considered as an important transaction, designed to protect the rights of all interested. Ib.

A master may sell the whole or any part only of a vessel, according to the extent of his authority. Gates v. Thompson, 99 D. 782.

2. What constitutes a necessity for the sale.—The master of an insured vessel which becomes disabled is authorized to sell her when for the best interest of those concerned, and whether he was justified in selling in a particular case is a question to be determined by the circumstances and condition of the vessel at the time and place where the sale was made; and the master must show that such sale arose from necessity, which imports no more than a faithful performance of the duty imposed on him to make that decision, when a vessel is injured, which will best promote the interests of all for whom he has become agent. Prince v. Ocean Ins. Co., 63 D. 676.

Instructions to the jury as to the necessity under which a master may effect a sale of a disabled vessel requires no particular form of words, but is sufficient if the jury is given to understand that to justify such sale the master, under the circumstances, acted for the best interests of all concerned; and an instruction that there must be an apparent necessity for the sale, existing at the time and place, is sufficient, without any further qualification, to intensify the term "necessity." Ib.

The necessity to justify a sale of a cargo and ship before arriving at the port of destination must be such a necessity as supercedes all human laws, and a sale by the master without such necessity will render him and the owners liable to the shipper. Gaither v. Myrick, 66 D. 316.

To justify a sale of the cargo by a master at an intermediate port, there must be a necessity for it, arising either from the nature or condition of the property, or from the inability to complete the voyage by the same ship, or to procure another; the master must have acted in good faith; and he must, if practicable, consult with the owner before selling. Butler v. Murray, 86 D. 355.

The advice of persons called by a master to examine a cargo is not conclusive as to necessity of sale, but should be taken into consideration by the jury in determining the question, and is entitled to very considerable weight, where the master, at an intermediate port, found his cargo of hides to be in a bad and perishing condition, and summoned three dealers in and shippers of hides, to examine the hides and declare what it was proper for him to do under the circumstances, who, in good faith, advised a sale, and the hides were sold accordingly. Ib.

The question as to the necessity of a sale of a cargo by a master should be submitted to the jury if a doubt exists, on the facts, as to the necessity. Ib.

3. Duty to notify the owner.—A master justified in selling the cargo of a shipwrecked vessel is bound to give such notice as will warn parties of the time and manner of sale. Rugely v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 56 D. 603.

The master must communicate with the owners by any available means in his power before selling ship and cargo in case of emergency, if this can be done before they will probably be lost. Pike v. Back, 61 D. 248.

The master must communicate with the owners by such other means than mail as may be in his power, and by which notice may be speedily communicated to them, before selling a ship and cargo in an emergency, when the calamity occurs in a place from which transmission of intelligence by mail would be obviously fruitless. Ib.

Whether a master has exercised sound judgment and discretion in selling a ship and cargo in an emergency without communicating with the owners is a matter of fact for the jury. Ib.

4. When he may not sell.—Where the injury sustained by a vessel insured is not of such a nature and extent as to warrant an abandonment, it is not such a case of necessity as will warrant a sale by the master. Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 32 D. 271.

The master of a ship is not an agent of the consignor, to judge for him when the goods are so damaged as to make a sale necessary before they reach their destination. Halverson v. Cole, 40 D. 603.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Bona fides in selling a damaged cargo and an honest exercise of discretion on the part of the master will not protect him or his employers, if there existed no necessity for the sale. Myers v. Baymore, 49 D. 586.

The master has no authority to sell any part of a cargo, when the voyage is broken up at an intermediate port, to pay for advances to him to repair the ship for a new voyage, or to pay seamen's wages. Hassam v. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co., 56 D. 591.

The master has no legal right to sell the cargo of a shipwrecked vessel, where it is in condition to reship, and the means of transportation can be procured. Rugely v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co., 56 D. 603.

A sale by a master of a vessel of such parts of her as belong to part owners who might have been notified of her peril in time to act in the matter before the sale, but who were not so notified, is void. Gates v. Thompson, 99 D. 782.

34. Power to contract for salvage service. — The master has authority, where a vessel is sunk, to employ persons to recover the submerged property, in the absence of the owners. Creevy v. Cummings, 48 D. 444.

In the absence of a stipulation as to the rate of compensation, the law implies a promise to pay a reasonable compensation. The things to be taken into consideration in estimating the compensation, discussed, and facts considered in which an allowance of one half the net proceeds of the property saved, is reasonable. Id.

One purchasing a cargo at a sale by the master, but acquiring no title, the sale being unnecessary, has no claim for salvage when sued at law by the owner for the possession of the property, though he might have such a claim if sued in admiralty. Pike v. Balch, 61 D. 248.

An equitable claim for salvage by one purchasing a cargo of a wrecked vessel at master's sale, but acquiring no title, the sale being unnecessary, is enforceable only in a court of admiralty jurisdiction. Id.

35. His liability for negligence. — In an action against a master of a vessel for goods damaged in a voyage, it is not necessary for plaintiff to show that he has sold any part of the goods. Shackelford v. Patrick, 12 D. 632.

The master of a vessel cannot escape responsibility for its safe management by intrusting it to a charterer. Cuddy v. Horn, 41 R. 178.

36. His right to compensation. — The owner of the ship and cargo has the uncontrolled power of breaking up or changing the voyage, and the effect of the exercise of such power upon the contract between the owner, and master or supercargo, must be governed by these principles, in the absence of all commercial usage on the subject. If special injury be done thereby to the captain or supercargo, the ship-owner must bear the loss. If the captain or supercargo be thereby necessarily discharged from the performance of all the duties, for which a remuneration has been stipulated, the claim to such remuneration becomes extinguished. If part of the duties have been performed, such proportion of the remuneration should be allowed as appears just on comparing the services rendered, under the voyage originally contemplated, with those remaining unperformed. Pawson v. Donnell, 19 D. 213.

The parties should be placed, as nearly as may be, in the same condition in which they would have stood had a previous contract for the voyage as changed been entered into between them. Id.

The captain's privilege agreed to be allowed from a certain port contemplated by the original voyage necessarily expires when that port ceases to be one of the termini of the voyage, by reason of a change of instructions given by the owner. Id.

The compensation of a ship-master ceases when a voyage is broken up by shipwreck, and he can no longer act in capacity of master. McGilveray v. Stackpole, 61 D. 245.

A ship-master may receive the wages of a master after shipwreck during the time he stays by the wreck rendering services to protect and secure the owner's property, until the wreck and other property of the owners are sold. Id.

A ship-master is entitled to reasonable compensation as the agent of the owners for services rendered and expenses incurred in securing and transporting or transmitting funds of the owners, after shipwreck and the termination of his services as master. Id.

A ship-master becomes the agent of the owners and all concerned after an interruption of the voyage by shipwreck or other casualty. Id.

A ship-master is not entitled to compensation after shipwreck for services rendered or expenses incurred in his own behalf, and not in the implied employment of the owners. Id.

The master of a vessel is entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered in disposing of the wreck of his vessel, and also remuneration for his necessary incidental expenses. In these expenses the items charged for physicians' bills, board, and the amount paid for his return passage are properly included. Duncan v. Reed, 63 D. 635.

The captain of vessel cannot be allowed for shortage in the amount of money returned by him; at least without showing that the loss was not occasioned by any fault on his part. Id.

37. — and how enforced. — The misconduct of the captain producing neither injury nor inconvenience to the owner is no defense to an action for the payment of wages. Pawson v. Donnell, 19 D. 213.

The master of a vessel has no lien for his services by the maritime law. Case v. Woolley, 32 D. 54.

38. The supercargo.* — A supercargo, being also a part owner, was empowered by the owners to take credit in a foreign port, for goods to a certain amount, for which he could draw bills on them. He, however, secured an advance of money, within the amount, and gave a bond on behalf of himself and his owners. Held, that an action of recompense would not lie in favor of the obligee of the bond against the owners, for the money so advanced. Banorges v. Hovey, 4 D. 17.

A shipment of prohibited merchandise by the supercargo, on the owner's account but without his knowledge or consent, is at the supercargo's risk. Pawson v. Donnell, 19 D. 213.

The acceptance by the owner, of the letters and invoices sent to him by the consignee in a foreign port, is not such a ratification of their acts as would throw on him the loss arising from the seizure of prohibited articles exported by them on his account. Ib.

A supercargo who is also master of the vessel, after arriving at the end of the transit acts as the agent of the consignor in disposing of the goods. Stone v. Wait, 52 D. 621.

A supercargo acting as an agent of the consignor, being obliged to leave port with his vessel, is justified in committing the consignor's goods to a responsible commission merchant for sale, when he has failed to effect a sale. Ib.

The master who is part owner and supercargo is liable for injury to cargo, resulting from sale of the vessel before the cargo is landed, and then landing it before a sale was effected or storage obtained, in order to deliver the vessel in compliance with the contract of sale. Gaither v. Myrick, 66 D. 316.

Supercargoes are bound by the principles which regulate the conduct of factors abroad, and are liable for injuries to the employer caused by want of reasonable skill or ordinary diligence. Ib.

The term "reasonable skill" imports such a skill as is ordinarily possessed and employed by persons of common capacity engaged in the same trade. Ib.

Ordinary diligence means that degree of care which persons of common prudence are accustomed to use in the conduct of their own business. Ib.

Supercargoes must act in good faith and exercise proper judgment in their transactions in that capacity. Ib.

A supercargo having a venture of his own

* Supercargoes, who are, rights, duties, and liabilities of, see note, 66 D. 325, 326.

in the same vessel must exercise as much diligence and care about his factorage transactions as he does about his own venture. Ib.

A supercargo is chargeable with negligence in making a sale without proper inquiry, where he has had notice sufficient to put a person of prudence on his guard. Ib.

Supercargoes cannot generally delegate their authority, but the necessity of the case, the usages of trade, or the law and custom of the country where the agency is to be executed, may at times give rise to exceptions to this rule. Ib.

The duties and liabilities of a master of a vessel, who is also consignee of the cargo, are as separate and distinct as to each capacity as if confided to different persons. Ib.

The master of a vessel, who also acts in capacity of supercargo with knowledge of the shipper, cannot wholly abandon his duty in the former capacity to discharge that of the latter; but he must act in both, as far as possible, with reference to the respective interests of his principal in each capacity. Ib.

A supercargo who abandons his trust or delegates his agency, merely because the cargo could not be disposed of at one of the ports reached prior to the port of destination, is guilty of a violation of duty, and liable therefor. Ib.

A supercargo is not liable in damages because another party, wrongfully and without his privity, assumes authority to sell and does sell the cargo. Ib.

The provision in a contract of affreightment for the transportation of cargo "to Valparaíso and a market," authorizes the ship to visit such other ports beyond the named port as may be deemed expedient by the master and supercargo, in the exercise of a sound discretion, and imposes on the ship the carriage of the goods until a market is found, or the goods left on deposit for sale, under circumstances of necessity authorizing a departure from the original contract; but such provision does not impose on the supercargo the duty of selling at the first or any other port, if he has reason to believe that he will find a better market by going farther, and acts in good faith. Ib.

39. Rights and duties of seamen. — When a seaman willfully disobeys his captain's orders, and is discharged for so doing, he is not entitled to any rights which he might have had if he had continued doing his duty. Ties v. Radovich, 63 D. 592.

It is a seaman's duty, in case of disaster, to exert himself to save the cargo, and as long as there is any prospect of saving the cargo, he is bound to obey the commander. Ib.

A United States shipping commissioner had illegally charged a seaman, who had paid the legal shipping fee, an additional shipping fee, for reshipments on the same vessel for subsequent successive voyages. The seaman paid the fees without protest. Held, that an action would lie to recover them in the state court. American S. S. Co. v. Young, 33 R. 748.

The engineer of a tug-boat was injured by an explosion on the boat at the home port of Philadelphia. The officer in charge summoned a physician, who attended him on the boat and at his own house, whither he was carried at his own request. Held, that the owner was liable for the physician's services. Holt v. Cummings, 48 R. 199.

40. Nature and form of shipping articles.—The master has no right to insert any stipulation or agreement repugnant to or inconsistent with the laws of the United States, but he may add any provision harmonizing with them. Webb v. Duckingfield, 7 D. 383.

Shipping articles, fixing the wages to be paid, furnish the only legal evidence of the contract, and will limit the amount of a mariner's recovery. Johnson v. Dalton, 13 D. 564.

41. Authority and discipline of the master.—A master of a vessel cannot cause the imprisonment on shore of a mariner, when his vessel is lying in a foreign port, as a punishment for a previous offense. He is allowed to resort to this in cases of pressing necessity only, and as a precaution against a danger that may threaten the vessel or crew or master by reason of the mariner's presence. Buddington v. Smith, 33 D. 407.

The jury are the judges of what constitutes a pressing necessity that will justify a master in imprisoning a mariner on shore. Ib.

42. Right to wages, and when earned.—Seamen's wages are not recoverable if no freight is earned, where the failure is not due to the fault of the master or owners. Van Beuren v. Wilson, 18 D. 491.

The loss of freight, through the master's or owner's fault or fraud, as where the ship is seized for a debt of the owners, or is captured and condemned for a violation of neutrality laws, occasions no loss of wages. Ib.

The loss of freight by a disaster or peril arising from accident or superior force carries with it the loss of the seaman's wages. Ib.

That freight was lost without the seamen's fault is not enough to entitle them to wages, if there was no fraud or fault on the part of the master or owners. Ib.

Civil process issued against a vessel in a foreign country to try a private right of property therein is not such superior force as to deprive the seamen of their right to wages, though it may break up the voyage and prevent the earning of freight; for it is the owners' duty to furnish the master with the means of procuring the liberation of the vessel in every such case by giving security. Ib.

Unfounded claims and lawsuits constitute a peril, the consequences of which should fall exclusively upon the owners. Ib.

Damages for a loss of wages for the return voyage may be recovered where the ship, being unseaworthy, is abandoned to the insurers in a foreign country, though wages eo nomine would not be recoverable. Ib.

A seaman cannot sue the owners for wages under the act of Congress of February 28, 1803. Ib.

43. Who liable for wages.—The hirer of a vessel on shares is the owner for time in which he controls her under the contract, and the general owner is not liable on the hirer's contracts of shipment for supplies or for seamen's wages. Giles v. Vigoreux, 58 D. 704; Sheriffs v. Pugh, 94 D. 600.

A hirer of vessel on shares being regarded as the owner, and having the benefit of the services of seamen hired by him, no implied assumpsit for compensation for such services can arise against the general owner. Giles v. Vigoreux, 58 D. 704.

The enrollment or registry of a vessel does not make the owner liable for seamen's wages when the vessel is let on shares. Ib.

The existence of a remedy in rem for seamen's wages lays no foundation for a right of action ex contractu against the general owner who has let the vessel on shares. Ib.

The general owner of a vessel is not relieved of his liability for seamen's wages merely by the fact that he has waived his lien for freight by taking the charterer's notes therefor. Sheriffs v. Pugh, 94 D. 600.

The owner of a vessel remains liable for the seamen's wages under a charter-party by the terms of which the charterers were to pay the running expenses not to exceed a certain sum, which sum the captain was to retain for that purpose out of the freights, the captain to "sail her himself," and attend to the collection of freights, etc.; for the phrase "sail her himself" is construed to mean that the captain, as agent for the owner, was to employ the crew. Ib.

The master of a vessel is personally liable for the wages of a seaman earned while he is a master, although the seaman was hired by a former master. Smith v. Oakes, 55 R. 487.

44. Lien for wages.—Seamen or mariners, other than the master, are entitled to a lien on the vessel for services rendered on the high seas, or where the tide ebbs and flows. Cass v. Woolley, 32 D. 54.

A court having a vessel in custody is competent to recognize and enforce the seamen's paramount lien for wages; and a state court acquiring such jurisdiction cannot be deprived of it by process issuing upon proceedings instituted in admiralty for the recovery of seamen's wages. Keating v. Spink, 62 D. 214.

45. Forfeiture of wages by desertion.—Where a seaman signs shipping articles, by which he engages not to go out of the vessel until the voyage be completed and the cargo discharged, without leave first obtained, but left the vessel without leave after she was moored in her last port of discharge, and refused to assist in discharging the cargo, he was held to have forfeited his wages by such desertion. Webb v. Duckingfield, 7 D. 383.

Desertion of the vessel during the continuance of the contract animo non revertendi, and without sufficient cause, connected with a continued abandonment, works a forfeiture of seamen's wages by the maritime law. Spencer v. Austin, 38 D. 277.

The proper entry in the log-book must be made when statute desertion is interposed as a forfeiture of wages. Id.

IV. ENFORCEMENT OF LIENS UPON VESSELS.

46. Liens for salvage. — A master cannot refer the question of salvage to arbitrators without consulting the owners, especially when the courts of the United States can be readily applied to. Robinson v. Georges Ins. Co., 35 D. 232.

The cargo of a sunken or abandoned vessel is not "wrecked property," and the provisions of 1 N. Y. R. S., p. 690, sec. 1, regulating keeping of wrecked property for its owner, do not apply to it. Baker v. Hoag, 59 D. 431.

A sunken vessel or cargo is the subject of salvage, and the salvor has a lien upon it for compensation, provided the place where the rescue of it is effected is within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Id.

A lien given by the maritime law, for salvage, may be recognized and protected by a common-law court, in replevin by the owner of the res against the salvor, without proof of a request or promise to pay. Baker v. Hoag, 59 D. 431.

47. — for repairs and supplies. — No lien upon a ship is created by the sale of part of its cargo, at a port of necessity, to pay for repairs. Depau v. Ocean Ins. Co., 15 D. 431.

One furnishing necessary supplies to a vessel has a remedy to enforce payment therefor, against either vessel, owners, charterers, or master. Henshaw v. Rollins, 25 D. 180.

That such a person has charged such supplies to the charterer will not per se act as a novation and release the other parties. Id.

A lien for repairs done or supplies furnished to a vessel does not exist if the owner was present at the port when and where the repairs were made or supplies furnished. Cass v. Woolley, 32 D. 54.

A lien for repairs done or supplies furnished a maritime vessel in a foreign port is implied by the law of the United States. Id.

A home port is any port in which the owner happens to be with his vessel; but, in England a home port is any port within the jurisdiction of the common-law courts of that island, if the owner resides in that country. Id.

The vessel lien law of New Jersey applies to foreign as well as to domestic vessels. Randall v. Roche, 32 D. 233.

A lien for supplies furnished a foreign vessel on the credit of the owner or master is not a maritime lien, within the jurisdiction of courts of admiralty of the United States, but may be provided for by state statutes, and enforced by state courts. Id.

A lien for supplies furnished a foreign vessel is not excluded from state cognizance, by the provision of the United States constitution giving to Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, if Congress has not legislated on the subject. Id.

Where a contract was entered into between a ship-owner and a ship-chandler, both citizens of the state, for the supply of sails, cordage, ropes, etc., for a schooner built and launched in another state, — held, 1. That the contract, being for the original equipment of the vessel, was not a maritime contract, and so not within the admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts; 2. That the state statute creates a lien upon the vessel in such cases, which may be enforced, notwithstanding subsequent changes of ownership; 3. That such lien attached as soon as the vessel reached this state, and that all persons acquiring a subsequent interest in her, acquire it subject to such lien; 4. That the act of Congress concerning the necessity of registering bills of sale, mortgages, etc., relates to written conveyances only, and contains nothing which can defeat liens under the state law. Thorsen v. Schooner J. B. Martin, 7 R. 91.

The lien given by the water-craft law of the state, on contracts for repairs or supplies to a domestic boat or craft engaged in interstate commerce on the Ohio River, cannot be enforced by a proceeding in rem against the boat or craft in the state court; for that proceeding in such cases is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States district court. Steamer Petrol v. Dumont, 23 R. 397.

48. — for advances. — A ship's husband has no such lien for advances as a sheriff can satisfy out of the proceeds of a sale of her. Hopkins v. Forreth, 53 D. 513.

The question of a lien of a part owner of a vessel for advances considered at length, but the decision thereof held to be unnecessary. McDonald v. Black, 55 D. 448.

49. Liens of material-men. — Mechanics and material-men have, by general maritime law, a lien on foreign vessels for the price of their labor and materials, but not on domestic vessels. Pertins v. Pike, 66 D. 267.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The statutes of Maine give a lien on all vessels to those who perform labor or furnish materials for or on account of the building or repair thereof, for their wages or materials, which lien may be secured by an attachment of the vessel within four days after she is launched or such repairs are completed. Id.

A material-man's lien on a vessel extends only to the materials used in her construction or repair, and not to such as are promised and agreed to be so used. Id.

The lien on a vessel is not secured by an attachment made under a writ which simply commands the officer to attach the goods and estate of the defendant therein named, without anything indicating a lien claim. Such an attachment gives the plaintiff no special or peculiar rights by reason of any materials he may have furnished, but he stands on the same footing as any other creditor, and his rights must be postponed to those of a prior mortgagee of the vessel. Id.

Contracts for building ships or vessels, or for labor done or materials furnished in their construction are not maritime contracts. The M. Tuttle v. Buck, 13 R. 270; see also Edwards v. Elliott, 13 R. 463.

Under the act to provide for the collection of claims against steamboats and other water-craft, one who furnishes materials for the construction of a vessel has a lien on the vessel, and such lien may be enforced in the courts of the state in the mode prescribed in the act. The M. Tuttle v. Buck, 13 R. 270.

50. What will divest or dissolve a lien. — If creditors who libel a boat have no notice of a pre-existing lien, a purchaser under their judgment becomes subrogated to their rights, and acquires title free of such lien, though he had actual notice of it. Cass v. Woolley, 32 D. 54.

The consignee of a vessel who advances money for necessary repairs, pilot charges, supplies, and towage, for which he accepts a bill of exchange drawn by the master on the owner, waives his lien on the vessel by so doing. Harned v. Churchman, 50 D. 573.

An agreement to forbear to enforce a lien in admiralty is a sufficient consideration for a promise by one of the owners of the ship to pay the claim should a libel then about to be brought against the ship on a similar claim be sustained. Fish v. Thomas, 66 D. 348.

The seizure and sale of a steamboat in Missouri for a debt contracted there will not divest lien of citizen of Iowa for supplies furnished in that state, since by the laws of Missouri non-resident creditors, or those having debts contracted out of the state, cannot enforce their liens at such sale. Haight v. Steamboat Henrietta, 68 D. 669.

The maritime law that a sale of a libeled vessel is in rem, and binds all who have claims, since they may within specified time establish them, does not apply to a sale of a vessel under a state law which permits only resident creditors to establish their claims at such sale. Id.

There are good reasons why maritime liens should have their superiority recognized over domestic liens. Donald v. Hewitt, 73 D. 431.

Sound public policy does not require that liens upon boats navigating our inland rivers should have conceded to them a priority over other liens acquired in other states to which they may have been taken. Id.

The purchase of a steamboat at an execution sale in another state does not divest liens held against her in Missouri. They may be enforced by the courts of the latter state whenever the boat returns within their jurisdiction. Phegley v. Steamboat David Tatum, 84 D. 57.

51. Constitutionality of state laws creating liens. — An Ohio water-craft law authorizing proceedings in rem against vessels is merely a cumulative remedy given by statute for the recovery of a claim against the owner himself, and was designed to avoid the difficulty which often exists of ascertaining and proceeding against the owner or owners in person. Thompson v. Steamboat J. D. Morton, 59 D. 658.

An Ohio statute providing for the collection of claims against steamboats and other water-craft navigating waters within and bordering on the state, and authorizing proceedings against the same by name, is not unconstitutional. Id.

Cases to which the water-craft act of February 28, 1840, extends are those of which admiralty and common-law courts have concurrent jurisdiction, and not those of exclusive admiralty and maritime cognizance. Keating v. Spink, 62 D. 214.

The act of a state "providing for collection of claims against steamboats and other water-crafts, and authorizing proceedings against the same by name," is a valid and constitutional enactment. Id.

A statute providing for the seizure and sale of vessels, on a mere assertion of debt or demand, without any proof to substantiate the claim being made before a judicial tribunal, and without any judgment or decree of any such tribunal, allowing the sale, is unconstitutional, being in conflict with the provision that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." Parsons v. Russell, 83 D. 728.

A demand for wharfage is a maritime demand cognizable in the courts of admiralty, and a state statute attempting to confer jurisdiction upon a state court, by proceedings in rem therefor, is void. Brookman v. Hammit, 3 R. 731.

A state statute, a portion of whose provisions give a lien upon vessels and furnish a means of enforcing it in cases of contracts not maritime, and as to which there is no admiralty jurisdiction, will be upheld even though such statute is unconstitutional and void in relation to particular cases covered by its terms. Sheppard v. Steele, 3 R. 660.

The plaintiff performed blacksmith-work on a vessel being built at a ship-yard in New York. Held, that the statute of that state entitled "An act to provide for the collection of demands against ships and vessels," passed April 14, 1862, was not in conflict with the United States constitution or the judiciary act, so far as it is applied to a lien claimed by plaintiff. Id.

The plaintiffs attached a sea-going vessel, under the New York law (Laws 1862, c. 482), upon a claim for wharfage. Held, that a demand for wharfage being a maritime demand, cognizable in the courts of admiralty, a state statute attempting to confer a remedy for such a demand by proceedings in rem is void. Brookman v. Hammill, 3 R. 731.

Any state law which attempts to provide for the enforcement of a maritime claim or contract by any but a common-law remedy infringes upon the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts, and is a clear violation of the federal compact. Id.

But in so far as the state laws create lien and provide remedies for claims not maritime over which the courts of admiralty have no jurisdiction, they are valid and operative. Id.

A state law creating a lien by attachment on vessels for supplies furnished in her home port,—held, valid. Tug Boat Dorr v. Waldron, 14 R. 86.

No maritime lien arises on a contract for repairs or supplies furnished to a boat or vessel in her home port; therefore it is competent for the states, in such cases, to create liens therefor, and to provide remedies for their enforcement not inconsistent with the exclusive jurisdiction of the admiralty courts. Steamer Petrel v. Dumont, 22 R. 397.

53. Power of state courts to enforce them.*—Under section 268 of the Civil Code of Kentucky, concerning the delivery of any vessel attached, upon the execution of a bond to the effect that the obligor will pay such sum as may be adjudged against him, or that the vessel shall be forthcoming to satisfy any judgment which may be rendered, "whichever shall be directed by the court," the latter clause does not confer upon the court an unlimited and arbitrary discretion, either to render judgment for such sum as plaintiff may show himself entitled to recover, and then require the obligor in the bond to pay that sum, or to order the forthcoming of the vessel, subject to the order of the court, for the satisfaction of such sum. Such judgment should be rendered as will protect all the parties, according to the facts as they appear. Halbert v. McCulloch, 79 D. 556.

Where a lien against a vessel is sought to be enforced by attachment, and it transpires that the equity of redemption of the mortgagor of such vessel is all that can be subjected to plaintiff's demand, such should be the judgment of the court; and to satisfy such judgment, the forthcoming of the vessel may be ordered. To this extent only can the obligors in a bond to the effect that they will pay such sum as may be adjudged against them, or have the vessel forthcoming to satisfy such judgment, be held liable for a failure or refusal to comply with the order. The value of the equity of redemption should be ascertained by reference to a master. Id.

The enforcement of a lien created by state laws for labor performed and materials furnished in building vessels belongs exclusively to state tribunals. Foster v. The Richard Busteed, 1 R. 125; Sheppard v. Steele, 3 R. 660; Sinton v. Steamboat Roberts, 7 R. 229; Scow Tuttle v. Buck, 13 R. 270.

An attachment was issued against a vessel navigating the Yazoo and Mississippi rivers, to recover for repairs. These rivers were navigable by vessels of ten tons burden and upward from the sea, the vessel was a steamboat owned and having her "home port" in Mississippi. Held, that the vessel was within the maritime jurisdiction of the United States; that the state courts had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and could not be invested with such jurisdiction by the legislature of the state. Dever v. Steamboat Hope, 2 R. 643.

State laws giving a lien on vessels for labor performed and materials furnished in their construction are constitutional, and the enforcement of such liens belongs to the state tribunals. Foster v. The Richard Busteed, 1 R. 125; Sheppard v. Steele, 3 R. 660.

A claim for labor upon the hull of a vessel, while yet in process of construction before launching, is not a maritime contract, and the United States admiralty courts have no jurisdiction for its enforcement. Sheppard v. Steele, 3 R. 660.

A proceeding by attachment or provisional seizure, when taken out against a vessel belonging to a port of one state, while lying in a port of another state, to enforce a claim for repairs and materials furnished at the latter port, is a proceeding in rem or in admiralty, and the state courts are without jurisdiction, notwithstanding an act of the legislature authorizing such a proceeding. But in such a case, where the master has also been personally cited and is sought to be made liable in his individual capacity, the state courts, although without jurisdiction to proceed in rem by provisional seizure, have jurisdiction of a personal action. Southern Dry Dock Co. v. Steamboat Perry, 8 R. 585.

A tug was attached for supplies furnished

* Actions against vessels in state courts, see note, 62 D. 234-246.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

in port, and was released on the giving of a bond. The attachment suit was discontinued, another suit commenced for the same cause, and the tug again seized. Held, that the seizure was valid, notwithstanding the bond given in the former suit. Tug Boat Dorr v. Waldron, 14 R. 86.

Contracts for repairs or supplies furnished to a boat or vessel at her home port are maritime contracts, and therefore come within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States district courts. But contracts for boat or ship building are not maritime contracts, and therefore do not fall within that jurisdiction. Steamer Petrel v. Dumont, 22 R. 397.

V. LIABILITY FOR COLLISIONS.

1. Rules for Avoiding Collision.

53. In general. — The weakness of a boat injured by collision on a navigable stream does not relieve the defendant from the duty of exercising all reasonable care and effort to prevent the collision. Inman v. Funk, 46 D. 626.

The rules of admiralty are not necessarily part of the common law, although they may be such as to commend themselves to judicial wisdom. And it is not proper to give them to the jury as rules of the common law. Souyer v. Eastern Steamboat Co., 74 D. 463.

The rules of navigation and usages of the sea are not regarded, in courts of common-law jurisdiction, as positive in their nature; at least, not so as to bind masters or owners in all cases with the force of law. Id.

54. Collision between steamers. — Damages for a collision cannot be recovered when the plaintiff did not exhibit a proper prudence and might with ordinary care have avoided it, although the collision was caused by the gross fault of the captain of the other steamer. Carlisle v. Holton, 48 D. 440.

Damages to a sunken steamboat are not recoverable from owners of boat sinking her if the sunken boat contributed to the collision by her own carelessness or unskillful management, or if the collision was the result of inevitable accident, and not occasioned by negligence or want of skill on the part of either boat. Duggins v. Watson, 60 D. 560.

The owner of freight damaged by a sunken steamer cannot recover damages for its injury, unless upon the same state of case as proved her owners are entitled to recover. Id.

Damages for injury to one's property occasioned by a collision of two steamboats are recoverable from the owners of the boat sinking the other, if the officers and agents of the former then engaged in the service of the owners willfully, or without orders or against orders, produced the collision. Id.

55. — between steamer and sailing vessel. — A vessel propelled by steam must alter her course to avoid a collision with a sailing vessel, where the latter, at the time that the collision is threatened, has not the use of her sails. Same v. Tourne, 29 D. 452.

A custom that a steam-vessel ascending has a right to a certain side of the river applies as to other vessels of the same class, but not as to sail vessels, and therefore cannot excuse a collision with a vessel of the latter description. Id.

When a collision happens on a dark night between a steamer and a sailing vessel, the mere fact of such collision raises no presumption of negligence against the steamer, in the absence of proof to the contrary, and is not sufficient in itself to make her liable. But if such collision occurs in the daytime, and in good weather, it may be reasonably presumed that it was occasioned by her fault. Union Steamship Co. v. Nottingham, 91 D. 378.

When a collision occurs in the night-time between a steamer and a sailing vessel, it will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the steamer kept the proper lookout, and showed the proper number and description of lights. Id.

A steamer is not bound to change her course for a row-boat, under the federal navigation laws, and in case of collision it is error to charge that the party committing the injury is only excused by such inevitable accident as human foresight under the circumstances could not have prevented. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co. v. Adams, 33 R. 721.

56. — between vessel in motion and vessel at anchor. — The master of a vessel in motion colliding with a vessel at anchor is bound to know that the latter cannot be got out of the way so readily as his own vessel can clear it, and to take measures accordingly. Simpson v. Hand, 36 D. 231.

A steamer or vessel under sail must avoid one at anchor. Knowlton v. Sanford, 52 D. 649; and in case of injury to the latter by the former, no excuse will avail but unavoidable accident, or that vis major which no human skill or precaution can guard against or prevent. Baker v. Lewis, 75 D. 598.

The law requires those in charge of moving vessel to exercise constant care and vigilance to avoid collision with others. Id.

A person mooring his craft at an accustomed landing is bound to leave sufficient room for the passage of other craft; but this is all that the law requires of him. Id.

The defendant's steamer, St. John, in attempting to pass a grounded tow belonging to the plaintiff, instead of taking the ordinary channel, which was on the west side of the tow, went to the east side, the pilot supposing that the channel had changed. The pilot knew that the tow was aground. Held, that the pilot was guilty of negligence, and the owners of the St. John liable for damages done by collision with a vessel belonging to the tow. Austin v. N. J. Steamboat Co., 3 R. 663.

He was negligent, although the accident may have been caused by an obstacle which had been recently and suddenly formed, and could not be seen by him. A party cannot avail himself of the defense of "inevitable accident" who, by his own negligence, gets into a position which renders the accident inevitable. Id.

The St. John, before reaching the tow, signaled that she intended to go to the east. No answer was made by those on the tow, though it had been grounded by its pilot making a mistake similar to that of the pilot of the St. John, and some of those in charge had sounded and discovered that the channel had changed. Held, that those managing the tow were not guilty of contributory negligence. Id.

There was no legal duty on the part of the tow to either signal or impart any information as to the channel to the St. John. A steamer with full control of its machinery, desiring to pass a vessel, whether stationary or moving, must do it on its own responsibility, and is bound to select its route at its peril. Id.

57. — with tugs and tows.* — Where a canal-boat in tow was sunk by collision with another tow owned by the owner of the towing tug, — Held, that the owner of the cargo on the canal-boat could not recover of the owner of the tug for the loss, it appearing that the omission to display proper lights on the canal-boat contributed to the loss. Arctic Fire Ins. Co. v. Austin, 25 R. 221.

58. Lights.† — No positive rule of law or usage requires the master of a vessel to always exhibit in the night a light on his vessel while at anchor in a harbor. Carsley v. White, 32 D. 259.

Whether the omission to exhibit such light will amount to such negligence as to bar a claim for an injury received from another vessel running foul of her depends on the circumstances of the case. Id.

A failure to keep a signal-light burning on a vessel anchored in the channel of the Delaware River at night, and to maintain a proper anchor watch on board the vessel, is such negligence as to prevent a recovery by the owner of goods carried thereon against the owners of a vessel in motion colliding with such anchored vessel, for an injury to the goods, although the master of the vessel in motion is also guilty of negligence, and the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff. Simpson v. Hand, 36 D. 231; Innis v. Steamer Senator, 54 D. 305.

It is not to be understood that all vessels should set a guard or exhibit lights, but only such as are moored or anchored in "harm's way." Innis v. Steamer Senator, 54 D. 305.

A steamer employed in towing boats was navigating the bay of New York, with lights forward and aft and a red light on the pilot-house, which were the usual lights for such vessels, but which did not conform to the requirements of an act of Congress prescribing lights for vessels of that character. Held, that the omission to carry the lights prescribed by law did not of itself preclude a recovery for damages negligently and recklessly produced by another vessel running upon her or her tow. Hoffman v. Union Ferry Co., 7 R. 435.

59. Lookouts. — A failure of a moving vessel to keep a proper lookout is, in case of collision, by the maritime law, regarded as negligence on her part, especially if the omission may have contributed to the disaster. Baker v. Lewis, 75 D. 598.

60. Rules peculiar to river navigation. — The owner of a vessel is liable for the non-observance, by the master, of an established custom, by which a vessel descending a river is required to give way to one ascending. Jones v. Pitcher, 24 D. 716.

Anchoring a vessel in a regular path of river steamers can only be justified by necessity, and such vessel must remain no longer than the necessity exists. Knowlton v. Saaford, 52 D. 649.

The master's duty upon anchoring in the path of river steamers is to exercise a reasonable degree of care and skill and have due regard for the rights of others, and whether he does is a question for the jury. Id.

The degree of necessity which will justify anchoring in the path of river craft is not such as renders it impossible to anchor elsewhere. It is sufficient if prudent and skillful navigators would deem it hazardous to do so. Id.

Officers of vessels must exercise the utmost vigilance and secure the best means of avoiding accidents when crossing the usual track of steamers in a river, in order to be entitled to damages resulting from collision. Reese v. Steamer Mary Foley, 54 D. 557.

2. Actions for Collision.

61. Jurisdiction and right of action.*

— Courts of common law have concurrent jurisdiction with courts of admiralty in cases of collisions at sea. Sawyer v. Eastern Steamboat Co., 74 D. 463.

An action for damages caused by a steamboat running into a flat-boat should be brought against the boat itself, and not against the persons named in the attachment as its owners. The fact that the defendants are admitted by the affidavit on which the attachment issued to be the owners of the steamboat, and that the attachment bond which is made payable to them as such, makes no difference. Steamboat Farmer v. McCraw, 62 D. 718; Walters v. Steamboat Mollis Dozier, 95 D. 722.

The owner of a vessel is liable for a collision occasioned by the negligence of the officers and crew, although the vessel was at the time under the control of a licensed pilot. Sauker v. New York & W. S. S. Co., 43 R. 736.

62. Measure of damages, generally.*

— If a vessel sink from the effects of a collision, the other vessel, if in fault, will be responsible for the loss thus occasioned, though proper exertions on the part of the master and crew of the injured vessel might have kept her afloat. Phares v. Stewart, 33 D. 317.

63. — where both vessels are in fault.† — The common-law rule for assessing damages for injuries caused to vessels by collision is, that where both vessels are at fault, neither can recover. And this is the rule that must be applied in case of a collision between two steamboats on the Ohio River, even though the suit be brought in the chancery court. Broadwell v. Swigert, 45 D. 47; Steamboat Farmer v. McCraw, 62 D. 718; Baker v. Lewis, 75 D. 598. But in admiralty the loss would be apportioned or divided equally between them. Knowlton v. Sanford, 52 D. 649; Union Steamship Co. v. Nottingham, 91 D. 378.

The admiralty rule which assesses the damage equally upon two vessels, the negligent management of which has occasioned loss or injury, has no application in common-law courts. Arctic Fire Ins. Co. v. Austin, 25 R. 221.

In collisions of vessels, the one in fault is responsible if the other does not contribute to the injury. Knowlton v. Sanford, 52 D. 649.

The judiciary of Kentucky have no power to adopt the marine code of Europe in determining the liability of owners of vessels for injuries done by collisions on the Western waters. Broadwell v. Swigert, 45 D. 47.

SLANDER.

[Includes defamation by spoken words; also slander of title to land. Defamation by written or printed words, or representation, constituting libel, is treated under that title.]

- I. WHAT WORDS ARE ACTIONABLE.
- II. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.
- III. PROCEDURE.
- IV. SLANDER OF TITLE TO LAND.

I. WHAT WORDS ARE ACTIONABLE.

1. In general.* — 1. When an action lies. — Words need not be necessarily defamatory in order to be actionable. Bentley v. Reynolds, 38 D. 251.

The consequence of the words spoken must be to occasion some injury or loss to the plaintiff, either in law or fact. Abrams v. Foshee, 66 D. 77.

To say of a man that he, while a member of a convention, "openly avowed the opinion that government had no more right to provide by law for the support of the worship of the Supreme Being than for the support of the worship of the devil" is libelous, as tending to deprive him of the esteem of mankind, and to render him odious and detestable. Stow v. Converse, 8 D. 189.

To call a woman a hermaphrodite is actionable, without alleging special damages. Malone v. Stewart, 45 D. 577.

Words spoken of a female which have tendency to wound her feelings, bring her into contempt, and prevent her from occupying such position in society as is her right as a woman, are actionable in themselves. Id.

Repetition of a slanderous report already in circulation is actionable, although it was not repeated with any design to extend its circulation, or confirm it, or cause the person to whom addressed to believe it to be true. Kenney v. McLaughlin, 66 D. 345.

The repetition of slanderous words must be done from good motives and without malice, and the repeater must give not only the precise words of the author, but the name of a responsible person against whom the injured party may bring his action. Jarnigan v. Fleming, 5 R. 514.

Plaintiff may in good faith make inquiry through a third person of defendant if he has made a slanderous charge against plaintiff, and if defendant in malice reiterates the charge in reply, the words spoken at that time are actionable; but if the inquiry is made as a trick for the purpose of inducing defendant to utter a slander, the words thus elicited are not a ground of action. In such case, the question of malice is for the jury. Nott v. Stoddard, 88 D. 633.

* What words are actionable per se, see notes, 12 D. 39-46; 41 E. 590-592.

Words actionable per se must impute a crime indictable and punishable in a temporal court of criminal jurisdiction, or must charge an infectious disease. Little v. Barlow, 71 D. 219.

2. When no action lies. — Where words are innocent or justifiable, they will not support an action, although they may have occasioned some special damage. Mayrant v. Richardson, 9 D. 707.

No action lies for calling a man opprobrious names, such as liar, cheat, rascal, swindler, blackleg, and the like. Van Tassel v. Capron, 43 D. 667.

Defamatory words uttered only to the person concerning whom they are spoken, no one else being present or within hearing, do not constitute slander, so as to sustain an action therefor. Sheffill v. Van Deusen, 74 D. 632.

If one assert a slander generally, without stating his author, it is actionable; but if he mentions, at the time, his authority, it should be such an authority as would induce reasonable belief. Hersh v. Ringwalt, 2 D. 392.

Slanderous words may be retracted or so qualified and explained as not to convey a slanderous meaning, and where such retraction, qualification, or explanation is made at the time of the speaking of such words, or before the separation of the persons who heard them, the words will not be actionable. Trabue v. Mays, 28 D. 61; Shecut v. McDowell, 5 D. 536.

The explanation of such words, made by another person present at the time, which explanation was adopted by the speaker of the words, and so understood to be by all present, will prevent the words from being actionable. Trabue v. Mays, 28 D. 61.

3. How the words are to be construed. — In slander the words are to be construed as they were, or should have been, understood by the person to whom they were addressed. Sawyer v. Eifert, 10 D. 633; Watson v. McCarthy, 46 D. 380; Stallings v. Newman, 62 D. 723; McGowan v. Manifee, 18 D. 178.

The words are to be taken in their plain and obvious meaning; the old rule that they are to be taken in mitiori sensu has been exploded. Ogden v. Riley, 25 D. 613; Stallings v. Newman, 62 D. 723; Little v. Barlow, 71 D. 219; Harrison v. Findley, 85 D. 456.

Words are not to be taken in the milder sense after a verdict which finds them to have been spoken maliciously. Beers v. Strong, 1 D. 10.

The slanderous sense of the words spoken is not to be determined by the understanding of the hearers, where the language is plain and direct. Jarnigan v. Fleming, 5 R. 514.

2. When special damages must be shown. — To say of a candidate for Congress that his mind was weak, and never could be depended upon, is not actionable per se. Mayrant v. Richardson, 9 D. 707.

An action will not lie for orally imputing insanity to plaintiff, without the averment of special damage. "The Count Joannes" v. Burt, 83 D. 625.

Words which charge a man with gross dishonesty, for which, if true, he would be liable in a civil action, but which do not import a charge of burglary, larceny, or other crime, are not actionable per se. The rule is here applied to words spoken by one partner against the other. Alfele v. Wright, 93 D. 615.

Falsely to charge that a merchant has executed a chattel mortgage is not actionable per se, and special damage cannot be predicated of such a charge without explicit proof connecting it therewith. Newbold v. Bradstreet, 40 R. 426.

Where one falsely reports to third persons that a clerk in the employ of the government has spoken disrespectfully of his chief, and this coming to the knowledge of the latter he discharges the clerk in consequence, an action of slander will not lie. Knight v. Blackford, 51 R. 772.

The defendant's wife, a stockholder in a street-railway company, informed her husband that she heard persons boast that a car of the company driven by the plaintiff was "a good dead-head car" for them, and the defendant informed the foreman of the company, who thereupon without investigation or notice discharged the plaintiff. Held, that an action of slander would not lie, there being no proof of actual malice. Haney v. Trost, 44 R. 461.

3. What charges of crime are actionable, generally. — 1. The general rule. — Words are actionable per se, when they charge a person with having committed an act for which, if the charge were true, he would be punishable criminally by indictment. St. Martin v. Deenoyer, 61 D. 494.

Whether slanderous words are actionable in themselves as imputing criminality, without alleging special damages, depends upon whether the charge, if true, would subject the party charged to indictment for a crime involving moral turpitude, or subject him to an infamous punishment. Alfele v. Wright, 93 D. 615; Brooker v. Coffin, 4 D. 337.

A charge need not be direct and positive to make it slanderous; it is sufficient that from it the imputation of criminality may be inferred. Waters v. Jones, 29 D. 261.

Expressing a suspicion, or speaking ironically or by way of comparison or interrogation, may make one guilty of slander. Id.

2. Its scope and extent. — An accusation is actionable which, if proved, would subject the party falsely accused to a punishment which would bring disgrace upon him. Abrams v. Foshee, 66 D. 77.

* Imputing a crime, when actionable, see note, 13 D. 41-45.

A charge of felony may be made by a question as well as by a direct allegation, if it was so meant, and this is a question of construction. Sawyer v. Eifert, 10 D. 633.

The injury to plaintiff is not affected by the truth or falsity of the facts and principles which may or may not constitute an impossible crime and an impossible fact. Hence an action for slander will lie for charging an impossible crime and an impossible fact. The court will not say that sexual intercourse between a dog and a woman is impossible, nor that if possible, conception might not follow; but if such connection and conception are impossible, it is not known to the people; and the people, though bound to know the law, are not bound to know philosophy or the facts and principles of science. Ausman v. Veal, 71 D. 331.

The following charges of crime have been held actionable per se within the rule: The words "You are a vagrant"; as a statute subjects such a person, on a conviction before a justice of the peace, to imprisonment at hard labor, for a term not exceeding one month. Miles v. Oldfield, 2 D. 412.

To say of a woman, "What is a woman that makes a libel? She is a dirty creature, and that is you. You have made a libel, and I will prove it with my whole estate." Andres v. Koppenhefer, 8 D. 647.

Words charging one with stealing boots from a dead body cast ashore from a wreck. Wolson v. Sayward, 23 D. 691.

To say of one, "He makes his money easy; he keeps a gambling-place," or to say of him, "He makes his money easy; he keeps a gambling-hell." Buckley v. O'Neil, 18 R. 466.

Words imputing to a wife the commission of a felony jointly with her husband, but not in his presence. Nolan v. Traber, 33 R. 277.

3. Its limits and exceptions. — Words are not actionable per se unless they impute a crime liable to punishment. Brite v. Gill, 15 D. 122.

Words charging the crime against nature are not actionable per se. Coburn v. Harwood, 12 D. 37. S. P., Melvin v. Weiant, 38 R. 572.

The word "thief" is not actionable unless intended to impute a felony; hence, if it be accompanied by other words showing that it was spoken with reference to a mere breach of trust, an action will not lie. Brite v. Gill, 15 D. 122.

Charging one with being in a suspicious place under suspicious circumstances does not impute a crime to him. Waters v. Jones, 29 D. 261.

To charge a person with causing or procuring an abortion is not actionable per se, when there is no law punishing such act at the time of the speaking of the words. Abrams v. Foshee, 66 D. 77.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Alleged slanderous words do not impute any criminal offense, unless it appears from the record that the words set forth, by their natural signification, when interpreted in the light of the extrinsic facts alleged, are fairly capable of such a meaning. Goodrich v. Hooper, 93 D. 49.

In an action of slander, for calling plaintiff a "deserter," without alleging special damage, — held, that as the offense alleged was only cognizable by a court-martial, the action could not be maintained. Hollingsworth v. Shaw, 2 R. 411.

The words charged to have been spoken by the defendant were, that the plaintiff "had stolen corn out of G.'s field." Held, that if the conversation in the course of which the alleged words were spoken showed that the defendant referred to "standing corn," the plaintiff could not recover, the larceny of standing corn being only an indictable offense, made so by statute, but not of an infamous character or subject to an infamous or disgraceful punishment. Stimell v. Reynolds, 5 R. 396.

The words "A stole windows from B's house" are not in their ordinary sense actionable as imputing either larceny or an act of malicious trespass upon real estate. Wing v. Wing, 22 R. 548.

Words merely charging that the plaintiff administered morphine to another on the day he made his will, and that if it had not been for that, the plaintiff's daughters would not have got what they did, are not actionable per se, nor with an innuendo that the plaintiff had unlawfully administered poison causing death. McFadin v. David, 41 R. 587.

4. Words charging crime committed in another state.* — To impute the commission of a crime to one is actionable per se. And it makes no difference that the person of whom the words were spoken is not in the state where he is punishable; for although the crime may have locality, the effect of the imputation has not. Shipp v. McCraw, 9 D. 611.

In an action of slander, if the alleged slanderous words charge an act to have been done in another state or country, which is not a crime by the common law, in order to make them actionable, the pleading should show, and the evidence establish, its criminality by the laws of such state or country. Bundy v. Hart, 2 R. 525.

In an action for slanderous words spoken in Pennsylvania, and charging the commission of adultery in Georgia, the words, if charging an offense of moral turpitude, punishable by the law of the state where they were uttered, are actionable per se. Klumph v. Dunn, 5 R. 355.

4. Charges of arson. — Charging one with burning the gin or cotton-house of another is actionable per se. Waters v. Jones, 29 D. 261.

To say of one, "I believe, or I have reason to believe," he committed arson or larceny, is equivalent to charging him with a crime, and is actionable. Waters v. Jones, 29 D. 261; Logan v. Steele, 4 D. 659.

To say of one, "I have been informed he is guilty of arson," the name of the informant not being stated, is actionable. Hence it is actionable to say of one that it is the general opinion of the people in the neighborhood that he burned the gin-house of another. Waters v. Jones, 29 D. 261.

5. Charges of forgery. — A writing given to a slave to facilitate his escape, by certifying falsely that he had been made free by the will of one represented to have been his master, etc., is an instrument calculated to deceive, and might prejudice the owner of such slave, and if genuine, might subject the person signing it to damages for the loss of such slave; it is therefore forgery to counterfeit such an instrument, whether actually used to facilitate the escape of a slave or not; and words charging one with the forgery of such a writing are actionable per se. Arnold v. Cost, 22 D. 302.

6. Charges of larceny. — A key in a door may be the subject of larceny. It is not so far real estate as to prevent a conviction for its theft. Words are therefore slanderous which accuse a person of stealing a key out of a door in the room of a house. Hoskins v. Turrense, 35 D. 129.

Where one said "he would venture anything the plaintiff had stolen the book," the words being proved to be spoken maliciously, were held to support a verdict for damages. Nye v. Otis, 5 D. 79.

Where the defendant charged the plaintiff with having stolen a certain note in Virginia, the parties being in North Carolina at the time these words were uttered, such charge was held slanderous, it appearing that stealing notes was larceny in Virginia. Shipp v. McCraw, 9 D. 611.

A statute defined larceny as the taking and carrying away of any personal property or valuable thing. In an action of slander for charging plaintiff with stealing a dog, — held, that a dog was property or valuable thing within the statute, and that the words were therefore actionable per se. Harrington v. Miles, 15 R. 355.

The following charges are actionable per se: Falsely to say of another that he is a thief; although it does not necessarily impute a felony. Quigley v. McKee, 53 R. 320.

To say of a person that he is a thieving puppy. Little v. Barlow, 71 D. 219.

The words "You have stolen my belt." St. Martin v. Desnoyer, 61 D. 494.

To charge one with stealing that which cannot be stolen is not of itself actionable. Ogden v. Riley, 25 D. 513.

* Words charging commission of offense in a foreign state, see note, 9 D. 613, 614.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The words "John Ogden has stole my marle"; "You are a thief; you have stolen my marle," are not actionable. Id.

7. Charges of perjury. — In slander, words bear that signification which they have in common parlance; hence to charge one with swearing falsely in court is actionable, as here it will be understood to mean a court having power to administer an oath. Hamilton v. Dent, 1 D. 552; Rue v. Mitchell, 1 D. 258. Contra, Ward v. Clark, 3 D. 383.

Slander is not maintainable for saying one is forsworn, but it is otherwise when it is said that he is perjured. Hopkins v. Beedle, 2 D. 191.

Saying to another, "You swore to a lie, for which you now stand indicted," is actionable. Pelton v. Ward, 2 D. 251.

Saying to a witness while giving his testimony in a cause in court to a point material to the issue, "That is false," is actionable; for when spoken maliciously it is equivalent to a charge of perjury. McLaughery v. Wetmore, 5 D. 194.

It is actionable per se to say of another, "He has sworn falsely, and I will attend to the grand jury respecting it." Gilman v. Lowry, 24 D. 96.

Perjury is imputed in the words, "I have made the charge against him, and I will go on with it," where there is a colloquium and proper innuendoes showing that they were spoken concerning the plaintiff and his testimony in a cause depending, and such words so laid are actionable. Thompson v. Lusk, 26 D. 91.

Words imputing to a person the crime of perjury are in themselves actionable, with or without a colloquium, and without proof that such person has taken oath in a judicial proceeding, and without production of proof of such proceeding. Commons v. Walters, 27 D. 635.

8. Charges of unchastity. — To charge a female with want of chastity is not actionable at common law. Elliot v. Aileberry, 5 D. 631.

Words charging a female with want of chastity, or which have a tendency to wound her feelings, bring her into contempt, and prevent her from occupying such position in society as is her right as a woman, are actionable per se in Ohio. But this rule is not extended to one of the male sex, where the words are of similar character. Alfale v. Wright, 93 D. 615.

Words imputing adultery to a married woman are actionable by statute, but not at common law. Smalley v. Anderapn, 15 D. 121. To render such charge actionable at common law, special damages must be alleged and proved. Buys v. Gillespie, 3 D. 404; Berry v. Carter, 24 D. 762. And sickness produced by the charge is not such damage. Shafer v. Ahalt, 30 R. 456.

An imputation that a woman is unchaste is actionable in itself. A charge that a woman has slept with a man not her husband is an imputation of unchastity. A charge that a woman has slept with a specified man, who bears a different name from her husband, is prima facie a charge of sleeping with another man than her husband. Barnett v. Ward, 38 R. 561.

Saying of a person, "She is a common prostitute, and I can prove it," or that "She was hired to swear a child on me; she had a child before this, when she went to Canada; she would come damned nigh going to the state prison," is not actionable without alleging special damage. Brooker v. Coffin, 4 D. 337.

The word "bitch" when applied to a woman, though a word of reproach, does not charge the crime of adultery or prostitution, and is not actionable. K— v. H—, 91 D. 397.

Words are not actionable per se which charge a married woman with seating herself upon the lap of a man not her husband, and insisting upon his "screwing" her. The words clearly charge a desire to commit the crime of adultery, but not the act. Id.

Words charging a female with self-pollution are not actionable per se. Anonymous, 19 R. 174.

The words used were held actionable per se in the following instances: Words charging a woman with keeping a bawdy-house; for if true, they would subject her to an indictment as for a crime involving moral turpitude. Martin v. Stillwell, 7 D. 374.

To say of another, "You got to bed with Sarah M.," also "He is such a whoring fellow that it is with difficulty he can keep a girl about the house, being continually riding them," and "He has committed fornication," although the person to whom the words referred may have been a married man. Watson v. Singleton, 10 D. 472.

Calling a woman a whore. Smith v. Silence, 66 D. 137.

The words, spoken of an unmarried woman, "She is in the family way, and I can prove by A that she has been taking camphor and opium pills to produce an abortion." Miles v. Vanhorn, 79 D. 477.

These words spoken of a woman, "Baden saw or told me that on Sunday, at the camp-meeting, he either scared or drove Jane Owens and a man supposed to be Jo. Dearmond, up from behind a log; he and others supposed it to be Jo. Dearmond; they broke and ran; I [Baden] got her paracel and handkerchief, and if any one don't believe me, they can come and see them." Proctor v. Owens, 81 D. 341.

Words calculated to induce the hearers to suspect that the plaintiff was guilty of adultery. Id.

The words, "Malvina [plaintiff] has been to swear a young one." Patterson v. Wilkin- son, 92 D. 568.

Words spoken of a woman, charging that she had intercourse with a beast, or had committed sodomy. Haynes v. Ritchey, 6 R. 642.

9. What words touching one's office or vocation are slanderous per se.

— 1. General principles. — In slander, where the words used have such a relation to the profession or occupation of the plaintiff that they directly tend to injure him in respect to it, or to impair confidence in his character or ability, when from the nature of his business great confidence must necessarily be reposed, they are actionable, although not applied by the speaker to the profession or occupation of the plaintiff. When, however, they convey only a general imputation upon his character, equally injurious to any one of whom they might be spoken, they are not actionable, unless such application be made. Sanderson v. Caldwell, 6 R. 105.

To call a clergyman a drunkard is actionable, because these words, if believed, must deprive him of that respect, veneration, and confidence, without which he can expect no hearers as a minister of the Gospel. McMillan v. Birch, 2 D. 426; Chaddock v. Briggs, 7 D. 137; Hayner v. Cowden, 22 R. 303.

It is actionable to utter such falsehoods of a candidate for public office as will cause persons not to vote for him. Brewer v. Weakley, 5 D. 656.

Words impugning the solvency of a person and affecting his credit are actionable, though not spoken in relation to his particular trade or business. Davis v. Ruff, 34 D. 584.

False assertions productive of actual damage to the person concerning whom they are uttered will enable him to sustain an action of slander, provided that the damage of which he complains was not the result of any acts of others, to whom such words were spoken, of so unlawful a character that an action for relief might have been sustained against such persons themselves. Bentley v. Reynolds, 36 D. 251.

An action may be maintained for false and malicious assertions by which creditors of plaintiff were induced to cause attachments to be levied against his property, which otherwise might not have been levied, and it is not material whether the words were spoken in relation to any particular trade or employment of the plaintiff. Ib.

Damage is implied from the false and malicious uttering of words calculated to injure another in his business credit. Phillips v. Hafer, 44 D. 111.

An action lies for conspiracy to defame and injure a person in his vocation. Wildee v. McKee, 56 R. 271.

The following words were held actionable per se: Saying of a drover, whose business it is to purchase cattle, drive them to market, and sell them, that he is a bankrupt. Lewis v. Hawley, 2 D. 121.

To say of a blacksmith, in relation to his trade and business, "He keeps false books, and I can prove it." Burtch v. Nickerson, 8 D. 390.

Falsely and maliciously to say of a farmer that he is not able to pay his debts, that he owes more than he is worth, and that those whom he owed had better push him, or they would lose. Phillips v. Hafer, 44 D. 111.

Falsely and maliciously calling a justice of the peace "a damned fool of a justice." Spiering v. Andra, 30 R. 744.

2. Illustrations. — The declaration stated that the defendant, with intention to injure the reputation of the plaintiff as a merchant, falsely and maliciously spoke of him, then being a merchant, the following words: "Mr. Young, I must tell you that you have received more tobacco than you have accounted for to the house," meaning the mercantile house of which the plaintiff and defendant were partners. No colloquium was laid. Held, that these words were clearly actionable, as importing a charge against the plaintiff in his mercantile character. Boyle v. Young, 1 D. 446.

Defendant, in speaking about G., a justice of the peace, who had decided a case tried before him against defendant, said "G. perjured himself in deciding the suit against me, contrary to all law and evidence, etc. It is the damndest erroneous decision I ever saw any justice give; it was a damned outrage, and was done for spite." Held, that the words imported that plaintiff violated his official oath in deciding the case, and were actionable per se. Gove v. Blethen, 18 R. 380.

A declaration stated that the defendant privily loosened the nails from the shoe of a horse which he had shod, with intent to induce the owner to believe that the plaintiff had done the work badly, and to injure him in his trade of blacksmith, whereby the plaintiff lost the custom of the owner. Held, to show a cause of action. Hughes v. McDonough, 39 R. 603.

10. What are not. — To sustain an action for words spoken of a magistrate which are not actionable per se, they must appear to have been spoken of him in his official character, and it is not enough that they tend to injure him in his office. Van Tassel v. Capron, 43 D. 687; Oakley v. Farrington, 1 D. 107.

Calling a magistrate a "damned blackleg," and charging him with being in a "combined company to cheat strangers," is not actionable, where no official misconduct or neglect of official duty is alleged against him. Van Tassel v. Capron, 43 D. 687.

Charging a magistrate with omitting to give information to a judgment plaintiff in his court, that his execution has not been returned in time, and that therefore he has a right of action against the constable, where it is not charged that he possessed such information, or was requested to communicate it, imputes no neglect of official duty, and is not actionable. Ib.

Speaking of a magistrate as "squire," in using opprobrious words concerning him, is mere descriptio personae, and does not import that the words are spoken of him in respect of his office. Ib.

Slandering a partner by declaring him to be insolvent is no slander of the firm of which he is a member. Davis v. Ruff, 34 D. 584.

Semble, that an action for slander or libel injurious to plaintiff's business cannot be maintained, in the absence of malice or willful purpose to inflict injury. Hovey v. Rubber Tip Pencil Co., 15 R. 470.

11. Imputations of venereal diseases. — Words charging a man with being afflicted with a venereal disease are actionable in themselves. Kaucher v. Blinn, 23 R. 727.

To charge a person with having the gonorrhea is actionable per se, as it is charging him with a disease which would wholly or partially exclude him from society, most certainly from all good society. Watson v. McCarthy, 46 D. 380.

II. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

12. What communications are privileged. — 1. In general. — Words spoken in the discharge of a duty, and in good faith, or spoken to those who have an interest in the communication, are not actionable, unless actual malice be proved. Bradley v. Heath, 22 D. 418; Faris v. Starke, 33 D. 536. Saying of a voter at a town meeting that he put in two votes comes within this rule. Bradley v. Heath, 22 D. 418.

Words spoken of the plaintiff before a presbytery of the Presbyterian church in the course of his defense against charges for which he had been summoned there by the plaintiff are not actionable, provided he does not designedly and maliciously wander from the point for the purpose of slander. McMillan v. Birch, 2 D. 426.

If words actionable per se be spoken between members of the same church during religious proceedings connected with the discipline of the church, and without malice, no action will lie; and the question of malice is to be determined by the jury. Jarvis v. Hatheway, 3 D. 473.

A representative is not liable for defamation when the words charged were uttered in the execution of his official duty, and although spoken maliciously; nor if not uttered in the execution of his official duty.

* Privileged communications, what are, see notes, 27 D. 158; 31 R. 708-71A.

and not maliciously, or with intent to defame. Coffin v. Coffin, 3 D. 189.

One who hears a slander may repeat it, if he does so in the same words, and gives his author at the same time. Tailors v. Jaquett, 26 D. 399.

Confidential communications made in the usual course of business, or of domestic or friendly intercourse, should be liberally viewed by juries. Stallings v. Newman, 62 D. 723.

The different classes of privileged communications enumerated. Ib.

2. Words uttered in a regular course of justice,* however defamatory, are not actionable. Hardin v. Cumnock, 12 D. 427.

If an attorney inserts slanderous matter in the pleadings, without his client's direction, the latter is not responsible. Ib.

Words spoken by counsel or by a party conducting his own case, in the course of judicial proceedings, if relevant and pertinent to the question before the court, are privileged, and not subject to an action for slander, however false, malicious, and injurious they may be. Hastings v. Lusk, 34 D. 330; Stackpole v. Hennen, 17 D. 187.†

Words spoken by counsel when the client is present are presumed to be authorized by him. Stackpole v. Hennen, 17 D. 187.

Words not relevant or pertinent to the matter in question, spoken in the course of judicial proceedings, are nevertheless privileged if spoken in good faith, under a belief that they were relevant and proper, and without actual malice, of which the jury are to judge. Hastings v. Lusk, 34 D. 330.

Neither parties nor their counsel are liable to an action of slander for words spoken bona fide in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings; but a party claiming this protection must have spoken the words in the reasonable and necessary defense or pursuit of his rights, and words spoken by counsel, to be privileged, must have been spoken in the discharge of his duty to his client, and must have been pertinent to the matter in question. Mower v. Watson, 34 D. 704.

The privilege of the counsel and the client in this respect are co-extensive. Ib.

Words spoken in a judicial proceeding, though actionable per se, are prima facie privileged, and to sustain an action for slander in speaking such words, the complaining party must show that they were not pertinent or material, and that the speaker was animated by ill-will and hatred. Callins v. Sumner, 80 D. 738.

An action for slander will not lie against a witness, if what he said was pertinent and material to the issue, no matter how much he may be actuated by hatred or ill-will. Ib.

* Privileged expressions occurring during trial of actions, see note, 2 D. 431-433.

† Words spoken at trial, liability of attorney for, see note, 17 D. 194, 196.

A witness is not answerable in damages for any statements he makes responsive to questions put to him, and which are not objected to and ruled out by the court; or concerning the impertinency or impropriety of which he receives no advice from the court or tribunal before which the proceeding is had. Id.

Words spoken before a justice of the peace, on an application for a warrant for felony, are not actionable if spoken in good faith and for the purpose of instituting proceedings. Bunton v. Worley, 7 D. 735; Shock v. McChesney, 2 D. 415; Allen v. Crofoot, 20 D. 647.

13. What are not. — The words "That is a lie," spoken to a witness while testifying to a material point in a cause then on trial, are actionable if spoken by a party maliciously, and with intent to defame such witness. Mower v. Watson, 34 D. 704.

The question as to privileged communications relates only to legal malice as contradistinguished from actual malice in slander. Jellison v. Goodwin, 69 D. 62.

III. PROCEDURE.

14. Jurisdiction. — Slander is a transitory action, and may be brought in one state for words spoken in another. Offutt v. Earlywine, 32 D. 40.

15. The right of action. — A person who repeats slander heard from others incurs it, and is liable therefor. Evans v. Smith, 17 D. 74.

Copartners need not join in an action of slander for words affecting the mercantile character, credit, or solvency of one of them. Davis v. Ruff, 34 D. 584.

16. The declaration or complaint, generally. — In a declaration for slander, where there are some counts good and others bad, a general verdict or finding will support the good counts. Neal v. Lewis, 1 D. 640.

A general count, as charging the plaintiff with stealing, is good. Nye v. Otis, 5 D. 79.

A declaration which charges that defendant said of plaintiff, "He swore a lie," in reference to an affidavit made before a justice of the peace for the purpose of having the defendant bound to keep the peace, states a cause of action, and may be proved by showing that such words were used with reference to such affidavit, without further proof of the proceedings before the justice. Commons v. Walters, 27 D. 635.

In an action for slander, in having accused plaintiff of murdering defendant's son, the declaration need not aver that at the time said accusation was made the son was dead. Stallings v. Newman, 62 D. 723.

A declaration alleging that defendant called plaintiff a thieving puppy is not demurrable, where it does not appear therein that the words were used in a connection not imputing a criminal charge; and if such is the case, the defendant must avail himself of it by plea in defense, unless it appears in the plaintiff's evidence on the trial. Little v. Barlow, 71 D. 219.

A declaration alleging words not actionable except as applied to a person and circumstances in reference to which the words were spoken, should contain, by way of inducement, proper averments to admit proof of these facts. Id.

The word "screwed" does not of itself import sexual intercourse, but it may, when spoken in certain localities, involve the charge of whoredom; and when it is thus used, a complaint for slander founded upon such a use of the word should affirmatively allege its import at the time and place it is used. Miles v. Vanhorn, 79 D. 477.

The court may permit plaintiff to amend his complaint, after the trial has been entered upon, by inserting additional words, or by correcting those already in the complaint, but not by inserting an entirely new set of words essentially different from those previously alleged. Proctor v. Owens, 81 D. 341; Miles v. Vanhorn, 79 D. 477.

If any set of words charged in any one of the paragraphs of the complaint is actionable, a demurrer to that paragraph should be overruled. Harrison v. Findley, 85 D. 456.

A complaint which charges no crime does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. K— v. H—, 91 D. 397.

The sufficiency of the complaint for words spoken in German is to be tested by English translation. Even though the German words are actionable, the complaint does not show a cause of action if those used in the translation are not. Id.

A complaint for words spoken in German is defective unless it avers that the words spoken in German were understood by those who heard them. Id.

Where the declaration stated that the plaintiff, at the time of publishing, etc., was, and long before had been, a blacksmith, and carried on the business and trade of a blacksmith honestly, and found and provided all such iron as was necessary in his business, and made correct charges, and had always kept honest, true, and faithful accounts with all persons in relation to his trade, etc., yet the defendant, in order to injure the plaintiff in his business, and cause to be believed, etc., in a certain discourse of and concerning the plaintiff in his said business, spoke, etc., — held, sufficient, without a more special averment, that there was a discourse of and concerning the plaintiff's trade, and that the words were spoken of his trade. Burtch v. Nickerson, 8 D. 390.

torney, J. D. B., sues F. C. B. W. for: 1. The said J. W. is of the age of twenty-one years and a feme sole," etc., and then charged the slanderous words,—held, that the words "by her next friend," in the commencement of the narr., being followed by other words, "by J. D. B., her attorney," were obviously misrecital and mere surplusage, utile per inutile non vitiatur, the previous entries of the record showing that she acted by attorney. Wilms v. White, 90 D. 113.

The plaintiff in his declaration alleged that he was and had been engaged for many years in compiling and publishing bi-annual county directories, at great labor and expense, and had acquired a large advertising patronage therefor, and a large list of subscribers; that he had prepared to and would have published the same in 1885, but that by reason of the false and fraudulent statement of the defendant that he had gone out of the business, and disparaging his business, he had been prevented from doing so, and the defendant had published such a directory, to his injury; but he did not allege that he had been deprived of the benefit of any contract or property, or that the defendant published the directory as the plaintiff's, nor any infringement of copyright. Held, no cause of action. Dudley v. Briggs, 55 R. 494.

17. Setting out the defamatory matter.—A count in slander not setting out the words alleged to be slanderous is bad, even after verdict. Parsons v. Bellows, 25 D. 461.

Different actionable words, spoken at different times, constitute several and distinct causes of action, and should be embodied in separate counts. Patterson v. Wilkinson, 92 D. 568.

18. The colloquium.*—Colloquium and innuendoes are necessary generally in an action of slander, where the accusation has not been bluntly made, to connect it with facts giving a particular hue to the meaning, and to designate the persons and things alluded to, so as to disclose a charge of guilt intelligible to a hearer of ordinary capacity. Thompson v. Lusk, 26 D. 91.

Where words are alleged to be slanderous by reason of some extrinsic fact, such fact must be averred in a traversable form, with a proper colloquium. Patterson v. Wilkinson, 92 D. 568.

To make the word "forsworn" slander, it must be introduced by a colloquium setting forth some judicial proceeding in which the party was sworn. Hence in an action for slander, where the words charged were that "he, the said J., swore false and swore to a lie, . . . innuendo meaning that the said J. had taken a false oath before a magistrate,"—held, not to be actionable. Sheely v. Biggs, 3 D. 552.

* See note on the colloquium and innuendo, 4 D. 348-351.

Saying "I have lost a calfskin out of my cellar, the day that you and Bornman got the leather, and there was nobody in the cellar but you, Bornman, and Gray; and I do not blame you nor Gray, but Bornman must have taken it," is actionable, and without a colloquium of a felony, an innuendo that the defendant thereby meant that Bornman had stolen the said calfskin, was held good to support a judgment after verdict. Bornman v. Boyer, 5 D. 380.

The words spoken need not designate the person; this may be done by the colloquium. McGowan v. Manisee, 18 D. 178.

A declaration is insufficient which alleges that defendant falsely and maliciously said of plaintiff, "She is a bad girl, a very bad girl, and unworthy to be employed by any company in Lowell; meaning thereby that she was a lewd, lascivious, and wanton person, and was guilty of the crimes of fornication, prostitution, lewdness," etc., for want of an averment or colloquium that would warrant the innuendo. Snell v. Snow, 46 D. 730.

The declaration was, that defendant charged plaintiff with keeping "a bad house," innuendo a bawdy-house. Held, that the declaration was bad for want of a sufficient colloquium to justify the innuendo. Peterson v. Sentman, 11 R. 534.

19. Necessity of an innuendo.—No innuendoes are necessary under the Massachusetts system of pleading; but if the natural import of the words is not intelligible without further explanation or reference to facts understood, but not mentioned, or parts of the conversation not stated, the declaration should contain a concise and clear statement of such things as are necessary to make the words relied on intelligible to the court and jury in the same sense in which they were spoken: See Gen. Stats., c. 129, sec. 87. Goodrich v. Hooper, 93 D. 49.

20. Its form, sufficiency, and effect.—The office of the innuendo is to explain doubtful words, where there is matter sufficient in the declaration to maintain the action; but if the words in themselves are not actionable, their meaning cannot be extended by the innuendo to make them actionable. Sheely v. Biggs, 3 D. 552; Patterson v. Wilkinson, 92 D. 568; Coburn v. Harwood, 12 D. 37. The language must be read and interpreted by the court as it would ordinarily be understood by mankind. Goodrich v. Hooper, 93 D. 49.

Saying of a man "he has sworn false" is not actionable, the colloquium being of an extra-judicial affidavit before a justice of the peace; nor are the words helped by an innuendo of perjury. Shafer v. Kinser, 2 D. 488.

The objection that an innuendo is in the disjunctive, in that it alleges an intention to charge bestiality, or "crime against nature," is invalid; for an inference expressed

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

In the colloquium or innuendo in a complaint for slander, if not correct from the words alleged to have been spoken, cannot affect the sufficiency of the averments of the declaration. This is on the ground that a declaration in slander may be sufficient without the colloquium or innuendoes, which, in such case, may be regarded as surplusage. Ausman v. Veal, 71 D. 331.

A complaint in slander must aver that words not actionable per se were used in a criminal sense. The want of such averment cannot be supplied by the innuendo, for the reason that that branch of the pleading cannot aver a fact, or change the natural meaning of the words. Miles v. Vanhorn, 79 D. 447.

An innuendo added to alleged slanderous words cannot extend the sense of those words so as to make them charge the crime of adultery or prostitution, where there are no appropriate introductory averments of which the innuendo is explanatory, or to which it refers. K— v. H—, 91 D. 397.

21. Allegation of special damage. — If no special damage is laid, proof of particular damage will not be received. Hersh v. Ringwalt, 2 D. 392.

Special damage need not be alleged or proved in an action for slander upon words actionable per se. Some damage is implied by law in such case, and the jury determines the amount, having reference to the degree of malice exhibited by the defendant, and the injurious consequences necessarily resulting to the plaintiff. Newbit v. Statuck, 58 D. 706.

22. The plea or answer, generally. — In slander, the allegation of the plaintiff's character is merely matter of inducement, and not traversable; the gist of the action is the injury done to it. Eastland v. Caldwell, 4 D. 668.

No inducement setting forth the previous reputation of plaintiff is necessary under the code. Every woman is presumed to be chaste and every man to be honest until the contrary is shown, and this being necessarily implied, the rules of evidence in mitigation of damages must be the same as if such inducement were averred. Shilling v. Carson, 92 D. 632.

A plea to the whole action must answer all the declaration. Smalley v. Anderson, 15 D. 121.

The relation in which words were used, which are charged as slanderous, may be shown under the general issue, or by a special plea in bar, to prove that they were not intended to impute a crime; and if specially pleaded, it is the province of the court to decide whether the words are slanderous or not. Brite v. Gill, 15 D. 122.

Other slanders not pleaded, but given in evidence in aggravation, to show malice, may be justified without pleading as to them. Tatlow v. Jaquett, 26 D. 399.

Defendant in slander cannot plead the general issue and also matters amounting to the general issue. Ib.

An answer in slander cannot contain both denial and justification of the slanderous words, where the statute requires the pleadings to be verified. Atteberry v. Powell, 77 D. 579.

23. Sufficiency of plea of justification. — Where the words spoken are proved to be true under a plea of justification, no action lies, however malicious the motive. Gilman v. Lowell, 24 D. 96.

The plea of justification admits malice, and excludes every defense based on the absence of malice. Ib.

An unsuccessful attempt to justify enhances the damages. Ib.

To sustain a plea of justification in charging perjury, the defendant must give as conclusive proof as would be necessary to convict the plaintiff of perjury on an indictment. Newbit v. Statuck, 58 D. 706.

An answer merely stating that the alleged slanderous words are true is insufficient, under the code system, as a justification; it should state the facts which go to constitute the crime or offense imputed, so that an issue of either law or fact may be framed. Atteberry v. Powell, 77 D. 579.

The Vermont statute authorizing notice of justification as a substitute for a special plea dispenses with the form but not with the substance of the plea. Such notice, to let in evidence as a defense not admissible under the general issue, must contain all the facts necessary to constitute a good special plea. Nott v. Stoddard, 88 D. 633.

A plea of justification need not justify the colloquium. It is sufficient to justify the words which constitute the slander as charged in the declaration. Ib.

Where the words charged are divisible without materially changing the sense, or constitute two distinct slanders or charges against plaintiff, defendant may justify one and rely on the general issue in defense of the other. Ib.

Where the words charged as slanderous are ambiguous, plaintiff may allege the meaning of defendant in the language which he used, and if the defendant pleads justification, he must justify the words in the sense in which they are alleged in the declaration. It is not sufficient to justify the very words used. Ib.

If the defendant wishes to rely on the truth of the charges of justification, he must plead it; but he may introduce evidence tending to prove its truth, to rebut malice, under the general issue, and without notice. Huson v. Dale, 2 R. 66.

The complaint alleged that defendant accused plaintiff of being a thief. The answer admitted the speaking of the words, but denied malice, and averred that he believed the charge to be true, and averred that the defendant had bought a farm of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff afterward unlawfully entered thereon, and converted certain fixtures, "and other things belonging to the defendant, by reason of the purchase aforesaid," to his own use. Held, that the answer did not set forth a complete defense. Trimble v. Foster, 56 R. 440.

24. — its effect to aid defective declaration. — If a count be insufficient, and the declaration do not contain any introductory matter or colloquium by reference to which the charge can be made certain, the defect in the count cannot be overcome by a justification and confession of the words in bar. Pelton v. Ward, 2 D. 251.

A declaration for charging perjury, defective in not stating how the alleged perjury was said to have been committed, may be aided by a plea of justification setting out the circumstances. Atteberry v. Powell, 77 D. 579.

If a complaint fail to show that the sexual intercourse implied by the words charged as slanderous was illicit, the defect would be cured by answer admitting the speaking of the words, and alleging that defendant had so had illicit intercourse with the plaintiff, and that she had consented thereto. Llack v. Kelley, 87 D. 362.

25. What may not be set up in defense, generally.* — Whether slanderous words were spoken in jest or earnest is immaterial in an action therefor. Hatch v. Potter, 43 D. 88; Hosley v. Brooks, 71 D. 252.

That a woman was quarrelsome does not affect her general character for chastity, nor excuse, nor in the least palliate, a groundless charge against her of incontinence. Hosley v. Brooks, 71 D. 252.

Slander is not justified by the circumstance that the first harsh expression was used by the one slandered. Id.

The repetition of slanderous words, unless justified or privileged by facts attending the repetition, renders the person repeating them liable; the fact that he uttered them avowedly and only as what he had heard from others is not a defense. Tervoilliger v. Wanda, 72 D. 420.

In slander in imputing unchastity to a woman, it is no defense to show that defendant spoke the words of her, having been led to do so by her general conduct, and especially by her deportment towards a particular man, believing the same to be true. Parkhurst v. Ketchum, 83 D. 639.

It is no defense that the defendant was intoxicated at the time of speaking the slanderous words. Reed v. Harper, 95 D. 774.

Neither drunkenness nor an unaccepted apology is a defense. Williams v. McManus, 58 R. 171.

Provoking acts are not a defense to the slander of one who did not participate in them. Id.

26. Evidence, generally. — The substance of the words only need be proved; but the proving of words of similar import is not proving the substance of the words laid. Stocumb v. Kuykendall, 27 D. 764.

Proof of the speaking of words slanderous per se entitles the plaintiff to some damages as a matter of right, where the words have been neither explained nor justified. Yeates v. Reed, 32 D. 43.

Proof that words, actionable in themselves, were spoken to plaintiff or in his presence, need not be made; it will suffice to show that they were spoken to a different person. Ware v. Cartledge, 60 D. 489.

A letter stating that the writer had heard of a slanderous report is admissible in evidence to prove the circulation of the report, and may be read for that purpose, the handwriting of the person being proved; but it is not admissible to prove that the defendant had propagated the report. Schwartz v. Thomas, 1 D. 479.

Where the defendant, in justification of his charge of unfairness as revenue collector, has shown that the plaintiff refused to receive the bills of a certain bank in payment of taxes, it is competent for the plaintiff to prove that he acted under instructions from the commissioner of the revenue. Stow v. Converse, 8 D. 189.

An injunction of secrecy by the defendant to a witness is no reason why his evidence should not be admitted to show the publication of slanderous words. McGowan v. Manifee, 18 D. 178.

Proof that defendant said to plaintiff, "Are you not afraid, as you have perjured yourself?" is sufficient to sustain an allegation that the former said of the latter, "You are perjured." Commons v. Walters, 27 D. 635.

Evidence is admissible of the report abroad in the community, caused by the charge made by defendant in uttering the slanderous words, as tending to show the extent of injury to plaintiff, and the extent and necessary consequences of defendant's wrongful act for which he was responsible. Not v. Stoddard, 88 D. 633.

The position in life and the family of the plaintiff are admissible in evidence on the question of damages. Klump v. Dunn, 5 R. 355.

27. Evidence of malice. — Evidence showing express malice on part of defendant is admissible for plaintiff. Ware v. Cartledge, 60 D. 489.

Express malice may be shown in an action for words spoken, imputing to plaintiff, an unmarried female, a want of chastity, by

* Judgment in malicious prosecution as a bar to prosecution for slander, see note, 55 D. 303, 304.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

evidence of other acts and words of defendant occurring subsequent to cause of action, but before commencement of suit, implying unchastity on part of plaintiff, and indicating a desire to harass, insult, and degrade her, but not forming of themselves a separate cause of action. Ib.

Evidence of actual malice is admissible to enhance damages, and disproof of it goes only in mitigation. Jellison v. Goodwin, 69 D. 62.

Evidence of similar slanderous words, spoken on other, previous occasions, is admissible to show that the words which are the basis of the action were spoken with malice and ill-will, and thereby to aggravate the damages. Markham v. Russell, 90 D. 169.

The question of malice is never to be determined by the opinion or understanding of the hearers. Jarnigan v. Fleming, 5 R. 514.

Express or actual malice need not be shown except in cases of privileged communications. Ib.

Actionable words having reference to the slander complained of may be given in evidence for the purpose of showing malice, even though they were uttered after the commencement of the action, and particularly when the intention with which the words charged in the declaration were spoken is doubtful. McIntire v. Young, 39 D. 443.

The same words, spoken after action brought, may be given in evidence to prove malice. Miller v. Kerr, 13 D. 722; but not as an independent ground of damage. The same is true of an unproven justification. Ward v. Dick, 36 R. 75.

Plaintiff may show repetition of the actionable words, although there be but one count in the declaration; but he will not be allowed, in doing so, to prove any words that might be the subject of another action. Root v. Lowndes, 41 D. 762.

In an action for charging plaintiff with the commission of a crime, the record of acquittal in a criminal prosecution for the same crime is not admissible either to prove the truth of the charge or to show malice. Corbrey v. Wilson, 22 R. 98.

The defendant having offered to prove that the plaintiff had uttered the words charged, the latter may give in evidence, to prove the former's malice, a newspaper containing an account of the debates in the convention, prepared by the defendant as reporter, in which the words in question did not appear. Stow v. Converse, 8 D. 189.

28. When malice will be presumed. — The distinction between actual malice and legal malice in slander is, that the former implies a desire and intention to injure, while the latter is not necessarily inconsistent with an honest or even laudable purpose. Jellison v. Goodwin, 69 D. 62.

Legal malice in slander is a presumption of law, but actual malice is a question of fact for the jury. Ib.

Legal malice alone is sufficient, in slander, to support the action. Ib.

Malice is necessary to sustain an action for slander, but if actionable words are proved, malice is inferred. Estes v. Antrobus, 13 D. 496; Jellison v. Goodwin, 69 D. 62; Mousler v. Harding, 5 R. 195; and this inference must be overcome by the defendant by countervailing proof. Byrket v. Monohon, 41 D. 212. That the words were spoken in the heat of passion does not tend to rebut the malice thus implied. Hosley v. Brooks, 71 D. 252. In such case, the question of malice is generally not submitted to the jury, except upon the question of damages, unless the occasion of speaking the words is such as to rebut the inference of malice, and render the speaking prima facie excusable. In the latter instance there must be malice in fact to warrant recovery. Nott v. Stoddard, 88 D. 633.

Neither damage nor malice requires proof in an action of slander, if the words are actionable per se. Gilman v. Lowell, 24 D. 96.

Malice is presumed from speaking of actionable words, and therefore it is not error of which the defendant can complain, that a witness was allowed to state that from his manner of speaking the defendant seemed to be in earnest. Hatch v. Potter, 43 D. 88.

Malice is not implied in cases of confidential communications. In these cases, malice must be proved by extrinsic evidence, or inferred as matter of fact by the jury from the circumstances. Nott v. Stoddard, 88 D. 633.

29. Evidence of special damage. — Special damages, to support an action for slander, must be some positive loss arising directly and legitimately as a fair and natural result from the speaking of the words; that the feelings of the person aspersed were wounded by repetition of the words to him, even to the extent of causing prostration of health, is not such special damage as the rule requires. Terwilliger v. Wands, 72 D. 420.

The commencement of a malicious suit by a third person against plaintiff may be proved as the result of the slanderous words. Jarnigan v. Fleming, 5 R. 514.

In an action for charging plaintiff with self-pollution, it was alleged, as special damage, that the father of the plaintiff, with whom she lived, and upon whom she was dependent, had, by reason of the charge, withheld from the plaintiff a dress and a course of lessons in music, which, prior to the charge, he had promised her. The father testified that he did not believe the charge. Held, that such damages would not maintain the action. Anonymous, 19 R. 174.

30. — or in aggravation of damages. — The plaintiff may give evidence of his own rank and condition in life, to aggravate the damages; and the defendant may also avail himself of such evidence when it legally tends to mitigate the damages. Larned v. Buffinton, 3 D. 185.

Evidence of distress of mind and anxiety suffered by plaintiff is admissible so far as it tends to prove the extent of the direct and natural consequences of the defamatory words spoken. Nott v. Stoddard, 88 D. 633.

Repetition of the actionable words at other times within the statute of limitations, even after the commencement of the action, may be proved in aggravation of damages, after proving the charge as laid in the declaration in an action of slander. Hatch v. Potter, 43 D. 83. But see Fraser v. McCloskey, 19 R. 193.

One who utters a slander is not responsible for its voluntary and unjustifiable repetition by others, over whom he has no control, and without his authority or request. Hastings v. Stetson, 30 R. 683; Shurtleff v. Parker, 39 R. 454.

A plea of justification cannot be considered in aggravation of damages, if the evidence introduced in its support shows that defendant had reason to believe the charge true. What would be the rule if no evidence in support of the plea were offered, not determined. Byrket v. Monahan, 41 D. 212.

In the absence of a statutory rule of damages in an action for slander, where exemplary damages are sought to be recovered, the fact of the wealth of defendant is admissible in evidence and pertinent to the issue, to show his rank and influence in society as the result thereof, and the consequent increased damages from his high standing. Wilms v. White, 90 D. 113. S. P., Hosley v. Brooks, 71 D. 252.

The pecuniary standing of the defendant may be shown to indicate the influence of his speech, but not in itself to enhance damages. Brown v. Barnes, 33 R. 375.

Evidence of defendant's wealth is inadmissible for plaintiff in slander. Ware v. Cartledge, 60 D. 489.*

31. Evidence in defense, generally. — Where the defendant pleads justification, he may prove the truth of the matter spoken, which will constitute a sufficient defense. Jarnigan v. Fleming, 5 R. 514.

Defendant may prove that he was acting from a sense of moral and legal duty. Id.

Where the defendant pleads the truth in justification, he cannot give evidence of common report that the plaintiff had been guilty of the crime charged, nor that others had charged him with the commission of the crime. Wolcott v. Hall, 4 D. 173.

General reports of the truth of the charges are not admissible for any purpose. Pease v. Shuppen, 21 R. 116.

* Evidence of defendant's wealth to enhance damages, see note, 83 R. 877-880.

Where a defense of insanity is set up, evidence is admissible, showing insanity at the time of speaking, and for several months before and after, but no further. Dickinson v. Barber, 6 D. 58.

Actionable words spoken on another's authority may ordinarily be justified on that ground, if it be proved that the name of the author was given at the time, and that the defendant actually heard them from such person, because the presumption of malice is thereby rebutted; but not where the authority of another is used merely as a cover for the actual malice of the defendant; as where the defendant spoke the words with the qualification that he could prove that another person said the same. Miller v. Kerr, 13 D. 722.

The defendant may show that the words related to a known particular act which did not amount to the offense the words would otherwise import. Norton v. Ladd, 20 D. 573.

The alleged perjured testimony, having been introduced by defendant under a plea of justification, is evidence of its own truth, although the plaintiff could not testify in his own case. Newbit v. Statuck, 58 D. 706.

Where unchastity is imputed to a female, evidence of actual prostitution two months after the speaking the words is not admissible. Beggarly v. Craft, 76 D. 637.

In slander for calling a woman "a whore," proof that she had sexual intercourse with her affianced husband before marriage does not amount to a justification. Sheehy v. Cokley, 22 R. 236.

Evidence is admissible to show that words apparently actionable in themselves were not used in an actionable sense. Fawcett v. Clark, 30 R. 481.

32. Evidence in mitigation of damages. — 1. In general. — If, through the fault of the plaintiff, the defendant, at the time of speaking the words, and when he pleaded the justification, had cause for believing them true, he may show this in mitigation of damages. Larned v. Buffinton, 3 D. 185.

The declarations of a husband, made pending an action for slander of his wife, that he believed defendant had not originated the slander, but only repeated the same, are admissible in mitigation of damages. Evans v. Smith, 17 D. 74.

An attempt of the husband to prevent the circulation of the slander spoken by his wife cannot be proved, in mitigation of damages, in an action of slander brought against the two. Yeates v. Reed, 32 D. 43.

Defendant may prove, in mitigation of damages, in slander for words spoken against the chastity of the plaintiff's wife, that said wife, before her marriage with the plaintiff, had lived alone with him in the same house, where the fact of their so living was known.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

to the defendant when he spoke the words. Reynolds v. Tucker, 67 D. 353.

In an action for slander, alleging general damages only, evidence is not admissible in mitigation that the plaintiff has stated that the slander did him no injury. Porter v. Henderson, 82 D. 59.

Where exemplary damages are claimed, evidence of the defendant's poverty is competent. Rea v. Harrington, 56 R. 561.

2. Same charge by others, prior reports, etc.—Proof that others spoke the same words, and that the report was current, is not admissible either in justification or mitigation. Anthony v. Stephens, 18 D. 497.

The defendant cannot, in mitigation of damages, prove that others had told him that the charge was true before he made it. Id.

Reports in circulation, that the plaintiff had been guilty of the crime charged, may be given in evidence by the defendant as evidence of character to mitigate damages. Treat v. Browning, 10 D. 156.

Evidence of prior reports charging plaintiff with the same crime imputed to him by defendant, without any offer to explain their extent or effect upon the plaintiff's character, is inadmissible in mitigation of damages under a plea of justification. Sanders v. Johnson, 36 D. 564.

Defendant may prove that when the slanderous words were spoken there was a general report current to the same effect as the words spoken. Wetherbee v. Marsh, 51 D. 244; Farr v. Rusco, 80 D. 88.

3. Particular facts indicative of truth of charge.—Particular facts forming links in the chain of evidence against the plaintiff cannot be received in mitigation of damages. Wormouth v. Cramer, 20 D. 706; Purple v. Horton, 27 D. 167.

Possession of stolen property is such a fact where the charge is larceny. Wormouth v. Cramer, 20 D. 706.

Evidence of circumstances creating a suspicion of plaintiff's guilt of the offense imputed, but not proving such guilt, is not to be considered in mitigation of damages in slander for charging plaintiff with a crime, to which justification is pleaded, where there is no proof of such glaring misconduct by plaintiff as to cause defendant to believe the charge and his plea of justification to be true. Sanders v. Johnson, 36 D. 564.

As plaintiff is permitted to prove malicious intent in order to aggravate the damages, so the defendant, to repel it, may show grounds of suspicion of the truth of the charge, by facts and circumstances; not in bar of the action, but in mitigation of damages. Shilling v. Carson, 92 D. 632.

Particular instances of misconduct are not admissible to diminish damages where general character is the subject of defamation, for the plaintiff is required to be prepared to maintain only his general reputation. Id.

4. Provocation, excitement, and passion.—Defendant may, in mitigation of damages, show that he was excited and provoked to say what he did by some act or declaration of the plaintiff coincident with the speaking of the slanderous words, or nearly concurrent therewith. Moore v. Clay, 60 D. 461; Mousler v. Harding, 5 R. 195; Jauch v. Jauch, 19 R. 699.

Words alleged to be the immediate or proximate cause or provocation for slanderous words of defendant are inadmissible unless they are shown to be part of the res gestae; it is insufficient to show that they were communicated to defendant before the speaking of the slanderous words. Moore v. Clay, 60 D. 461.

Damages cannot be mitigated by evidence of a provocation given to defendant by plaintiff on the evening before the slanderous words were uttered. Sheffill v. Van Deusen, 77 D. 377.

Defendant cannot give in evidence, in a suit for charging plaintiff with perjury, that plaintiff called him "a liar and a perjured wretch," on an occasion not shown to have any connection with the matter in controversy. Porter v. Henderson, 82 D. 59.

83. *Evidence under the general issue.—The defendant may give in evidence, under the general issue, facts tending to mitigate the damages, but this will be refused when he has pleaded the truth in justification. Larned v. Bufinton, 3 D. 185.

The defendant, under the general issue, cannot give evidence of the truth of the words used, to mitigate the damages. But evidence is admissible in mitigation to prove facts that would afford ground for suspecting, though not actually proving, the guilt of the plaintiff, or that would rebut the presumption of malice, or that show the fame of the plaintiff to have been disparaged by reports of similar practices as imputed to him by the defendant. Bailey v. Hyde, 8 D. 202. But compare McGee v. Sodusky, 20 D. 251.

A defendant in slander having pleaded the general issue, and also a special plea in justification, admitting the speaking of the words, which was adjudged bad on demurrer,—held, that such special plea was admissible evidence, under the general issue, to prove the speaking. Alderman v. French, 11 D. 114.†

Where a defendant in slander has not attempted to justify the charge, he may prove, under the general issue, anything short of a justification which does not necessarily imply, or tend to prove, the truth of the charge, but rebuts the presumption of malice. Wormouth v. Cramer, 20 D. 706; Gilman v. Lowell, 24 D. 96.

* Evidence in mitigation, what receivable under general issue, see note, 11 D. 183-184.

† Separate plea as evidence in slander, under the general issue, see note, 11 D. 180-182.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The occasion on which the words were spoken, and the conduct of the plaintiff inducing them, are admissible under the general issue. Bradley v. Heath, 22 D. 418.

To show that the defendant honestly believed that he spoke the truth in charging the plaintiff with swearing falsely in testifying that he was a freeholder, evidence is admissible under the general issue to prove that before making the charge the defendant searched the records without finding any land in the plaintiff's name, owing to a mistake in the index, if the falsity of the charge is expressly admitted. Gilman v. Lowell, 24 D. 94.

Such evidence will not defeat a recovery, but is admissible only to mitigate the damages. Id.

The general issue is abolished under the code system of pleading, and a defendant cannot, under a denial, show that alleged slanderous words were not maliciously spoken, or did not amount to slander; but, in such case, he must state the circumstances under which they were spoken, in order to show absence of malice. Atteberry v. Powell, 77 D. 572.

Action for slander for words actionable per se, claiming general damages only. Held, that the defendant could not show, in mitigation, under the general issue, that "during the six years prior to the suit, inveterate feelings of hostility had existed between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the plaintiff had taken every opportunity to irritate the defendant." Porter v. Henderson, 82 D. 59.

The defendant may give in evidence on the general issue, in mitigation of damages, the manner and circumstances of speaking the words, and that they were in circulation, and reported by others, and that he only repeated them. Cook v. Barkley, 2 D. 343.

All the circumstances of hearing the slander first published, and the manner of repeating it, ought to be considered by the jury in mitigation or aggravation of the damages. Easterwood v. Quin, 3 D. 700.

Evidence on the general issue without notice, for the purpose of mitigating damages, which amounts to a justification of the charge is not admissible. Treat v. Browning, 10 D. 153. Contra, see Huson v. Dale, 2 R. 66.

Under the general issue, in an action of slander, evidence of the truth of the charge, or of prior reports of the plaintiff's guilt of the crime imputed to him, is not admissible in mitigation of damages. Alderman v. French, 11 D. 114.

Mitigating circumstances tending to prove the truth of the words are not admissible in evidence under the general issue. Gilman v. Lowell, 24 D. 96.

84. Evidence of character. — 1. General rules. — The question of character in actions for slander is necessarily involved. McGee v. Sedusky, 20 D. 251.

The moral or intellectual character of the person in whose hearing words are spoken is immaterial on the question of damages. Sheffill v. Van Deusen, 77 D. 377.

The general character of plaintiff is a proper subject of inquiry in ascertaining the amount which he is entitled to recover. Gilman v. Lowell, 24 D. 96.

The defendant has a right to go into evidence as to the plaintiff's general moral character, and is not to be confined to evidence of the particular species of immorality charged in the words laid. Eastland v. Caldwell, 4 D. 668.

The general character of plaintiff for truth and integrity may be considered by the jury in an action of slander, where the slanderous words charge perjury, and defendant pleads the truth of the charge, if this defense has been doubtfully sustained. Byrnes v. Menahan, 41 D. 212.

2. Evidence of plaintiff's bad character. — Evidence of the plaintiff's general bad character, but not of a particular criminal act other than that imputed to him, is admissible in mitigation of damages. Sauser v. Ewert, 10 D. 633; Anthony v. Stephens, 13 D. 497; Lamos v. Snell, 25 D. 468; Wadars v. Jones, 29 D. 261; Wetherbes v. Marsh, 51 D. 244; provided the defendant has not justified. Douglass v. Tousey, 20 D. 616.

General bad character subsequent to the speaking of the words cannot be proved, even though such character could not possibly have been caused by the words spoken, as where the charge was that the plaintiff was a thief, and it was sought to be proved that she was subsequently reputed to be a common prostitute. Id.

The evidence as to general character is not confined to the plaintiff's character in respect to the matters charged in the slander. Lamos v. Snell, 25 D. 468; Parkhurst v. Ketchum, 83 D. 639.

General reputation for want of chastity is admissible in mitigation of damages in an action of slander, the subject-matter of which is the reputation of a woman for chastity; for she must be expected to be ready to vindicate her character in that particular in which it is impugned. Shilling v. Carson, 92 D. 632.

Admission of evidence in mitigation of damages in action of slander, being either to show absence of malice or want of reputation, whatever circumstance tends to prove the one or the other is within the reason of the rule. Id.

Defendant may show that plaintiff's reputation in regard to the particular crime or fault charged, prior to the time the alleged slanderous words were uttered, was bad. B—— v. I——, 94 D. 604.

Under the general issue only, while the plaintiff's general character may be assailed, neither particular reports nor the general currency of the particular charge can be given in evidence. Pease v. Shippen, 21 R. 116.

3. Evidence of plaintiff's good character. — Evidence of the good character of plaintiff is not admissible until his character has been attacked by the defendant, either by plea upon the record or by evidence at the trial. Rhodes v. James, 42 D. 604. Contra, see Williams v. Hay, 45 D. 774.

Plaintiff cannot introduce evidence of good character, where the defendant, under a plea of justification, has proved facts and circumstances tending to show the truth of the charge uttered, but has not attempted to impeach the general character of plaintiff. Miles v. Vanhorn, 79 D. 477.

Where the defendant, in justification of his charges that the plaintiff had seduced his early companions to join an infidel club, had attempted to destroy the religious institutions of the state, and had insulted the clergy, offered evidence of plaintiff's conduct for many years previous to the publication, — held, admissible for the latter to prove, by his conversation and conduct, that he had from youth been a believer in the Christian religion. Stow v. Converse, 8 D. 189.

It is not competent for the plaintiff to give evidence of his character as an honest man, to rebut specific charges made by the defendant of plaintiff's official misconduct. Id.

In an action for calling a woman "a whore," there was evidence that plaintiff had sexual intercourse with her affianced husband before marriage, and also tending to show that she made an indecent exposure of her person, and otherwise conducted herself in a licentious manner. Held, that evidence was admissible to show that plaintiff's general reputation for chastity was good. Sheehy v. Cokley, 22 R. 236.

35. Evidence to disprove malice. — Under the general issue defendant may show anything which repels the presumption of malice, and does not imply the truth of the charge or tend to prove it true. Gilman v. Lovell, 24 D. 96; Purple v. Horton, 27 D. 167.

Reports of a similar nature prevalent in the neighborhood are inadmissible under the general issue, because, though they tend to disprove malice, they tend also to show the truth of the words. Gilman v. Lovell, 24 D. 96.

All who repeat a slander are responsible therefor, and general reports previously in circulation to the same effect are no justification, although they are admissible in mitigation of damages as extenuating malice. Calloway v. Middleton, 12 D. 409.

The defendant, to mitigate the damages, and repel the presumption of malice, cannot give in evidence facts of which he was ignorant at the time of uttering the words complained of. Bailey v. Hyde, 8 D. 202.

A justification does not disprove malice, but confirms it. Purple v. Horton, 27 D. 167.

Mere secrecy in a communication is not sufficient to remove the implication of malice; but taken in connection with other circumstances, it may confirm the inference that it was done from a good motive. Faris v. Starke, 33 D. 536.

In an action for slander, in having charged plaintiff with murdering defendant's son, evidence that at the time the words were spoken defendant said that his wife was very much distressed over the death of their son is admissible as tending to show that the communication was prompted by grief rather than malice. Stallings v. Newman, 62 D. 723.

Evidence that words charged were spoken to an intimate friend, to whom alone they were communicated, even though they do not come within the class of privileged communications, is receivable as tending to disprove malice. Id.

Proof that the words were privileged communications repels legal malice, and is a complete justification. Jellison v. Goodwin, 69 D. 62.

Plaintiff's mother may be asked, on cross-examination in an action of slander for imputing plaintiff's chastity, whether or not before the defamation complained of the witness had spoken to others and complained to them, and had frequent misunderstandings with them on the same subject, as this is evidence, not of mere rumor or report, but of facts which go to show that the words were spoken under an impression of their truth, and not with any malicious intention, and the evidence is admissible under the general issue. Shilling v. Carson, 92 D. 632.

36. The burden of proof. — 1. Upon plaintiff. — All the words laid need not be proved, but so much of them must be proved as is sufficient to sustain the cause of action; evidence of equivalent words will not suffice. Wheeler v. Robb, 12 D. 245; Commons v. Walters, 27 D. 635.

The substance of the words, or the words themselves as laid, must be proved to sustain the plaintiff's action upon the general issue. Wheeler v. Robb, 12 D. 245.

Where the defendant, a justice of the peace, voluntarily stated before the grand jury the charge against the plaintiff, as having repeatedly come to him as a rumor, the occasion on which the words were spoken furnishes a prima facie excuse for their having been spoken, and it falls upon the plaintiff to show that the occasion was only used as a colorable pretense, and to establish express malice in the defendant. Sands v. Robison, 51 D. 132.

On plea of the statute of limitations, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the cause of action accrued within the statutory period, prior to the commencement of the action. Pond v. Gibson, 81 D. 724.

When the slander is in a foreign language, it is necessary to prove that the hearers understood the language. This rule does not apply to a libel in a foreign language. Palmer v. Harris, 100 D. 557.

It is not necessary to prove the words beyond a reasonable doubt. Zimmerman v. McMakin, 53 R. 720.

2. Upon defendant. — Defendant pleading the truth of the slanderous words has the burden of proof upon himself to establish their truth. Offutt v. Earlywine, 32 D. 40; Hinchman v. Lawson, 27 D. 622.

In an action for slander by words imputing a crime, a plea of justification may be sustained by a preponderance of evidence; it is not necessary that it should be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Sloan v. Gilbert, 23 R. 708; Barfield v. Britt, 62 D. 190; Ellis v. Buzzell, 11 R. 204; Bell v. McGinness, 48 R. 673.

The defendant can prove the truth of a charge of perjury only by two witnesses, or by one witness and strong corroborating circumstances. The defendant is held to the same proof that is required of the people on the trial of an indictment for perjury. Byrket v. Monohon, 41 D. 212.

37. *Variance, when material. — Plaintiff must prove the language laid in the declaration, or so much, at least, as fully sustains the charge; equivalent words in meaning will not be sufficient. All the words need not be proved if those which are proved fully establish the slander; but if other words not laid are proved, which limit or change the meaning of those counted on, the action cannot be sustained. If all the words laid are necessary to constitute the slander, they must be proved as laid. Baker v. Young, 92 D. 149.

The words charged and the words proved must be substantially the same; that they both convey the same idea will not be sufficient to sustain the action. Bundy v. Hart, 2 R. 525.

The words "I have f—ked Rebecca Kelley one hundred times" are actionable per se, the word "f—ked" having a recognized meaning; but the words "I have screwed Beck Kelley one hundred times" are not actionable, unless the word "screwed" is aided by other averments. Linck v. Kelley, 87 D. 362.

38. — when immaterial. — It is sufficient if the plaintiff proves that the defendant spoke words substantially the same as those laid in the declaration, and the precise words need not be proved. Hersh v. Ringwalt, 2 D. 392; Desmond v. Brown, 4 R. 194.

The plaintiff is not bound to prove the slanderous words precisely as laid; the substance of the charge will be sufficient. And when he proves only a part of the charge, and that amounts to a cause of action, he ought to have an action pro tanto. Accordingly, where it was alleged that defendant said, "J. H. stole corn," etc., proof that in a conversation about J. H., the defendant said, "He stole the corn," is sufficient. Hume v. Arrasmith, 4 D. 626.

The words charged were, that "the plaintiff had had a bastard child"; and the words proved were, "If I have not been misinformed, the plaintiff had a bastard child." Held, no variance. Treat v. Browning, 10 D. 156.

A charge that defendant said, "Antrobus took or stole a sufficient quantity of corn to feed two horses, out of my crib; he is a thief," is sustained by proof that defendant said Antrobus had come to his house, and took his (defendant's) corn out of his crib, and fed his horses of nights, and would not open his bells until defendant had gone to bed. Ketes v. Antrobus, 13 D. 496.

It is not a fatal variance in slander that all the words laid in the declaration are not proved; it is sufficient that enough be proved to sustain the action. Purple v. Horton, 27 D. 167.

Slanderous words laid as spoken affirmatively are supported by proof that they were spoken in answer to a question. Yeates v. Reed, 32 D. 43.

The time when the slander was spoken, as laid in the declaration, is immaterial. Hosley v. Brooks, 71 D. 252.

A variance does not exist between words laid and words proved because more words were proved than laid, where the injury complained of was charging the plaintiff, an unmarried woman, with fornication, and the additional words proved did not alter the charge, but only specified with whom the offense was committed, and that an effort had been made to produce an abortion. Baker v. Young, 92 D. 149.

Where it is alleged that the defendant charged the plaintiff with sleeping with another man than her husband, and the proof is, that he charged that such a person was in bed with her, — held, no variance. Barnett v. Ward, 38 R. 561.

It cannot be said, as matter of law, that there is any substantial difference between the words charged, "public whore," and the words proved, "whorish bitch." Zimmerman v. McMakin, 53 R. 720.

39. Instructions. — The court should instruct the jury as to the law, and leave to them the animus with which the words charged to be slanderous were spoken. Buxton v. Worley, 7 D. 735.

An instruction is likely to mislead the jury when it refers to them to determine whether the defendant, "in substance," spoke or published the words charged, without explaining what meaning the law attaches to those words in such a connection. Atteberry v. Powell, 77 D. 579.

An instruction is not erroneous, as being calculated to mislead the jury by implying that it did not matter how the words were connected, nor as assuming that a sufficient number of words had been proved, where, in an action for slander in charging the plaintiff with fornication, the jury were informed that if they believed a sufficient number of words laid in the declaration to amount, in their common acceptation, to a charge of fornication, had been proved to have been spoken by the defendant, they should find for the plaintiff. Baker v. Young, 92 D. 149.

An instruction is not erroneous, as assuming the guilt of defendant, or the circumstances of the case, where the jury were informed that the law implied damages from the speaking of actionable words, and that the defendant intended the injury the slander was calculated to effect. Id.

It is not error to refuse to charge the jury that if the defendant, without reasonable cause, believed the charge to be true, they could not award exemplary damages, where there is evidence tending to show that he uttered the words in a wanton and reckless manner. Hayner v. Cowden, 22 R. 303.

40. Questions of law and fact. — Both judges and jurors shall understand words in that sense which the author intended to convey to the minds of the hearers, as evinced by all the circumstances of the case. The jury are to decide, as a matter of fact, to be collected from all the concomitant circumstances, whether the words were used maliciously and with a view to defame; and it is for the court to determine whether such words, taken in the malicious sense imputed to them, can alone, or by the aid of the circumstances stated upon the record, form the legal basis of an action. Harrison v. Findley, 85 D. 456.

Whether words are actionable or not is within the province of the court upon demurrer, or upon a motion in arrest of judgment. Hume v. Arrasmith, 4 D. 626.

Legal malice, being a question of law, is for the court, and not for the jury, upon the evidence. Jellison v. Goodwin, 69 D. 62.

The question as to what is a privileged communication is for the court to determine. Id.

Malice is an essential ingredient of slander; but whether or not words were spoken with malicious intent is a question of fact for the jury, and it is error for the court to instruct the jury that words were spoken with malicious intent. Trabue v. Mays, 28 D. 61.

Malice in speaking slanderous words may be inferred from their falsity; but when the motive of the defendant is inquired into, the jury must be left free to judge of such motive. Id.

The intent with which words were spoken is a question that may be left to the jury, in an action for slander, where the words are of doubtful import, with the instruction that if there was an intent to charge the crime of stealing, the words were actionable. St. Martin v. Desnoyer, 61 D. 494.

The party to whom the words were spoken may testify that although the defendant did not enjoin secrecy upon him, he understood the communication as private and confidential; but whether the words spoken were so intended by the defendant is a question for the jury. Stallings v. Newman, 62 D. 723.

When words charged are susceptible of a twofold meaning, one imputing a felony, and the other a trespass only, it is the province of the jury to determine from the circumstances in what sense they were uttered and understood. Dedway v. Powell, 96 D. 283.

It is a question for the jury to determine whether answers given by a person in the course of his testimony as a witness, and claimed to be slanderous, were so given under the belief that they were pertinent and relevant to the question at issue, or from malice. White v. Carroll, 1 R. 503; Dedway v. Powell, 96 D. 283.

41. The damages recoverable. — Exemplary damages may be awarded in slander. Tallov v. Jaquett, 26 D. 399.

The measure of damages is a question for the jury to consider relatively with that of malice. Davis v. Ruff, 34 D. 584.

Punitive as well as compensatory damages may be given, where the defendant obtruded himself into the plaintiff's house, and there offered insult to the plaintiff's wife, at the time of uttering the slander. Hosley v. Brooks, 71 D. 252.

The jury are not restricted to nominal damages, although the slanderous words, which charged theft, were spoken in the presence of only a single witness, who testifies that they did not affect his opinion of the plaintiff, and that he still believed the plaintiff to be honest, if the words are shown to have been spoken maliciously. Markham v. Russell, 90 D. 169.

The jury, in assessing the damages, may consider the degree of malice with which the alleged slanderous words were spoken, as shown by the subsequent acts and declarations of the defendant; but they cannot give damages for such acts and declarations, however infamous or criminal they may be. Stitzell v. Reynolds, 5 R. 396.

42. Review of assessment of damages. — Where entire damages are assessed upon several counts in an action of slander, one of which is bad, the judgment will be reversed, and a venire de novo awarded. Shaffer v. Kintzer, 2 D. 488. Or judgment may be arrested, and the plaintiff may, on the payment of costs, have a venire de novo. Hopkins v. Beedle, 2 D. 191.

IV. SLANDER OF TITLE TO LAND.

43. When actionable.—A state court has no jurisdiction of an action for slander of title or property in a patent right where such action involves the validity of the letters patent. Hovey v. Rubber Tip Pencil Co., 15 R. 470.

H. was prevented from making an advantageous sale of lands belonging to him, and containing an iron-ore mine, by the misrepresentations of P. to the proposed buyer, to the effect that an experienced iron manufacturer was of opinion that the iron mine was but a "pocket," or nest, that would suddenly run out. Held, that H. could recover damages from P. in a suit in the nature of an action of slander for defamation of title. Paul v. Halferty, 3 R. 518.

44. Parties.—An action for verbal slander of title to land cannot be maintained against two persons jointly. Webb v. Cecil, 43 D. 423.

45. Malice, and when presumed.—An instruction that malice is presumed where one injuriously slanders another's title is erroneous, and well calculated to mislead a jury. McDaniel v. Baca, 56 D. 339.

Malice does not accompany a publication of caution as to title made by a grantor of land, when the circumstances warranted a strong presumption that fraud had been attempted upon him to get possession of his estate. Id.

Where plaintiff brings an action against defendant for slander of his title to certain land, and the evidence shows that plaintiff offered the land for sale at auction; that defendant was present and forbade the sale, declaring that plaintiff had only a dower interest in the land, and that the title was in himself; that in so declaring defendant was acting under advice of counsel, but that such advice was procured by false representations made to his counsel by defendant, — it is proper for the court to submit the question of the latter's malice or bona fides to the jury. Gent v. Lynch, 87 D. 558.

SLAVERY.

[Includes title to and transfers of slaves; rights and powers of the master; suits for freedom; manumission; abolition of slavery, etc.]

1. Nature and extent of the right of property in slaves.—Slaves are personal property, in Kentucky, in every respect except as to descents and last wills. Sneed v. Ewing, 22 D. 41.

Slaves pass according to the lex domicilii, and in declaring them real estate for certain purposes, the legislature did not intend to abrogate this rule. Id.

* Action for slander of title, see note, 87 D. 562, 563.

The relationship of parent and child did not, under the laws of Spain, prevent such persons from holding each other as slaves, neither did it prevent their holding each other as a statu liber. Valsain v. Cloutier, 22 D. 179.

The ownership of the mother carries with it the property in her children born during the period of such ownership, and the mother and issue are treated, in respect of the title and rights of the owner, as an aggregate property. Whatever affects the rights or remedies of the owner as respects the mother equally affects his rights and remedies in respect to her issue, while the unity of interest and possession is unsevered; and if the right of the owner is saved from the statute of limitations for a definite period as to the mother, it is saved likewise as to the issue born of her during such period. Seay v. Bacon, 67 D. 601.

2. Rights of slaves.—Slaves are chattels merely; they have no status in court, and cannot enforce the execution of a trust. Blackman v. Gordon, 44 D. 241.

A bequest to slaves is not void for want of capacity in the legatees to take. Wade v. Am. Col. Soc., 45 D. 324.

3. Constitutionality and operation of various statutes relative to slaves.—Whether the Mississippi act of 1842 in regard to the removal of slaves theretofore liberated is constitutional, quære. Wade v. Am. Col. Soc., 45 D. 324.

An ordinance of a state convention declaring all contracts for the sale of lands made between certain dates prior thereto, and the consideration of which was slaves, null and void, at the election of either party, impairs the obligation of a contract, and is void. Roach v. Gunter, 4 R. 132.

4. Transfers of slave property.—Possession of a slave for a great length of time is ground for presuming a conveyance thereof. Gathings v. Williams, 44 D. 49.

Slaves in whom a life estate is given vest, by the assent of the executor, in the tenant for life and remainder-men. Johnson v. Corpenning, 44 D. 106.

Slaves, though movable in Mississippi, are immovable in Louisiana, and the vendor, to preserve his privilege upon an immovable, must record it. Copley v. Sanford, 46 D. 548.

A private sale, by an administrator, of a slave, the property of his intestate's estate, does not divest the title of the estate, but estops the administrator himself from recovering the property from his vendee. Bragg v. Massie, 79 D. 82.

Such sale, perfected by delivery, estops the administrator from relying on the invalidity of the sale, if he subsequently acquires possession; while a subsequent recovery by the purchaser against the administrator does not bar the title of the estate in the slave. Id.

Where certain slaves were bequeathed to the testator's wife for life, and then to his children equally, and the widow and some of the children joined in a sale and conveyance of one of the slaves to a third person, for value, — held that the accumulated interest of the vendors in such slave and her increase, accruing upon the death of some of the other children, inured to the purchaser. Jones v. Zollicoffer, 11 D. 795.

5. Rights of master. — A legacy or donation made to a slave, inured, under the laws of Spain, to the master's benefit. Valtain v. Cloutier, 22 D. 179.

6. Master's remedy for killing slave. — A party who fires on a slave while the latter is attempting larceny, and kills him, will be liable in solido for his value. Carmouche v. Bouie, 54 D. 558.

Three persons are jointly liable in damages for the act of one of them in killing a slave, where the three, fearing a rumored insurrection of slaves, seized and tied the slave without justifiable cause, and upon his attempting to escape all pursued him and one killed him, contrary to the intention of the other two. Kirkwood v. Miller, 73 D. 134.

A person is not justified in killing another's slave by mere rumors of an insurrection among slaves, but there must be facts implicating the slave in an actual insurrection. Id.

A publication in newspapers on the subject of an apprehended insurrection among slaves, and other proof in that respect, not implicating the slave killed, is inadmissible in an action for damages for killing the slave. Id.

A railroad company is liable to the owner of a negro boy eight years old who is run over and killed while sleeping on the track, the engineer having failed to sound the whistle or check the speed of the train; and it is no excuse that when the boy was discovered the train could not have been stopped before reaching him, or that the whistle would not have alarmed him in time. East Tenn. etc. R. R. Co. v. St. John, 73 D. 149.

Contributory negligence is no defense in such a case, for the child is too young, and the master of the slave is not chargeable with negligence in not watching his negro slave children and keeping them away from the road. Id.

7. Marriages between slaves. — A marriage between slaves, void at the time, is made valid by ratification of the parties after they become free, and their children have heritable blood. Jones v. Jones, 11 R. 505.

8. Manumission by deed or will. — A declaration of the mother and owner of a slave child, that she gives to her daughter her freedom upon her, the donor's, death, makes such daughter a status liber until the death of her mother, upon the happening of which she becomes free. Valsain v. Cloutier, 22 D. 179.

Where a person bequeaths to another slaves, with a request that they shall have the result of their own labor, such bequest is for emancipation, and is by the law of North Carolina illegal and void. Sorrey v. Bright, 28 D. 584.

Slaves can only be held as property, and deeds and wills having for their object their emancipation, or a qualified state of slavery, are against public policy, and a trust results to the next of kin; therefore, where slaves are bequeathed to a legatee, with the understanding that he is to hold them as freedmen, a trust results to next of kin to the testator. Thompson v. Newton, 42 D. 169.

Slaves may be emancipated by nuncupative will under the statute of Virginia: 1 Rev. Code, p. 433, sec. 53. Phabe v. Bogges, 42 D. 543.

A bequest intended to emancipate slaves, valid at the death of the testator, may be avoided by an act of the legislature at any time before it is carried into effect. Blackman v. Gordon, 44 D. 241.

A mere intention of a testator to emancipate slaves confers a right to freedom, which, though it cannot be asserted in a court of law, may be enforced in a court of equity, semble. Wade v. Am. Col. Soc., 45 D. 324.

Under fraudulent acts of an executor no one can acquire any right; so where the executor prevented manumitted slaves from going from the state, — held, that the Mississippi act of 1842, which gives twelve months for the removal of liberated slaves, and declares the bequest void if they do not so remove, did not apply to that case, and that the fraud of the executor in detaining them had placed him beyond the pale of the act. Id.

The American Colonization Society, organized for the purpose "of colonizing, with their own consent, upon the coast of Africa, the free people of color residing in the United States," may transport thither slaves who have, under a will, an inchoate right to freedom. Id.

Where a testator directs that his slaves be transported to Africa under the direction of the American Colonization Society, and that the executors sell certain property and pay the proceeds to the society to defray expenses, the trust is valid; both executors and the society are trustees; the executors must deliver the slaves to the society for the purposes of the will, and if they fail or refuse, a court of equity will enforce performance. Id.

An owner domiciled in Virginia cannot emancipate slaves in Mississippi by testament, there being a law there to prevent emancipation. Mahorner v. Hooe, 48 D. 706.

9. Evidence on question of freedom or slavery. — The right to freedom is a right of a public nature; and common reputation regarding the status of the person whose right thereto is disputed, or of his ancestors, is admissible as evidence in his favor. Vaughan v. Phebe, 17 D. 770.

A judgment between other parties may be admitted in those cases where hearsay evidence of the facts upon which the judgment is grounded would be unobjectionable. Therefore, in an action involving the plaintiff's right to freedom, the court may receive in evidence the record of a judgment between strangers to the present action, establishing the right to freedom of a maternal aunt of the plaintiff. Id.

In a suit to determine the freedom of one claimed as a slave, the white appearance of the person is only prima facie evidence of freedom. Chancellor v. Milly, 33 D. 521.

After the lapse of forty years proof of pedigree is material. Id.

10. Offenses by slaves. — In Arkansas, a slave committing arson must be prosecuted as for a felony, though he is not to be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary. Mary v. State, 81 D. 60.

11. Abolition of slavery, and its effect. — The presidential proclamation declaring universal manumission of slaves within any of the seceded states was nothing but a war measure, of no operative effect until carried into execution by force of arms. Weaver v. Lapeley, 94 D. 671.

Slavery being established by the municipal law of Maryland, its abolition by the constitution of 1864 did not defeat a pending action of trover brought to recover the value of a slave. Williams v. Johnson, 96 D. 613.

By the abolition of slavery, all contracts existing at the time relating to the sale of slaves were annulled. The sale of a slave being only the sale of his services for life, there was no difference between the right of an owner and of a hirer except in duration; obligations for the sale, and also for the hire of slaves, were canceled by such abolition, and it is of no importance that the period of hire had terminated before the extinction of slavery, or that the contract was valid prior to that time. Cornier v. Bienvenu, 2 R. 728.

A promissory note for the purchase price of slaves sold after the date of the emancipation proclamation is valid. McElvain v. Mudd, 4 R. 106.

A warranty made in 1856, on the sale of slaves, "that the title of said slaves was warranted for the life of said negro slaves," is not broken by the emancipation of the slaves by the government of the United States during the civil war. Fitzpatrick v. Hurne, 4 R. 123.

Plaintiff, on a judicial sale had in October, 1863, became security for the purchase price of a lot of slaves sold thereat. Held, that his bond was valid, and its payment obligatory, notwithstanding the emancipation proclamation made before, and that it could be enforced after the adoption of the thirteenth amendment of the United States constitution. Hendlerlike v. Thurman, 12 R. 526.

I. WHEN SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE WILL BE ADJUDGED.

II. SUITS FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

I. WHEN SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE WILL BE ADJUDGED.

1. What contracts may be enforced, generally. — Specific performance is decreed, as a matter of course, when the contract is in writing, is certain, fair in all its parts, for an adequate consideration, and capable of being performed; and also, in a proper case, where the party has lost his remedy at law; provided time is not essential to the substance of the contract. Rogers v. Saunders, 33 D. 635.

If a party object to an instrument on the ground that a stipulation is omitted, and the other promises to rectify it, whereupon it is executed, equity will decree a specific performance of the promise. Coyer v. McGee, 5 D. 610.

Where a donor destroyed a voluntary deed fairly obtained, after it was delivered to the grantee, but before it was registered, a court of equity will compel such donor to convey the same property to the donee. Tolar v. Tolar, 18 D. 598.

Equity will enforce performance of the condition of a bond, and leave the party to his action at law for the penalty, where the penalty is merely accessorial, being designed to secure the enjoyment of a collateral object which is regarded as the principal intent of the deed. Towles v. Burton, 24 D. 409.

Specific execution of a contract for sale of real and personal property for a lump sum will be decreed. Clarke v. Curtis, 37 D. 625.

An agreement to make a certain division of property by will, upon a sufficient consideration, is valid, and may be enforced in a court of equity against the estate of the decedent, if not complied with. Green v. Broyles, 39 D. 156.

Specific performance of such an agreement will be decreed by a court of equity, upon the recognized principles governing it in the exercise of this branch of its jurisdiction. Johnson v. Hubbell, 66 D. 773.

2. What may not be. — It is a general rule that if an action at law will not lie upon a contract to recover for its breach, equity will not decree its specific execution. Hickman v. Grimes, 10 D. 714.

Equity will not specifically enforce an implied agreement to surrender the possession of slaves. Waller v. Demint, 25 D. 134.

Equity will not attempt to compel a husband to the specific performance of his contract made with reference to his wife's property. Clark v. Seiver, 32 D. 745.

Specific execution of a contract will not be decreed where a party has treated it as rescinded, by bringing an action to recover back the consideration paid. Herrington v. Hubbard, 33 D. 426.

A person cannot recover, in an action at law, the consideration paid on a contract, and at the same time proceed in a court of equity for a specific performance of the same contract. Ib.

But semble that an action to recover damages for the non-performance of a contract may be proceeded in concurrently with proceedings in equity to compel a specific performance. Ib.

Equity will not enforce a mere verbal, voluntary, executory agreement, although it be founded on the meritorious consideration of love and affection. Dugan v. Gittings, 43 D. 306.

An agreement of a husband to procure his wife to join him in a deed, and to release her right of dower, is not such an agreement that equity will compel the specific performance of it. Weed v. Terry, 45 D. 257.

A contract to be performed when another's wife signs a deed, and if she does not sign it the contract to be null and void, cannot be enforced if the wife dies without signing such deed. Pendergast v. Meserve, 53 D. 234.

Specific performance of a contract contravening the design and policy of the law will not be decreed. Dial v. Hair, 54 D. 179.

A contract by which defendant was to take possession of a quarter-section of public land, to occupy it until he became entitled to a pre-emption, and on obtaining a title from the government, which was paid for by the plaintiff, to make a title of one half to the plaintiff, is illegal; and if, in pursuance of the agreement, the defendant enters into possession, and obtains title, equity will not decree a specific performance in favor of the plaintiff. Ib.

Specific performance will not be decreed where the parties themselves have agreed upon the damages for the breach of the contract, or have provided the means by which such damages may be ascertained. Bodine v. Glading, 59 D. 749.

Equity will not enforce a contract to take stock in a company to be afterwards incorporated. The remedy at law is full, adequate, and complete. Strasburg R. R. Co. v. Eichternacht, 60 D. 49.

Equity will not decree a conveyance directed to be made by a marriage settlement, when such settlement operates itself as a conveyance, and has every effect which could possibly be produced by the conveyance which it directs to be made. Adams v. Guerard, 76 D. 624.

Where a contract grows immediately out of or is connected with an illegal or immoral act, equity will not lend its aid to enforce it. Dodson v. Swan, 98 D. 787; Martin v. Zellerbach, 99 D. 365. So held of a contract to purchase lands of an accused person in order that he may escape from the county and avoid trial. Dodson v. Swan, 98 D. 787.

The fact that defendant is benefited by the refusal to enforce an illegal contract affords no reason for enforcing it. Dillon v. Allen, 26 R. 145.

Specific performance of a contract to sell shares of a national bank will not be enforced where it appears that the shares were designed to give control of the bank. Whether the contract would be enforced if lawful, quære. Folt's Appeal, 36 R. 671.

3. Contracts for sale of land. — 1. When enforced. — If a parent, in consideration of love and affection, make a deed to his family, which is inoperative for want of delivery in his lifetime, equity will aid the grantees, and secure them the legal title. Jones v. Jones, 16 D. 35.

An agreement to purchase land with payment of the purchase-money gives an equitable title which a court of chancery will enforce. Whitbeck v. Whitbeck, 18 D. 503.

Equity will not enforce a mere voluntary agreement; but a voluntary bond from a father to his son, for the conveyance of land, will, in some instances, be specifically enforced. Anderson v. Green, 23 D. 417.

A contract to convey specifically will be enforced in equity, though the party may have a remedy at common law. Buck v. Swasey, 56 D. 681.

An agreement to convey land and transfer shares of stock is one of which a court of equity will compel specific performance. Leach v. Fobes, 71 D. 732.

Specific performance of a contract whereby one party sells a tract of land to another, and puts him in possession, agreeing to execute to him, on payment of the purchase-money, a title bond, conditioned for the execution of a deed, as soon as he, the vendor, obtains his deed, will be decreed in the vendee's suit to compel the execution of the title bond, where he alleges therein the payment of the purchase-money. Sterling v. Klepeattle, 87 D. 319.

Equity will enforce a parol agreement between two that one will purchase land for the other, and take the title to himself and hold it for such other until the latter can pay for it, and when paid for will convey it to him. Cohn v. Chapman, 93 D. 600.

Specific performance will be decreed of a contract by which a husband, at the request of his wife, agreed to convey land, the legal title to which the husband held in trust for his wife. Rostetter v. Grant, 98 D. 93.

In an action against husband and wife, for specific performance of an agreement to convey real estate, if the wife pleads her coverture, a decree may still be rendered against the husband, conditioned that if the wife refuse to join in the conveyance, the purchase price shall be diminished by the value of the wife's inchoate interest. Martin v. Merritt, 26 R. 45.

A parent made a parol promise to convey land to his child, whereupon the child took possession, and made extensive and valuable improvements. Held, that specific performance could be enforced. Kurtz v. Hübner, 8 R. 665; Hardesty v. Richardson, 22 R. 57.

Where A made an agreement for the sale of lands with B and C, and took the notes of the latter, with D and E as sureties; and A gave his bond, conditioned to make titles to the lands when the notes were paid; and immediately afterwards B and C assigned the bond to D and E to indemnify them for becoming sureties; and, subsequently, A dying, and D and E being in possession of the land, and D exercising a control over them, paid the last note due, after suit, and took from A's representatives and heirs a bond conditioned for the executing of a title to D, within a specified time, and on the expiration of this time brought his action upon the bond, — held, on a bill filed by A's representatives and heirs for a specific performance, — 1. That A's administrator was entitled to a specific execution of the contract of his intestate, and that A's heirs were proper parties as complainants; 2. That the bond executed by the representatives and heirs was without consideration, and void; 3. That it was proper for the complainants to make the matter of their bond a part of the case, and that equity might decree a cancellation thereof; 4. That the delay in filing the bill did not prevent the court from decreeing a specific execution of the agreement, because the parties holding the bond of A could have applied to the orphans' court to have perfected their title. Hays v. Hall, 30 D. 530.

2. When not enforced. — A written contract for the sale of land, varied by parol in a material particular, will not be enforced in equity, as where the written contract requires the vendee to search for coal, and if he finds it in paying quantities within a given time, to pay an increased price for the land, and the time for the search is afterwards extended by parol. Heth v. Woolbridge, 18 D. 751.

A covenantee having elected to sue at law for damages for breach of contract, equity will not compel him to give up his judgment and accept specific performance, unless the judgment has been procured unfairly, or he has been guilty of fraud or negligence. Craig v. Martin, 19 D. 157.

Equity will not enforce an equitable title purchased by a party, which, if the legal title, would subject him to the penalties of the statute against buying and selling a pretended title. Ruffners v. Lewis, 30 D. 513.

This principle does not apply to every purchaser of equitable rights, as where a creditor purchases his debtor's property to protect himself. Id.

A unilateral or optional contract to convey land or renew a lease, without any covenant or obligation to purchase or accept, and without any mutuality of remedy or consideration, will not be enforced in equity; but if made upon proper consideration, or if the consideration forms part of the contract or lease, it may be enforced. Haurvally v. Warren, 90 D. 613.

Equity will not decree specific performance of a written contract of sale at the instance of the vendor, when all that is to be done by the vendee is the payment of money, for which the vendor may maintain an action at law after a tender of performance on his part. Jones v. Newhall, 15 R. 97.

A husband contracted to sell land; the wife, without collusion with the husband, refused to join in the deed. Held, that the vendee could not compel specific performance by the husband alone, and retain part of the purchase-money as indemnity against the wife's contingent claim of dower. Burk's Appeal, 15 R. 587.

An agreement to convey land at a specified price also provided that the vendees should prospect the land for coal, and if they found enough, in their opinion, to warrant them, should organize a company, and issue to the vendor a certain amount of unassessable stock, but if not, the vendees might abandon the contract on notice in writing. Held, not a case for specific performance. Sturgis v. Galindo, 43 R. 239.

4. Contracts for leases of land. — Where a contract for a lease provides that the lessee may terminate the lease in whole or in part, on certain notice, specific performance will not be decreed. Rust v. Conrad, 41 R. 720.

Equity will not enforce specific performance of a covenant in a lease, on the part of the lessor, to repair damages by fire. Beck v. Allison, 15 R. 430.

5. Various other contracts relating to real property. — Where a parol license amounting to an easement has been given, and where the enjoyment of it has been necessarily preceded by expenditure of money or capital, or where the grantee has made improvements in good faith, under the grant, or invested his capital in consequence of it, the grantee becomes a purchaser of the easement granted by parol for a valuable consideration, and will be entitled to have it specifically performed in equity unless the party will reimburse him in his expenditure, or pay him for his improvements, provided this will put the grantee in status quo. Wynn v. Garland, 68 D. 190.

The plaintiff contracted to sell and the defendant to buy a leasehold interest in land to commence in the future. Before the day an ocean storm washed away part of the land. Held, that specific performance should not be decreed. Huguenin v. Courtenay, 53 R. 688.

A mere oral license to construct a railway track over the land of another, as distinguished from an oral agreement of sale of the right of way, cannot be enforced in equity, even after the expenditure of a large sum of money in constructing the road on the faith of it. St. Louis Nat. Stock Yards v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 54 R. 243.

A testator devised certain property to his wife for life, and the remainder in fee to his wife's daughter by a former marriage. The wife went into possession, and held the property until her death. During her lifetime the wife entered into an agreement with her said daughter, in pursuance of which the former, who was possessed of property in her own right, as well as said life estate, was permitted to devise to John J. Frisby, a son of the daughter, the property so devised to her by her husband, in consideration that she would devise to her said daughter a life estate in the whole property, including as well the property so devised to her by her late husband as that which she held in her own right, with the right to the daughter to give the latter property to her children, except John J. Frisby, in such shares and proportions, and for such estate or estates, as she by her last will and testament might determine. After the death of the mother the daughter made her will, confirmatory of the will of her mother, and in the exercise of the power of appointment. After the daughter's death a contest arose as to the right to the proceeds of the property devised to the son. Held, that the agreement was binding upon the daughter, and was such as equity and good conscience would require to be enforced against her creditors, in favor of the creditors of the son. Frisby v. Parkhurst, 96 D. 503.

6. Contracts for chattels.—As a general rule, the court will not decree the specific delivery of a chattel, because in such case the party has a simple and adequate remedy at law; and to obtain such a decree it is necessary to show that the articles have acquired from some cause a value for the loss of which no damages would be a compensation. Lining v. Geddes, 16 D. 606; Cowles v. Whitman, 25 D. 60; Kimball v. Morton, 43 D. 621; Womack v. Smith, 54 D. 51. The rule is limited to cases where compensation in damages furnishes a clear and adequate remedy. Clark v. Flint, 33 D. 733; and does not apply where chattels have been deposited upon a trust. McGowan v. Remington, 51 D. 584.

Where one buys shares in the name of another, a bill against the administrator of that other for the transfer of these shares will lie, it being a case of trust. Cowles v. Whitman, 25 D. 60.

Transfer of stock in a bank will be decreed where the party holding it received it with the understanding that he should transfer it to other parties. Kimball v. Morton, 43 D. 621.

The assignee of a vessel may be decreed specifically to perform a written agreement, entered into by his assignor with the plaintiff for a valid consideration, to hold half the vessel subject to the plaintiff's order, where the assignment is taken with notice of the agreement. Clark v. Flint, 33 D. 733.

Specific performance will be decreed of an agreement to turn over choses in action to indemnify the complainants against any loss they might sustain by reason of their suretyship for the defendant. Shockley v. Davis, 63 D. 233.

7. Contracts for personal services.—Covenants for personal service cannot, as a general rule, be specifically enforced, either at common law or by statute. The case of apprentices depends on parental authority; that of soldiers and sailors, on national policy. Clark's Case, 12 D. 213.

Where a free negro woman over the age of twenty-one years bound herself by indenture in Indiana, for a valuable consideration, to serve the obligee as a menial for twenty years, —held, that a specific performance of the contract could not be enforced, and that upon a writ of habeas corpus she was entitled to be discharged from custody. Id.

That the service is involuntary, within the meaning of the constitution, is shown by the application to be discharged on habeas corpus. Id.

An indenture executed by a negro or mulatto out of the state of Indiana is considered void in that state, and can neither be specifically enforced nor made the foundation of an action for damages. Id.

A bill quia timet will not be sustained on the ground of the complainant's fear that the defendant might not be willing to perform an engagement for personal services; and where, from the peculiar nature of those services, they could not be performed until a future day. De Rivafinoli v. Corsetti, 25 D. 532.

Specific performance will not be decreed of verbal contracts, vague and uncertain in their terms, for materials and labor, made by a decedent for the improvement of his real estate, even upon the application of parties to the contracts. Gray v. Hawkins, 72 D. 600.

8. Contracts to indemnify.—When administrators make an agreement with one to whom a contract is assigned, that he shall indemnify and save them harmless, etc., the administrators are entitled to a specific performance of the covenant; and a want of personal estate cannot be set up against the relief sought. Champion v. Brown, 10 D. 343.

Where a testator is induced to omit a bequest or devise which he had expressed an intention of inserting in his will, in favor of a particular person, by the promise of another to give such person the same amount of property, or to provide for him in some other manner, such promise may be enforced in equity at the suit of the person for whose benefit it was made. Owings's Case, 17 D. 311.

Equity will not decree a specific performance of a contract to indemnify and save harmless, before the party has been actually damaged. Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 41 D. 549.

9. Awards of arbitrators. — Specific performance of an award, made pursuant to a voluntary submission of the parties, in writing, may be decreed, although there may have been no acquiescence in the award, or part performance of it. Jones v. Boston Mill Corp., 16 D. 358.

An award directing the execution of releases may be specifically performed in equity. Ib.

An award decreeing a conveyance will be enforced in equity. Brown v. Burkenmeyer, 33 D. 541.

10. Requisites of the contract, generally. — Specific performance of a contract is not decreed as a matter of course, but only in the exercise of a sound legal discretion. The complainant must present a contract which is fair, just, and reasonable, entered into upon an adequate consideration, and free from fraud, misrepresentation, or surprise, and not hard, unequal, or unconscionable. Seymour v. Delancy, 15 D. 270; Patterson v. Bloomer, 95 D. 218.

If a contract, when entered into, is certain, mutual, fair in all its parts, and for an adequate consideration, it is immaterial that by force of subsequent circumstances it has become less beneficial to one party, unless such change is in some way the fault of the party seeking its specific execution. Brewer v. Herbert, 96 D. 582.

The fairness or hardship of a contract, like all its other qualities, must be judged of at the time it was entered into, not by subsequent events. Ib.

11. Assent. — Specific performance will not be decreed when it appears doubtful whether the party meant to contract to the extent to which he is sought to be charged; and the payment of the consideration does not change the rule. Rider v. Gray, 69 D. 135.

12. Mutuality. — Where the remedy is not mutual, or where only one party is bound, a bill for a specific performance of an agreement will not be sustained. Benedict v. Lynch, 7 D. 484; De Cordova v. Smith, 58 D. 136; Bodine v. Glading, 59 D. 749. Contra, see Rogers v. Saunders, 33 D. 635.

Mutuality of contract is a prerequisite to a decree for specific performance. It is sufficient that this mutuality exist when the contract is made; subsequent events destroying this mutuality do not render the contract inoperative. Moore v. Fitz Randolph, 29 D. 208.

Mutuality of remedy at time of action brought is all that is necessary to enable a plaintiff to maintain his action on a contract. Ives v. Hazard, 67 D. 500.

The remedy becomes mutual by filing a bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land upon a memorandum signed by the defendant alone, the bringing of the bill rendering the complainant chargeable as on a memorandum signed by him. Ib.

Want of mutuality in the remedy for breach of a contract is an insuperable objection to a decree for its specific performance, where there is no compliance with its requirements, although it is no objection where there has been such compliance. Rogers v. Saunders, 33 D. 635.

A preliminary agreement cannot be enforced in equity if it contains no words designed to make it mutually binding upon the respective parties. Rider v. Gray, 69 D. 135.

The court will not generally compel specific performance, unless it can at the time execute the whole contract on both sides, or at least such part of it as the court can ever be called upon to enforce; but this rule is subject to some exceptions, and among the exceptions are the cases of contracts where the consideration is entire, but the performance separate. Sterling v. Klepsattle, 87 D. 319.

An agreement for purchase of land at option of the vendee only is not so devoid of mutuality as to prevent its being enforced specifically. Nor will the vendor's refusal to accept the consideration destroy the mutuality of such contract, although the vendee might, upon such refusal, have retracted his election. Corson v. Mulbary, 88 D. 485.

The jurisdiction of equity to specifically enforce a contract entered into by a husband to sell his wife's land, in a suit by the husband and wife against the purchaser, is doubtful, because there is no mutuality in the contract, inasmuch as it could not be enforced against the wife at the suit of the purchaser. Watts v. Kinney, 23 D. 266.

A decree rendered in such a suit, specifically enforcing the contract, but suspending its operation until the husband and wife shall execute a deed for the land to the purchaser, is erroneous; if jurisdiction is entertained at all, it should be only upon condition that a deed executed so as to convey the wife's title to the land is offered before the decree is entered. Ib.

An agreement for distribution of a father's estate, made by an adult friend on behalf of minor heirs, with their adult brother, will be specifically enforced against the latter. There is sufficient mutuality about the contract to support it. Smith v. Smith, 91 D. 761.

An agreement between minor children and their adult brother for the distribution of their deceased father's estate is not void as to said minors, but voidable only at their election upon attaining their majority. The adult brother continues bound during this interval, and the agreement may be specifically enforced against him. Id.

The court will not interfere to specifically enforce a contract which by its nature is not practically enforceable on both sides. Accordingly, where an agreement had been made for a partnership between plaintiff and defendant, by which defendant was to contribute an amount of money and plaintiff only his services, — held, that an action would not lie to compel the performance of the agreement. Buck v. Smith, 18 R. 84.

13. Certainty. — A contract to be specifically enforced must be certain in every part. Rankin v. Maxwell, 12 D. 431.

Specific performance will not be decreed unless the terms of the contract are clear and definitely ascertained. Robbins v. McKnight, 45 D. 406.

A parol agreement part performed or executed will not be specifically enforced, unless the contract be established by competent proofs to be clear, definite, and unequivocal in all its terms. Hazleton v. Putnam, 54 D. 158.

A parol contract for sale of land will not be enforced unless a contract, clear, definite, and unequivocal in its terms, is admitted by the answer or satisfactorily established by competent proof. Poland v. O'Connor, 93 D. 327.

14. Completeness. — As a general rule, equity will not enforce a voluntary agreement, or perfect a merely promised or imperfect gift. There is a locus penitentie as long as it is incomplete. Taylor v. Staples, 5 R. 556.

In a deed from plaintiff to a railroad company conveying land, it was stated that the conveyance was made "in consideration of five hundred dollars, and the covenant to build a depot, hereinafter mentioned." Therein after it was set forth that the conveyance "is made upon the express condition" that the company should erect and maintain on the land a station-house, "suitable for the convenience of the public," and that one train "each way shall stop at such depot or station each day, and that freight and passengers shall be regularly taken at such depot." In an action to enforce specific performance or recover damages for non-performance, — held, 1. That the provision in the deed was not a covenant, but an express condition subsequent, and not specifically enforceable as a covenant; 2. That the agreements could not be enforced, as being by nature insusceptible of execution by the court, and as wanting details and lack of particularity and specification; and 3. That damages could not be given for the failure to perform. Blanchard v. Detroit etc. R. R. Co., 18 R. 142.

*See monographic note on the requisite certainty in contracts to warrant a decree for their specific performance, 26 D. 661-671.

15. Reasonableness. — Equity will not compel a specific performance, unless the contract was fair and reasonable, and not then if he who seeks the execution has been in default in performing all that was to be done on his part. Bowman v. Irons, 4 D. 686.

Owners of adjacent premises in the city of New York mutually covenanted that only dwelling-houses should be erected thereon, and not to carry on or suffer any kind of manufacture, trade, or business thereon. Subsequently the value of the premises for any but trade purposes was greatly impaired by the advance of business, and the erection and operation of an elevated railway in the street. Held, that the covenant ran with the land, but owing to the change in circumstances and the defeat of the scheme of the original covenants, it would not be specifically enforced against a subsequent purchaser. Columbia College v. Thacher, 41 R. 365.

16. Effect of misrepresentation, fraud, or mistake. — 1. Generally. — A bill for specific performance is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court. It is not necessary to authorize its denial that an agreement is so tainted with fraud that it may be decreed to be canceled; and it is requisite to its being granted that the agreement should have been entered into with perfect fairness, and without misapprehension, misrepresentation, or oppression. Frisby v. Ballance, 39 D. 409; Patterson v. Martz, 34 D. 474.

Equity will not decree a specific performance of a contract obtained under unfair advantages or circumstances of hardship not amounting to legal duress. Edwards v. Handley, 3 D. 745.

The habitual intemperance of one of the contracting parties may be a ground for denying a decree for specific performance, where it is sufficient to cast a suspicion on the fairness of the transaction. Seymour v. Delancy, 15 D. 270.

An agreement induced by a mistake of fact of one of the parties will not be specifically enforced against him in equity. Frisby v. Ballance, 39 D. 409.

A contract invalid under statute of frauds will not be sustained if the conduct of the party setting up the invalidity of the contract has been such as to raise an equity outside of and independent of the contract, and nothing else will be adequate satisfaction of such equity. Hunt v. Turner, 60 D. 167.

Equity will not decree a specific performance in cases of fraud or mistake, or of hard and unreasonable bargains, or where the decree would produce injustice, and generally in any case where such decree would be inequitable under all the circumstances. Trigg v. Read, 42 D. 447; Old Colony R. R. Corp. v. Evans, 66 D. 394.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A mutual mistake as to the quality of land from which defendant has undertaken to dig gravel for plaintiff's benefit is not ground for dismissing a bill for the specific performance of another and subsequent contract made after the defendant knew of the character of the land, and by which other land was substituted, and the defendant agreed to pay for the first land. Old Colony R. R. Corp. v. Evans, 66 D. 394.

2. Contracts for conveyance of land.—A court of equity will not enforce the specific performance of a contract for a conveyance of land, which has been brought about by fraud or mistake, or which has been attended with hardship occasioned by the delay of the complainant in performing his part of the contract. Meaux v. Helm, 2 D. 716.

Where the vendor, in a contract for the conveyance of real estate, died, and a bill was brought against his heirs for a specific performance, the fact of the vendor's executor having obtained a judgment for the purchase-money will not be considered such a confirmation as will bind the heirs to a specific performance of a hard and unconscionable bargain; and the contract and judgment should be set aside upon equitable terms. Id.

To entitle to a specific performance of a contract in favor of an assignee of a bond conditioned for the conveyance of land, on the ground of the representations of the obligor, upon which the assignee was induced to rely, it is necessary that the representations should be made deliberately, with the belief that they would be relied upon, and that they were relied upon, and occasioned injury to the person confiding therein. Casey v. Allen, 10 D. 750.

Chancery will not, by the aid of parol evidence, rectify an agreement for sale of lands and then enforce it as rectified, in a case where the agreement is contained in two independent writings, and by mistake, each of the parties signs only the writing intended to be signed by the other. Osborn v. Phelps, 48 D. 133.

Specific performance of a contract to exchange a farm for tenement-houses will not be decreed in favor of the owner of the houses, who induced the defendant to enter into the contract by means of material misrepresentations of the amount of rent yielded by the houses; although such representations were not fraudulent, and the plaintiff offers to make good the deficiency in the rent, and although the contract was partially executed before the representations were discovered to be untrue. Boynston v. Hazelboom, 92 D. 733.

Where a party bought a tract of land, and agreed to pay for it in forty days, in continental currency, which he knew was depreciating rapidly, and would soon become worthless, of which depreciation the vendor was not fully informed, and the vendee delayed payment for a number of years, and until the currency became worthless, — held, that a court of equity should not decree a conveyance of the land at the instance of the vendee or his assignee. Meaux v. Helm, 2 D. 716.

A vendor was held justified in refusing to convey real estate, and ought not to be compelled to convey, in the exercise of the discretion of a court of equity, where he, residing in the state of New York, made a contract for the sale of a quarry in Connecticut, and of personal property valued at twenty-five thousand dollars connected with it, the whole for fifty-five thousand dollars, of which five thousand dollars was to be paid down, the balance to be secured by a mortgage back, but where he made the agreement under the mistaken belief that a chattel mortgage would be a valid security in Connecticut without a retention of possession by him; and where the purchaser was insolvent. Patterson v. Bloomer, 95 D. 218.

17. *When the contract to be enforced must be in writing.—The conveyance of land cannot be decreed in equity by reason merely of an oral agreement therefor, against a party denying the alleged agreement, and relying upon the statute of frauds, in the absence of evidence of change of situation or part performance, creating an estoppel against a plea of the statute. Glass v. Hulbert, 3 R. 418; Hoen v. Simmons, 52 D. 291.

A mere oral promise to convey a certain tract of land to a son in consideration of blood and affection is not sufficient to warrant a decree of specific execution, even in favor of a purchaser from the son. Hickman v. Grimes, 10 D. 714. But compare Moore v. Pierson, 71 D. 409.

A parol sale of land cannot be established by declarations merely, and specific performance cannot be decreed under such sale, in the absence of all proof of possession taken and maintained under it. Workman v. Guthrie, 72 D. 654.

18. What is a sufficient writing.—In bills for specific performance, the contract laid must be clear and satisfactory as to the description of the land, the amount of the purchase-money, and time of payment, and the proof must be equally clear and satisfactory. Johnston v. Glancy, 28 D. 45.

Specific execution of a contract in writing for the transfer of property will be decreed in equity as between the parties, although some circumstances to give it legal validity are omitted, provided it contain proper and apt terms whereby the intention of the parties can be clearly ascertained. Tiernan v. Poor, 19 D. 225.

Specific enforcement of a contract in writing for the sale of land, which contains no description or reference identifying the land, cannot be decreed consistently with the statute of frauds. Hanly v. Blackford, 25 D. 114.

Specific performance of a contract at auction will be decreed, where the sale is bona fide, the title good, and the quantity of land the same, and the description substantially true, although it may vary in a slight degree. King v. Bardeau, 10 D. 312.

An auctioneer's memorandum may be specifically enforced at the instance of the vendor, although it does not state the credit on which the land was sold. Smith v. Jones, 30 D. 493.

Specific performance of a written instrument may be enforced when it contains all the facts of the contract except such as may be legitimately proved by parol evidence. Colerick v. Hooper, 56 D. 505.

Where parties entered upon land under a license from the owner, who afterwards gave them a memorandum in writing whereby he promised to sell to them the premises, or give them a lease in fee, and it appeared that these parties were induced to make valuable and permanent improvements, relying upon the representations of the owner that no advantage would be taken of them, — held, that although the memorandum was in itself uncertain, yet as the conduct of the owner was fraudulent as to the parties entering on the premises, parol evidence might be connected with the memorandum to establish a contract, and that a specific performance thereof would be decreed. Parkhurst v. Van Cortlandt, 7 D. 427.

Bill for the specific performance of a contract, of which the following was the only written evidence: "Received of [plaintiff] one hundred dollars as part payment on a piece of property on the corner of," giving street, city, county, and state, and signed by the defendant, — held, not a sufficient memorandum within the statute of frauds. Holmes v. Evans, 12 R. 372.

19. Necessity of a consideration. — Equity will not decree the specific execution of a contract where there is no consideration. Shackleford v. Handley, 10 D. 753.

Promises founded solely on benevolent intentions will not be specifically enforced. Mercer v. Stark, 12 D. 583; Owings's Case, 17 D. 311.

Specific performance will not be decreed of an agreement to pay a certain fund to one creditor in preference to others, where the creditor claiming the fund has no superior right to it over the other creditors, except such promise by the debtor. Boomer v. Cunningham, 74 D. 155.

20. What is a sufficient consideration. — The consideration, to warrant specific performance of a contract, must be valuable or meritorious. Woodcock v. Bennet, 13 D. 568.

Specific performance cannot be resisted on the ground that the consideration was a draft which was not paid, if the defendant has been negligent in demanding payment and giving notice. Id.

A promise made by a father to a child, to convey land to him if he will take possession and improve it, when followed by possession and the expenditure of labor and money in improvements, by the child, rests upon a valuable consideration, and will be enforced in a court of equity when clearly proved. Langston v. Bates, 25 R. 466; Moore v. Piereson, 71 D. 409.

21. Effect of inadequacy of price.* — Inadequacy of price alone is not sufficient ground to vacate a contract, but the enforcement of a contract may be refused where the consideration is so inadequate as to make the contract hard, unfair, and unreasonable. Seymour v. Delancy, 15 D. 270.

Inadequacy of price without fraud or other ingredient is not sufficient to stay the power of chancery to enforce a contract for the sale of land, unless the inadequacy is so gross as to be evidence of fraud. Id.

22. Effect of part performance to take the contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds. — 1. Generally. — Specific performance of a contract will be decreed in equity whenever it is impossible to place a party in statu quo who has performed a valuable part of his agreement, and is in no default for not performing the residue. Hays v. Hall, 30 D. 530; Ryan v. Dox, 90 D. 696.

Specific performance of a parol agreement will be compelled where one party has wholly or partially performed it on his part, so that its non-fulfillment by the other party is a fraud. Johnson v. Hubbell, 66 D. 773.

Mutuality in contracts is ordinarily necessary to authorize a court to decree specific performance of them; but if a man has performed a valuable part of an agreement, and is in no default for not performing the residue, then it is but reasonable that he should have a specific execution of the other part of the contract. Wynn v. Oarland, 68 D. 190.

An agreement by a man and his wife to adopt a child, provide and care well for her, and leave her their property at their death, performed on the part of the child, is enforceable as to the property upon their death. Sharkey v. McDermott, 60 R. 270.

2. Contracts relative to land. — A specific performance of a parol agreement for a conveyance, though made sixty or seventy years previously, will be decreed when the agreement had been fully performed on both sides except the execution of a deed to the purchaser. Somerville v. Trueman, 1 D. 389.

Where either party has performed a valuable part of his contract for the sale and purchase of an estate, and is in no default for not performing the residue, he is entitled to a specific performance of the other part. Hays v. Hall, 30 D. 530; Simmons v. Hill, 1 D. 398; Pugh v. Good, 37 D. 534.

Chancery will decree specific performance of a parol contract affecting lands, where it appears that one of the parties has in good faith executed his part of it, and cannot be compensated in damages, or where it would operate as a fraud to one party. Wynn v. Garland, 68 D. 190.

Part performance of a parol agreement respecting land, to warrant a specific enforcement of the contract, must be in consequence of the contract. Squire v. Harder, 19 D. 446.

Specific performance of a parol agreement to divide land will be decreed, if there has been sufficient part performance to take it out of the statute of frauds. Weed v. Terry, 45 D. 257.

The doctrine of part performance, in reference to parol contracts respecting lands, is applicable to licenses executed, where one of the parties has done all on his part that he assumed to do. Wynn v. Garland, 68 D. 190.

The validity of the contract is not an indispensable element of the cause of action for specific performance; and a parol agreement between parties as to the disposition of land by will, upon good consideration, and partly performed, will be enforced by specific performance, though the will be void for want of a sufficient number of attesting witnesses. Maddox v. Rowe, 68 D. 535.

Equity will enforce specific performance of a contract for the exchange of lands, though within the statute of frauds, where it has been partly executed; great caution should be exercised, however, in determining what is a part execution. Overstreet v. Rice, 96 D. 279.

Payment of the consideration, possession, and the making of improvements will take a case out of the statute of frauds, and are sufficient for a decree for specific performance. Westmore v. White, 2 D. 323.

Delivery of possession to a vendee pursuant to the contract is a part performance. Pugh v. Good, 37 D. 534.

A sale of land by parol is not taken out of the statute by part performance unless such part performance be expressly stated in the bill, and be made under circumstances amounting to a fraud, against which a court of equity will relieve. Meach v. Perry, 6 D. 719.

A promise by a father to give a plantation and slaves to his son, if he would remove from another state to this to live, is a gratuity only, and not a contract of which a court of equity will enforce a specific performance, although the son has been thereby induced to break up at a loss, and been put to trouble and expense by the removal. And a part performance of such promise, by putting the son in possession, and improvements made by him on the land, will not warrant the court in decreeing a conveyance by the devisees of the father after his death, where no conveyance, or promise of conveyance, is shown to have been made. Forward v. Armistead, 46 D. 246.

Specific performance of a parol agreement for sale of land, upon the ground of part performance, will not be decreed unless the facts alleged to be in part performance be clearly proved; and the contract itself as alleged in the bill should be established by clear and definite testimony. Aday v. Echols, 52 D. 225.

Part performance of a parol agreement to mutually exchange lands does not dispense with the requirements of the statute of frauds so as to entitle the party so partly performing to a specific performance. Barnes v. Teague, 62 D. 200.

Defendants orally agreed to take a lease of plaintiff's stores for five years, thus inducing him to break off negotiations for leasing to another party, and to incur expense in altering and adapting the stores to their own use. Defendants entered into possession and paid rent for two years, but neglected to execute the written lease in accordance with the agreement tendered them by plaintiff on taking possession, and at the end of two years refused to execute the lease, or longer to occupy or pay rent. Held, that they should be adjudged to execute the lease. Seaman v. Aschermann, 37 R. 849.

23. Necessity of performance on part of complainant. — A party seeking specific performance must show that he has not been guilty of laches or negligence, but has taken all proper steps towards a performance on his part. Rogers v. Saunders, 33 D. 635. S. P., Garretson v. Vanloon, 54 D. 492; Green v. Covillaud, 70 D. 725.

Where the complainant seeking specific performance of a contract for the sale of land has failed to perform a precedent condition on his part, the court will not decree specific performance, if any injury has resulted to defendant for such non-performance; but the defendant having taken possession of the land, and paid part of the purchase-money, and executed the agreement in part, the court will consider him as having waived his objections to the complainant's default, and will decree a specific performance of the contract. Ramsay v. Brailsford, 2 D. 698.

If the party seeking the specific execution of a contract has been in default without excuse, chancery will not make compensation to the opposite party, and then decree a specific execution. Moore v. Skidmore, 12 D. 333.

A bill in equity will not lie upon one of dependent covenants in the absence of a showing by plaintiff of a performance or of a valid excuse for the non-performance of the covenants incumbent upon himself. Kimloch v. Hamlin, 27 D. 441.

Performance of a condition precedent, such as the payment of money at a time designated, may be made essential to the existence of the right to specific performance. Wells v. Smith, 31 D. 274.

Specific performance will not be granted when the party applying has omitted to execute his part of the contract at the appointed time, though not notified to do so, without being able to assign any sufficient justification or excuse for his delay, and when there is nothing in the acts or conduct of the other party that amounts to an acquiescence in that delay. Kirby v. Harrison, 59 D. 677.

A vendee, before bringing suit for specific performance, must have performed or offered to perform whatever the contract has made a condition precedent on his part. Young v. Daniels, 63 D. 477.

The vendee is not bound to follow the vendor to his residence without the state to make tender before bringing suit for specific performance, after he has applied within a reasonable time after the maturity of the notes at the place stipulated for their payment, and there demanded the deed. Id.

Equity will not enforce specific performance of a contract to convey lands, when the plaintiff shows no compliance or offer to comply on his part with the agreement, nor any excuse therefor, for the period of twenty-one or twenty-two months from the time he bound himself to perform. Green v. Cowland, 70 D. 725.

In an action by vendee to enforce specific performance of an agreement to convey real estate, the plaintiff need not aver tender of performance if he avers that the defendant had repudiated the contract, and expressly waived tender. Martin v. Merritt, 26 R. 45.

24. Sufficiency of performance on complainant's part. — Specific performance of a contract will be decreed, although the complainant has not wholly performed on his part, provided he has done so much that he cannot be placed in statu quo, and provided he is in no default. Breckenridge v. Clinkenbeard, 13 D. 261.

In an entire contract for the sale of five tracts of land, and a separate bond given for the conveyance of two, the purchaser cannot have specific performance without performing on his part, the entire contract. Tierman v. Beam, 15 D. 557.

Specific performance of a husband's contract to transfer the entire interest in lands, as well his own interest as his wife's right of dower, cannot be sought in so far as it relates to a transfer of his interest while at the same time an abatement is demanded from the contract price proportionate to the value of dower. In such cases, if performance is desired of the husband's contract with reference to his own right, the entire contract price must be tendered. Clark v. Seirer, 32 D. 745.

A party seeking to enforce a verbal contract for the conveyance of real estate should show full compliance with the substance of all provisions he has engaged to perform. Hoen v. Simmons, 52 D. 291.

It is sufficient part performance of an oral contract touching the title of lands to found a claim for specific performance thereof and avoid the bar of the statute of frauds, when one in prior possession of a portion of a tract of land remains in full possession of the whole tract under an oral agreement of partition awarding to him such full possession. McMahan v. McMahan, 53 D. 481.

25. Effect of tender, or readiness to perform. — Where a party to a contract, whose specific performance is sought, resists the performance, and insists that he is not bound by the contract, no tender of the purchase-money need be made before bringing suit. Wright v. Young, 70 D. 453.

Whether the performance of a contract should be specifically decreed depends upon the circumstances of the case. Accordingly, where the purchaser, in a contract for the sale of land, has with good faith shown a willingness and readiness, without injury to the vendor, to perform substantially the agreement, he will be entitled to the aid of a court of equity. Hart v. Brand, 10 D. 715.

26. Effect of complainant's inability to give good title. — The court will not decree a specific performance of an agreement, and compel the defendant to accept a title which the complainant cannot transfer free and clear of all encumbrances. Buller v. O'Hear, 1 D. 671; unless he has agreed to take the risk of the title, or to accept such as the vendor has. Brown v. Haff, 28 D. 425.

Equity will not compel a party to receive a conveyance of land in lieu of damages, if the complainant cannot show a clear title, and although there be no other objection. Edwards v. Handley, 3 D. 745. S. P., Lewis v. Herndon, 14 D. 68; Jackson v. Murray, 17 D. 53. A showing by the vendor of an uninterrupted possession of twenty years in himself and those under whom he claims is not sufficient. Lewis v. Herndon, 14 D. 68.

Equity will not compel a man to convey lands of greater value than those he had contracted, and was unable to convey by reason of his title thereto failing. Webb v. Conn, 13 D. 225.

If the vendor has been in adverse possession for the time specified in the statute of limitations, his title is not so impeached as to prevent his maintaining a suit for specific performance, by slight proof that the former owner was an alien, nor by the mere contingency that such owner may have died, leaving heirs disabled from asserting their rights. Seymour v. De Lancey, 14 D. 552.

Equity will never compel a vendee to take a title not free from controversy. Jackson v. Murray, 17 D. 53.

Where one party agrees to give his note and a tract of land in consideration of the other party's surrendering certain notes in his possession, the former will not be decreed a specific performance, unless he can give a good title to the land, though the agreement calls for a "deed" merely, and does not stipulate for covenants of warranty. Bowen v. Vickers, 35 D. 516.

Specific performance of a contract of purchase will be decreed against a purchaser who has gone into possession and held it for many years, though the deed under which the vendor derails title has been lost. But in such case, as the onus of proving such title rested on the vendor, he must pay the costs. Wade v. Greenwood, 40 D. 759.

Equity may enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands, although the vendor may have had no title at the time of the sale, or even at the time of filing the bill, if he can make a good title at the time of the decree. Mason v. Caldwell, 48 D. 330; Seymour v. Delancy, 15 D. 270.

That the vendor's remedy at law is gone, by reason of there being a mortgage on the estate, so that he could not convey a good title at the day named in the contract, is no ground for refusing specific performance in equity. Seymour v. Delancy, 15 D. 270.

A bill for a specific performance will not be dismissed as of course because the title was not perfect at the commencement of the suit, although that may be a sufficient reason for giving costs to the defendant, if he has not made any unreasonable objection to the title. Ref. Prot. Dutch Church v. Mott, 32 D. 613.

Where a person covenants to convey title to certain land, a court of equity will not decline to decree a specific performance upon a mere showing that the covenantor is only a tenant in common of the land, and that "after reasonable exertion he has been unable to procure the title" of his co-tenants. Love v. Camp, 51 D. 419.

Where a covenantee knows that the covenantor does not own all the title which he is covenanting to convey, whether equity would decree a specific performance, quære. Id.

The vendee may waive full performance of an agreement for purchase of land, and take such title as the vendor can give. If, therefore, he agrees to waive a release of dower by the wife of the vendor, the latter cannot object to a performance on the ground that his wife refuses to sign the deed. Corson v. Mulvaney, 88 D. 485.

A husband contracted to sell land; the wife, without collusion with the husband, refused to join in the deed. Held, that the vendee could not compel specific performance by the husband alone, and retain part of the purchase-money as indemnity against the wife's contingent claim of dower. Burk's Appeal, 15 R. 587.

27. When time is of the essence of the contract. — Time is not ordinarily of the essence of a contract to convey land, yet in every case it devolves upon the party seeking specific performance to account for his delay, and if there are circumstances showing culpable negligence on his part, or if the time permitted to intervene, together with other circumstances, raise the presumption of an abandonment of the contract, or if the property has greatly enhanced in value, and the purchaser has laid by apparently for the purpose of taking advantage of this circumstance, he is not entitled to specific performance of his contract. Green v. Comillaud, 70 D. 725.

Time is not generally deemed in equity to be of the essence of a contract, unless the parties have expressly so treated it, or it necessarily follows from the nature and circumstances of the contract; and specific performance is therefore frequently decreed where the terms for the completion of the contract have not, in point of time, been strictly complied with. Young v. Rathbone, 84 D. 151.

Time is of the essence of a contract when the mere effluxion of time renders the thing sold of greater or less value, and also when it has been expressly agreed by the contract that time shall be essential. And in such cases, equity will not decree specific performance. Rogers v. Saunders, 33 D. 635.

Specific performance of a contract will not be decreed upon a bill filed prior to the time at which the contract is to be performed. De Rivafnoli v. Corsetti, 25 D. 532.

G. leased land to his son-in-law for a term of years at an annual rent. During the term, he promised in writing that if the lessee, by a specified time, would pay the arrears of rent, and all the rent to accrue, and certain other amounts due him, he would, in consideration of love and affection for his daughter, convey the land in fee for her separate use. The lessee made the payments, but not within the specified time. Held, that specific performance would not be decreed. Keffer v. Grayson, 44 R. 171.

28. What delay will defeat right to a decree. — Specific performance will not be decreed when the party applying has omitted to execute his part of the agreement by the time appointed, unless he can satisfactorily account for such omission, or the other party has expressly or impliedly assented to such delay. Lewis v. Woods, 34 D. 110; Rogers v. Saunders, 33 D. 635.

A material change in the value of the property, making a great change in the condition of the parties, will prevent equity from giving relief against lapse of time. Rogers v. Saunders, 33 D. 635.

Where a party, by the terms of the sale, agrees to pay a certain amount in cash and give his promissory notes for the balance, and pays but a portion of the cash, and refuses for two years to pay the balance or to execute the notes, he is guilty of such negligence that he will not be decreed a specific performance. Lewis v. Woods, 34 D. 110.

Unexplained delay of the vendee for seven years, and a great rise in value of the lands forming the subject-matter of the contract, constitute an insuperable objection to the granting of a decree for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands. Patterson v. Marts, 34 D. 474.

A vendee will not be compelled, after eight years of default upon the part of his vendor, during which time the latter has been unable to comply with his covenants, and during which the land has depreciated greatly in value, to an execution of his contract of purchase. Bryan v. Loftus, 39 D. 242.

A party entitled to specific conveyance of property, personal or real, will not be permitted to hold back from an assertion of his rights, and speculate upon the chances of such changes as may decide whether it would be to his interest to have the conveyance made, but he is required to be vigilant and prompt in the assertion of those rights; and if changes have occurred during this lapse of time in the value of the property to be conveyed, or in the consideration to be paid, a court of equity will always refuse its aid, and leave the party to seek redress where the law had left him, by a suit for the breach of the covenant. De Cordova v. Smith, 58 D. 136; Kirby v. Harrison, 59 D. 677; McAusland v. Pundt, 93 D. 358.

Laches may be imputed to one seeking specific performance from the time when the one against whom relief is sought has indicated by his acts or expressions his intention to abandon the contract. De Cordova v. Smith, 58 D. 136.

The vendee forfeits the right to specific performance by refusing to pay at maturity, on demand and tender of a conveyance, a note given for the purchase-money of land. Pearls v. Covillaud, 65 D. 543.

An action for specific performance of a contract to convey is barred in four years after the maturity of a note given for the purchase-money, where the agreement was to convey on payment. Id.

Delay of more than three years to pay installments of an agreed price for land, after the same became due, according to the terms of a written agreement for the conveyance of the same, and after a refusal by the owner of the land to give any further time for making the payments, is such laches as will forfeit all claim to the performance of the contract; and a bill in equity will not lie by the creditor of the person to whom the agreement was given to compel a sale of the land, and the application of the proceeds to the payment of his debt. Fuller v. Howry, 79 D. 782.

29. What will not. — The vendee being in possession, equity will, upon the vendor's application, decree a specific performance, although the time fixed in the contract for conveying has elapsed, if the vendor is not in fault, but the delay has been caused by the state of the title. Craig v. Martin, 19 D. 157.

Time is not of the essence of such a contract, and if a good title can be made in a reasonable time, it is sufficient. Id.

Specific performance of a contract for the sale of a tract of land, at the instance of the vendee, will not be defeated by the lapse of time, when it appears that the delay has been by the consent of both parties, and occasioned by the embarrassment of the vendor's title; or where it has been caused by the vendee being insane, or by the vendor failing to obtain the legal title, notwithstanding thirty years may have elapsed from the making of the contract. Craig v. Leiper, 24 D. 479.

The vendee does not forfeit his right to specific performance by laches in offer to pay purchase-money, when it appears that vendor was a non-resident of the state; that neither he nor any person for him was at the place of payment to demand payment when the notes for the purchase price became due; that he gave the vendee no notice that he should insist upon strict compliance with the contract, and had not returned the notes to the vendee; that within three months after the last note became due the vendee, at the place where the notes were to be paid, and to the person who had been the vendor's agent in the premises, offered to perform the contract on his part, and demanded the deed; and that within six months thereafter the vendee commenced suit to enforce specific performance, bringing the money into court. Young v. Daniels, 63 D. 477.

Laches is ground for denial of specific performance where twenty-three years have elapsed from the date of a contract for the purchase of real estate, during thirteen years of which no payments were made by the purchaser. But there is no laches where, in such a case, the vendor has preserved the vigor of the contract for his own benefit by the pendency of an action to enforce a lien for the purchase-money, and the vendee, answering to that action, offers to perform, and asks specific performance against the vendor; for the latter, by his own act, has thereby continuously recognized the obligation of the contract. Bennett v. Welch, 87 D. 354.

II. SUITS FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

30. Jurisdictional questions. — 1. Generally. — To enforce the specific performance of agreements is an appropriate office of chancery. Morgan v. Morgan, 21 D. 638.

Equity will enforce a trust or contract, but cannot create a title where none exists. Rush v. Vought, 93 D. 769.

The reversal of a judgment at law against the complainant, who seeks in equity to have the contract upon which the judgment has been obtained specifically enforced, removes the barrier to granting the relief sought. Grundy v. Edwards, 23 D. 409.

The Texas court of equity has power and jurisdiction to decree specific performance and partition, and such decree vests the title to the land conveyed in the party named therein. The statute has deprived the court of none of its powers in this particular. Grassmeyer v. Beeson, 70 D. 309.

The common-law remedy by ejectment, used as a means to compel a specific performance, in Pennsylvania, is not taken away by the grant of equity powers to the court of common pleas. Corson v. Mulcahy, 83 D. 485.

2. Contracts relating to land. — A suit against a vendee for specific performance of a contract to purchase land is within the proper and acknowledged jurisdiction of a court of equity. Brown v. Haff, 28 D. 425.

Specific performance is granted to a greater extent in cases of contracts respecting real property than in cases respecting personal property; and while in the latter case the jurisdiction to grant it is limited to special circumstances, in cases of land contracts it is universally maintained. Young v. Daniels, 63 D. 477.

The orphans' courts of Pennsylvania have power to decree and enforce specific performance of a contract for sale of real estate, made by a decedent in his lifetime. This power is granted to them by the fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth sections of the act of February 24, 1834, and is the same as that possessed by courts of chancery in like cases. Chess's Appeal, 45 D. 668.

A county court's jurisdiction to enforce specific performance of decedent's contract to convey land in a suit against his administrator, under the Texas statute, is special, and exists only where there is a bond or a contract in writing, disclosing all the terms of the agreement, in analogy to the memorandum required by the statute of frauds. Peters v. Phillips, 70 D. 319.

Decedent's bond to convey reciting a contract for conveyance in all its terms is sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the county court, under the statute, for the specific enforcement of the contract, although the contract is not produced. Ib.

Husband and wife contracted in writing to sell certain real estate belonging to the wife, and the wife's separate acknowledgment was taken to the agreement. Held, that a court of equity had jurisdiction to entertain a bill by the vendee for specific performance. Dankel v. Hunter, 100 D. 651.

3. Contracts made or to be performed abroad. — Chancery has jurisdiction to enforce the performance of contracts made in another country by foreigners actually domiciled or temporarily residing here at the time of service of process. Mitchell v. Bunch, 22 D. 669; March v. E. R. R. Co., 77 D. 732.

Specific performance of a contract for sale of lands situated in another state will be decreed by chancery against a resident within the jurisdiction duly served. Newton v. Bronson, 67 D. 89; Burnley v. Stevenson, 15 R. 621. And its decree will be enforceable against the person of the party to compel a performance of the agreement. Johnson v. Kimbro, 75 D. 781.

Although the decree in such case, or the deed of a master executed in pursuance thereof, cannot operate to transfer the title to such lands, yet the decree is binding upon the consciences of the parties, and concludes them in respect to all matters and things properly adjudicated and determined by the court. Burnley v. Stevenson, 15 R. 621.

When the decree in such case finds and determines the equities of the parties in respect to such land, and directs a conveyance by the parties in accordance with their equities, such decree, although no conveyance has been executed, may be pleaded as a cause of action or as a ground of defense in the courts of the state where the land is situated; and it is entitled, in the court where so pleaded, to the force and effect of record evidence of the equities therein determined, unless it be impeached for fraud. Ib.

The code provision that actions concerning land shall be tried in the county where the land is situated does not remove jurisdiction to decree specific performance of a contract for sale of lands without the state, since it does not apply to lands not situated in any county of the state. Newton v. Bronson, 67 D. 89. S. P., Gardner v. Oyden, 78 D. 192.

The courts of Massachusetts will not decree specific performance by a railroad corporation of another state, and a citizen of Massachusetts, in favor of a construction company of another state, of a covenant of payment contained in a contract for construction of a railroad in another state, nor restrain the citizen of Massachusetts from disposing of the stock and bonds of the railroad company in violation of the plaintiff's rights, although the railroad company has an office in Massachusetts for the transfer of stock, and has appeared by attorney. Kansas Construction Co. v. Topeka etc. R. R. Co., 46 R. 439.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

31. Who may sue. — The assignee of a note given for the purchase price of land, where the vendor retained the title as security, may, by a bill filed against the vendor and the vendee, compel the specific performance of the contract of purchase, and obtain satisfaction of the amount due him on such note by subjecting the land to sale for the payment thereof. Hanna v. Wilson, 46 D. 190.

After recovery by a vendee for a breach of a covenant to convey, against the administrators of a deceased vendor, it is too late for the latter to maintain a bill against such vendee and the heirs of the vendor for specific performance. Moore v. Fitz Randolph, 29 D. 208.

32. Who may be sued. — Where the specific execution of an agreement respecting lands will be decreed between the parties, it will be decreed between all parties claiming under them in privity of estate, or representation, or title, unless other controlling equities intervene. Hays v. Hall, 30 D. 530.

Specific performance will be decreed against an heir at law on a contract of sale made by his ancestor, though such contract did not purport to be obligatory on the heirs. Moore v. Fitz Randolph, 29 D. 208. Contra, Givens v. Calder, 2 D. 686.

33. Joinder of defendants. — A party seeking specific performance of a contract in which he has no privity must make all those through whom he claims the right of enforcing the contract parties to his suit. Allison v. Shilling, 86 D. 622.

Where one has made his title bond to another, who assigns it to another, who executes his own title bond to another, who makes his title bond to the plaintiff, the latter, in a suit against the first vendor for specific performance of his contract, must join all the others as parties. Id.

The assignor of a contract for sale of land is not a necessary party, in Indiana, to a suit by the assignee for specific performance thereof, as under the statute of this state the assignment of such an instrument carries with it the legal title, and not a mere equity. Colerick v. Hooper, 56 D. 505.

To a bill for a specific performance of a contract to convey land, the assignee in bankruptcy of the vendor, who has not received the whole of the purchase-money, and who has become bankrupt, must be made a party. Svepson v. Rouse, 6 R. 735.

34. Bill. — A bill for specific performance of an agreement to turn over choses in action as indemnity to the complainant should state with minuteness what books of account or evidences of debt were to be turned over, or if complainant could not obtain access to such choses in action, the bill should so state, and call upon the defendant to supply the deficiency. Shockley v. Davis, 63 D. 233.

Where a bill for specific performance of a contract sets out the contract, and by way of inducement, to support the allegation of the due execution of the contract, goes into particulars, and sets out circumstances which, if true, show ingratitude and baseness in defendant for refusing to execute the contract, the latter may answer, and set out circumstances tending to corroborate his averment that the contract is a forgery, or obtained by fraud; for, though abusive and disparaging, such averment is relevant, and therefore not scandalous. In such case, all circumstantial averments in the bill and answer should be stricken out, and the question as to the due execution of the contract left to a jury to determine. Henry v. Henry, 98 D. 87.

35. Petition. — A petition for specific performance of a contract for sale of land should aver that the petitioner has performed his part of the contract, or that he is willing and ready to perform it; but a failure to make such an averment is a defect in form only, which may be amended. Chees's Appeal, 45 D. 668.

A petition for specific performance of a contract of a testator is not in condition to be heard, where the record shows no appearance for the heirs or personal representatives, no answer to the petition, and no proof of the contract, or of the nature of it. Id.

36. Plea or answer. — In a suit for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands, the defendant may avail himself of the statute of frauds, either by plea or demurrer, except in certain cases, appearing on the face of the bill. Meach v. Perry, 6 D. 719.

To avail one's self of the statute of frauds as an objection to decreeing the specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of lands, the defendant must deny the sale or plead the statute; if he admit the sale and fail to rely on the statute, the plaintiff need adduce no proof of the sale. Talbot v. Bowen, 10 D. 747.

A defendant who admits a parol agreement for sale of lands in his answer, but insists that it is void by the statute of frauds, is entitled to the protection of such statute, and no decree can be made against him merely on the ground of such confession. Barnes v. Teague, 62 D. 200.

37. Matters of defense. — Facts showing an abandonment of a contract by the plaintiff furnish a decisive answer to his prayer for a specific performance thereof. Patterson v. Martz, 34 D. 474.

Specific performance will not be decreed when there is strong, un rebutted prima facie evidence of a mutual abandonment of the contract. De Cordova v. Smith, 58 D. 136.

A party, when resisting specific performance, may show by parol that plaintiff has surrendered all of his equities. The statute of frauds has no application to the question. Workman v. Guthrie, 72 D. 654.

It is no defense to a bill to enforce a trust that the complainant is indebted to the estate of the cestui qui trust, as such indebtedness is to be adjusted by the court of probate. Nor is it a defense that a decree enforcing the trust would take the subject-matter thereof out of the jurisdiction of the probate court, as it always was in equity, and should not be distributed in the administration of the estate. Cowles v. Whitman, 25 D. 60.

Compensation for improvements by perception of profits is not a bar to the specific performance of a gift. Young v. Glendenning, 31 D. 492.

The fact that land contracted to be sold for a fair price has since become more valuable is not such a circumstance of hardship as would prevent a decree for the specific performance of the contract. Young v. Wright, 65 D. 303.

A party will not be permitted to set up his own fraud as a defense in a proceeding to enforce the specific performance of a contract. Snow v. Flannery, 77 D. 120.

38. Evidence. — Where one agrees in writing to permit another to search for iron ore on his land for a fixed time, the latter to then have the option to purchase the land at a fixed price, part to be paid upon the execution of the deed, and the balance to be secured by mortgage upon the property for two years, and the vendee, having elected to take the land, and given notice to the vendor, at the same time tendering the amount agreed to be paid down, brings ejectment to compel a specific performance, evidence that the contemplated use of the land would destroy its value within two years, and that the vendee's circumstances were such that he would be otherwise unable to pay the mortgage debt, is inadmissible when it is not shown that the vendee's circumstances had changed after the making of the contract. Corson v. Mulvany, 88 D. 485.

Where it was claimed that a mother entered into a verbal agreement with her brother, who undertook for her son, then a minor, to give her son certain land in consideration of his releasing his claim to the personal estate of his father, deceased, and the mother gave to the son possession of the land, which he used and improved as his own until his death, and the son executed a release after his coming of age, according to the contract, a specific performance of the agreement was denied, on the ground that it was not clearly and satisfactorily established. Simmons v. Hill, 1 D. 398.

Where the evidence adduced in support of a bill for the specific performance of an alleged agreement to convey an estate is adjudged by the court to show merely an intent on the part of a wealthy father, while in life, to give to his son that estate, which intent the father, from forgetfulness or some other cause, never executed, the bill will be dismissed, with costs. Taylor v. Staples, 5 R. 556.

A father, possessed of great wealth, makes upon his account-book an entry to the credit of a son, in these words: "By further allowance, to pay for house, etc., five thousand dollars"; and long after the death both of father and son the legal representatives of the son, by suit in equity, seek to recover from the legal representatives of the father the said sum, with interest from the date of said entry (May 30, 1837). Held, that the entry is but the indication of an intention on the father's part, and not a promise founded upon a consideration cognizable by a court of equity; neither the fact that the father had trained up the son in idleness as the heir presumptive of inexhaustible wealth; nor the fact that this "allowance" was consistent with a "family arrangement" existing at the date of said entry; nor the fact that unless this claim of five thousand dollars and interest was allowed and paid, would this son receive of his father's accumulations so much as was received by his brothers and sisters respectively, — constituting a valuable consideration, upon which alone the court must act, unheeding a consideration merely "moral" or "meritorious." Ib.

39. The burden of proof. — To decree specific performance of a contract, the making of the agreement and its terms, the consideration upon which it was founded, and the time of its execution must be clearly established. Hudson v. Layton, 43 D. 161.

Specific performance will not be enforced where the time of the making of the agreement and its consideration are left in doubt and uncertainty. Ib.

Where a decree for specific execution of a contract for sale of lands is sought, the contract must be proved. Rankin v. Simpson, 57 D. 668.

A vendor can seldom ask the interposition of equity to specifically enforce a parol contract. He must show that he will be prejudiced by its non-performance, as that the vendee had been given and has retained possession. Printup v. Mitchell, 63 D. 258.

The terms of a parol contract for sale of land must be indubitably established, and must be free from all doubt or ambiguity, in order to justify a court of equity in enforcing its performance. Blanchard v. McDougall, 70 D. 458.

40. The judgment or decree; its form, and how entered. — In decreeing specific performance, a court of equity must have some certain and specific act which ought to be performed by the delinquent party to act upon, and it will decree that it be performed; but it cannot enter a general decree that in future the delinquent party shall perform the acts required of him by his contract. Such a decree would be too general and indefinite. Atlantic etc. R. R. Co. v. Speer, 79 D. 305.

In a decree for specific performance, the same shall be final for a conveyance, and if not complied with, a decretal order appointing a commissioner to execute the decree should be entered. Sproule v. Winant, 18 D. 164.

In a suit for the specific performance of an agreement for the sale of a tract of land, which provided that payment should be made in installments, by the giving of bonds, the decree should not direct a sale of the entire tract of land, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the deferred installments as well as those then due; but the purchaser should be directed to execute the bonds as agreed, and a vendor's lien retained on the land for their payment. Watts v. Kinney, 23 D. 266.

A contract agreeing to pay a specific sum in gold coin, or upon failure thereof to pay such further sum as may be equal to the difference in value between gold coin and legal-tender notes, belongs to the class of contracts provided for in the so-called specific-contract act of California, and may be enforced according to its meaning; and the meaning of such contract is, that the maker will pay in gold coin, or if he does not do so, in legal-tender notes at their gold value, and a judgment may be rendered on such contract, payable in gold coin alone. Lane v. Gluckauf, 87 D. 121.

The California specific-contract act was not intended to legalize contracts which without it were illegal, but to provide a remedy for enforcing certain contracts, if held to be legal. Id.

41. What relief may be granted, generally.*—Courts of equity, in some cases, will decree specific execution, not according to the letter of the contract, if that will be unconscionable, but they will modify it according to the change of circumstances. Wynn v. Garland, 68 D. 190.

Where a contract is entire, equity will decree an entire performance or a total rescission; it cannot rescind as to a part and affirm as to the residue which has been performed. If the rights of third persons are involved, the parties must be left to their remedies at law. Johnston v. Mitchell, 10 D. 727.

One who has contracted to convey lands will not be compelled to convey a part to the grantee of his obligee, but such grantee is entitled to a decree compelling a conveyance of the whole to his grantor, as provided in the original contract. Hancock v. Hancock, 15 D. 92.

If it appear that complainant is entitled to a conveyance of land, but its quantity and location are uncertain, a survey should be ordered. Id.

* Partial performance, when may be compelled, see note, 12 D. 324.

Affirmative relief to a defendant, not responsive to the prayer of the plaintiff's bill, may be decreed where the equities of the whole case disclosed by the pleadings and proofs require it. Owings's Case, 17 D. 311.

Specific performance of a parol agreement will be decreed against defendants who set it up and join in a prayer for its specific execution. Squire v. Harder, 19 D. 448.

A court denying specific performance may retain the bill and decree repayment of the consideration money paid on a parol agreement for the sale of land, but will deny costs to either party. Pinnock v. Clough, 42 D. 521.

A court of equity will decree specific performance of an agreement for exchange of lands, when, on the faith of such agreement, and in pursuance thereof, plaintiff purchased the land which he was to convey in exchange, if at the time for the exchange plaintiff is ready and willing to perform on his part, but defendant on his part fails to perform, in that he tenders a deed not signed by his wife, her refusal being induced by himself after she had consented to the agreement to convey, and he refuses, in lieu of her signature, to give an indemnity against any future claim for dower which she may have in such lands; and in granting such relief the court may order that the conveyances be so made between the parties that the plaintiff will hold an indemnity in the land which he conveys to defendant, so as to secure him against any future claim to be set up by defendant's wife. Young v. Paul, 64 D. 458.

42. How far relief is discretionary.—Specific performance of contracts is always addressed to the discretion of courts of equity, and they seldom, if ever, extend relief to one who has willfully violated his part of the contract. Grundy v. Edwards, 23 D. 409; Young v. Daniels, 63 D. 477; Wynn v. Garland, 68 D. 190. Or where to do so would be inequitable to the other party to the contract. Bryan v. Loftus, 39 D. 242; Johnson v. Hubbell, 66 D. 773.

Relief is not matter of right in either party to suit for specific performance, but it is granted or withheld, according to the circumstances of each case, when the rules or principles of equity will not furnish any exact measure of justice between the parties. Young v. Daniels, 63 D. 477; Johnson v. Hubbell, 66 D. 773.

Hence it requires much less strength of case on the part of the defendant to resist a bill to perform a contract than it does on the part of the plaintiff to maintain a bill to enforce a specific performance. Trigg v. Read, 42 D. 447.

While an application for specific performance is always addressed to the sound discretion of the court, yet where a contract respecting real estate is in writing, and is in its nature and circumstances unobjectionable, it is as much a matter of course for a court of equity to decree a specific performance of it as it is for a court of law to give damages for a breach of it. Brewer v. Herbert, 96 D. 582.

The discretion which the chancellor possesses in suits for specific performance of contracts is not arbitrary or capricious; it must be regulated on grounds which will make it judicial. Seymour v. Delancy, 15 D. 270.

43. What title or conveyance plaintiff will be compelled to accept.*—A specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of a good and sufficient title to real property will not be decreed, unless the grantor can place in the hands of the grantee all the muniments of title, sufficient to enable him to make out a title in ejectment. Ross v. Grimbail, 4 D. 711.

Equity will not compel one to accept a deed for part of a tract of land agreed to be conveyed, and to receive compensation for the residue. McKeas v. Reel, 12 D. 318. In such a case, the vendee may take the safe land and compensation for the residue, or may refuse to take any part, and go for compensation for the whole land. Rankin v. Maxwell, 12 D. 431.

A contract to give a quitclaim deed has reference to the title at the time the contract was entered into; not to one subsequently acquired. Woodcock v. Bennet, 13 D. 568.

Specific performance may be decreed, if it appears by the report of a master that a perfect title can be made to the purchaser at the time of making such report, unless the purchaser has been materially injured by the delay. Ref. Prot. Dutch Church v. Mot, 32 D. 613.

A party sued for specific performance of an agreement to lease lands can only be compelled to execute a lease containing the usual provisions, where nothing was said as to its terms, at the time when the agreement was made. Baton v. Whitaker, 44 D. 586.

Equity ought not to enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of lands, when the vendor's title is derived from such a judicial sale as has been pronounced unauthorized and illegal by the appellate court. Young v. Rathbone, 84 D. 151.

Equity will not compel a purchaser to accept a title depending upon an illegal and invalid sale while it remains open to review at the discretion of a court, although the judgment unreversed might be conclusive upon the party's rights. Id.

A vendee acting in good faith will not be compelled to accept a deed after the time fixed for delivery thereof has passed, and circumstances have materially changed, and the value of the property depreciated. Id.

The vendor is bound to convey title to land which he sells and covenants for in his obligation; and if from his negligence or default the title has been lost, or the property becomes encumbered by judgments, taxes, forfeiture, or otherwise, before the time for conveying the same, or before he offers to perform his contract, or before a rescission of the contract, he cannot insist upon performance by the other party until he relieves the title from such subsequent encumbrance. Cooper v. Tyler, 95 D. 442.

Equity will not compel a vendee to take an imperfect or defective title, but a pecuniary charge against which adequate security has been given does not constitute a defect in title; and equity will enforce the agreement to convey where a perfect title can be made at the time of the decree. Brewer v. Herbert, 96 D. 582.

Where a vendor contracted to sell a house and lot, the fact that at the date of the contract there was a judgment against the vendor from which he had entered an appeal, and given bond with ample security to pay the amount of the judgment, with costs, in case he should fail to prosecute his appeal with effect, was held not to constitute a defect or encumbrance upon the title which would prevent a specific execution of it. Id.

44. Recovery of interest.—Where a specific performance cannot be decreed, the court should decree the repayment of the purchase-money and interest, together with the value of the lasting improvements. Johnston v. Glancy, 23 D. 45.

45. When compensation in damages will be adjudged.—A bill for specific performance of a parol agreement, which has been denied because of failure to make out a proper case, will be retained by a court of equity for the purpose of granting compensation to one who, in faith of said agreement, has made valuable improvements, and whose remedy at law is incomplete. Aday v. Echols, 52 D. 225.

Where specific performance has been denied, and compensation allowed, the land may be charged with the amount ascertained to be due to the complainant, as against the vendor and his representatives, unless some circumstances render such a decree improper. Id.

Upon a bill for a specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land, if the vendor's title is doubtful to a part, the court will not compel him to give land out of the same survey, to which his title is clear, in lieu of the land sold, but will give compensation in damages for that portion to which the title is doubtful; and the vendor having acted in good faith, the measure of compensation is the price paid and interest. Kelly v. Bradford, 8 D. 656.

Equity will not ordinarily decree compensation in damages to a party who, when he files his bill for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land, knows that the contract cannot be specifically performed or decreed, but will, in such case, leave him to his action at law for a breach of the contract. McQueen v. Chouteau, 64 D. 178.

Equity will decree specific performance where the terms of an agreement have not been strictly complied with, or where such terms are incapable of being strictly complied with, if there has not been gross negligence in the party, and it is conscientious that the agreement should be performed, and if compensation may be made for the injury occasioned by the non-compliance with the strict terms; for the doctrine of such courts is not forfeiture, but compensation. Wynn v. Garland, 68 D. 190.

Equity has jurisdiction to grant compensation in all cases of bills for specific performance, though denying the relief sought by the bill, but should exercise it only under special circumstances and upon peculiar equities. Rider v. Gray, 69 D. 135.

If the wife of a vendor refuses to release her dower in land contracted to be sold by him, and the vendee is willing to take such title as the husband has to give, he may enforce the performance of the contract, and have an abatement of the purchase-money in compensation for the right of dower left outstanding. Wright v. Young, 70 D. 453.

An inchoate right of dower outstanding is a defect in title, and an encumbrance upon the estate, but its value is susceptible of accurate calculation. Id.

A court of equity may, in cases where the party is not entitled to specific performance, grant relief by decreeing the repayment of the money expended on the faith of the contract. Green v. Drummond, 1 R. 14.

46. Measure of damages in lieu of performance. — The measure of compensation upon denying a bill for specific performance is the amount paid on the contract, with interest, when there is no defense made on the merits. Rider v. Gray, 69 D. 135.

The measure of compensation, if the loss is not imputable to the vendor, is the value of the land at the date of sale, with interest from the time the purchase-money fell due. Rankin v. Maxwell, 12 D. 431.

SPENDTHRIFTS.

For analogous titles, see GUARDIAN AND WARD; INFANTS; INSANE PERSONS.

1. The disability, and how established. — It is competent for a statute to make an adjudication of a spendthrift's disability relate back to the time of the commencement of proceedings against him; history of legislation upon this subject given. Chandler v. Simmons, 93 D. 117.

2. Invalidity of contracts by. — Under section 10, chapter 109, General Statutes of Massachusetts, 1860, all contracts of a spendthrift, except for necessities, and all sales or transfers of property made by him pending proceedings against him, are void; and an adult's ratification by a sealed instrument of a conveyance of real estate made by him while a minor is a void contract, if executed after a copy of a complaint, under section 9, chapter 109, of said statutes, to place him under guardianship as a spendthrift, and of the order of notice thereon, has been filed in the registry of deeds, and after a guardian has been appointed by the probate court, and while an appeal is pending in this court, which afterwards affirms the decree of appointment. Chandler v. Simmons, 93 D. 117.

A spendthrift under guardianship cannot even make an acknowledgment that will take his debt out of the statute of limitations; but his guardian may bind the ward's estate by such an acknowledgment. Id.

3. Powers of the guardian. — A guardian of a spendthrift has authority, as such, to sell trees standing on his ward's land, and may receive the money, or take notes therefor, payable to himself. Thompson v. Boardman, 18 D. 684.

The ward cannot, after the guardianship ceases, discharge such notes; more especially if the ward is indebted to the guardian for advances made. Id.

If none of the timber had been taken during the guardianship, and after its termination the ward had refused to allow it to be taken, such facts might constitute a good defense to an action on the note. Id.

The guardian of an adult may avoid any conveyance of property executed by his ward while a minor which might be avoided by the ward himself if capable of exercising the right; or where, after he is of full age, he is unable to exercise his privilege by reason of mental or legal incapacity. Chandler v. Simmons, 93 D. 117.

A deed obtained by undue influence, though voidable only by the party wronged, may be avoided by a guardian afterwards appointed. Id.

1. General nature of the confederation of states. — The union of states is perpetual and indissoluble, and no state has the right to secede therefrom. Chancery v. Bailey, 95 D. 350.

2. Admission into the Union. — The territorial courts of Wisconsin were in existence, and judgments could be rendered by them, after the adoption of the state constitution, and before its approval by Congress and admission of the territory as a state. How v. Kane, 54 D. 152.

The territorial officers, on the admission of Kansas as a state, became ad interim state officers. They could do no act prohibited by the constitution to regulate state officers of like functions, but were not obliged to follow the mode of procedure in the transaction of public business prescribed for the regular officers of the state government. State v. Hitchcock, 81 D. 503.

The territorial legislature, being in session when the act of admission was passed, had power to continue in the discharge of the duties of that department until superseded, according to the mode of procedure prescribed in the organic act, and the laws so passed were valid, provided they were not in conflict with the constitution of the United States or the state. Id.

Missouri was admitted into the Union, and recognized as one of the states, on the same terms, and with the same powers, as the original states. Her admission was a direct and positive declaration that her constitution was republican in form, and not inconsistent with the constitution of the United States. She reserved the exclusive right to alter, amend, or abolish her constitution whenever her people might deem it necessary for their safety and happiness. Blair v. Ridgely, 97 D. 248.

3. Powers reserved to the states. — The commonwealth has succeeded to so much of the prerogative of the king as belonged to him as parens patriæ. Com. v. Baldwin, 26 D. 33.

The state may reserve the right to execute and serve process in any territory which she may cede to the United States. State v. Dimick, 37 D. 197.

A state has the same undeniable and unlimited jurisdiction over all persons and things within its limits as any foreign nation, unless such jurisdiction was withheld or limited by the federal constitution. Chancery v. Bailey, 95 D. 350.

The respective powers and duties of the national and of the state governments stated. Com. v. Kimball, 35 D. 326.

4. Sovereignty is that public authority which commands in civil society, and orders and directs what each citizen is to perform to obtain the end of its institution. Chancery v. Bailey, 95 D. 350.

Rights which are a part of state sovereignty, conferred for public good, cannot be lost by disseisin. Treat v. Lord, 66 D. 298.

5. Comity between states — Conflict of laws. — The penal laws of one state can have no operation in another state; they are strictly local. Scoville v. Canfield, 7 D. 467; Dickson v. Dickson, 24 D. 444.

No principle of comity among neighboring communities can be extended to give force and effect to the penal laws of one society in the territory of another, nor of one of the states of the American Union in another. Dickson v. Dickson, 24 D. 444.

Nothing in the law or comity of nations requires the courts of one state to give effect to the law of another state which is in derogation of the former's laws, and in violation of rights that have vested by force thereof. McLean v. Hardin, 69 D. 740. S. P., Mahorner v. Hooe, 48 D. 706; Roche v. Washington, 81 D. 376; Donovan v. Pitcher, 25 R. 634. And in the conflict of laws, when it must often be a matter of doubt which shall prevail, the court which decides will prefer the law of its own country to that of the stranger. Smith v. McAtee, 92 D. 641.

Comity is overruled by positive law, and it is only in the silence of any particular rule affirming, denying, or restraining the operation of foreign laws that courts of justice presume a tacit adoption of them by their own government. Id.

Courts of a state have perfect jurisdiction over all personal property as well as real, within its limits, belonging to a married woman, and they have a right to protect both from the debts of the husband; if, therefore, the legislative enactments of one state in regard to the property of the wife conflict with the laws of another state in which the husband and wife are domiciled, it cannot be made a question in the courts of the former which shall prevail; but where there is no constitutional barrier, these courts are bound to observe and enforce the statutory provisions of their own state. Id.

A cause of action accruing in Iowa, under a statute rendering railway corporations liable to their employees for injuries by the negligence of their co-employees in the operation of such railway, may be enforced in Minnesota, although there is no corresponding statute there. Herrick v. Minneapolis etc. Ry Co., 47 R. 771.

Defendant's dog, owned and kept in Massachusetts, strayed into an adjoining state, and bit plaintiff. In action of tort in Massachusetts for the injury, there was no evidence that the statute of such adjoining state made the injury actionable, nor was it proved that the defendant had knowledge that his dog was accustomed to bite mankind, and therefore liable at common law. Held, that the action would not lie, although the statute of Massachusetts gives an action for such injuries within the state. Le Forest v. Tolman, 19 R. 400.

An action was brought in New York, to render a stockholder of an Iowa corporation individually liable for a debt of the corporation on account of the failure to file the articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state, as required by the Iowa law in the case of all corporations except railroad companies. The statute provided this remedy after execution should be returned unsatisfied against the corporation. The Iowa supreme court in a similar action against another stockholder of the same corporation had held, by a divided court, after the commencement of this action, that the filing was not requisite because the corporation in question was a railroad company. No payment had been obtained against the corporation. Held, that this action could not be maintained. Jessup v. Carnegie, 36 R. 643.

6. Actions by or against states. — 1. By a state. — One state of this Union may sue in the courts of any other state thereof. State v. Woram, 40 D. 378; Spencer v. Brockway, 13 D. 615.

A state, as a political corporation, has a right, independent of any statutory provision, to institute a suit in any of her courts, whether it be required by her pecuniary interests or the general public welfare. People v. St. Louis, 48 D. 339.

A suit the subject of which is local must be commenced by the state in the county of its locality, unless a special statute authorizes it to be commenced elsewhere. Ib.

The state is the real plaintiff where the treasurer sues and recovers judgment for its use. Com. v. Baldwin, 26 D. 33.

In a civil action brought by the people of the state against alleged conspirators, to recover money fraudulently obtained from a municipal corporation, — held, that the corporation, and not the state, was the proper party plaintiff. People v. Ingersoll, 17 R. 178.

The proper party to maintain a civil action for a tort or wrong to property is one who as trustee, special property man, bailee, or general owner has been pecuniarily damaged; and the state cannot, any more than a private individual, maintain a civil action for the recovery of money, except upon proof of title. Ib.

The relation of principal and agent does not exist between the state and municipal corporations in respect to the exercise of corporate functions; and money raised by municipal corporations for corporate purposes, but fraudulently obtained by wrongdoers, does not belong to the state, either in the capacity of trustee, principal, or owner, and cannot be sued for by the state without express legislative authority. Ib.

2. *Against the state. — The sovereign cannot be sued unless by its own consent. Hunsaker v. Borden, 63 D. 130; United States v. Murdock, 89 D. 651; or unless there is an enactment of the legislature providing the manner and in what courts she may be sued. Divine v. Harvie, 18 D. 194. The remedy of a party upon a contract with the state is by an appeal to the legislature, who, it is fair to presume, will make provision for its full execution, and do ample justice to the party with whom it may have contracted. Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 41 D. 549.

A state is not embraced by an act made to operate between individuals, unless such intention is apparent in the act; and an act subjecting the debts due a judgment debtor to his creditors does not embrace a debt due by the state. Divine v. Harvie, 18 D. 194.†

A state cannot be made a garnishee, nor can the auditor and treasurer be made parties to a suit, in place of the state, to obtain a warrant and money from the treasurer. Ib.

A creditor of the state cannot be compelled, by bill, under the act subjecting chases in action of a debtor to the satisfaction of his creditor's judgment, to assign his warrants on the treasury, or otherwise transfer the demand to his creditor. Ib.

A demand on the state is not a chose in action within the statute mentioned. Ib.

Creditors of a state have nothing to rely upon except her good faith, and she has equally the power to postpone the time of payment or to refuse to pay at all. Hunsaker v. Borden, 63 D. 130.

One has no right to a remedy against the government or a subdivision thereof which cannot be taken away by the government. Ib.

A state can neither be sued nor be indicted; but such immunity does not pass to the vendees of her property or rights. Delaware Division Canal Co. v. Com., 100 D. 570.

The constitution of Alabama provided that "suits may be brought against the state in such courts as may be by law provided." The legislature made provision accordingly, by a statute which was afterward repealed. Held, that the repeal was constitutional, and abated pending suits. Ex parte Alabama, 23 R. 567.

7. Priority of the state. — If the state take a particular security or mortgage, it is not thereby deprived of its general priority in cases to which it is entitled by law. Lenoir v. Winn, 6 D. 597.

The commonwealth is not bound by a statute limiting liens of judgments to a certain period, if not named. Com. v. Baldwin, 26 D. 33.

The state has no priority to the payment of its debts, by virtue of the act giving such priority to the lord proprietary of Maryland, that act being confined to the proprietary and his heirs, and not being in existence at the time of the Revolution. State v. Bank of Maryland, 26 D. 561.

By virtue of the common law, Maryland has priority in the payment of its debts, in the course of the distribution of the debtor's property, where an individual creditor has no antecedent lien. Ib.

The priority of the state is lost by the valid assignment of the debtor's (a banking corporation's) property in trust for the equal benefit of all its creditors; and the state can only come in with the other creditors. Ib.

8. Dealings between state and citizen. — A state is a corporation, and as such may be the payee of a note. State v. Woram, 40 D. 378.

Where a state, by an express act, ratifies an agreement made by its officers, except a condition subsequent contained therein, and takes possession of the property under such agreement, it is a ratification of the whole agreement, the exception being null and void, and is not a breach of that condition. Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 41 D. 549.

A state has power to make a contract which shall bind it in future. State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699.

* Actions against the sovereign, see note, 12 D. 517-519.

† Sovereign or state not bound by general words in statutes, see note, 15 D. 880-883.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A state undoubtedly has capacity to take by deed or devise, and a release to it by a grantee of land will be operative and effectual to divest the title of the grantee. Dixie v. Miller, 78 D. 571.

A state, when it enters into a contract with its citizens, can claim no exemption from the rules of law applicable to contracts between individuals. All acts which relate to the contract, and all declarations of agents which, in the case of a citizen, would affect the contract, must be held as in like manner affecting a contract made by the state. Patton v. Gilmer, 94 D. 665.

When the state breaks its contract, duly made by its authorized agents for the construction of a public work, it is liable for prospective profits. Danolds v. State, 42 R. 277.

With a view to raising a revenue, a state statute required the inspection of tobacco, and the storing of it in the state tobacco warehouses for that purpose. The plaintiff stored his tobacco in conformity with that law, and while so stored it was destroyed by fire. The plaintiff was enabled by special leave of the legislature to sue therefor. He brought action therefor, alleging that the loss occurred through the negligence of the state. Held, on demurrer, that there was no contract or obligation on the part of the state to keep the tobacco safe, and that the state was not liable for the loss as bailor, or in any other capacity. Moore v. Maryland, 28 R. 483.

9. State bonds. — Under an act of the legislature, bonds of the state were issued to raise money to be used in the purchase of lands to be sold to settlers thereon, and the interest on the purchase-money of the lands, when sold, to be applied by the state treasurer to the payment of the interest on the bonds issued under the act. Held, that the act constituted part of the contract with the holders of the bonds, and that the state had no right to divert the fund arising from the interest on the purchase-money of the land from the payment of the interest on such bonds. When the state borrows money on bonds issued by it for that purpose, and pledges a certain fund for the payment of the interest to accrue thereon, such pledge is a part of the contract with the holders of the bonds, and the state has no right, under the constitution of the United States, to impair the obligation of the contract by diverting the fund to other purposes. State v. Cardoso, 28 R. 275.

- I. HOW ENACTED.
- II. CONSTITUTIONALITY; VALIDITY.
- III. INTERPRETATION AND EFFECT.
- IV. REPEAL, AND ITS EFFECT.

I. HOW ENACTED

1. General rules.*—A constitutional provision that no bill shall become law until read on three several days in each house of the general assembly does not contemplate that everything which is to become law by the adoption of such bill shall be thus read. Dew v. Cunningham, 65 D. 362.

A constitutional provision prescribing the style of laws will not invalidate a body of laws not themselves in such style, if the bill by which they were adopted pursued the prescribed style. Id.

If a law has been regularly promulgated according to the terms of the constitution, its invalidity will not be examined or passed upon by the judiciary on alleged irregularities or informalities committed by the general assembly in passing it, nor will parol evidence be received to show that the general assembly have not complied with the requirements of the constitution in passing it. Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Richoux, 8 R. 602.

Every substantial part of a proposed enactment is a "bill," within the constitutional sense of the term, and must pass through all

* Power of courts to receive evidence to determine whether statutes were properly enacted, see note, 51 D. 616-623.

Sufficiency of such evidence, see notes, 51 D. 616-623; 55 D. 356-364.

the constitutional stages of enactment before it becomes law. State v. Platt, 16 R. 647.

2. The necessary vote — Authentication. — A majority of all the members elected to either branch of the general assembly must concur in the final passage of a bill, under the constitution of Illinois, in order that it shall become a law. Spangler v. Jacoby, 58 D. 571.

The vote must be taken by ayes and noes and entered on the journal, on the final passage of a bill by either branch of the general assembly. Id.

In Illinois, a bill signed by the president of the senate and speaker of the house, and approved by the governor, would be conclusive of its validity and binding force as a law, except for the constitutional provision requiring that all bills, before they can become laws, shall be read three several times in each house, and shall be passed by a vote of a majority of all the members elect. People ex rel. Barnes v. Starnes, 85 D. 348.

The act of 1855 for compensating parties whose property may be destroyed by mobs and riots is not unconstitutional, under section 14, article 7, of the New York constitution, because it was not passed when three fifths of the members elected to each house were present. The article of the constitution relates to the state finances, while the act of 1855 does not impose a tax of any kind. Darlington v. Mayor etc., 88 D. 248.

When a statute is authenticated by the signatures of the presiding officers of the two houses of the legislature, the courts will not search further to ascertain whether or not such facts existed as gave constitutional warrant to those officers to thus authenticate the act as having received legislative sanction in such manner as to give it the force of law. Evans v. Browne, 95 D. 710.

The New York constitution required certain laws to be passed by a two-thirds vote of the legislature. Held, 1. That such a law, not appearing on its face to have been passed by the required vote, was void; and 2. That the objection to the law need not be pleaded. People ex rel. v. Comm'rs of Highways, 13 R. 581.

The West Virginia constitution provides that "no bill shall be passed by either branch of the legislature without an affirmative vote of a majority of the members elected thereto." An act was passed by the affirmative vote of eleven senators, in a body which consisted, when full, of twenty-two members, one member having resigned after the opening of the session at which the act was passed. Held, that the court would not declare the act unconstitutional. Osburn v. Staley, 13 R. 640.

3. Approval. — The governor is an officer de facto, and his approval of acts of the legislature valid, where he holds over after expiration of his term, and after his succesor has taken the oath of office, on the assumption of his re-election, in pursuance of the certificate of the state canvassers, and continues to so act as governor. State v. Williams, 68 D. 65.

An act is not invalid by reason of its having been approved on a day after the act of Congress admitting Kansas into the Union. State v. Hitchcock, 81 D. 503.

The constitution of Kansas does not require a record to be kept of the presentation of a bill to the governor for approval; but if it did, the fact that such directory provision as to a formal step was not complied with could not affect the validity of the law. Id.

Where the governor approves a bill, the constitution does not require that he should notify either house of the legislature of the fact, or that such notification, if made, should be entered on the journals. The date being no necessary part of the approval, it will be presumed that the bill was signed between the date of its passage and the final adjournment of that session of the legislature. Id.

When a bill has passed both branches of the legislature, and been signed by the proper officers, and sent to the governor for approval, it cannot be recalled except by the joint action of both. If the governor sends back the bill on the request of one house, any action it may take thereon is a nullity. People v. Devlin, 88 D. 377.

A bill passed by joint action of both houses, signed by their officers, and approved by the governor, and deposited in the office of the secretary of state, becomes a law, notwithstanding any action either house alone may take in regard thereto. Id.

4. Return without approval. — Under a section of the California constitution requiring all bills passed by the legislature to be presented to the governor for his approval, to be returned with his objections in case of non-approval, and providing, "that if any bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature, by adjournment, prevent such return," the governor sent to the legislature a bill not approved, with his objections, on the tenth day, and before the usual hour for adjournment. The legislature had, however, adjourned to the day following, and the messenger returned the bill to the governor, who retained it thereafter. Held, 1. That the governor had not returned the bill, within the meaning of the constitution; 2. That the legislature had not, by adjournment, prevented such return, the adjournment not being final; 3. That the court had jurisdiction to compel the governor, by mandamus, to cause the bill to be authenticated as a statute. Harpenden v. Haight, 2 R. 432.

For index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

5. Entries in legislative journals.*—The journals of either branch of the legislature may be appealed to to show that a particular act was not passed in the mode prescribed by the constitution, and thus defeat its operation altogether. Spangler v. Jacoby, 58 D. 571; Osburn v. Staley, 13 R. 640; Berry v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 69. And whenever it appears that the enrolled act differs from the bill as it passed, in a substantial matter, the judiciary department of the state may declare the whole act, or the part affected by the change, unconstitutional and void. State v. Platt, 16 R. 647.

When a bill is signed by both speakers and approved by the governor, the presumption is raised that it has been constitutionally adopted, but this presumption may be rebutted by the journals of the two houses. People ex rel. Barnes v. Starnes, 85 D. 348; Spangler v. Jacoby, 58 D. 571; State v. McClelland, 53 R. 814.

According to the adopted theory of legislation in Illinois, when a bill has become a law, there must be record evidence of every material requirement, from its introduction until it becomes a law, and this evidence is found upon the journals of the two houses. People ex rel. Barnes v. Starnes, 85 D. 348.

A bill purporting to be an appropriation act is not a law, though signed by the speakers of the two houses, and approved by the governor, where it does not appear from the journal of the house of representatives to have passed that body. Id.

A statute having the proper forms of authentication cannot be impeached or questioned upon mere parol evidence. Berry v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 69.

The constitutionality of a statute cannot be attacked by introducing the journals of the legislature as evidence to contradict the statute roll. Pacific R. R. Co. v. Governor, 66 D. 673. But it seems that where the constitution requires a two-thirds vote for the passage of an act, courts may look into and beyond the record to see if it was passed as a majority bill or by the requisite two-thirds vote. People v. Devlin, 88 D. 377.

The legislative journals are not records; they are of no validity after an act has passed the legislature. Pacific R. R. Co. v. Governor, 66 D. 673.

The statute roll is the only absolute and conclusive proof of a statute; this record imports absolute verity, and cannot be contradicted. Pacific R. R. Co. v. Governor, 66 D. 673; Sherman v. Story, 89 D. 93; either by the legislative journals, or by the bill as originally introduced, or by the amendments attached to it, or by parol evidence. Sherman v. Story, 89 D. 93.

* Legislative journals as evidence, see notes, 61 D. 618-621; 85 D. 574, 575.

6. Publication, distribution, etc.—The objection that a statute was not published as required by the constitution is not maintainable when the constitution provides that a law shall not take effect until published and circulated, but gives no detailed directions, and the code provides that such acts shall take effect on the first day of July following the session, and the act in question was actually published in the volume of session laws before the first day of July following the session. The act took effect on that day by virtue of these general provisions. Santo v. State, 63 D. 487.

Part of an act may be made to take effect upon publication in newspapers, under a constitutional provision that if the legislature deem a law of immediate importance they may provide that it take effect by publication in newspapers. Id.

Publication of a statute is effected under the Indiana constitution, when the act is distributed, by the secretary of state, in a bound volume, in all the counties of the state. State v. Bailey, 79 D. 405.

Provisions as to the form of binding, color of materials, etc., of statutes, are directory only, and a failure of strict compliance with such provisions will not render the distribution of such statutes as are prepared and distributed any the less a publication of them. Id.

Eight and one half months is ample time to enable the secretary of state to publish and distribute specified laws, and courts will presume that he has done so, where he has been lawfully directed to do it. Id.

The correctness of publication or the existence of a statute cannot be tried as a question of fact, but must be determined as one of law by the court. Sherman v. Story, 89 D. 93.

Where an act of the legislature has been duly signed, certified, and published, evidence is inadmissible to show an error in the engrossing. Mayor v. Harwood, 3 R. 161.

7. Passing bill over governor's veto.—The legislature may provide a mode by statute for the authentication of laws returned to the legislature by the governor without his signature, and after reconsideration passed by both houses, when the constitution is silent as to the mode by which such laws shall be authenticated. Pacific R. R. Co. v. Governor, 66 D. 673.

8. The enacting clause.—A state constitution provided that statutes should be preceded by the formal enacting clause, "Be it enacted," etc. Held, that the provision was directory merely, and that the omission of such clause did not invalidate a statute. Cope Girardeau v. Riley, 14 R. 427. Contra, see State v. Rogers, 21 R. 738.

9. When a statute takes effect.—It was formerly the rule in England that acts of Parliament which were to take effect from and after their passage should operate from the first day of the session. Boston v. Cummins, 60 D. 717.

A statute must be construed to speak from the first day of the session at which the act was passed; thus "next January" was held to mean the January following the beginning of the session, though the act was passed in that January. Weeks v. Weeks, 47 D. 358.

Public acts of the general assembly take effect from its rising, if not otherwise provided; and courts take judicial notice of the time when the session of the legislature terminates. Perkins v. Perkins, 18 D. 120.

A statute takes effect from its date, when no time is fixed, and there is no constitutional provision concerning it. And this rule is fixed beyond the power of judicial control. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

Where an act passed is but a regular exercise of legislative power, notice to the party to be affected by the same is unnecessary. Wright v. Wright, 56 D. 723.

A constitutional provision providing that every law shall be recorded, printed, published, and certified to the courts does not regulate the time when a law shall go into operation. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

The code of Iowa went into effect on July 1, 1851, and not at the date of its passage and approval; and the words "prior to the passage of this law," employed in section 1249, are in effect the same as if the word "heretofore" had been used, and either expression must relate to the time of taking effect, and not to the time of passage. Charless v. Lamberson, 63 D. 457.

In Maryland, an act not expressly providing when it shall take effect goes into operation only on the 1st of June next after the session of the legislature at which it was passed: See constitution of that state, section 31 of article 3. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

A statute takes effect at the time named therein, whether printed or not; and this, notwithstanding the requirement of the constitution that every law shall be printed in due time. Id.

The date of the certificate of the secretary of state appended to the published volumes of statutes will, in the absence of any suggestion which may lead to a more accurate inquiry, be taken to be the date of their publication and taking effect. Attorney-General v. Foote, 78 D. 689.

Whether a statute is in force at a given time is a question for the court to determine by judicial knowledge. State ex rel. Brown v. Bailey, 79 D. 405.

Where a statute provides that it shall take effect "from and after its passage," in computing the time when it takes effect the day of its passage is to be excluded. Parkinson v. Brandenburg, 59 R. 326.

II. CONSTITUTIONALITY; VALIDITY.

10. General principles. — 1. Power of the courts to pass upon question of constitutionality. — The judiciary has the power and it is its duty to determine whether a statute conflicts with the constitution, and in case of such conflict to declare the statute void. Bailey v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 44 D. 593; Hoke v. Henderson, 25 D. 677; Bailey v. Genry, 13 D. 484; Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379; Pacific R. R. Co. v. Governor, 66 D. 673; Denham v. Holeman, 71 D. 198; Rison v. Farr, 87 D. 52.

A statute in conflict with the constitution is not a legislative act, and cannot have the force of law. Bailey v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 44 D. 593; Boston v. Cummins, 60 D. 717.

An act of the legislature must not infringe upon either the constitution of the United States or upon that of the state, and if it does so, it is absolutely void. Rison v. Farr, 87 D. 52.

In passing a legislative enactment, the law-making power but announces its will as defined by the constitution. The legal consequences resulting from the act are to be determined by the judiciary. Wright v. Wright, 56 D. 723.

Proceedings under an unconstitutional statute cannot be sustained, although they are so conducted as not to bear upon their face the objectionable features of the statute; or in other words, an unconstitutional law cannot be made operative by the magistrate adopting expedients and taking precautions not required by the statute. Fisher v. McGirr, 61 D. 381.

The courts must determine questions as to the power of the legislature under the constitution when such questions are properly presented, but cannot arrest the operation of a statute on the ground that it is unwise, unjust, or oppressive when no question of legislative power is involved. Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 88 D. 711. S. P., Armington v. Barnett, 40 D. 705; Taylor v. Newberne, 64 D. 586; Donahoe v. Richards, 61 D. 256.

The courts cannot declare policy except as it is indicated by legislation or results from the spirit and object of the statutes. Mathorner v. Hooe, 48 D. 708.

A court cannot determine the reasonableness of a legislative act. Moor v. Veasie, 52 D. 655.

Courts have nothing to do with the wisdom, sound policy, or expediency of a law. Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379.

The remedy for unjust or unwise legislation is not to be administered by the courts, but remains in the hands of the people. People v. Mayor, 55 D. 268.

2. Their reluctance to declare statutes void. — The power of courts to declare legislative acts unconstitutional is to be exercised with the most guarded circumspection and care. Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694; Santo v. State, 63 D. 487; Olmstead v. Camp, 89 D. 221.

A statute should not be declared unconstitutional except in cases of plain and manifest violation of that instrument by the legislature. Williamson v. Williamson, 41 D. 636; Tate v. Bell, 26 D. 221; State v. Reid, 35 D. 44; Lane v. Dorman, 36 D. 543; City of Louisville v. Hyatt, 36 D. 594; Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447; F. R. Steamboat Co. v. Foster, 48 D. 248; Lycoming v. Union, 53 D. 575; Sharpless v. Mayor etc. of Phila., 59 D. 759; Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. State, 74 D. 572; Stewart v. Supervisors etc., 1 R. 238; Hanson v. Vernon, 1 R. 215; Commonwealth v. Erie R'y Co., 1 R. 399.

Legislative acts are presumed to be constitutional, and their effect and operation can only be impeded by judicial powers, when they infringe some of the provisions of the constitution, or violate the vested rights of the people. Legislative acts are never pronounced unconstitutional or void in doubtful cases. Davis v. Helbig, 92 D. 646.

Fraud in obtaining an act of the legislature will not be presumed, but must be clearly proved before the court will pronounce the act void. Derby T. Co. v. Parks, 27 D. 700.

3. Rules for determining question of constitutionality.—The constitutionality of a legislative act cannot be called in question by the people; individuals alleging themselves to be injured thereby alone can raise the question. People v. Rensselaer etc. R. R. Co., 30 D. 33.

A statute can be declared void only so far as it exceeds the legislative power, and only as to those whose rights are injuriously affected thereby, where it is assailed on those grounds. Wellington's Case, 26 D. 631.

Such act is voidable only, and not void. Id.

Strangers to the rights affected cannot take advantage of the grounds of avoidance of such a statute. Id.

A legislative enactment, which is palpably absurd, unnatural, unjust, or impracticable, is absolutely void, both here and in England. Campbell's Case, 20 D. 360.

Statutes calculated to operate against principles of common right, reason, and justice are null and void. Flint River Steamboat Co. v. Roberts, 48 D. 178. But compare Flint River Steamboat Co. v. Foster, 48 D. 248.

The constitution itself must be looked to in determining the validity of a legislative act. The general principles of justice, liberty, and right not contained or expressed in that instrument are not proper elements of a judicial decision upon it. Sharpless v. Mayor etc. of Phila., 59 D. 759.

An act is valid if it be within the general grant of legislative power; that is, if it be in its character and essence a law, and if it be not forbidden, expressly or impliedly, either by the state or federal constitution. Id.

Considerations of expediency and public policy are not regarded in deciding upon the constitutionality of a statute. Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. State, 74 D. 572; Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Davidson County, 62 D. 424; Coffman v. Bank of Kentucky, 90 D. 311.

A law is not unconstitutional because it may prohibit what a citizen may conscientiously think right or require what he may conscientiously think wrong. Donahoe v. Richards, 61 D. 256.

Conscientious belief of religious duty furnishes no legal defense to the doing or refusing to do what the state, within its constitutional authority, may require. Id.

The motives of the legislature in passing an act cannot be regarded by the judiciary upon the question of its constitutionality. Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. State, 74 D. 572.

The inhibitions of the constitution as to legislation are equally effective when they arise by implication as by expression, and this is the case when the legislative provision is repugnant to some provision of the constitution. Page v. Allen, 98 D. 272.

An act of the legislature may be unconstitutional in two ways: 1. Because it assumes or seeks to confer power not legislative in its nature; 2. Because it violates some specific provision of the national or state constitution. Hanson v. Vernon, 1 R. 215.

Where an act has been duly authenticated, and published as law by authority, the presumption is, that all the constitutional solemnities and prerequisites necessary to its valid enactment have been complied with; and this presumption exists until the contrary is clearly made to appear. But when it can be made clearly to appear that the particular bill, or section of a bill, although it may have all the forms of authentication, has never in fact received the legislative assent, the court is bound to look not only behind the printed statute-book, but beyond the forms of authentication of the bill as recorded in the office of the court of appeals, and if the evidence be clear and entirely satisfactory to the mind of the court, to decide accordingly. Berry v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 69.

The court will not act upon the admission of parties that a statute has not been passed in the manner required by the constitution. Such fact must be shown either by the printed journals or the certificate of the secretary of state. Happel v. Brethauer, 22 R. 70.

11. Powers of the legislature.—The legislature has plenary power in respect to all subjects of civil government which it is not prohibited from exercising by the constitution of the United States and of the state. Darlington v. Mayor etc., 88 D. 248. It does not follow, however, because there is no restriction in the constitution prohibiting a particular act of the legislature, that such act is therefore constitutional. Some acts may be against the plain and obvious dictates of reason, and therefore void. Bank of the State v. Cooper, 24 D. 517.

An act submitted to the people for ratification, and approved, may be amended by the legislature without submitting the amendment to them. Reapers' Bank v. Willard, 76 D. 755.

The legislature may by act convey in trust, pledge, or mortgage, for the benefit of those who may aid in the construction of certain "internal improvements," a fund already existing and possessed by the state. It is not necessary to designate in the act all of the improvements to be aided by such fund; some may be mentioned, and others postponed until those first designated are put into successful operation. The trustees of the fund created by the act cannot be heard to impeach it. Trustees v. Bailey, 81 D. 194.

The requirement of the constitution that acts of the legislature be in articles and sections, in the same manner as a code is arranged, is directory in form, and looks more to convenience in adopting the law to codification than to its operative effect. Hardesty v. Taft, 87 D. 584.

The legislature has power to pass special acts for special purposes without infringing upon the operation of other general laws; and may except a particular class of cases from the provisions of a previously existing general law, without repealing such law. Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 88 D. 711.

In amending a law, the legislature may substitute any provision they please for any other provision, whether cognate or not, if the new section is not foreign to the subject indicated by the title of the law in which it is inserted. Underwood v. McDuffee, 93 D. 194.

The legislature of Ohio authorized the judges of the superior court to appoint trustees of a contemplated railway. Held, 1. That this was not an exercise of the appointing power, forbidden to the legislature by article 2, section 27, of the state constitution, such trustees not being public officers in the constitutional sense, and their appointment by the court being a legitimate function; 2. That the act was in violation of article 4, section 14, of the state constitution, prohibiting the judges from holding any other offices, such power of appointment being only an additional power or duty annexed to an existing office, and not a new office; and 3. The act was not in violation of article 2, section 20, of the state constitution, in not fixing the term of office and compensation of the trustees, such trustees not being "officers" in the sense of the constitution. Walker v. Cincinnati, 8 R. 24.

12. Retrospective laws. — 1. General rule. — The legislature, in passing retrospective laws, cannot disregard those fundamental principles of the social compact which underlie all legislation irrespective of constitutional restraints; and if the act in question is in clear violation of them, it is the duty of the judiciary to hold it abortive and void. The rule is, that although it is to be assumed that the legislature supposed they had authority to pass the particular retrospective act, and judged it to be reasonable and just, yet they may have erred; and if it is shown to the court, with entire clearness and certainty, to be so unreasonable and unjust in its operation upon antecedent legal rights that the action of the legislature cannot be vindicated by any reasonable intendment or allowable presumption, it is the duty of the court to declare it void. Welch v. Wadsworth, 79 D. 236.

The strength of a legal presumption existing in any one's favor cannot be weakened by subsequent legislative interference. Davis v. Minor, 28 D. 325.

2. What laws are retrospective. — Laws may be retrospective, if they affect an existing cause of action, or an existing right of defense, by taking away or abrogating the same, although no suit or legal proceeding then exists. Clark v. Clark, 34 D. 165.

An act repealing a statute of limitations is, with respect to actions pending which are barred by the statute, retrospective, unconstitutional, and void. Woart v. Winnick, 14 D. 384.

Where a statute, operating on facts existing at the time of its passage, attempts to impose upon one person a debt or duty to another, when no right and no obligation existed before its enactment, it is a retrospective law for the decision of a civil cause, and is therefore in violation of the constitution, and void. Towle v. Eastern R. R. Co., 47 D. 153.

A statute amendatory of the charter of an insurance company, making the company's certificate of indebtedness conclusive evidence in all suits of the facts therein stated, is retrospective as to all causes of action originating prior to its passage, and is to that extent unconstitutional. Hope Mut. Ins. Co. v. Flynn, 90 D. 438.

A statute declaring adultery to be a cause of divorce, and giving power to the courts to grant divorces for adultery committed before as well as after its passage, is not a retrospective law within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition. Jones v. Jones, 5 D. 645.

A statute enacting that no words of limitation shall "hereafter" be necessary to devise a fee is not retrospective, but declaratory. Peyton v. Smith, 17 D. 758.

In proceedings by life-tenants the remainder was ordered to be, and was, sold. At that time there was no authority for such a sale. Held, that the sale was void, and could not be made valid by subsequent legislation. Maxwell v. Goetschins, 29 R. 242.

The following are instances of retrospective acts: An act of the legislature directing a certain deposition to be read in the trial of a cause then pending. It is therefore void. Dupuy v. Wickwire, 6 D. 729.

An act abolishing the distinction between possession under a recorded deed and possession without such title on record, so far as it affects past transactions and vested rights. Kennebec Purchase v. Laboree, 11 D. 79.

A statute authorizing a probate court to renew a commission for the allowance of claims upon the estate of a deceased person, after the close of such commission and the expiration of the time limited by the general law for its renewal. Bradford v. Brooks, 16 D. 715.

A law reviving a right of action barred by the statute of limitations. Davis v. Minor, 28 D. 325.

3. *What retrospective operation is permissible.—The legislature cannot, in general, establish a rule to operate retrospectively; but when the rule is unsettled, it belongs to the legislature to settle it, and such a rule necessarily operates both prospectively and retrospectively. Peyton v. Smith, 17 D. 758.

Retrospective laws which seek to take away or interfere with vested rights may be unjust and oppressive, but there are numerous cases in which they operate for the benefit of the community. Boston v. Cummins, 60 D. 717.

It has never been doubted that valid retroactive laws may be enacted. This is acknowledged by the civil and the common law. It is generally a matter of discretion with the legislature how far it may be expedient to enact such laws. Id.

The federal constitution does not prohibit a state from passing laws of a retrospective nature relating to civil matters, and which merely take away a right of action, or only divest rights vested by law in an individual, if they do not divest vested rights in property, nor impair the obligation of a contract. Drehman v. Stifel, 97 D. 268.

The provision of the constitution of Tennessee forbidding retrospective laws considered, and held to prohibit laws impairing existing rights, but not to extend to laws preserving rights from destruction. Bell v. Perkins, 14 D. 745.

An act of the legislature that removes an impediment and allows a contract to be enforced, although retrospective, is not unconstitutional. So held as to an act allowing a corporation to maintain a suit on a note, although the corporation was at the time of taking the note dissolved by failure to pay a certain per cent of its dividends to the commonwealth, and in consequence thereof all notes taken by it at that time were null and void. Bleakney v. Farmers' etc. Bank, 17 D. 635.

Defects in the levy of executions on real estate may be cured by acts of the legislature, passed subsequent to the making of the levy. Norton v. Pettibone, 18 D. 116.

The Maryland bill of rights, article 15, though prohibiting passage of ex post facto laws, recognizes the right of the legislature to pass retrospective laws relating to civil cases and contracts. Baughier v. Nelson, 52 D. 694.

A retrospective act is constitutional if it neither take away a vested right of property, nor dissolve the obligation of a contract. Aldrige v. Tusculumbia R. R. Co., 23 D. 307; Rawls v. Kennedy, 58 D. 289; Railroad Co. v. Dickerson, 66 D. 148.

The legislature may pass laws that act retrospectively where they operate upon the remedies afforded by law for the protection of rights of property, or for the enforcement of the obligation of contracts, not upon those rights and obligations themselves. Oriental Bank v. Freeze, 36 D. 701; Sutherland v. De Leon, 46 D. 100; Wynne v. Wynne, 58 D. 66; Acheson v. Miller, 59 D. 663; Coffin v. Rich, 71 D. 559; Simpson v. City Savings Bank, 22 R. 491.

The following acts, though retrospective, are not unconstitutional: An act rendering valid, to all intents and purposes, all marriages previously celebrated in the state by an ordained minister, qualified and empowered to celebrate them according to the forms and usages of any religious society. Goheen v. Stonington, 10 D. 121.

A retrospective act which relieves from mere informality in the certificate of a magistrate, but which creates no new title, and affects no right that did not equitably flow from the grantor's act. Cheanut v. Shane, 47 D. 387.

A statute which operates retrospectively, so as to give a mechanic a lien for work already done. Bolton v. Johns, 47 D. 404.

The Maryland act of 1845, chapter 52, declaring that any person thereafter seeking to avail himself of the statute of usury must plead it specially, and set out the sums, both principal and interest, due on the contract, reckoning interest at the rate of six per cent per annum. Baughier v. Nelson, 52 D. 694.

13. Ex post facto laws, generally.—The provisions in the state and federal constitutions against the passage of ex post facto laws were suggested by the abuses which the passage of bills of attainder, etc., in England occasioned. Boston v. Cummins, 60 D. 717.

The prohibition upon ex post facto laws applies only to such retrospective laws as relate to crimes and penalties. Dash v. Van Kleeck, 5 D. 291.

A law may be ex post facto and yet constitutional, provided it mollifies instead of aggravates the rigor of the criminal law. Boston v. Cummins, 60 D. 717.

The constitution of Missouri prohibits the passage of any ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or retrospective in its operation. Hope Mut. Ins. Co. v. Flynn, 90 D. 438.

14. What laws are ex post facto.*—Ex post facto laws relate to penal and criminal proceedings which impose punishments and forfeitures, and not to civil proceedings which affect private rights retrospectively. Grim v. Weissenberg School District, 98 D. 237; Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694; Boston v. Cummins, 60 D. 717; Railroad Co. v. Dickerson, 66 D. 148.

Any act which increases the degree of punishment attached by law to an offense at the time it was committed is ex post facto, and void. Therefore, to avoid giving such a retrospective effect to a statute which for the first time makes adultery a ground for divorce, the statute shall be construed as applying to cases of adultery only occurring after its passage. Dickinson v. Dickinson, 9 D. 608.

A statute imposed a penalty of fifty dollars for certain offenses. A subsequent statute amended the former so as to authorize a penalty of not exceeding one hundred dollars, and contained a proviso that the second act should not apply to proceedings pending under the first, except so far as to change the amount of the penalty. Held, 1. That the first act was repealed by the second; 2. That the proviso in the latter was unconstitutional as an ex post facto law; and therefore, 3. That prosecutions pending under the first act were defeated by the passage of the second. Wilson v. Ohio & Miss. R. R. Co., 16 R. 565.

A statute enabled any person indicted for murder to avoid all risk of a capital sentence by pleading guilty. A subsequent statute took away that privilege. Held, ex post facto as to offenses committed while the former statute was in force. Garvey v. People, 45 R. 531.

15. What are not.—Where no contract exists between parties, an amendatory act is not an ex post facto law which gives either party three years in which to prosecute an appeal after an assessment of damages for a right of way is made. Railroad Co. v. Dickerson, 66 D. 148.

The legislature may pass laws altering, or even taking away, remedies for the recovery of debts, or for the recovery of compensation in damages for torts, without incurring a violation of the provisions of the constitution which forbid the passage of ex post facto laws. Lord v. Chadbourne, 68 D. 290.

The legislature may, by act, declare the negligent breach of a pre-existing contract to be a criminal offense, when such breach is in its nature prejudicial to the public good, and was before only the subject of a suit for damages by the party injured. Such law is constitutional. Blann v. State, 84 D. 788.

The constitution of Texas adopted in 1869 contained the following provision: "The statutes of limitation of civil suits were suspended by the so-called act of secession of the 28th of January, 1861, and shall be considered as suspended within this state until the acceptance of this constitution by the United States Congress." Held, that this provision is not to be regarded as an ex post facto law, nor as a law impairing the obligation of contracts, and that it is not in conflict with the constitution of the United States. Bender v. Crawford, 7 R. 270.

16. Special and local acts.—A special statute granting the right to appeal after the expiration of the time prescribed by law is void. Stanford v. Barry, 15 D. 691.

A statute giving an individual designated therein power to construct a dam at a place named, of such height as may be necessary for improving the navigation of Seneca River, and pointing out the manner in which the dam is to be constructed, and requiring it to be connected with a canal and lock of capacity sufficient to accommodate the largest-sized boats, is a public statute. Calking v. Baldwin, 21 D. 168.

A statute providing for the survey of lumber in a particular county, in a certain manner, by surveyors appointed in a prescribed way, and prohibiting, under penalty, the sale or purchase of lumber in that county not so surveyed, or the survey of it by persons not so appointed, is public, and therefore constitutional. Pierce v. Kimball, 23 D. 537.

Such statute is not in restraint of trade so as to render it unconstitutional. Id.

A town has no vested right in a moiety of penalties, prescribed by the Maine act of 1821, regulating the survey of lumber, until the recovery of judgment therefor, and the act of 1832, giving such moiety to the county, in Penobscot County, is not unconstitutional as impairing vested rights. Id.

Resolves granting personal privileges or exemptions to particular individuals are to be distinguished from local statutes of the character above mentioned, and are unconstitutional. Id.

A special act authorizing the sale of the property of minors, to provide funds for their education and maintenance, is not unconstitutional. Cochran v. Van Surday, 32 D. 570.

A special act may discharge existing trustees and vest their estate in new trustees to be appointed by the court of chancery; may convert an equitable life estate into a legal estate, and may authorize the tenant of the life estate to sell and convey the estate in fee, with the assent of the chancellor, where the estate in remainder is vested in the minor children of the tenant for life. Id.

Section 17, article 2, of the Kansas constitution, providing that "in all cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted," recognizes the necessity of some special legislation, and seeks only to limit, not prohibit it. It also leaves it to the discretion of the legislature to determine whether their purpose can or cannot be expediently accomplished by a general law, and no special law will be declared invalid merely because it would, in the opinion of the court, have been possible to frame a general law under which the same purpose could have been accomplished. State v. Hitchcock, 81 D. 503.

A statute professing, in general terms, to repeal all acts appointing commissions to regulate municipal affairs is general, and is not rendered local or special by the fact that there is but one commission to which it can apply. Van Riper v. Parsons, 29 R. 210.

A law altering the boundaries of wards, displacing officials, and changing the times of elections in the city of Newark, is a special and local law within the New Jersey constitutional prohibition of such legislation regulating the "internal affairs of towns and counties." Pell v. Newark, 29 R. 266.

17. Statutes of a partial or ununiform operation.—The Tennessee act of 1827, chapter 39, which directed the dismissal of a certain class of suits, growing out of the reservations of lands to the heads of Indian families, under the treaties of 1817 and 1819, with the Cherokees, upon certain facts being made to appear, is partial, and therefore unconstitutional. Walby v. Kennedy, 24 D. 511.

A special statute authorizing the executors of A to revive a judgment rendered in favor of B in the same manner as if they were the executors of B is partial, unconstitutional and void. Tate v. Bell, 26 D. 221.

A scire facias issued under such statute will be quashed on motion. Id.

An act imposing toll for passengers carried by mail stages on the Cumberland road, in Ohio, is constitutional. State v. Neil, 28 D. 623.

A statute is not unconstitutional on the ground that it is partial, when it gives a remedy to all owners of land lying on a designated creek, for injuries suffered from the unauthorized obstruction of such creek by the acts of a designated railroad company. Such statute manifestly operates in favor of all those who have suffered by such obstruction, and against all who have caused such suffering. Bailey v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 44 D. 593.

A provision of a statute that "no black Republican, or indorser or approver of the helper book," shall be appointed to office by the board of police commissioners, created and appointed by the statute, is unconstitutional, if it is to be understood that the statute proscribes that class of persons on account of their political or religious opinions; but as the court cannot understand officially who are meant by the proviso, no judicial opinion can be expressed on the question. Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. State, 74 D. 572.

As to the effect of a clause in a statute which disqualifies from holding any office under the mayor and council of a city such persons as shall forcibly resist the provisions of the law, the judges are equally divided in opinion. Id.

A statute does not conflict with a constitutional provision that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," when it provides that where a defendant is in actual military service, any action against him shall stand continued during the period of such service. McCormick v. Rusch, 83 D. 401.

18. Statutes in derogation of vested rights.—1. General rules.—A vested right is the power one has to do certain actions, or to possess certain things, according to the laws of the land. Bailey v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 44 D. 593.

There can be no vested right in a particular remedy, but there is a vested right to some substantial and efficient remedy, and this right is protected as essential to the maintenance of the obligation of the contract. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447.

The vested rights guarded against legislative interference are such as may be adhered to without violating any principle of sound morality. Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694.

Substantial rights of parties cannot be changed or impaired by subsequent laws, but the remedial directions for enforcing those rights may be changed. Coriell v. Ham, 61 D. 134.

When a law is in its nature a contract, and when absolute rights have vested under it, a repeal of the law cannot divest those rights. Trustees v. Bailey, 81 D. 194.

The legislature cannot divest an individual of a vested right, although it may require the performance of an act in the future, and declare that its omission shall subject an individual to a penalty. Conway v. Cable, 87 D. 240.

That an act of the legislature divests vested rights is not a valid objection thereto, if it be within the legitimate scope of legislative power. Grim v. Weissenberg School District, 98 D. 237; Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694.

The rights of a purchaser of land offered at public sale are vested, and cannot be affected by subsequent legislation reviving the provisions of a former act conferring rights on particular persons as preferred purchasers, and extending the time within which such rights may be exercised. Thompson v. Schlater, 33 D. 556.

Vested rights may be divested not only by a change or destruction of the title to property, but also by the destruction of the property itself. Such destruction may be said to take place when the property is rendered unfit for the object for which it was intended. Cash v. Whitworth, 71 D. 515.

Rights vested under the municipal law of a country are not affected by a change or abrogation of the law. Williams v. Johnson, 96 D. 613.

A vested right of action is property, and will be protected from arbitrary legislative interference. Ib.

2. What laws conflict with vested rights.—A statute divesting rights under pretense of regulating remedies is as objectionable as if attacking the rights directly. Baughner v. Nelson, 62 D. 694.

The right to a legacy cannot be impaired by a law passed after the legacy has vested by the testator's death. Westervelt v. Gregg, 62 D. 160.

The legislature cannot enact that a debtor's property shall not be taken to satisfy his debt, if it was so liable when the debt was incurred. Penrose v. Erie Canal Co., 93 D. 778.

The Pennsylvania act of April 9, 1850, section 1, to regulate sequestrations in case of the Erie Canal Company, by making its property liable only in cases of mismanagement, misapplication of funds, or willful delay in discharging its legal liabilities, where it was prior to that act subject to execution for its debts, is unconstitutional, and does not affect rights of creditors existing when that act was passed. Ib.

When a statute of limitation has run on a debt, the debtor's right to the defense is vested, and any statute which afterward annuls or takes it away is unconstitutional. Rockport v. Walden, 20 R. 131.

Where a municipal corporation, under the express authority of an act of the legislature, is clothed with the exclusive right to collect wharfage rates from all vessels that shall make use of its wharves, the right is both constitutional and vested, and cannot be abrogated or impaired by any subsequent act of the legislature. Ellerman v. McMains, 31 R. 218.

Where a testator directs his executors to rent his lands and apply the rents to the support of one of his sons during his life, and further directs that none of said lands shall be sold during the life of said son, but that after his death the lands shall be sold and the proceeds be equally divided among the other children of the testator, the legislature have no power to authorize the orphans' court to appoint a trustee to sell the lands during the lifetime of said son and apply the interest of the proceeds to his support during his life, where all the other parties in interest are of full age, under no disabilities, and object to such sale. An act which undertakes to confer such authority is unconstitutional. Brvine's Appeal, 55 D. 499.

By the constitution it was provided that the legislature should establish schools, and "all useful learning shall be duly encouraged in one or more universities." Accordingly, the legislature established a university, granting to it certain property escheated to the state; but an act was afterwards passed divesting such property. Held, such act was unconstitutional. Trustees v. Foy, 3 D. 672.

Where one of the duties appertaining to the office of sheriff was the collection of taxes, and during the plaintiff's term as such sheriff the legislature passed an act for the appointment of a tax collector, — held, that such act was unconstitutional. King v. Hunter, 6 R. 754.

A testator bequeathed the residuum of his estate to the Virginia Literary Fund, a corporation composed only of officers of the state. Subsequently to his death the legislature by enactment appropriated the fund to the Brooke Academy, an incorporated private educational institution. Held, unconstitutional. Brooke Academy v. George, 35 R. 760.

The following laws have been held void, as interfering with vested rights: A legislative act authorizing a person named to prosecute a particular suit, the plaintiff having died, without taking out letters of administration on the estate of the deceased. Officer v. Young, 26 D. 268.

A statute prohibiting a person from having or keeping a billiard-table without first paying a tax for the privilege of keeping it. Stevens v. State, 35 D. 72.

A statute providing for divesting out of the purchaser of land one third of the fee, and vesting the same in the widow of his deceased grantor. Strong v. Clem, 74 D. 200.

An act providing for the extinction of irredeemable ground-rents by compelling the rent-owner, at the option of the land-owner, to receive a gross sum and release the rents. Palairer's Appeal, 5 R. 450.

A statute forbidding any person to carry on the stabling business within a given distance of the grounds of a specified agricultural society, during the continuance of its fairs, and imposing a penalty for any breach of the law. Com. v. Bacon, 26 R. 189.

A statute forbidding the reservation of seats at public exhibitions, upon the sale of tickets of admission after the opening of the doors. District of Columbia v. Saville, 29 R. 616.

A statute forbidding judges and state school officers to electioneer. Louthan v. Com., 52 R. 628.

3. What laws do not conflict with vested rights.—A statute converting existing estates in joint tenancy into estates in common is constitutional, because not impairing vested rights, but rendering the tenure more beneficial. Holbrook v. Finney, 3 D. 243.

Where there is some public necessity, as in case of war, or invasion, an act suspending legal proceedings for a limited period is not unconstitutional; for a statute of this kind rather conduces to the due administration of justice, and is beneficial to parties litigant. Johnson v. Duncan, 6 D. 675.

An amendatory act operating retrospectively, creating a remedy where none existed before, is not objectionable as creating or divesting rights as then existing. Whipple v. Farrar, 64 D. 99.

An act validating a usurious loan of a savings and building association to a member thereof, though it injuriously affects an antecedent legal right of the borrower to insist upon the forfeiture by the lender of the whole interest, is not nevertheless, considering the nature of the right affected and the circumstances of the case, to be regarded as unjust, or as an infringement of a vested right. Welch v. Wadsworth, 79 D. 236.

The Kansas statute of 1864 concerning the burned records of Douglas County is not unconstitutional, it seems, as impairing vested rights, in providing that the plaintiff in any action pending in the district court of that county, or in which summons had been issued on the day when the records were destroyed, instead of setting out the pleadings therein, may commence a new suit upon the same cause of action, as in other civil cases, and the defendant shall not be allowed to plead the statute of limitations unless he could have pleaded it in the original action. Searle v. Adams, 89 D. 598.

Acts curing formal defects in the execution or acknowledgment of deeds, etc., debar those who might have relied on such defects of what would otherwise have been a legal vested right. But such acts have been frequently decided to be constitutional and valid. Grim v. Weissenberg School District, 98 D. 237.

An act provided that there should not be any private market kept within twelve squares of a public market in the city of New Orleans. Held, not unconstitutional, either as taking away the property of those keeping private markets at the time of the passage of the act within the prescribed limits, or as taking away the vested rights of those holding licenses to keep such markets. New Orleans v. Stafford, 21 R. 563.

A testator devised real estate to A for life, and after her death to B and others, upon certain contingencies. Upon the petition of A, alleging that the property was producing a very small income, and was depreciating, the general assembly, against the remonstrance of B and the others, passed a resolution authorizing the sale of the land by specified trustees, and the investment of the proceeds for the benefit of all the parties interested, according to their respective rights. Held, a constitutional and valid act. Linsley v. Hubbard, 26 R. 431.

The defendant, owner of an ancient mill-dam, procured an act of the legislature authorizing him to raise it or erect a new one. The dam was always of such construction as to prevent the passage of fish. A subsequent statute imposed on dam-owners the duty of placing fishways in them. Held, 1. That the act was constitutional generally, and 2. In respect to the defendant in spite of the prior special act in his case. Parker v. State, 53 R. 643.

19. Statutes delegating legislative power.—The legislature cannot submit a law to the people in such manner as to make its final enactment depend on the popular vote, unless when specially authorized by the constitution. Barto v. Himrod, 59 D. 506; except where acts of incorporation are submitted to the acceptance of the corporations, whether private or municipal. Santo v. State, 63 D. 487.

The people have no power, in their primary and individual capacity, to make laws, that power being vested in the legislature. Ib.

An act complete in all its parts without the section that submits the act to a vote of the people is not wholly unconstitutional and void, but such section only, and a vote taken thereon is merely nugatory. Ib.

So a general law affecting private rights, which takes effect by its terms, and contains a clause authorizing the county courts to suspend it at pleasure, is unconstitutional and void. State v. Field, 59 D. 275.

An act provided that it should not be lawful for cattle to run at large in any county which, by a majority vote, should agree to restrain them. Held, unconstitutional, as a delegation of legislative power. Lammert v. Lidwell, 21 R. 411.

The taking effect of a statute affecting a particular county alone may constitutionally be made dependent upon the popular vote of that county. Com. v. Weller, 29 R. 407; Boyd v. Bryant, 37 R. 6; Williams v. Cammack, 61 D. 508.

Under a constitutional provision that the legislature shall provide a thorough and efficient system of free schools for the conferring a good common-school education, a statute authorizing the establishment and maintenance of township high schools, on a vote of the people, is valid. Richards v. Raymond, 34 R. 151.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

20. Statutes assuming judicial power.—To exercise judicial power is not within the legitimate scope of legislative functions; and when vested rights are divested by acts of that character, they will be adjudged null and void. Grim v. Welsenberg School District, 98 D. 237.

The legislature has no authority to pass a law in which it exercises judicial powers, by determining the rights of parties. State v. Tappan, 9 R. 622.

An act is unconstitutional, as an assumption of judicial power, if it professes to decide between an existing conflict of right, or if it declare that an existing right of property shall cease. Hoke v. Henderson, 25 D. 677.

Such an act will not be redeemed because others, of the objects sought to be attained, are within the legitimate powers of the legislature. Ib.

A special act providing for the sale of a decedent's land, without notice to the heirs, and for the application of the proceeds to the claims of the administrator and another person against the estate, for moneys advanced and liabilities incurred by them on its account, and requiring the administrator to make deeds to the purchasers of the land, and to give bond to the heirs for the application of the proceeds as provided by the act, is unconstitutional, because it is an exercise of judicial power, and also because the heirs are thereby dispossessed of their freehold, not by the judgment of their peers, nor by the law of the land. Lane v. Dorman, 36 D. 543.

Acts of Congress confirming incomplete titles within the territory acquired from other nations, although laws in form, are in their essence judicial determinations. Hunt v. Test, 42 D. 659.

The following acts are void, as assumptions of judicial power: An act awarding a new trial in an action which has been decided in a court of law. Merrill v. Sherburne, 8 D. 52.

An act authorizing the opening of an existing judgment. Ratcliffe v. Anderson, 31 R. 716; Dorsey v. Dorsey, 11 R. 523.

A statute prescribing that no injunction shall issue against commissioners appointed by the statute. Guy v. Hermance, 63 D. 85.

An act validating a sheriff's sale, declared by the supreme court to be invalid. Menges v. Dentler, 75 D. 616.

The supreme court of Pennsylvania decided that under the laws, as to the opening of roads in Philadelphia, interest was to be allowed on an award from the date of the assessment. By the act of 1867, the legislature provided that the award should be enforced "in the same manner as provided by law in the opening of roads in the city of Philadelphia." By the act of 1869, the legislature declared that the true intent and meaning of the act of 1867 were "that no interest shall be allowed on damages for ground taken, up to the time of their payment on the issue of any warrant for their payment by the city of Philadelphia." In a case arising under the act of 1867, — held, that the act of 1869, an expository act, was destitute of retroactive force, because it was an act of judicial power, and was in contravention of the constitution of the state, which declares that no man can be deprived of his property "unless by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land." Haley v. Philadelphia, 8 R. 153.

A statute attempting to validate a judgment void for want of jurisdiction and a sale made under it, — held, void, — 1. As an attempt by the legislature to exercise judicial powers; and 2. As in contravention of the constitutional provision that "no person can be deprived of his property without due process of law." Pryor v. Downey, 19 R. 656.

21. Rule as to statutes impairing the obligation of contracts. — 1. *The general rule. — The legislature can constitutionally pass no act impairing the obligation of contracts, and when it attempts to do so, it is the solemn duty of the judicial department to declare such law null and void. Trustees v. Bailey, 81 D. 194.

A statute cannot alter the nature and legal effect of an existing contract, to the prejudice of either party, nor give to such contract a judicial construction binding on the parties or the courts. King v. Dedham Bank, 8 D. 112.

The legislature, though it may modify and repeal acts of former legislatures, cannot abridge succeeding legislative action, and has no power, by subsequent legislative action, to divest the rights of property derived from a contract made under authority of a former legislature. State v. Barker, 96 D. 175.

2. Obligation of contract defined. — The obligation of a contract is that which obliges a party to perform his contract, or to repair the injury done by his failure to perform it. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447.

The obligation of a contract includes some known means acknowledged by the municipal law for its enforcement. Ib.

The obligation of a contract, as that expression is used in the constitution of the United States, means the right to performance which the law confers on one party, and the corresponding duty of performance to which it binds the other. Larrabee v. Talbot, 46 D. 637.

The remedy afforded by existing laws enters into and forms part of the obligation of contracts. Von Baumbach v. Bade, 76 D. 283.

The obligation of a contract has reference to its performance rather than to the consequences of a breach. The rights of the parties with respect to the nature, construction, and effect of the contract are beyond the legislative power to change. Coffman v. Bank of Kentucky, 90 D. 311.

* Obligation of contracts, statutes impairing, see note, 79 D. 495, 496.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume X.

The obligation of a contract is the legal tie which imposes the necessity of doing or abstaining from an act, as distinguished from the imperfect obligation arising from gratitude, charity, or other moral duties, binding upon conscience, but having no legal remedy for their enforcement. State v. Carew, 91 D. 245.

3. Interpreting the constitutional provision.—The constitutional provision that "no law impairing the validity of contracts shall ever be made" extends to all rights arising under all contracts, whether written or parol, whether express or implied, whether arising from the stipulation of the parties or accruing by operation of law. Lewis v. Brackenridge, 12 D. 228.

This constitutional provision must be considered as rendering void any statute which is retrospective, and which destroys a vested right of action arising ex contractu. But the legislative power of limiting the time, and regulating the manner in which rights shall be legally demanded, does not interfere with the rights themselves, nor affect the construction given to that provision. Id.

Executed as well as executory contracts are within the protection of this provision of the constitution of the United States. Pearce v. Patton, 45 D. 61.

The provision extends to legislative grants, and to contracts made by individuals with a state. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447; Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379.

The extent of the change in a contract, by act of the legislature, is immaterial, in order to make said act unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of contracts. Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379.

Imposing conditions not expressed in the contract, or any slight deviation from its terms, is within the constitutional prohibition. Id.

Rights created by act of the legislature, being equivalent to a contract executed, cannot be impaired by a subsequent legislature. Id.

A judgment for the repayment of money paid by mistake is not upon a contract, and is not protected by the federal constitutional provision forbidding the enactment of laws impairing the obligation of contracts. State v. City of New Orleans, 58 R. 168.

29. What statutes impair the obligation of contracts.—1. General principles.—The obligation of a contract is impaired by any deviation from its terms, by postponing or accelerating the period of its performance, or imposing new conditions, or dispensing with the performance of conditions, however minute or apparently immaterial. Bailey v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 44 D. 593; Robinson v. Magee, 70 D. 638.

The law existing when a contract is made enters into and forms part of it; and this is applicable as well to the remedy as to the right, so that an impairment or taking away of the remedy is an impairment of the obligation of the contract. Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 72 D. 730; Scobey v. Gibson, 79 D. 490; State v. Carew, 91 D. 245.

The obligation of a contract is impaired if the end contemplated by it is substantially defeated. A dormant right that cannot be enforced is no right at all. Robinson v. Magee, 70 D. 638.

Right and remedy must stand or fall together; to deny the latter is to impair the former. Id.

A law impairs the obligation of a contract if it enlarges, abridges, or in any manner changes the intentions of the parties resulting from the stipulations in the contract. State v. Carew, 91 D. 245.

Obligation of contract is impaired if the means of enforcing it are withdrawn or materially diminished. It is immaterial whether this result is accomplished by acting upon the remedy or directly on the contract itself. Id.

One test of a contract that has been impaired is, that its value has, by legislation, been diminished. Id.

An act may be unconstitutional so far as it has a retrospective application to past contracts, and constitutional as applied to future contracts. Barry v. Iseman, 91 D. 262.

The following statutes have been held void as impairing the obligation of contracts: An act to "suspend executions for a limited time," commonly called the suspension act. Jones v. Orittenden, 6 D. 531.

A statute staying execution for two and one half years, unless the plaintiff will take payment in property at two thirds of its value, or in a particular kind of currency or money, or something else than money. Baily v. Gentry, 13 D. 484; Townsend v. Townsend, 14 D. 722.

"Stay laws" which prevent all proceedings in courts for the collection of debts, with few exceptions, for a long period. Coffman v. Bank of Kentucky, 90 D. 311. S. F., Aycock v. Martin, 92 D. 56; Webster v. Rose, 19 R. 583.

An act directing sales under decrees in chancery on longer credit than was allowed at the date of the contract. January v. January, 18 D. 211.

A statute divesting powers granted to a corporation by a previous statute, where such corporation is not in the strictest sense public, unless authority to resume such powers is reserved in the act granting them. Trustees v. Bradbury, 26 D. 515.

An act creating a new board of trustees of an academy, being a private corporation, and clothing them with the powers exercised by an existing board under a previous act. Montpelier Academy v. George, 33 D. 585.

A statute requiring a sheriff to receive the notes of a bank in satisfaction of a judgment in favor of such bank. Bank of Gallipolis v. Domigan, 40 D. 475.

An act validating a void deed of a feme covert. Pearce v. Patton, 45 D. 61.

A statute extinguishing existing remedies, and leaving no redress for the violation of a contract. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447.

A statute requiring the holder of a county warrant to present it to the auditor for registry before a day named, or be forever barred from enforcing payment. Robinson v. Magee, 70 D. 638.

A law tending to delay the collection of debts. Scobey v. Gibson, 79 D. 490.

An act providing for the redemption of real property sold upon execution, etc., so far as the same is intended to apply to sales on judgments rendered upon contracts existing at and before its passage. Ib.

A statute providing for the weighing of coal at mines, in so far as it declares null and void all contracts for mining coal in which the weighing as provided for in the statute is dispensed with. Millett v. People, 87 R. 869.

2. Illustrations. — A special act freeing the body of a debtor from imprisonment, and providing that "all such bonds as have been taken by the sheriff, on the admission of the debtor to the liberties of the prison, be discharged," is not construed to extend to the case of an escape committed before the passing of the act; and if it be so worded as to extend to such case, it is void as impairing the obligation of contracts. Starr v. Robinson, 6 D. 732.

Where lands were granted by the commonwealth to a town for the use of schools therein, and on the application of the town an act was afterwards passed incorporating certain persons as trustees, with power to sell the lands, invest the proceeds, and appropriate the income to the support of the schools, and to fill vacancies in their own number, etc., a subsequent statute divesting such trustees of the control of the fund, and vesting it in new trustees, to be chosen by the town, is unconstitutional and void. Trustees v. Bradbury, 26 D. 515.

An act provided for the sale of land, and the payment of a certain fee to take out a deed from the state. A subsequent act provided that unless the deed was paid for within a certain time the land would be forfeited to the state. Held, that the latter act was unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of the above contract. Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379.

An owner of bonds in an internal improvement fund, issued by virtue of the Florida act of January 6, 1855, and known as the "Internal Improvement Act," may enjoin the trustees of such fund from applying it to any other purposes than those specified in the act, so as to endanger his claim by lessening his security; even though such application should be under the command of a subsequent act of the legislature. Trustees v. Bailey, 81 D. 194.

A statute violates the obligation of a contract, which provides for the compiling and printing of laws of the state under the supervision of the compiling commissioners, and for the letting of the printing contracts by them, in so far as it conflicts with the rights of one who has, by virtue of a former statute authorizing the legislature to contract with the lowest bidder for doing all state printing for the next year, contracted to do such printing. State v. Barker, 96 D. 175.

A statute providing "that while it remains in force, debts due on open accounts, and other demands not heretofore bearing interest by law, shall bear interest" at a certain rate, is unconstitutional, and void as to contracts already existing, as impairing their obligation. Goggans v. Turnipseed, 98 D. 397. S. P., Hubbard v. Callahan, 19 R. 564.

Examples given of statutes which would impair the obligation of contracts, if enforced, and which, therefore, have been declared void. Bailey v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 44 D. 593.

23. What do not. — The constitutional limitation on power to pass laws impairing obligation of contracts has reference to direct and not to merely consequential invasions of it. Gray v. Monongahela N. Co., 37 D. 500.

The obligation of a contract is not impaired by a law which merely varies its consequences without changing the essence and character of the contract, or altering the nature of the obligation created by it. Ib.

The constitutional provision does not apply to contracts relating to public property. State v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 38 D. 317; nor to the contract of marriage. Rugh v. Ottenheimer, 25 R. 513.

Incipient rights not perfected, given by statute, may be taken away by statute. Bangor v. Goding, 56 D. 688.

The constitutional provision that is restricted to laws affecting antecedent contracts does not apply to a law affecting future contracts. Barry v. Iseman, 91 D. 262.

An act of the legislature releasing a penalty accruing to a county, after verdict and before judgment, is constitutional, being neither an ex post facto law, nor a law impairing the obligation of contracts, and it may be pleaded pais darrein continuance. Coles v. County of Madison, 12 D. 161.

owing by a deceased insolvent's estate, by a prior statute, applies to judgments recovered after the passage of the first statute, and before the passage of the second, where the debtor dies after the second statute is enacted, and is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts. Deickman's Appeal, 30 D. 271.

Where an act of the legislature incorporating a railroad company makes it the duty of the company to so locate and construct its road that it shall pass through certain named places, and imposes a forfeiture in case of a failure to so locate the act, is not a contract, but a case of penalty, subject as to its enforcement to the will and pleasure of the legislature. State v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 38 D. 317.

The execution law in force at the time of a contract enters into and becomes part of it, so far as it affects the obligation; but so far as it is merely remedial, it may be modified or changed at any time. Coriell v. Ham, 61 D. 134.

A statute providing for funding of a county debt does not impair the obligation of contracts, the obligation to pay being fully acknowledged, and the right of a person to secure the amount of his debt remaining unaffected. Hunsaker v. Borden, 63 D. 130.

A state law making a right of entry for non-payment of rent assignable (such as N. Y. Laws 1805, c. 98, sec. 3, continued in 1 Rev. Laws 1813, p. 364, sec. 3, and 1 R. S., p. 748, sec. 25) may be applied to reservations of rent in conveyances and leases made before passage of the law, without incurring the objection that it impairs the obligation of contracts, and therefore violates the federal constitution. Such a provision affects the remedy, not the contract. Van Rensselaer v. Hays, 75 D. 278.

A judgment for a tort is not a "contract" within the provision of the federal constitution. McAfee v. Covington, 51 R. 263.

The following statutes do not impair the obligation of contracts: An act authorizing the recovery of certain money in the hands of commissioners. Smith v. Merchand, 10 D. 465.

The Maine act of 1839, for relief of sureties on poor-debtors' bonds. Oriental Bank v. Freeze, 36 D. 701.

A statute releasing a penalty accruing to a county on account of the failure of a railroad company to comply with its act of incorporation. State v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 38 D. 317.

A statute authorizing judgment to be rendered without benefit of appraisement laws according to the terms of a note. Hunt v. Standart, 77 D. 79.

A state law that makes valid a void contract. Weich v. Wadsworth, 79 D. 236.

An act validating a contract void as usurious. Id.

A statute providing that where a defendant is in actual military service, any action against him shall stand continued during the period of such service. McCormick v. Ruch, 83 D. 401.

The South Carolina act of 1861, known as the "stay law," so far as it relates to future contracts made to be executed within the state. Barry v. Iseman, 91 D. 262.

24. Statutes impairing the obligation of corporate franchises.*—The legislature can pass no act impairing the rights or privileges of a corporation opposed to the original grant without its consent. Pingry v. Washburn, 15 D. 676.

Where an act incorporating part of a town into a new town provided that the latter should support its proportion of all the paupers then supported, in whole or in part, by the original town, a subsequent act, exonerating the new town from such liability in future, is unconstitutional and void, as impairing the obligation of contracts. Bosdoinham v. Richmond, 19 D. 197.

The charter of a railroad conferred upon the company the power to regulate its tolls for a certain length of time. During that time the legislature passed an act to regulate the same tolls. Held, unconstitutional. Sloan v. Pacific R. R. Co., 21 R. 397.

A railroad company in which the state had a controlling interest, and which had a right under its charter to change the gauge of its road track at will, leased such road. Held, that a statute thereafter passed forbidding the lessees to change such gauge was unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract. State v. Richmond etc. R. R. Co., 21 R. 473.

25. Statutes embracing more than one subject.†—The constitutional provision that an act shall not embrace more than one subject is not violated by including under the title "An act for a homestead exemption," provisions for the exemption of personal property. Tuttle v. Strout, 82 D. 108.

Subjects subordinate to and having a necessary or natural connection with the primary or leading subject of a bill may be included in a bill without rendering the act double or multifarious in the sense of the constitutional prohibition. Mills v. Charleton, 9 R. 578.

A law embraces but one subject when it authorizes the construction of a railroad and provides that it shall have power to extend to and unite with other roads. Belleville ex. R. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 D. 589.

The title, "An act to consolidate the Texas Monumental Committee and the Texas Military Institute with Rutgersville College," embraces but one object within the meaning of the constitution. Tadlock v. Eccles, 73 D. 213.

A statute "to regulate the sale or disposal of opium, and to prohibit the keeping of places of resort for smoking or otherwise using that drug," is not unconstitutional as embracing more than one subject. State v. Ah Sam, 37 R. 454.

26. — or subjects not expressed in the title.*— 1. Interpreting the constitutional provision.— The constitutional provision inhibiting the passage of any law containing any matter different from what is expressed in its title does not require that the title should contain a synopsis of the law, but that the act should contain no matter variant from the title. Martin v. Broach, 50 D. 306.

The constitutional provision was passed for the purpose of preventing local and selfish provisions from being ingrafted upon acts of great public benefit and being adopted with them, and to prevent foreign matter from being incorporated into the law in the haste and excitement incident to the close of the sessions of the legislature. Davis v. State, 61 D. 331.

If an act contains minor matter not referred to in the title, such matter alone is void; but if the act be composed of a number of discordant and dissimilar provisions, so that no one could be pronounced as the principal one, the whole act is void. Ib.

An act is not in violation of this provision although it embrace several ideas or steps in the progress of its provisions toward the attainment of the main object expressed in the title. This object may be a broader or a narrower one, but if the several steps embraced in it are fairly conducive to that end or object, it is still a unit. Santo v. State, 63 D. 487.

Provisions of a general nature in a local statute not indicated in the title are valid notwithstanding the constitutional requirement, as in case of provisions relating to courts throughout the state contained in a statute entitled "An act to enlarge the jurisdiction of the courts" of a particular locality. People v. McCune, 69 D. 642.

The repeal of a statute on a given subject is properly connected with the subject-matter of a new statute upon the same subject; and this does not violate the constitutional requirement, although the repeal of the former statute is not mentioned in the title of the new enactment. Gabbert v. Jeffersonville R. R. Co., 71 D. 358.

The constitutional provision only requires that the terms employed in the title of the act should be significant of the subject of its provisions. It does not mean that the word "object" should be understood in the sense of "provision," for that would render the title of the act as long as the act itself. Nor does it intend that no act of legislation shall be constitutional which has reference to the accomplishment of more than one ultimate end. Tadlock v. Eccles, 73 D. 213.

An act providing a remedy for injuries inflicted by corporations as well as by natural persons does not for that reason embrace various and distinct subjects, and is not in conflict with this provision. Chiles v. Drake, 74 D. 406.

The title of an act need not contain all the details for carrying it into effect, but should merely be a brief and concise statement, sufficient to indicate the nature of it. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

An act will not be declared void because its objects are not set forth in its title, if the title discloses the objects of the act in terms so clear that no one can be misled thereby. Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Richoux, 8 R. 602.

An expression of the general subject is sufficient. Neuendorff v. Duryea, 25 R. 235.

An act incorporating a railroad company is a private law within the meaning of the Illinois constitution providing that no private law shall be passed which embraces more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in its title. Belleville etc. R. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 D. 589.

The legislature by simply declaring a private act to be a public law cannot evade the effect of the provision. Ib.

The following acts do not infringe the provision: An act which relates to a subject expressed in its title, and to others inseparably connected therewith. Davis v. State, 61 D. 331.

The Iowa statute of 1855 entitled an "Act for suppression of intemperance." Santo v. State, 63 D. 487.

An act the title of which is "to prohibit the 'sale' of intoxicating liquors," and the body of which makes it unlawful to "sell" or "give" the same away. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

An act entitled "An act to preserve the public peace and order on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday," but by its terms limited to the city of New York. Neuendorff v. Duryea, 25 R. 235.

2. Illustrations.— Statutes whose titles, after enumerating certain objects for which they were passed, add, "And for other purposes therein mentioned," are not in conflict with the section of the constitution under consideration; but the objects not specified will be good under this general clause, if they do not contain matter variant from the title. Martin v. Broach, 50 D. 306.

The subject of a bill is expressed in its title when the subject is to incorporate a railroad company, and the title is "An act to incorporate the Belleville and Illinoistown Railroad Company," although the name of the company does not give a full description of the road authorized to be constructed. Belleville etc. R. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 D. 589.

A statute is not unconstitutional on the ground that it does not correspond with its title, when entitled "An act amendatory to and explanatory of the statute of limitations of 1805, so far as it regards idiots, lunatics, and infants," and providing concerning non-residents in addition to idiots, lunatics, and infants; for the title of the act is equivalent to "An act amendatory to the statute of 1805, and explanatory of that act, as far as it relates to idiots, lunatics, and infants." Denham v. Holeman, 71 D. 198.

The objects of the Illinois "act to incorporate Firemen's Benevolent Association, and for other purposes," approved June 21, 1852, are sufficiently expressed in its title. Firemen's Benevolent Ass'n v. Lounsbury, 74 D. 115.

The subject embraced in the title, "Act to prohibit sale of intoxicating liquors to minors," etc., is to prevent the procurement of liquor by the persons named in the act; and under the title, the body of the act may properly declare it unlawful "to sell, dispose of, barter, or give" such liquors to minors, as being a means to effect the chief design of the act as expressed in the title. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

The Minnesota act of 1863, chapter 10, is in conflict with the section of the constitution which provides that no law shall embrace more than one subject, which must be expressed in its title, and is void. Winona etc. R. R. Co. v. Waldron, 88 D. 100.

The legislature passed an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of Madison to reassess and collect certain taxes and assessments," and authorizing a special reassessment, for the payment of a patent pavement already laid in the city, and also the adoption and use of any patented pavement in the future, and the assessment and collection of taxes therefor. Held, that the act did not "embrace more than one subject," and that the subject was sufficiently "expressed in the title." Mills v. Charleton, 9 R. 578.

An act of a legislature entitled "An act to incorporate the San Antonio and Mexican Gulf Railroad," and which provides that certain towns may issue bonds to aid in the construction of the railroad, is in violation of the constitutional provision. Giddings v. City of Antonio, 26 R. 321.

27. Statutes regulating commerce.*

— A statute prohibiting the transportation from one state to another of prairie chickens which have been lawfully killed is void as in contravention of the provision of the federal constitution granting to Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states. State v. Saunders, 27 R. 98.

28. What statutes are within the police power of the state. — The legislature of a state may determine that articles injurious to the public health or morals shall not constitute property within its jurisdiction, where the enactment is to operate prospectively. And a declaration by the legislature that no person shall acquire any property in spirituous liquors intended to be used as a beverage would not violate any provision of the constitution. Preston v. Drea, 54 D. 639.

The legislature may regulate by law the sale of any article the use of which would be detrimental to the morals of the people. State v. Gurney, 58 D. 782.

The legislature may declare the possession of certain property to be unlawful, where such property would be dangerous, injurious, or noxious; and may by due process of law, by proceedings in rem, provide for the abatement of the nuisance and the punishment of the offender by the seizure and confiscation of the property, by the removal, sale, or destruction of the noxious articles. Fisher v. McGirr, 61 D. 381.

The New Hampshire act of July 3, 1863, which undertakes to charge the owner with amount of damage done by his dog, as determined by the selectmen of the town within which the damage happened, without an opportunity to be heard, is so far unconstitutional, because it is not a wholesome and reasonable law within the meaning of the constitution, is contrary to reason and natural justice, and is therefore not within the general scope of legislative power, and because it is in violation of the provision in the bill of rights which secures the right of trial by jury in all controversies concerning property, except in cases where it has been otherwise heretofore used and practiced. East Kingston v. Towle, 97 D. 575; 2 R. 174.

A statute making it a misdemeanor to manufacture cigars, in cities of more than five hundred thousand inhabitants, in any tenement-house occupied by more than three families, except on the first floor of houses on which there is a store for the sale of cigars and tobacco, is unconstitutional. Matter of Jacobs, 50 R. 636.

The following statutes have been sustained as proper exercises of the police power: A statute which makes it unlawful for a citizen to distill his grain into spirituous or intoxicating liquor, unless employed by the governor to do so, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Ingram v. State, 84 D. 782.

dog to each family, and taxing all others at a fixed rate, under a penalty for non-payment. Ex parte Cooper, 30 R. 152.

A statute prohibiting the sale of opium. State v. Ah Chew, 40 R. 488.

A statute making it a penal offense to establish and maintain a place for vending provisions or refreshments, or furnish food or shelter for horses, within a mile of a camp-meeting without the permission of the authorities in charge of such meeting, with an exception in favor of any one thus carrying on his pre-established business, and a limitation of such prohibition to thirty days in any year. Com. v. Bearse, 42 R. 450; Meyers v. Baker, 60 R. 580.

A statute making it a misdemeanor to sell any pistols except such as are known as navy pistols. Dabbs v. State, 43 R. 275.

A statute declaring it unlawful, within certain counties, to transport or move after sunset and before sunrise of the succeeding day any cotton in the seed, but permitting the owner or producer to remove it from the field to the place of storage. Davis v. State, 44 R. 123.

A law requiring operators of butter and cheese factories on the co-operative plan to give bonds for faithful accounting for property received for manufacture. Hawthorn v. People, 50 R. 610.

29. Statutes unconstitutional in part. — An unconstitutional provision in a statute renders such statute void only so far as that provision is concerned. University of Maryland v. Williams, 31 D. 72. S. P., Fisher v. McGirr, 61 D. 381; Brown v. Beatty, 69 D. 389; if sufficient remains to effect its object without the aid of the invalid portion. Santo v. State, 63 D. 487. S. P., East Kingston v. Towle, 97 D. 575; Berry v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 69.

A statute was passed in due form to re-portion the state into judicial districts, but before being signed by the governor was so changed as to reduce the number of judges in the second district to one, which was contrary to the constitution. Held, that the statute being complete and capable of execution as to the other districts, it was valid as to them. In re Groff, 59 R. 859.

30. Constitutionality of various statutes relating to remedies. — 1. *General rules. — The legislature may enact laws varying the remedy for the collection of debts, and if the laws are general, and contain such provisions as the public good requires, they are constitutional, and all proceedings, as well for old as new debts, should conform to them. Sommers v. Johnson, 24 D. 604; McMillan v. Sprague, 35 D. 412; Coffman v. Bank of Kentucky, 40 D. 311.

Legislative authority over remedies may be exercised at pleasure over past or future contracts. Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694; Cook v. Gray, 81 D. 185; if the parties are left a substantial remedy, according to the course of justice as it existed at the time the contracts were made. Von Baumback v. Bade, 76 D. 283. S. P., Peurose v. Erie Canal Co., 93 D. 778; Sequestration Cases, 98 D. 494.

The legislature may create in favor of pending actions additional remedies for the enforcement of rights which are therein attempted to be enforced; thus it may declare that no action then pending shall abate because the firms who are respectively parties defendant and plaintiff have a common member. Hepturn v. Curtis, 32 D. 760.

Remedies may be altered or varied by the legislature as it pleases, provided that in so doing their nature and extent are not so changed as materially to impair the rights and interests of the creditors. Von Baumback v. Bade, 76 D. 283.

The legislature may pass retrospective laws affecting pending suits, giving new remedies, and modifying old ones, or removing impediments in the way of legal proceedings; provided that such laws do not violate the constitutional prohibitions. Schenley v. Com., 78 D. 359.

For convenience, the state may vary the times of holding courts, shift jurisdiction from one to another, change forms of action, of pleadings, and of process, etc., and may incidentally delay somewhat the collection of given debts; but the legislature cannot, under guise of legislating upon the remedy intentionally, in effect impair the obligation of contracts. Scobey v. Gibson, 79 D. 490.

2. *What laws affect the remedy only. — A statute is not void as conferring exclusive privileges upon particular persons, which gives a lien for services enforceable in a mode specially provided, to persons employed on steamboats and other water-craft. F. R. Steamboat Co. v. Foster, 48 D. 248.

The Missouri act of 1845 merely provides a mode for establishing a right which already existed, and is not unconstitutional. Snyder v. Warford, 49 D. 94.

The Maryland act of 1845 regulates remedies upon usurious contracts, and does not divest vested rights. Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694.

The act of 1845 is merely remedial, obliging the borrower seeking relief as defendant against a usurious contract, to do the same as he is obliged to do when seeking relief as plaintiff. Id.

The following statutes have been sustained as affecting the remedy only: A statute requiring that makers and indorsers of negotiable paper shall be sued in a joint action. McMillan v. Sprague, 35 D. 412.

A law passed subsequently to the execution of a contract, making it unlawful to imprison a debtor. Brown v. Dillahunty, 43 D. 499.

A legislative act enforcing a moral obligation not legally enforceable. Lycoming v. Union, 53 D. 575.

The Pennsylvania act of March 27 providing that certain counties from which causes have been removed for trial to Union County, by virtue of the act of the 13th of April, 1843, reimburse Union County for the expenses of the said trials. Id.

A statute permitting municipal corporations to appeal without giving security as required in other cases. Holmes v. City of Mattoon, 53 R. 602.

3. What alterations of remedies are unwaranted. — The legislature may alter remedies; but the alteration must not, so far as prior contracts are concerned, appear on the face of the statute to be enacted to render the remedies less efficient or more dilatory than those in force when the contract was made. Townsend v. Townsend, 14 D. 722.

When the remedy is an essential part of the contract, it cannot be changed. To take away all legal remedies, or so to change and obstruct them as materially to impair the value and benefit of the contract, is within the prohibition of the constitution. Coffman v. Bank of Kentucky, 90 D. 311; Sequestration Cases, 98 D. 494.

A legislature has power, by a remedial statute, to legalize defective proceedings under a former statute, only in cases where it has present authority to authorize like proceedings. Kimball v. Town of Rosendale, 24 R. 421.

A statute providing that no person shall recover damages from a municipality for an injury from a defect in a highway, unless he resides in a country where similar injuries constitute a like cause of action, is unconstitutional. Pearson v. City of Portland, 31 R. 276.

4. Illustrations. — A contract of specialty was entered into, and judgment rendered, under a statute declaring that no writ of ca. sa. should in any case be issued upon a judgment recovered by a party not at the time a resident of the state, without an affidavit of fraud against defendant. Subsequently a statute was passed repealing the above requirement, and containing no saving clause as to pending suits. After this a writ of ca. sa. issued on the judgment without such affidavit of fraud. Held, that the repealing statute did not impair the obligation as to bail, but merely modified the remedy. Coot v. Gray, 81 D. 185.

A statute of Virginia which provided that "no corporation shall hereafter interpose the defense of usury in any action, nor shall any bond, etc., of such corporation be set aside, impaired, or adjudged invalid by reason of anything contained in the laws prohibiting usury," — held, 1. To apply to contracts made before the passage of the act, even though in suit; and 2. Not to be in violation of the constitution of Virginia, or of that of the United States. Town of Danville v. Pace, 18 R. 663.

A statute made railroad companies liable "for all expenses of the coroner and his inquest, and the burial of all persons who may die on the cars, or who may be killed by collision or other accident occurring to such cars, or otherwise." Held, unconstitutional so far as it attempts to make railroad companies liable in cases where they have violated no law, or been guilty of no negligence. Ohio & M. R'y Co. v. Lackey, 20 R. 258.

A town made an irregular assessment of taxes; a statute was thereupon passed to confirm the assessment. But before the passage of this statute a constitutional amendment had taken away from the legislature authority to enact special laws for the assessment and collection of taxes. Held, that the statute was void. Kimball v. Town of Rosendale, 24 R. 421.

31. Statutes relating to punishment for crime. — An act giving the recorder of an incorporated city jurisdiction of certain misdemeanors and civil causes within the city is constitutional. State v. Helfrid, 10 D. 591.

An act imposing a double penalty upon one who appeals, in case he is convicted by a jury in the appellate court, is unconstitutional. But the appellate court may, after conviction by the jury, impose the single penalty, where such penalty appears to be appropriate, and the law does not state by what tribunal it may be imposed. State v. Gurney, 58 D. 782.

An act requiring a charge to be made in like manner as is required in relation to other offenses, but giving no especial directions, is not unconstitutional on the ground that the charge is not required to be distinctly and fully made. Sanso v. State, 63 D. 487.

An act is not unconstitutional on the ground that it authorizes a criminal prosecution, and that it is not made necessary to inform the defendant, and that he has not the right to be confronted with witnesses, although it does not require an arrest, if it requires a notice to him as effectual in substance as when he is sued for any amount of indebtedness, and allows him to be confronted with witnesses. Id.

A statute providing that a person shall be subjected to an increased punishment upon conviction for a second offense is not in violation of a constitutional provision that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. People v. Stanley, 17 R. 401.

The legislature may lawfully authorize cities to punish known thieves, etc., found in the municipality. Morgan v. Nolte, 41 R. 485.

A statute prescribing for the offense of living in adultery or fornication, when committed by a negro and a white person together, a different punishment from that prescribed when the offense is committed by two white persons or two negroes, is not unconstitutional. Pace v. State, 44 R. 513.

III. INTERPRETATION AND EFFECT.

32. General rules of construction. — Statutes must be construed according to their plain and obvious meaning. Lippitt v. Huston, 94 D. 115. And so as not to impair pre-existing rights of the public or of individuals. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447.

Statutes should be so interpreted as to suppress the mischief they were intended to correct, and advance the remedy therefor. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522; and not so as to work a public mischief, unless required by clear, unequivocal words, especially if the statute be chiefly to subserve individual interests. People v. Lambier, 47 D. 273.

A statute is not to be construed to protect fraud, where any other construction is possible. Rogers v. Brent, 50 D. 422.

A statute empowering a court to give such relief as right and justice may appear to require does not authorize an arbitrary determination, but a decision according to the legal rights of the parties. Ex parte Willsocks, 17 D. 526.

Recitals of general and public facts in an act of Parliament cannot be denied. Campbell's Case, 20 D. 360.

A recital of a particular fact to the prejudice of an individual right is not conclusive, except in the case of bills of attainder. Id.

All statutes are, in legal contemplation, perpetual, unless limited by their terms, which means simply that they are of force until duly repealed or amended. Wellington's Case, 26 D. 631.

A case within the equity of a statute, though not within its letter, may be declared in a court of equity to be within the statute. Davis v. Harkness, 41 D. 184.

Courts have no dispensing power over statutes; where they contain no exceptions, the courts can make none; if they are too rigid in their terms, the remedy is with the legislature. Bax v. Stanford, 51 D. 142.

Courts have nothing to do with the policy, necessity, or expediency of a law. This is a matter for the consideration of the legislature. Bepley v. State, 58 D. 628.

Doubtful statutory provisions defining jurisdiction of courts should be interpreted so as to maintain the jurisdiction of the legal tribunals. Abbott v. Gatch, 71 D. 635.

The language of an exemption act should be construed in harmony with its humane and remedial purpose. Stewart v. Brown, 93 D. 578.

33. Construction to be in favor of constitutionality. — A court of law when called upon to decide upon the validity of a statute will presume it to be constitutional until the contrary clearly appears. The legislature is presumed to be the judge, in the first instance, of its constitutional powers, and it is only when manifest assumption of authority or misapprehension of it appears that the judicial power should refuse to execute it. Adams v. Howe, 7 D. 216. S. P., Bailey v. Philadelphia, W., & B. R. R. Co., 44 D. 593; Sutherland v. De Leon, 46 D. 100; Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694; Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379; Wright v. Wright, 56 D. 723; Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Davidson Co., 62 D. 424; Santo v. State, 63 D. 487; Reyburn v. Brackett, 83 D. 457. Thus where such a statute would be valid if the consent of persons affected by its passage was previously obtained, that fact will be presumed, and conclusively so against a stranger. Wellington's Case, 26 D. 631.

An act of the legislature will be declared unconstitutional only in the case that its repugnance to the constitution be beyond reasonable doubt. Hoke v. Henderson, 25 D. 677. S. P., Harrison v. State, 85 D. 658; Com. v. Erie Ry Co., 1 R. 399.

An act susceptible of two interpretations will be given that which will render it constitutional and valid. Boisdere v. Citizens' Bank, 29 D. 453; Bloodgood v. Mohawk etc. R. R. Co., 31 D. 313; Santo v. State, 63 D. 487.

In construing statutes, courts should look to their true object, and not be guided by other objects or purposes which the legislature had mistakenly assumed or declared; and if in this view the statutes be within the power of the legislature, and consistent with the constitution, they should be upheld. Sherman v. Buick, 91 D. 577.

The word "be" will be construed as meaning "become" when this is necessary to save an act from the objection of being unconstitutional and void. Boisdere v. Citizens' Bank, 29 D. 453.

A statute enacting that the owners of land lying and being on a certain stream may recover as well for injuries heretofore sustained as for those which may be thereafter sustained in consequence of any act, work, or obstruction of the Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore Railroad Company must be construed as giving a remedy only for those injuries for which the company was liable under its charter, and not as imposing new liabilities. Bailey v. Phila., W., & B. R. R. Co., 44 D. 593.

A statute authorizing certain acts to be done affords no protection for acts not done strictly in pursuance of the authority conferred. Hence if a company, by statute au-authorized to erect across a navigable stream a bridge of specified dimensions or at a particular place, erects a bridge of different dimensions, or at another place, it will be answerable for any damages resulting from the variation in the dimensions or location of such bridge. Id.

34. Ordinary or well-known meaning of the words to be adopted.—The words of a statute are to be taken in their ordinary and familiar signification and import, and regard is to be had to their general and popular use. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522; Cummings v. Coleman, 62 D. 402; Quigley v. Gorham, 63 D. 139.

When the legislature has used a term, without defining it, which has a well-settled meaning in the common law, it must be supposed that they use it in the same sense. Hillhouse v. Chester, 3 D. 265; Johnson v. Farwell, 22 D. 203; Carpenter v. State, 34 D. 116; State v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 38 D. 317; Buckner v. R. E. Bank, 41 D. 105; Ex parte Vincent, 62 D. 714; Harris v. Reynolds, 73 D. 600.

The intention of the legislature is to be gathered from the words used, taken in their plain and obvious sense. Keener v. State, 63 D. 269.

Where the language of a statute is clear and plain, courts cannot consider consequences in construing it so as to give it a construction different from its natural and obvious meaning. Coffin v. Rich, 71 D. 559.

Construction of a statute is admissible only where there is an ambiguity. Gains v. Gains, 12 D. 375.

A word in a statute having two significations should ordinarily be construed as generally understood in the community, but not where it would contravene the manifest intention of the legislature. Favers v. Glass, 58 D. 272.

35. Interpretation of general words.—General words in a statute must receive a general construction, unless there be something in it to restrain them. Jones v. Jones, 36 D. 723.

36. Ascertaining and giving effect to legislative intent.—In construing a statute, the intention of the makers must be regarded, and what is within that intention is within the statute, though not within the letter, while what is within the letter of the statute but not within the intention of the makers is not within the statute. Mayor etc. v. Root, 63 D. 692. S. P., People v. Ulica Ins. Co., 8 D. 243; Orndoff v. Turman, 21 D. 608; Blakeney v. Blakeney, 30 D. 574; and the intention may be collected from the cause or necessity of making the act or from foreign circumstances. Car Spring Co. v. R. R. Co., 69 D. 181. Accordingly, where a statute recited that A, who was living, had only female heirs, and it appeared that A had two daughters, named B and C, and no other children,—held, that by the words "female heirs" were meant the two daughters of A. Beall v. Harwood, 3 D. 532.

General rules of statutory construction must yield to the clear intention of the legislature sufficiently expressed. Welch v. Wadsworth, 79 D. 236.

Where a literal construction would produce results unjust and violative of the constitution, the general language of the statute must be restricted so as to accomplish the general intent and declared result of the statute without producing such results, or else it must be declared to be a plain violation of the provisions of the constitution, and therefore void. Preston v. Drew, 54 D. 639.

A universal rule in construing a statute is, that courts must find the intent of the legislature in the statute itself. Unless some ground can be found in the statute for restraining or enlarging the meaning of its general words, they must receive a general construction, and the courts cannot arbitrarily subtract from or add thereto. Tynan v. Walker, 95 D. 152.

Laws must be executed according to the sense and meaning which they import at the time of passage. Com. v. Erie etc. R. R. Co., 67 D. 471.

An express provision of law cannot be repealed or its construction controlled by the presumed or even well-known views of the members of the legislature. The law alone can speak the legislative will. Belleville etc. R. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 D. 589.

It is safe to give effect to particular words of the enacting clause; for where the legislature, in the same sentence, uses different words, courts will presume that they were used to express different ideas. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

Laws to carry on the government are to receive a liberal construction to effectuate the objects designed, and if the legislative purpose can be arrived at in the absence of express language, that meaning is to be observed and obeyed. Hardesty v. Taft, 87 D. 584.

The legislature, in re-enacting a law without change or amendment, is deemed thereby to adopt the construction placed upon it by the courts. Indiana etc. R. R. Co. v. Guard, 87 D. 327.

The court must give to the language of a statute, which is deficient in precision and clearness, and faulty or imperfect in phraseology or structure, such an interpretation as may appear best adapted to effectuate the object contemplated in its enactment; and it is always to be presumed, in such case, that the legislature intended that the most reasonable and beneficial interpretation should be given to the language which they have used. Pickering v. Day, 95 D. 291.

Where the language of a statute is not clear, and it is obvious that by a particular construction great public interests would be endangered or sacrificed, the court ought not to presume that such construction was intended by the makers of the law. Id.

Construing a statute according to its equity is to give effect to it according to the intention of the law-makers, as indicated by its terms and purposes. Blakeney v. Blakeney, 30 D. 574.

37. Rule that entire statute must be construed together. — The legislative intent governs in construing a statute, if it can be ascertained, and such intent is to be gathered from the whole statute. Smith v. Randall, 65 D. 476; Belleville and Illinoisstown R. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 D. 589; Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

Effect must be given to every part of a statute, if it can be done without manifestly violating the intention of the legislature. Montesquieu v. Heil, 23 D. 471; without rejecting any part as surplusage, or treating it as a repetition of a provision already made. Gates v. Salmon, 95 D. 139.

38. Construing two or more provisions together. — All sections of an act should be construed together, and each section should receive such a construction as will make it conform to common sense and justice. Burnham v. Hays, 58 D. 389; Stout v. Keyes, 43 D. 465; and if possible, so as to be consistent with all other sections. Merrill v. Harris, 57 D. 359.

Statutes which take effect simultaneously should be construed together in determining their effect. Bishop v. Boyle, 68 D. 615.

One portion of a law, to qualify, restrain, or suspend another portion, must appear to have been framed with that intention. Belleville etc. R. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 D. 589.

A statute containing two inconsistent provisions must be construed so as to effect the legislative intention. Lindley v. Cross, 99 D. 610.

Express, plain, and clear words in a statute must control doubtful and ambiguous expressions in the same statute, particularly in the same clause or section. Lisher v. Pierson, 20 D. 612.

39. Interpretation of statutes in pari materia. — Acts in pari materia should be construed together as if they were one law. McCartee v. Orphan Asy. Soc., 18 D. 516; Montesquieu v. Heil, 23 D. 471; State v. Wilbor, 38 D. 245; State v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 38 D. 317; Dugan v. Gittings, 43 D. 306; Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447; Scarborough v. Watkins, 50 D. 528; Harrison v. State, 85 D. 658.

Acts relating to the same subject-matter and passed on the same day should be so construed as to give them both effect. Lorimer v. Lewis, 39 D. 461. S. P., though not passed on the same day, Neill v. Keese, 51 D. 746.

40. When resort may be had to extrinsic facts. — The intent of the legislature ought not to be sought for outside of the statute, unless the words are doubtful and uncertain. Salling v. McKinney, 19 D. 722.

If the words are ambiguous, resort should be had to the probable consequences which would arise from the one or the other construction. Hoke v. Henderson, 25 D. 677.

But if the meaning of the language of the statute be plain, there can be no such resort. Id.

Considerations of policy are entitled to weight only in cases of doubtful interpretation, and where the intention of the legislature appears to be opposed to the literal import of the language of the act. Coulter v. Robertson, 57 D. 168.

41. What may be supplied by inference or implication. — Penalties in a statute for certain acts necessarily imply prohibition, and make the thing prohibited unlawful, although there is no express prohibition contained in the statute. Harrison v. Berkley, 47 D. 578; Roby v. West, 17 D. 423.

An attempt to contravene a public statute is illegal, whether it is expressly prohibited by such statute or not. Rice v. Maxwell, 53 D. 85.

Where the legislature has power to require one public easement to yield to another more important, the intention to grant such power must appear by express words, or by necessary implication; and such implication arises only when requisite to the enjoyment of the powers expressly granted, and can be extended no further than such necessity requires. Hickok v. Hine, 13 R. 255.

42. Referring to the title and preamble. — The title of an act may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the intent of the legislature, when not clearly manifest in the body of the act. Blakeney v. Blakeney, 30 D. 574.

The character of every statute is determined by its provisions, and not by its title, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is general or local. People v. McCann, 69 D. 642.

The preamble to an act may be used to explain equivocal expressions, but never to control the obvious meaning of the statute, nor to supply matter not embraced in its spirit. Bynum v. Clark, 15 D. 633. S. P., Hart v. Mayor of Albany, 24 D. 165; Sutherland v. De Leon, 46 D. 100.

Effect must be given to the preamble in construing a statute, provided it does not contain expressions contradictory to or irreconcilable with the enacting clause. Montesquieu v. Heil, 23 D. 471.

43. Provisos and exceptions. — The office of a proviso is not to repeal, but to modify the enacting clause of a statute. Salling v. McKinney, 19 D. 722.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I

A proviso in a statute is not to enlarge the operation of the enacting clause. Id.

The enactment of a general provision existing in the Spanish law into the code of Louisiana does not have the effect of repealing an exception which accompanied that general provision in the Spanish law. Valcain v. Cloutier, 22 D. 179.

The Georgia registry act of 1847, requiring the recording of marriage settlements, made no exception in favor of femes covert, and consequently the court can make none. It is undesirable that exceptions should be ingrafted upon any statute by the bench, as it increases the uncertainty of the law, and results in judicial legislation. Boston v. Cummins, 60 D. 717.

44. Effect given to punctuation. — The printer's punctuation of published statutes may be an uncertain guide to their interpretation. State v. McNally, 56 D. 650.

45. Effect of custom or usage on construction. — A construction of a statute long acted upon by the people at large will be adopted by the courts, if not in direct contradiction to its terms. Maher v. State, 26 D. 379.

46. Effect of contemporaneous legislation on construction. — Contemporaneous legislation is the best standard of the meaning of laws. Harrison v. State, 85 D. 658.

A long-established construction of a statute by the officers who execute it ought to have the force of a judicial determination. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447; Com. v. Posey, 2 D. 560.

Contemporaneous construction of a statute is generally the best. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447; and should never be departed from without most cogent reasons. Chestnut v. Shane, 47 D. 387; Will of Warfield, 83 D. 49.

47. Following prior English construction. — A statute adopted from a sister state or from England, which has received a settled and uniform construction by the courts of the country from which it has been taken, must be given a similar construction by the state adopting it. Such interpretation becomes part of the statute itself, in effect. Munson v. Hallowell, 84 D. 582; Frankland v. Hallowell, 84 D. 582; Dowell v. Buchanan, 23 D. 280; Woolsey v. Cade, 25 R. 711; Myrick v. Hasey, 46 D. 583; Balance v. Rankin, 54 D. 412; Rigg v. Wilton, 54 D. 419.

48. Construction of local acts. — Public statutes are usually general in their character and operation, and equally applicable in all parts of the state. Pierce v. Kimball, 23 D. 537.

Statutes which are local with respect to the violation of them are nevertheless public, if they are binding upon all persons coming or being within the particular locality. Id.

Of this character are statutes regulating the taking of fish in particular localities, statutes establishing local tribunals, etc. Id.

49. — of statutes of sister states. — Foreign laws cannot per se operate extra-territorially. Sneed v. Ewing, 22 D. 41.

The construction of a statute of a state by the courts of that state must be followed in courts of other states. Case v. Cushman, 39 D. 47; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 57 D. 420.

50. — of retrospective statutes.*

— If a statute be not explicitly retrospective, the court will not by construction give it a retrospective operation. Goshen v. Stonington, 10 D. 121; Perkins v. Perkins, 18 D. 120; Davis v. Minor, 28 D. 325; Garrett v. Wiggins, 30 D. 653; Oriental Bank v. Freeze, 36 D. 701; Oyon's Succession, 41 D. 274; Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447; Grimes v. Norris, 65 D. 545; Conway v. Cable, 87 D. 240; Richardson v. Cook, 88 D. 622; Williams v. Johnson, 96 D. 613. But this rule does not apply where the legislature expressly declares its intention to make a statute retroactive. Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694. But that intention is not to be assumed from the mere fact that general language is used which might include past transactions, as well as future. Seamans v. Carter, 82 D. 696. Nor does the rule apply to a repealing statute not affecting vested rights, merely operating on the remedy, and containing no saving clause as to pending suits. Such a statute will have a retroactive operation. Cook v. Gray, 81 D. 185.

It is a general rule, independently of the constitution, that statutes are to have a prospective operation only, and it is conclusively settled that a statute should not be construed to operate retrospectively, if a vested right be thereby destroyed. Lewis v. Brackenridge, 12 D. 228.

A statute is to be deemed retrospective or retroactive where it takes away or impairs any vested right acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, or imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions or considerations already past. Hops Mut. Ins. Co. v. Flynn, 90 D. 438.

A prospective, and not a retrospective, effect will be given to section 25, chapter 63, General Statutes of Vermont, providing that "no acknowledgment or promise shall be held to affect any defense made under the provisions of this chapter, unless such acknowledgment or promise shall be in writing, signed by the party affected thereby," and therefore the statute will not apply to an action pending when it took effect. Richardson v. Cook, 88 D. 622.

* Retrospective statutes, operation of, see note, 11 D. 98.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A statute limiting the time to five years to recover real estate sold by an administrator applies only to sales made subsequent to the passage of the statute, and has no retrospective operation. Holyoke v. Haskins, 16 D. 372.

An act legitimating children will not receive, in the absence of express provisions to the contrary, a retroactive effect so as to defeat the right of the commonwealth to taxes based on the illegitimacy, which right accrued prior to the passage of the act. Com. v. Stump, 91 D. 198.

A statute requiring, as a basis of recovery in an action, evidence of facts not previously necessary to be proved, will not be construed to apply to actions commenced before its passage, unless expressly so declared. Bedford v. Shilling, 8 D. 718.

Where a statute is passed enlarging the time for registration of bills of sale, for purposes of notice, it applies to existing bills of sale upon which the time previously allowed for registration has not run. Read v. Staton, 9 D. 740.

A retrospective act cannot affect a contract merged in a judgment at the time of its passage. Welch v. Wadsworth, 79 D. 236.

A retrospective act may affect a contract upon which suit has been brought and judgment by default rendered at the time of its passage, where the case is still pending on defendant's motion to be heard in damages, for the contract does not become merged in judgment until the extent of the defendant's liability under the contract is determined by final judgment. Ib.

A statute relating to the subject-matter of an order made previous to its passage will not affect the decision of the appellate court on appeal from the order. State v. McGlynn, 81 D. 118.

51. — of ex post facto laws. — At the time of the commission of the offense for which the prisoner was on trial, the statute provided that juries should be judges of the law in such cases. Before the trial this was repealed. Held, that the defendant was not entitled to the benefit of the repealed statute. Marion v. State, 57 R. 825.

52. — of statutes in derogation of common law. — Statutes in derogation of common law are to be strictly construed. Hemingway v. Scales, 97 D. 425; and it will not be inferred that the legislature intended to alter common-law principles further than is clearly expressed or the case absolutely requires. Tinsman v. Belvidere etc. R. R. Co., 69 D. 565.

53. Interpretation of private acts. — Private acts of Parliament were passed in England only where there was no other mode of relief. Campbell's Case, 20 D. 360.

Such acts are construed as private conveyances, binding only parties and privies, and not affecting the rights of strangers. Ib.

A private act obtained by fraud may be relieved against in a court of law or equity. Ib.

Private statutes operate generally, in Maryland, as private conveyances merely, binding only on parties and privies, and are valid if they do not conflict with the constitution. Ib.

The validity of statutes annulling the marriage contract, and of other private statutes, in particular cases, considered. Ib.

A statute giving power to mortgage a decedent's realty for the payment of debts may bind his heirs and devisees, who applied for it, but not his creditors. Ib.

Where by a private act of the legislature the property of a person is directed to be sold or disposed of, and the money realized to be paid to certain creditors, it must be understood as saving the rights of third persons, and can only amount to a quitclaim of the right or interest of the state. Jackson v. Catlin, 3 D. 415.

Facts stated in a private statute are strong evidence against those who procured its passage. May v. Frazer, 14 D. 159.

Where a patent for a military lot was granted to David H. without words of description, and it was claimed by the heirs of Daniel H., a private statute confirming the title to the heirs of Daniel H., though inoperative to divest the title, was held valid as confirmatory of a void grant, it being shown by parol that Daniel H. was intended as the original patentee. Jackson v. Stanley, 6 D. 319.

54. Real and personal statutes. — A real statute is one which regulates property within the state where it is in force. Saul v. His Creditors, 16 D. 212.

The real statute of the situation prevails over the personal statute of the domicile. Ib.

A personal statute is one which follows and governs the party subject to it wherever he goes. Ib.

Definitions of real and personal statutes quoted and considered. Ib.

A statute governing the property rights of husband and wife is not a personal statute, but is a real statute. Ib.

55. Construction of remedial statutes, generally. — Remedial statutes should be liberally construed, to bring within the scope of their operation all cases that come within the mischief intended to be provided against. Orndoff v. Turman, 21 D. 608; White v. Mary Ann, 65 D. 523.

A statute is remedial which gives a right of action against stockholders of a corporation for corporate debts, and should be liberally construed. Freeland v. McCullough, 43 D. 685.

Where a statute gives a party a right to recover judgment in the nature of a penalty, for a sum larger than is justly due, the right to the amount that may be so recovered does not become vested until after judgment. Oriental Bank v. Freeze, 36 D. 701.

The Pennsylvania act of March 20, 1818, "to improve the navigation of the river Lehigh," and the act of February 13, 1822, "to incorporate the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company," construed, and held to afford a statutory remedy for those injuries which were remediable at common law, and for no others. Lehigh B. Co. v. Lehigh C. & N. Co., 26 D. 111.

56. What words are mandatory and imperative.—A statute requires owners of tenement-houses to provide such fire-escapes as shall be directed and approved by certain commissioners. Held, that the duty is presently imperative, and the owners must procure such direction and approval, without waiting for the action of the commissioners. Willy v. Mulledy, 34 R. 536.

57. When new remedy is exclusive, and when cumulative merely.—The statutory remedy must be pursued where both the right and the remedy are given by statute; although if the right existed at common law, and a remedy is given by statute, the latter is regarded as cumulative, and either remedy might be pursued. People v. Craycroft, 56 D. 331; Lang v. Scott, 12 D. 257; Dygeri v. Schenck, 35 D. 575; Lewey's I. R. R. Co. v. Bolton, 77 D. 236.

Where a statute gives a remedy where there was none before, it ought to be followed. App v. Dreisbach, 21 D. 447.

If a statute provide a remedy for a matter before actionable at common law, the common-law remedy is not thereby divested. Crittenden v. Wilson, 15 D. 462; Methodist Church v. Remington, 26 D. 61; Donnell v. Jones, 48 D. 59. This rule does not apply to acts done by express authority of the statute for a public purpose; nor can either party resort to the common-law action in such a case, because the other has not proceeded to have the damages assessed in the mode prescribed in such statute. Calking v. Baldwin, 21 D. 168.

A statute giving a new remedy does not alter the nature of the wrong complained of; if a tort before such statute was enacted, it remains a tort afterwards. Wilson v. Myers, 15 D. 510.

Compensation for damages occasioned by an act authorized by statute must be sought in the mode prescribed by that statute, if it be a public statute; but if it be a private statute, compensation may be obtained through the remedy given by it, or by action according to the common law. Calking v. Baldwin, 21 D. 168.

If a statute confer special privileges, and provide a particular remedy for their invasion, those neglecting that remedy may be without redress for the invasion. Bassett v. Carleton, 54 D. 605.

A party injured is confined to his remedy under the statute in any case clearly within the provisions of the statute; for any other case, his remedy remains as at common law. Troy v. Cheshire R. R. Co., 55 D. 177.

The Maryland act of 1821, chapter 77, provided for the appointment of an inspector of bark. The act of 1854, chapter 200, provided that any free white citizen could act as such inspector; but must first take out a license, and pay one hundred dollars therefor. Held, that whether the act of 1854 abolished the office as it previously existed or not, the inspector appointed by the governor must take out a license. Davis v. State, 61 D. 331.

A new remedy given by statute for failure of a bidder to comply with the terms of a probate sale is cumulative, and does not take away the common-law remedy, or remedy by suit to compel specific performance. Dawson v. Miller, 70 D. 380.

58. Rule that penal statutes must be construed strictly.—Penal statutes should be strictly construed. Gates v. McDaniel, 19 D. 49; Warner v. Com., 44 D. 114; Harrison v. State, 85 D. 658. Thus a statute requiring the employment of an auctioneer to make sales at auction, and prohibiting other persons from doing so, applies only to the act of sale, and does not prohibit other persons from appointing the time and place of sale, advertising, giving notice to interested parties, and making adjournments. These acts are preliminary, and constitute no part of the contract or act of sale. Hosmer v. Sargent, 85 D. 683.

Penal statutes are to be expounded strictly against an offender and liberally in his favor; it is not sufficient that the offense is within the mischiefs intended by the legislature to be redressed, if not within the words used. Accordingly, it is not punishable, under the statute prohibiting the erection of wooden buildings within certain limits, and of wooden additions to buildings already erected, having in them a chimney, fire-place, or stove, to make a wooden addition to a building, with the fire-place entirely without the addition. Daggett v. State, 10 D. 100.

An act of Congress highly punitive in character must be strictly construed by the rules of the common law as well as by the modern rules of international law. Galbraith v. McFarland, 91 D. 281.

An act of Congress making it a penal offense to hinder, delay, or obstruct the mails must be strictly construed, when, under its provisions, it is sought to protect property used in the transportation of mails from the pursuit of creditors, in derogation of a right recognized by the laws of the state. Lathrop v. Middleton, 83 D. 112.

A statute imposed a penalty on any railroad company which should exclude any person or persons from any particular car on account of race or color, and subjected the employees offending to fine and imprisonment. A man and his wife, colored persons, were excluded from a car by the same employee at the same time. Held, but a single offense, and that a recovery by the man and his wife in right of the wife barred a recovery in his own right. Central R. R. Co. v. Green, 27 R. 718.

59. Limits and exceptions to the rule. — Penal laws are not to be so construed as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature, and though they are not to be extended, they should receive a rational construction. Keller v. State, 69 D. 226; Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

The subject of a penal law may generally be perceived by ascertaining what mischief or evil the law was designed to remedy or prevent. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

60. Various interpretations of the word "may." — The word "may," or words "shall be lawful," used in a statute, are mandatory, wherever the act to be done under the statute is to be done by a public officer, and either concerns the public interest or affects the rights of third persons. Ex parte Simonton, 33 D. 320.

"May" will be construed to be synonymous with "shall," where the public or third persons have a claim de jure that the power should be exercised; but where this is not the case, "may" will not be construed as "shall." Bansmer v. Mace, 81 D. 344.

The word "may" is equivalent to "shall," in the statute providing that affidavits for use in any court within the state "may be taken" before justices of the peace. People v. Brooks, 43 D. 704.

61. Interpretations of various other particular words and phrases. — The word "act" is generally used to designate the entire bill with all the parts adopted by a single effort of the legislative will; but the word may be referred to a particular section in which it is used, when the context indicates that such was the legislative intent. Satcher v. Satcher, 91 D. 498.

In a criminal statute, the word "horses" may fairly be construed to include mares, as somen generalisimum. State v. Dunnivant, 5 D. 530.

"Purchaser," in a statute making a parol gift void as to creditors, purchasers, and mortgagees, without sufficient change of possession, means a purchaser for money or other valuable consideration. Cummings v. Coleman, 62 D. 402.

"Required," in a statute, is equivalent to "commanded." Taylor v. Commissioners of Newberne, 64 D. 566.

The word "shall" is merely directory where no right or benefit to any one depends upon the use of the word. Wheeler v. City of Chicago, 76 D. 736.

* "May," when construed as equivalent to "must," see note. 15 D. 467, 468.

A statute declaring a thing "void" is often to be construed as making it merely voidable at the instance of a party. Allen v. Huntington, 16 D. 702.

62. How a revising statute should be construed. — Where a statute is repealed and re-enacted, with some changes, at the same time, both statutes may be considered together in giving a construction to the latter, but the act repealed has no force except so far as it is continued in force by saving clauses and exceptions. Coffin v. Rich, 71 D. 559.

63. Correcting errors and mistakes. — The failure to embody a provision in the Indiana statute of 1843, concerning the continuance of a term of the circuit court, when the completion of the trial of a case requires it, in the act of 1852, which was a substantial re-enactment of the former statute with respect to the courts of common pleas, is a casus omisus, and the provision is continued in force by the section of the act of 1852 continuing in force laws and usages relative to pleading and practice in criminal actions. Wright v. State, 61 D. 90.

64. Effect of repugnancy. — Where two grants of power are repugnant, the last-expressed will of the legislature must control. Korah v. City of Ottawa, 83 D. 255.

65. — or ambiguity. — A statute prohibited the sale of spirituous liquors within three miles of Mount Zion Church, in Gaston County. There were two churches of that name in that county. Held, inoperative. State v. Partlow, 49 R. 652.

IV. REPEAL, AND ITS EFFECT.

66. What amounts to a repeal or expiration, generally. — An important public statute of long standing will not be held to be repealed, except by express words, or by strong and necessary implication. Wilson v. Spencer, 10 D. 491.

Re-enacting into a code the general provisions of prior laws does not repeal the exceptions to which these general provisions were subject. Miller v. Mercier, 15 D. 156.

A provision in an act is repealed on re-enactment of the act in all its particulars with the exception that the provision is omitted. Cantley v. Stanfield, 60 D. 219.

Section 1 of article 1 of the Maryland code of public general laws, declaring that "no rights, property, or privileges held under a charter or grant from this state shall be in any manner impaired or affected by the adoption of this code," was a precautionary measure, not intended to keep in its original form and separate existence any public local law of the state, like the power or privilege granted to the town of Frederick by act of 1847, chapter 224, entitled "An act to open and widen Carroll Creek, in Frederick City." Mayor v. Groshon, 96 D. 591.

The object of the Maryland code of 1860 was to arrange and simplify the whole body of statutory law of that state; and the legislature, in adopting it as a substitute for all the public general and public local statute law then existing, plainly intended an entire repeal of all such statutes of that character then on the statute-book as were not embraced in the codification. Id.

A statute cannot be repealed by mere disuser, but only expressly, or by a subsequent statute necessarily so repugnant that the two cannot stand together. Homer v. Com., 51 R. 521.

67. Express repeal.—A constitutional provision that "no law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title only, but the act revived, or the section or sections amended, shall be inserted at length," does not apply to simple repealing acts. Van Riper v. Parsons, 29 R. 210.

Chapter 1 of the California act of 1850, concerning corporations, was not repealed by the act of 1851, although by a typographical error in the statutes of 1851, page 443, section 31, as printed, the whole of that act appears to have been repealed. The act as enrolled shows that only chapter 3 of the act of 1850 was repealed. Brewster v. Hartley, 99 D. 237.

68 Implied repeal.*—A subsequent statute revising the whole subject-matter of a former one, and evidently intended as a substitute for it, will operate to repeal the former statute, although no express words to that effect are used. Bartlet v. King, 7 D. 99; State v. Wilson, 82 D. 163. And though a subsequent statute be not repugnant in its provisions to a former one, yet if it was clearly intended to prescribe the only rules which should govern, it repeals the prior statute. Rogers v. Watrous, 58 D. 100.

Repeal by implication is not favored, and is deemed to have taken place only when a subsequent statute cannot be reconciled with a prior one. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447; McCartee v. Orphan Asy. Soc., 18 D. 516; Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 72 D. 730; State v. Wilson, 82 D. 163.

Where two statutes are so inconsistent that they cannot stand together, the last repeals the first. Rawls v. Kennedy, 58 D. 289; Edgar v. Greer, 74 D. 316.

A later statute which does not, in terms, repeal an earlier one on the same subject is not to be taken as a repeal by implication, unless it is plainly repugnant to the former, or unless it fully embraces the whole subject-matter. Dugan v. Gittings, 43 D. 306.

An act of the legislature of Maine, relating to the same subject as a statute of Massachusetts, continued in force by the act of separation, but expressing different sentiments, establishing different principles, and containing provisions better suited to the people of Maine, is a virtual repeal of the act of Massachusetts. Towle v. Marrett, 14 D. 206.

Where the legislature passes an act postponing a term of court to a certain time, and before that time arrives passes another act providing that, after the date of its passage, the terms of said court shall be held at a time subsequent to that fixed by the prior act, the latter act conflicts with the former, and repeals it. Ex parte Trapnall, 42 D. 678.

The exactment of one law is as much a repeal of all inconsistent laws as if those inconsistent laws had been repealed by express words. This rule prevails even under article 3, section 17, Maryland constitution, which provides that "no law or section of law shall be revived, amended, or repealed by reference to its title or section only." Davis v. State, 61 D. 331.

The common law relative to nuisances is not repealed by an act imposing a penalty for occupying a building as a slaughter-house, without license, in the compact part of a town. State v. Wilson, 82 D. 163.

69. If both statutes can stand, there is no implied repeal.—Where there are two affirmative statutes on the same subject, if they do not conflict with each other, and can be so construed as to stand together, the later will not be considered as a virtual repeal of the former. Warder v. Arell, 1 D. 488; McCartee v. Orphan Asy. Soc., 18 D. 516; Wyman v. Campbell, 31 D. 677; Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447; Neill v. Keese, 51 D. 746; State v. Wilson, 82 D. 163; Carver v. Smith, 46 R. 210.

An intention to repeal an existing law is not presumed. Saul v. His Creditors, 16 D. 212.

Subsequent statutes do not abrogate former ones by containing different provisions on the same subject; they must be contrary to produce such an effect. Id.

An act providing for the holding of special terms of courts for the trial of criminal causes is not repealed by a subsequent act authorizing such courts, when unable at the regular terms to dispose of all the business pending therein, to hold special terms to be devoted exclusively to the civil and chancery docket. Such acts are entirely consistent with each other, and may both operate together. State v. Hughes, 36 D. 411.

70. Effect of repeal.*—The repeal of a statute making an act illegal does not thereby render the act valid. Roby v. West, 17 D. 423.

Rights are not destroyed by the repeal of the law under which they were acquired. Dixon v. Dixon, 23 D. 478.

* See note on repeal of statutes by implication, 14 D. 206, 210.

* See note on the effect of repeals, 12 D. 480, 431.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The construction of a statute should be consistent with the dictates of justice and natural equity, even though this should require a deviation from its strict letter; and where an act repealed the former statute of limitations, and imposed new limitations as a rule of shorter duration, the repeal was held intended merely to be for the purpose of imposing new limitations, and not to deprive parties of defenses acquired under the old statute, by lapse of its period of limitations. Davis v. Minor, 28 D. 325.

Repeal of a statute giving a lien to laborers pending action destroys the right of action where there is no saving clause in the repealing statute; and this, notwithstanding that an attachment had been levied by virtue of the prior statute. Bangor v. Goding, 56 D. 688.

Repealing a statute from which a court derives its jurisdiction deprives it of the power to proceed in cases pending at the time of the repeal. Hunt v. Jennings, 33 D. 465; Todd v. Landry, 12 D. 479.

A statute repealing all divorce laws of the state ousts the court of jurisdiction in an action for divorce pending at the passage of the statute. Grant v. Grant, 32 R. 506.

The unconditional repeal of a penal statute abrogates all rights which may have arisen under it. Gregory v. German Bank etc., 25 R. 760; Welch v. Wadsworth, 79 D. 236.

The statute making trustees of corporations individually liable for all debts of the company, in case they omit to publish an annual report, is penal; and the repeal of such a statute without any reservation destroys any unenforced rights which may have accrued to creditors of the company as against such trustees on account of such omission. Gregory v. German Bank etc., 25 R. 760.

The repeal of a statute while a prosecution under it is pending puts an end to such prosecution, unless there is a saving clause in the repealing act. And this is the case, not only where the latter act expressly repeals the former, but also where its provisions are inconsistent with the former, although there be no annulling words or repealing clause therein. Abbott v. Com., 34 D. 492.*

The general principle is, that if a statute creating an offense is repealed, no further proceeding can be taken under the repealed law to enforce the punishment after the repealing act takes effect. Wall v. State, 70 D. 302.

The repeal of a statute prohibiting a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice does not affect prosecutions under indictments pending prior to such repeal. To give this effect to the repealing statute would be to make it ex post facto within the constitution. Hart v. State, 83 D. 752.

A statute prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors within four miles of any incorporated institution of learning, except within incorporated towns. The defendant had a license to sell in a town in which there was such an institution. The charter of the town being repealed, — held, that the defendant was liable to prosecution under the statute. Johnson v. State, 31 R. 648.

The accused was convicted of a statutory offense. He appealed, and pending the appeal, the statute was repealed, without qualification or exception. Held, that the prosecution must be dismissed. Sheppard v. State, 28 R. 422.

71. Saving clauses, and their effect. — A saving clause respecting persons out of the state, contained in a statute in relation to wills, is not repealed by an act repealing a similar saving clause contained in an act respecting limitations of actions. Schultz v. Schultz, 60 D. 335.

Defendant was proceeded against for violation of a statute which had been repealed by a later statute, but which provided that nothing therein contained should affect "any penalty or forfeiture already incurred under the provisions of any law in force prior to the passage of this act." The offense alleged occurred before the latter statute took effect, but after its approval by the governor. Held, that the indictment was sustainable. Com. v. Bennett, 11 R. 304.

72. Revival. — Special words are not essential to revive a statute providing for the construction of a railroad, which has expired because the work has not been commenced within the time therein limited, but a statute passed after such expiration, extending the time, will be a sufficient revivor. Crocker v. Crane, 34 D. 228.

The repeal of a repealing statute revives the original statute. Collins v. Smith, 36 D. 228.

The expiration of a repealing statute by its own limitation revives the statute repealed and supplied. Therefore the Pennsylvania act of March 19, 1810, relating to unincorporated banks, was revived by the expiration of the repealing act of March 21, 1814. Id.

The repeal of a statute amending a former statute, by making the same to read as set forth at length in the later act, does not work a revival of the first act, but both fall together. People v. Supervisors, 23 R. 94.

SUBMISSION OF CAUSES.

1. How submitted, and when. — A submission to the supreme court of conflicting claims between plaintiffs is not to be approved, and in doubtful cases will not be allowed; but where no objection thereto is made by the other parties, and the law is clear, the court will determine such claims. Sorrey v. Bright, 28 D. 584.

An agreed case may be submitted to the court without plea, and even without declaration. The defect in or want of pleadings is cured by the agreement. Sawyer v. Corse, 94 D. 445.

2. How heard and decided. — A case stated must be decided on the facts agreed on, and inferences cannot be made from the facts which may or may not be true, though legal presumptions and necessary conclusions may be drawn. Van Brunt v. Pike, 45 D. 123.

The decision in a case submitted to the court after issue is made up is restricted to such issue. Sawyer v. Corse, 94 D. 445.

3. Defendant, when entitled to judgment. — In an agreed state of facts the principle is, if there be no special limitation in the statement, that the defendant is to have judgment if the facts would verify any plea which would be a bar to the action. Moore v. Philbrick, 52 D. 642; Gardiner v. Nutting, 17 D. 211; Sawyer v. Corse, 94 D. 445.

A subscription of money to induce a railway company to locate a bridge at a particular point constitutes a valid contract. Cumberland Valley R. R. Co. v. Baab, 36 D. 132.

A party making a subscription is bound thereby, if the terms are complied with and money and labor is expended on the faith of it. Galt v. Swain, 60 D. 311.

In an action against a subscriber to a paper stipulating that the subscribers would pay the sum annexed to their names to any person who should thereafter build a free bridge at a specified place, the same to be paid upon the completion of the bridge, — held, 1. That the instrument was a valid contract between the subscribers thereto and any one who should afterward build the bridge according to its terms, and that as relates to the payee, it was like a note payable to the bearer; 2. That parol evidence was inadmissible to show the work was to be let to the lowest bidder, there being no such provision in the paper. Cooper v. McCrimmin, 7 R. 258.

A note given for a subscription to build and endow a college, upon the faith of which the payee has incurred expense, is valid. Philomath College v. Hartless, 25 R. 510.

2. Acceptance or assent. — A subscription, to be binding, must be acceded to as any other promise or offer, and the party apprised within a reasonable time that his offer is accepted. Galt v. Swain, 60 D. 311.

3. Consideration. — When several agree to contribute to a common object which they wish to accomplish, the promise of each is a good consideration for the promises of the others. Congregational Society v. Perry, 25 D. 455.

A subscription requires consideration to support it, either of profit to the party promising or of loss to the other party. Galt v. Swain, 60 D. 311.

No action can be maintained upon a promise contained in a subscription paper, to pay money to "such persons as may be appointed trustees," for the erection of an academy, such promise being without consideration. Farmington Academy v. Allen, 7 D. 201.

But if upon the faith of such subscription, trustees are afterwards appointed and expenses incurred, of which the subscriber has knowledge, and to which he assents by paying part of the amount subscribed, the law will imply a promise to pay the remainder, and an action will lie therefor. Id.

It is a sufficient consideration for a promissory note that it was given to the trustees of a charitable institution, after a subscription for charitable purposes, payable to such trustees, the note reading for value received, and expressly referring to the subscription whose purposes were in process of execution. Amherst Academy v. Cows, 17 D. 387.

A contract by which subscribers promise to pay to the state treasurer the sums set opposite their names, towards building a state-house, is not void for want of consideration, nor can objection be made thereto on the ground of public policy or propriety. State Treasurer v. Cross, 31 D. 626.

Suit on such contract may be brought either in the name of the people of the state or in the name of the state treasurer. Id.

The erection of a church edifice is a sufficient consideration to authorize a recovery on a subscription made for the purpose of such erection. McDonald v. Gray, 79 D. 509.

4. Rights of subscribers — Revocation. — A subscription for building a church may be conditional, like any other promise or offer. If particular terms are prescribed, they must be complied with before the subscription is binding. Galt v. Swain, 60 D. 311.

Where a subscription of funds towards the erection of a bridge has been paid, and the contractor has failed to erect the bridge, the contributor can maintain an action for damages for breach of the contract. Brimhall v. Van Campen, 82 D. 118.

No one can change the purpose for which a subscription was made, without the subscriber's consent. Id.

A subscription was made on condition that a certain sum be subscribed by the citizens of B. One of the subscribers was domiciled in A, but boarded, did business, and spent nearly all his time in B. Held, that he was a citizen of B within the meaning of the subscription. Union Hotel Co. v. Hersee, 35 R. 536.

An engagement to subscribe for the benefit of an association is necessarily a mere proposal, and therefore revocable until the association is formed; until then there is no one to accept the proposal, and it is withdrawn by the death of a subscriber before its acceptance. Phipps v. Jones, 59 D. 708.

The association having been formed, and having contracted for a lot or building in the lifetime of a subscriber, and with his express or implied consent, upon the faith of a subscription made to it before its formation, may recover upon the subscription either from him or his representatives. Id.

A written offer to subscribe to capital stock of a railroad company, provided it shall build along a certain route, is revoked by death of party offering before delivery to and acceptance by company. Wallace v. Townsend, 54 R. 829.

5. Their liabilities. — A voluntary subscription to donate cash or property to the vestry of a church as trustees of the temporal affairs of the church for the erection of a church building, and delivered to one of said vestry, ripens into an enforceable contract as soon as the trustees are permitted to incur legal liabilities and expense upon the faith of it. Hopkins v. Upshur, 70 D. 375.

6. Who may sue for—Right of action.—Where several persons agreed in writing to lend, for the establishment of a newspaper, the sums subscribed by them, the same to be paid to one of their number as agent, such agent may maintain an action against those subscribers who refuse to pay, to reimburse himself for money advanced upon the faith of the subscriptions. Homes v. Dana, 7 D. 55. But one of a number of subscribers to a common object cannot sue another of the number for the latter's proportion of moneys alleged to have been expended by the plaintiff, there appearing no agency for the expenditure of the money, authorized by the subscribers. Basford v. Brown, 38 D. 281.

A promise to pay to a building committee a certain amount of money to build a church, made by one of the committee, may be enforced by the other members of the committee, or their survivors, by an action at law against the promisor. Chambers v. Calhoun, 55 D. 583.

An action at law to enforce a promise to no particular person or set of persons by name may be resorted to as a substitute for a bill, and to prevent a failure of justice where the equity powers have not yet been extended to such a case, although in England such promise could be enforced only by bill in equity. Id.

Other members of the building committee appointed by an unincorporated religious association to superintend the erection of a church may maintain an action to enforce a promise by one of their number to pay a certain amount toward the expenses of the edifice, although they have finished the edifice and have been discharged; for though functi officio, they are still trustees for the recovery of this debt, and it is of no consequence that the congregation has appointed another committee to wait upon the promisor, for they could not transfer this chose in action to another committee so as to enable them to sue in their own names. Id.

A subscription for the purpose of erecting a church building may be assigned by the vestry in payment therefor; and the contractor who undertakes to build the church, and to whom the subscription has been assigned, may sustain an action therefor in his own name. Hopkins v. Upshur, 70 D. 375.

Equity has power to enforce a subscription for charitable purposes by virtue of its general jurisdiction, independent of a statute. Id.

An action may be maintained in his own name by one described as treasurer of an unincorporated association upon a subscription payable to him as such treasurer. The words describing him as treasurer should be treated as surplusage. McDonald v. Gray, 79 D. 509.

Where a valid subscription of funds towards the erection of a bridge, according to certain plans, specifications, etc., and payable on demand, has been made, an action will lie for the recovery of the subscription before the erection of the bridge. Brimhall v. Van Campen, 82 D. 118.

7. Defenses.—Where a subscription of funds towards the erection of a bridge has not been paid, and the bridge has not been built as agreed upon, the failure to perform the contract may be pleaded in defense of an action for the sum subscribed, or in reply to it when offered as an offset. Brimhall v. Van Campen, 82 D. 118.

It is no defense that the sum subscribed exceeded the amount to be raised; but in that case the subscriptions of all should abate pro rata. State Treasurer v. Cross, 31 D. 628.

SUNDAY.

[Includes the validity of contracts, and acts, such as traveling, common labor, etc., made or done on Sunday, and of judicial proceedings taken on that day. The offense of Sabbath-breaking is separately treated; and the effect of the day upon the computation of time is under TIME.]

Bona fide purchase of note made on, see BILLS AND NOTES, 118.

Illegality of contracts made on, see also CONTRACTS, 95.

Liability of carrier to persons travelling on, see CARRIERS, 72.

Rule where last day of grace falls on, see BILLS AND NOTES, 167.

See also SABBATH-BREAKING.

1. Validity of contracts made on Sunday, generally.*—At common law, acts performed on Sunday were valid, unless expressly prohibited; and consequently, contracts made, work and labor done, and even business of one's ordinary calling were not considered by it illegal because performed on that day. Amis v. Kyle, 24 D. 463; Kepner v. Keefer, 31 D. 460; Adams v. Hamell, 43 D. 455.

A contract made on Sunday is void, when a statute forbids it to be made on that day, though it be otherwise lawful. Woodman v. Hubbard, 57 D. 310.

The intention of the statute prohibiting contracts on Sunday is to stop all business on that day, whatever its character, except works of necessity and charity; and that, too, whether done openly or privately. Adams v. Hamell, 43 D. 455.

A contract made on Sunday is void, and cannot be validated by subsequent ratification; but if the terms of a contract are agreed upon on Sunday, and the contract is subsequently executed, it is valid. Butler v. Lee, 46 D. 230. Compare Love v. Wells, 57 D. 375.

A contract executed on Sunday and delivered on a week day is valid, as it is of no binding validity until its delivery. Harris v. Morse, 77 D. 269.

The violation of the Sunday act is contra bonos mores, and will not be sustained by the courts. Brimhall v. Van Campen, 82 D. 118.

A contract for publication of an advertisement in a newspaper to be issued and sold on Sunday is void, under a statute which prohibits all servile labor or work of any kind on that day "excepting works of necessity and charity." Smith v. Wilcox, 82 D. 302. Contra, see Sheffield v. Balmer, 14 R. 430.

Contracts made on Sunday are not unlawful in Rhode Island, unless they are within one's "ordinary calling." Hasard v. Day, 92 D. 790.

A contract which could not be lawfully made on Sunday cannot, if lawfully made, be rescinded on that day. Benedict v. Batchelder, 9 R. 130.

* Validity of Sunday contracts, see notes, 12 D. 292-294; 33 R. 165-167.

An action cannot be maintained to recover money loaned on the Lord's day. Meador v. White, 22 R. 551.

One who lets a horse and wagon on Sunday in violation of law, to be driven to a particular place, cannot maintain an action of trover against the hirer for driving them to another place and thereby injuring them. Smith v. Rollins, 23 R. 509. S. P., Parker v. Latner, 11 R. 210. Contra, Hall v. Corcoran, 9 R. 30. And see Frost v. Plumb, 16 R. 18.

One who hires a horse on Sunday for use in business or pleasure on that day is liable for an injury occurring to the horse in such use through his misconduct or negligence, although the contract of hiring is void. Stewart v. Davis, 25 R. 576.

A church subscription made on Sunday is void, and is not made valid by a subsequent oral acknowledgment and promise to pay it, without consideration. Caillett v. Trustees M. E. Church, 30 R. 197. Contra, see Allen v. Duffie, 38 R. 159; Dale v. Knepp, 42 R. 624.

A contract made on Sunday to telegraph the words, "Come up in morning; bring all," is void, and a breach of it will not warrant a recovery of the statutory penalty for failure to transmit. Rogers v. Western U. Tel. Co., 41 R. 553.

No action lies for fraudulent representations inducing to a contract made on Sunday, although the representations were criminal. Gunderson v. Richardson, 41 R. 81.

A contract is not void because made on Sunday, within a statute prohibiting "labor" that "disturbs the peace and good order of society." Richmond v. Moore, 47 R. 445.

2. Negotiable instruments.—At common law, the giving of a bill on Sunday was not prohibited, and was therefore not void on that account. Kepner v. Keefer, 31 D. 460.

Under the statute a note or bill executed on Sunday is void. Kepner v. Keefer, 31 D. 460; Adams v. Hamell, 43 D. 455; Brimhall v. Van Campen, 82 D. 118.

A promissory note given on Sunday, in consideration for the purchase price of a horse, is void. O'Donnell v. Sweeney, 39 D. 336. And no subsequent acts of the parties can ratify it. Allen v. Deming, 40 D. 179.

A promissory note, written and signed but not delivered on Sunday, will not be void for what passed on Sunday. Lovejoy v. Whipple, 46 D. 157; King v. Fleming, 22 R. 131.

A promissory note executed on Sunday is void, even though the parties thereto have previously settled the terms of the contract, and meet on Sunday by appointment, merely to execute the note. Lovejoy v. Whipple, 46 D. 157.

Where the consideration of a note executed on Sunday is a contract entered into on the day previous, the plaintiff, to be entitled to recover, must sue upon the contract, and not upon the note. Kepner v. Keeser, 31 D. 460.

A note executed upon Sunday is not per se any evidence that there was a contract made on the day previous, and without other evidence it is error to submit that fact to the determination of the jury. Ib.

Giving a promissory note is secular business, and within the purview of a statute prohibiting such business on Sunday. Allen v. Deming, 40 D. 179.

The indorsee of a promissory note void because made on Sunday can maintain no action upon it. Whether an action could be maintained if the indorsee had no knowledge of its invalidity, quære. Ib.

Where a note was made and delivered in the purchase of a mining privilege at Pike's Peak, in Kansas, on the sabbath day, and suit thereon is brought in the courts of Georgia, and there is no evidence of the lex loci contractus produced on the trial, the presumption of law is, that the law of the place where the note was made is the same as our own; especially will such presumption be made where a contrary presumption would be unjust to the Christian civilization of the age, and in violation of the Decalogue. Hill v. Wilker, 5 R. 540.

As the laws of Georgia forbid, under penalties, any violation of the Lord's day by the transaction of any business, trade, or calling, a note made upon the sabbath day, in pursuance of trade or business, will not be enforced by the courts of this state, under the laws of this state, as such contract is void. Ib.

A promissory note bearing the date of a secular day is valid in the hands of a bona fide holder for value although in fact made and delivered on the Lord's day, and therefore invalid as between the original parties. Oranson v. Goss, 9 R. 45; Knaw v. Clifford, 20 R. 28.

The fact that an indorsement of part payment made on a promissory note bore date upon a day of the month which was Sunday, joined with evidence that it was made at the time of the payment and in the presence of both parties and assented to by them, will warrant a jury in finding that the payment was made on that day. Olapp v. Hale, 17 R. 111.

The execution of a note by an accommodation surety on Sunday is void, although the note is dated on a week day, and is delivered by the principal to an innocent payee on a week day; and a request by the surety to forbear suit, and his notifying the payee of property of the principal to which he might resort, do not amount to a ratification. Parker v. Pitts, 38 R. 155.

The note in suit was executed on Sunday to the plaintiff, who was traveling, and wished to pursue his journey on that day. He had been at the place of its execution for two days, and no reason was shown for its not having been executed before. Held, not a "case of necessity" which would render the contract valid. Burns v. Moore, 52 R. 332.

3. Sealed instruments. — A deed made on Sunday is void. Love v. Wells, 87 D. 375.

A deed takes effect from the time of its delivery, and though signed and acknowledged on Sunday, if delivered on another day it is a valid deed, whatever may be the effect upon the acknowledgment. Ib.

One whose deed is executed on Sunday, but which by procurement of grantor is dated upon the preceding day, cannot assert the invalidity of the deed against a subsequent bona fide purchaser. Ib.

A bond executed on Sunday, but dated and made to take effect on a week day, is valid in the hands of an innocent obligee. Hall v. Parker, 26 R. 540.

An official bond signed and delivered on Sunday by a surety to the principal, and delivered by the principal to the proper custodian on a secular day, binds the surety. City of Evansville v. Morris, 44 R. 763.

A mortgage executed on Sunday is not void either at common law or under a statutory prohibition of the exercise on that day of acts in the "ordinary calling" of the citizen. Hellams v. Abercrombie, 40 R. 684.

4. Sales and transfers of real property. — It is not within one's "ordinary calling," within the meaning of the Rhode Island statute prohibiting every one from doing "any labor or business or work of his ordinary calling" on Sunday, to purchase a dwelling-house for the personal occupation of himself and family, signing a contract therefor, and making and delivering a check in part payment. Harvard v. Day, 92 D. 790.

5. — of personal property. — A sale consummated on the sabbath is void, and an action of warranty in such sale will not lie. Finley v. Quirk, 86 D. 93.

An executed contract of sale, although made on Sunday, is not void, either between the parties thereto or third persons. Moore v. Kendall, 52 D. 145.

A tender of chattels on Sunday, in performance of a contract, is legal both at the common law and under a statute prohibiting labor in "one's ordinary calling"; and therefore where the day of performance falls on Sunday, a tender on the next day is too late. Amis v. Kyle, 24 D. 463.

An action for deceit practiced on an exchange of horses on Sunday, made in violation of law, cannot be maintained. Robeson v. French, 45 D. 236.

A demand made on Sunday for delivery of wheat under a contract is a nullity, and cannot be validated by any act of the party upon whom it was made. Brackett v. Edgerton, 100 D. 211.

It is not a bar to an action on an account stated that the indebtedness was for liquor sold on Sunday, contrary to law, provided the account was not stated on Sunday. McChoir v. McCarty, 11 R. 606.

If goods are sold and delivered to A and B on the Lord's day, the sale being induced by the false representations of A on a previous day, and subsequently, not on the Lord's day, the seller demands the price of A, and he promises to pay it, this amounts to a sale to him, and he is liable for the price. Winchell v. Carey, 15 R. 151.

Although a contract of sale on Sunday is void, yet the seller cannot recover the chattels sold nor damages for their value. Otherwise if he had been intoxicated by the purchaser for the purpose of defrauding him. Block v. McMurtry, 31 R. 357.

The purchaser of property delivered to him without payment, under a contract made on Sunday, may maintain replevin for it if the seller retakes it without his consent, without paying or offering to pay. Kinney v. McDermot, 39 R. 191.

Replevin lies for a horse sold and delivered on Sunday, although the contract was ratified on a week day. Winfield v. Dodge, 40 R. 476.

A and B made a trade on the Lord's day, whereby A sold B a set of jewelry, and B gave in exchange a coat. A few days after, B returned the jewelry and demanded the coat, and on refusal, brought action to recover its value. Held, that the transaction, being on the Lord's day, was illegal, and that the plaintiff could not recover. Myers v. Meinrath, 3 R. 368.

To an action on an account annexed for the purchase price of pigs, the answer set up a breach of warranty and that the contract was made on the Lord's day. The defendant's evidence tended to prove that the sale was completed on that day, and the pigs selected and marked, and that they were delivered on Monday, in pursuance of the contract. The plaintiff's evidence was, that he refused to sell them on Sunday, but did name his price. The pigs were delivered on Monday, but no price was then named, nor does it appear that anything was said about the terms of payment. The judge instructed the jury that, laying out of the case all that transpired on Sunday, if they were satisfied from the delivery and acceptance of the pigs on Monday that a sale was made on that day, then the plaintiff could recover their actual market value at the time of the sale, without reference to the price named on Sunday or the warranty then given. Held, that the case was properly submitted to the jury under these instructions. Bradley v. Rea, 4 R. 524.

On Sunday two parties agreed on the terms of sale of a yoke of oxen, subject to the purchaser's inspection of the oxen and satisfaction with them. The next day the purchaser inspected the oxen, approved, and took them, and left a part of the price at the vendor's house. Held, a valid sale. Moseley v. Vanhooker, 40 R. 37.

6. Traveling on Sunday.* — 1. General rules. — A person injured while traveling on the Lord's day, by a defect in a highway, must, in an action for damages, prove that he was traveling from necessity or for purposes of charity. Bosworth v. Swansey, 43 D. 441. S. P., Cratty v. City of Bangor, 2 R. 56; Johnson v. Town of Irasburgh, 19 R. 111. Contra, see Platt v. City of Cohoes, 42 R. 286.

A person may travel on Sunday and maintain an action for damages caused by the insufficiency of the highway, provided that he wrought no disturbance to others by such traveling. Dutton v. Wearre, 43 D. 590.

Where a statute forbids traveling on Sunday, "except from necessity or charity," a necessity to render traveling lawful must actually exist; an honest belief that it is necessary is not sufficient. Johnson v. Town of Irasburgh, 19 R. 111.

One who travels from one town to another on the Lord's day, for the sole purpose of visiting a friend whom he knows to be sick, and thinks may be in need of assistance, and of rendering such assistance as on inquiry he might find to be necessary, is traveling from charity; and in an action against a railroad corporation for injuries sustained while a passenger on that day, on putting in evidence that he was traveling for the purpose above stated, he is entitled to go to the jury on the question whether he was traveling lawfully or not, although he offers no evidence of the ground of his belief that his friend was in need of assistance. Doyle v. Lynn etc. R. R. Co., 19 R. 431.

One who works by night instead of by day, and who travels on the Lord's day for the purpose of seeing his master and inducing him to change his hours of labor from the night to the day time, in order that he may sleep better, is not traveling from necessity or charity, and cannot maintain an action against a town for an injury sustained by him while so traveling, by reason of a defect in a highway which the town is by law obliged to keep in repair. Connolly v. Boston, 19 R. 396.

One who travels on the Lord's day to ascertain whether a house which he has hired, and into which he intends to move the next day, has been cleaned, is not traveling from necessity or charity, and cannot maintain an action for injuries sustained at a railroad crossing, through the negligence of the servants of the railroad corporation. Smith v. Boston & M. R. R. Co., 21 R. 538.

An action will not lie against a carrier for breach of its general duty in failing to carry passengers on Sunday. Walsh v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 24 R. 376.

One who is injured by a defect in a highway, on his return from a funeral, on Sunday, having diverged from his ordinary route to make a social call, is remediless. Davis v. Somerville, 35 R. 399.

One whose property is injured by the assault of a dog is not defeated in his action for damages against the owner by the fact that the plaintiff was unlawfully traveling on Sunday at the time. White v. Lang, 35 R. 402; Schmid v. Humphrey, 30 R. 414.

If the vessel of one while sailing for pleasure on Sunday is injured by a collision with another vessel, produced by the negligence of those in charge of the latter, he cannot recover against the owner; but he may recover if the act was wanton and malicious and within the scope of their employment. Wallace v. Merrimack River etc. Exp. Co., 45 R. 301.

A conductor of a street-railway car performing his ordinary duties on Sunday is both "laboring" and "traveling," and can maintain no action for an injury by collision with a car of another company while so employed. Day v. Highland Street R'y Co., 46 R. 447.

2. Illustrations. — Plaintiff was traveling from A. to L., a distance of eight miles, on Sunday, to visit his two boys, when he was injured by insufficiency in the highway. In an action against the town, — held, that a recovery would not be defeated by a statute prohibiting travel on Sunday, except for attendance at places of moral instruction and from necessity. McClary v. Lowell, 8 R. 366.

Plaintiff was injured on defendant's road while returning, on Sunday, from a Spiritualist camp-meeting. Held, that it was for the jury to say whether the meeting was of a religious character, and whether the plaintiff attended it for the purpose of divine worship and religious instruction, so as to bring him within the exception of the act prohibiting traveling on Sunday. Feital v. Middlesex R. R. Co., 12 R. 720.

A person walked about a mile in a town on Sunday, for exercise. Held, not a traveler in such a sense as to bar her recovery against the town for injuries suffered during such walk from a defect in the highway. O'Connell v. City of Lewiston, 20 R. 673.

Where one walking on the Lord's day for exercise went into a beer-shop and drank a glass of beer, and on resuming his walk was injured solely by a defect in the highway, — held, that he might recover. Davidson v. City of Portland, 31 R. 253.

A, carefully driving on Sunday on a highway in Massachusetts, was injured by the reckless driving of B. Held, that A could maintain an action therefor against B in Rhode Island, without showing that he was traveling for necessity or charity. Baldwin v. Barney, 34 R. 670.

A traveling insurance agent being solicited by letter from his sick sister, temporarily residing in another state, to meet her and carry her home, wrote her to make other arrangements if possible, and inform him by letter addressed to him at B. He expected to reach B. on a Saturday evening, but missing connections, failed to do so, and took a Sunday train on defendant's road a fortnight later, to reach B. and get the expected letter. Receiving personal injuries on that train by the defendant's alleged negligence, he brought this action. Held, not maintainable. Bucher v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 41 R. 216.

7. Effect of the day on judicial proceedings, generally. — Sunday is dies non juridicus by a canon of the church incorporated into the common law, and judicial acts cannot be done on that day, though other acts may be, unless prohibited by statute. Story v. Elliot, 18 D. 423.

Making an award is a judicial act, and if done on Sunday, is void. Id.

If an order made by a judge in vacation bears date on Sunday, it is for that reason void. Coleman v. Henderson, 12 D. 290.

A foreclosure sale on Sunday is not a judicial proceeding, and therefore is not void unless prohibited by statute. Sayles v. Smith, 27 D. 117.

Even though such a sale would be void, the notice of it would not necessarily be void, and the creditor may postpone the sale. Id.

A court of equity may lawfully issue an injunction on Sunday where necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property. Langabier v. Fairbury etc. R. R. Co., 16 R. 550.

An undertaking of bail for murder, entered into on Sunday during vacation, is a case of necessity, and valid. Hammons v. State, 31 R. 13.

A criminal judgment of a justice of the peace rendered on Sunday is void. Ex parte White, 37 R. 466.

8. — on service of process, notices, etc. — Process in a civil suit can neither be executed nor issued on a Sunday. Accordingly, where a prisoner went beyond the liberties on a Sunday, and the plaintiff, before he returned, on the same day filled up a capias against the sheriff in an action for the escape, and delivered it to the coroner,

* What judicial acts may lawfully be done upon Sunday, see note, 12 D. 290, 291.

—held, not to be such a commencement of a suit as would prevent his pleading a voluntary return before suit brought. Van Vechten v. Paddock, 7 D. 303.

That the original writ issued on Sunday is a good plea in abatement, see Haynes v. Sledge, 27 D. 606.

A replication to such plea may show facts making of the case an exception to the general rule avoiding such process, and it seems that the circumstances which by statute excuse the service of process on Sunday also authorize its issuance on that day. Id.

The levy of an execution on Sunday is void, and the subsequent sale of the property by virtue thereof is therefore also void. Peirce v. Hill, 33 D. 306.

The giving of notice of an award on Sunday is valid, for it is not an act of common labor, nor a judicial act, but is simply a ministerial act in connection with a judicial proceeding, and is not specially prohibited by any statute. Kiper v. Coate, 81 D. 351.

The publication of a sheriff's notice of sale in a Sunday newspaper is invalid. Shaw v. Williams, 44 R. 756.

9. Holding court on Sunday. — In a time of peace and order it is illegal to hold a court of criminal inquiry on Sunday, but bail may lawfully be taken on that day. Weldon v. Colquitt, 35 R. 128.

10. Reception of verdict on Sunday. — A verdict received and judgment rendered on Sunday are utterly void. Davis v. Fish, 48 D. 387.

A cause having been submitted to a jury late on Saturday night, and the jury having agreed on a verdict on the next day, Sunday, it is lawful for the court to receive it on that day, and adjourn the court until the next day. Reid v. State, 25 R. 627.

A judgment entered on Sunday is absolutely void, but it seems a verdict may be received and entered on that day. Shearman v. State, 28 R. 402.

11. Duty to abstain from labor on Sunday.* — The statute of 1741, chapter 14, section 2, of Tennessee, prohibits work and labor of one's ordinary calling from being performed on Sunday, but does not extend to all kinds of labor indiscriminately. Amis v. Kyle, 24 D. 463.

Penalties for carelessness and for Sabbath-breaking are totally distinct, and the laws out of which they arise are distinct in all their purposes and features. Mohney v. Cook, 67 D. 419.

The law relating to the Sabbath defines the duty of the citizen to the state, and to the state only. One offender against the law, to the injury of another, will not be allowed to set off against the plaintiff that he too is a public offender. Id.

That a person was on Sunday unlawfully engaged in a worldly employment does not prevent him from recovering damages against one who obstructs a navigable stream. Id.

It is within a real estate broker's "ordinary calling," within the meaning of the Rhode Island statute prohibiting every one from doing "any labor or business or work of his ordinary calling" on Sunday, to carry out the special instructions of his principal in relation to the property which he is employed to sell, as it is to do whatever is embraced in the general authority arising out of his employment as a broker. Hazard v. Day, 92 D. 790.

When parties enter into a contract to be performed on Sunday by common labor, the contract, as to performance on Sunday, is illegal and void. Pate v. Wright, 95 D. 705.

Delivery of flour on board a steamboat on Sunday, in order to avoid liability of delay in getting it to market, occasioned by danger of the closing of navigation, is not a work of necessity. Id.

Plaintiff was driving his cattle to market on a Sunday, when they were injured by the breaking down of defendant's bridge. At the trial, the court granted a nonsuit, on the ground that when the injury occurred plaintiff was violating the statute prohibiting the doing of secular work on Sunday. Held, error. Sutton v. Town of Wauwatosa, 9 R. 534.

The plaintiff sustained personal damage from the negligence of the defendants while assisting them in their work on the Lord's day; in an action to recover for such damage, — held, that the plaintiff's illegal act in working upon the Lord's day was so inseparably connected with the cause of action as to prevent his maintaining the suit. McGrath v. Merwin, 17 R. 119.

The clearing out of a wheel-pit on the Lord's day, for the purpose of preventing the stoppage, on a week day, of mills which employed many hands, is not a work of necessity or charity. Id.

The plaintiff, gratuitously and as a matter of kindness, assisted the defendants in clearing out a wheel-pit on the Lord's day, for the purpose of preventing the stoppage, on a week day, of the defendants' mills. In an action for personal damage caused by the defendants' negligence, — held, that the fact that the plaintiff worked gratuitously and as a matter of kindness did not make his work a work of charity. Id.

Lending money to be repaid on demand is "business," within the meaning of the statute prohibiting "labor, business, or work, except only works of necessity or charity," on Sunday, and such an agreement is presumptively void, although the money is retained and used, without any offer to return it. Treacert v. Decker, 37 R. 808.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Procuring signatures of tax-payers to a petition to a board of supervisors to issue railroad aid bonds is "business," and if done on Sunday confers no authority to issue the bonds. De Forth v. Wisconsin etc. R. R. Co., 33 R. 737.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF THE PARTIES.

1. Of the Surety.
2. Of Co-sureties.
3. Of the Creditor.

III. WHAT WILL EXONERATE THE SURETY.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Who are to be deemed sureties.*

— "Surety" is generally used in a limited sense, to designate one who enters into a contract with another, as principal, either jointly or jointly and severally, and at the same time, and who in all cases may be sued jointly with the principal without demand or notice. Read v. Cutts, 22 D. 184.

The party who receives the benefit from the contract, and makes the payments and all arrangements in reference to it, is the principal. Smith v. Tunno, 16 D. 617.

The parties to an instrument given as collateral security are not subject to the law of sureties. New Orleans v. Ripley, 25 D. 175.

Judgment on a forthcoming bond does not destroy the relation of principal and surety, existing between the parties to the bond. Newell v. Hamer, 35 D. 415.

The relation of principal and surety continues after judgment for the original debt, together with all the rights incident to that relation. Bangs v. Strong, 42 D. 64. S. P., Owens v. Colbert, 46 D. 427.

In a contract executed by two, the fact that one was principal and the other surety may be proved by any competent evidences, and it is not necessary that it should so appear by the contract. Carpenter v. King, 43 D. 405.

* Apparent principal, when may show himself to be a surety, see note, 17 D. 116-119.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

In an action on a judgment, one of two defendants may, by evidence alibanda, show that he signed the obligation on which the judgment was rendered, as surety for the other judgment debtor. Id.

Whether an obligation assumed by a party is that of guarantor or surety is to be determined by the intent of the parties, as collected from the language of the instrument and the circumstances attending its execution. Marberger v. Pott, 55 D. 479.

One who acknowledges himself to be security for the amount of a note until satisfactorily paid by the maker assumes the liability of a surety, and his obligation is unqualified by the condition of a guaranty. Id.

The word "security" indicates an obligation to stand for the sum absolutely, unless discharged by the supine negligence of the obligor, after notice; while the word "guaranty" imports a conditional liability, if due steps are taken against the principal. Id.

Where a party does not appear on the instrument to have made himself liable as surety, he cannot, at law, avail himself of the equities between himself and the other parties to the instrument, unless he was accepted by the creditor as a surety, or known by him to be such, or has been discharged from the first contract by agreement of the creditor. Yates v. Donaldson, 61 D. 283; Springer v. Toothaker, 69 D. 66; Goodman v. Litaker, 37 R. 602.

The relation of parties as principal and surety may be shown, even as against the payee or obligee, for the purpose of letting in any act of the latter tending to affect the collateral relations of the makers or obligors, and even when the instrument is joint and several, and wholly silent as to which is the surety. Dickerson v. Ripley County, 63 D. 373.

A party contracting jointly with another is a principal debtor as between himself and the creditor, though he may be merely a surety for his co-debtor. Dane v. Corduan, 85 D. 53.

A, B, and C executed to the plaintiff, a bank, a joint and several bond, in the penalty of fifteen thousand dollars, with a condition reciting that A had become a member of a certain firm, rendering it probably necessary for him to use more funds in the business than he had at command, and which he proposed to borrow, and then proceeding thus: "Now, the foregoing bond is to be in force, and binding upon us, according to its terms, for the full amount of any loans and advances the said bank may make to said A, in connection with his said business, not to exceed in amount fifteen thousand dollars, for which sum, by the foregoing bond, we acknowledge ourselves his sureties, and in case of his failure to pay any such loans or advances as aforesaid, that the same shall and may be collected of us. Unless such loans and advances are made to said A in his business aforesaid, upon the faith of this bond, the same is null and void," etc. The plaintiff alleged that on the faith of this bond, and for the purpose therein specified, it loaned A a sum of money on the checks of two other parties indorsed by A, and that these checks were protested for non-payment. Held, 1. That the bond was not an overture to guaranty by the sureties, but an actual undertaking; 2. That B and C were sureties, not guarantors, and, therefore, not entitled to notice of loans made on the credit of the bond, and of the default of the principal debtor. McMillan v. Bull's Head Bank, 2 R. 323.

2. Nature of their undertaking, generally. — The contract of suretyship is accessory to the obligation contracted by another, and it is of the essence of the contract that there be a subsisting valid obligation of a principal debtor. Russell v. Faylor, 59 D. 631.

Breach of an agreement to become a surety for the performance of a future contract may be recovered on. Mann v. McDowell, 45 D. 649.

Persons of ordinary intelligence are presumed to know the liabilities of a surety, and that they constitute a charge upon his property. Hartley v. Frosh, 55 D. 772.

The liability of sureties of a deputy is continuous with that of their principal; their undertaking is to make good the official defaults of their principal. Wallace v. Holly, 58 D. 518.

The surety is bound, though the principal is not, where the matter of defense in the hands of the principal is altogether of a personal character; such as infancy or coverture. In such a case the surety stands, in a certain sense, a principal promisor. St. Albans Bank v. Dillon, 73 D. 295.

Where a surety undertakes that the principal shall do a specific act, as that he will pay a judgment, the judgment against the principal is conclusive against the surety. No notice to the surety is required, as he stipulated without regard to it. Pico v. Webster, 73 D. 647.

The contract of suretyship imports entire good faith and confidence between the parties in regard to the whole transaction. Bradley v. Keesee, 94 D. 246. Any concealment of or express or implied misrepresentation of material facts, or any undue advantage taken of the surety by the creditor, either by surprise or withholding proper information, will invalidate the contract, and the creditor is, in all subsequent transactions with the debtor, bound to equal good faith to the surety. If he does any act injurious to the surety, or inconsistent with his rights, the latter is discharged. Johnson v. Ivey, 94 D. 206.

The contract of a surety is in the nature of a collateral engagement to pay the debt of another as distinguished from an original and direct agreement for the party's own act, and is in the nature of an accessory to a principal obligation. Ib.

The surety is bound with his principal as an original guarantor, and his obligation to pay is equally absolute, irrespective of any notice of the principal's default, while a guarantor is an individual contractor, to answer only for the consequences of the default of the principal, and is therefore entitled to notice of such default. McMillan v. Bull's Head Bank, 2 R. 323.

3. Validity of the contract of suretyship. — A parol promise made by one as surety or guarantor is not binding, unless it is made upon some new consideration, and any expectation of profit or hope of benefit from the sale of goods by the promisee to the person for whom he becomes surety or guarantor is not a sufficient consideration for such promise. Doyle v. White, 45 D. 110; Taylor v. Drake, 53 D. 680.

A surety on an obligation void for coverture is liable. Hicks v. Randolph, 27 R. 760.

A surety is not bound by any official bond conditioned to be, but not, signed by the principal. Bunn v. Jetmore, 35 R. 425.

Defendant signed a non-negotiable promissory note as surety, upon the express condition that a certain other person should sign as co-surety. The signature of the latter was not obtained. Held, that defendant was not liable to a holder in good faith and without notice. Ayers v. Milroy, 14 R. 465.

4. And how construed. — The undertaking of a surety is to receive a strict interpretation, and is not to be extended beyond the fair scope of its terms. Blair v. Perpetual Ins. Co., 47 D. 129; Strawbridge v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 74 D. 541; Pickering v. Day, 95 D. 291; and incidents and intentions not necessarily deducible from the language employed are never indulged. Lepcomb v. Postell, 77 D. 651.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF THE PARTIES.

1. Of the Surety.

5. Liability to third persons, generally. — Sureties on a joint bond of two persons as administrators are not liable to one of the administrators for property of the estate converted by the other. Slaughter v. Froman, 17 D. 33.

A surety for the fidelity of one as agent for a corporation is only liable for such acts as the corporation, by its charter, might lawfully require its agent to perform. Blair v. Perpetual Ins. Co., 47 D. 129.

Sureties are bound by a judgment against the principal, although they had no notice of suit, where, by the express terms of their agreement, or by reasonable implication from the very nature and intent of their obligation, they have stipulated to pay the damages and costs which may be recovered against their principal, or otherwise to abide the decree or judgment of a court against him. Chamberlain v. Godfrey, 84 D. 690.

A surety on the bond of a re-elected county treasurer is liable only for default during the term for which the bond was given. Van Sickle v. County of Buffalo, 42 R. 753.

The bond of a bank messenger bound him to "account for and pay over all moneys that may come into or pass through his hands as such messenger, and that he shall in all things conduct himself honestly and faithfully as such messenger." The bank intrusted him with the keys of the vault and the combination of the safe. He stole moneys of the bank from the safe and vault by means of the keys and his knowledge of the combination. Held, that the sureties on the bond were liable therefor. German-Amer. Bank v. Auth, 30 R. 374.

6. What may be set up in defense. — Sureties may plead anything which their principal might plead in his denial of liability on the bond. Wallace v. Holly, 58 D. 518.

A surety has the same defenses at law, when sued alone, as he would have in equity. Baker v. Briggs, 19 D. 311; Springer v. Toothaker, 69 D. 66.

Where a surety on a bond pays the creditor the amount of a judgment recovered against the debtor, the bail of the principal may plead such payment in bar to an action against him by the creditor. Creager v. Brengle, 9 D. 516.

A surety on an office bond will not be liable if the names put upon the bond before his own are forgeries. Seely v. People, 81 D. 224.

A surety on the bond of a re-elected county treasurer is not estopped from contesting the correctness of the principal's voluntary official reports as to the amount of money in his hands at the commencement of the term. Van Sickle v. County of Buffalo, 42 R. 753.

It is no defense to a surety for a corporation that the obligation of the latter is beyond its powers; his liability remains notwithstanding, if default is made by his principal. Gist v. Drakely, 41 D. 426.

A surety, in an action against him alone on a bond for faithful performance, cannot offset or recoup a claim of the principal against the plaintiff for services in the business in which the bond was given. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. v. Bitner, 36 R. 820.

7. Right of surety to equitable relief. — A surety, when the debt becomes due, may come into a court of equity to compel the creditor to sue for and collect the debt of the principal. King v. Baldwin, 8 D. 415.

* Cases in which surety is or may be, bound, although principal is not, see note, 73 D. 297-299.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A surety may, in equity, compel his principal to discharge the debt. Pride v. Boyce, 33 D. 78. Persons who agree to save harmless the maker of a promissory note are principals with respect to the maker, and within the application of the above rule. Bishop v. Day, 37 D. 582.

A surety on a joint and several bond may, in equity, compel the personal representative of his principal to discharge the debt in advance of simple contract debts, and on an equality with the specialty debts of the estate; but if he himself pays the bond, his claim against the estate will be merely that of a simple contract creditor. Pride v. Boyce, 33 D. 78.

Equity will infer that a bond was made joint by mistake if it is given for a pre-existing liability of one of the parties, the other party being merely a surety, and will treat it as if joint and several, in favor of the surety. Ib.

Where a defendant at law, being surety for his co-defendant, set up in his defense that the plaintiff, though urged by the surety to prosecute and collect the money from the principal debtor, had refused to do so, and delayed until the principal became insolvent, which defense was overruled, the surety may, notwithstanding, seek relief in equity on the same ground as that set up by him at law. King v. Baldwin, 8 D. 415.

A surety for whose indemnity a trust deed has been given is entitled to the aid of equity to prevent the payment of the proceeds of the sale of the trust property under execution until his liability as surety is ascertained, and is discharged out of such proceeds. Marshall v. Colvert, 27 D. 589.

Money paid by a surety upon a judgment at law against him may be recovered in equity, when, by reason of the neglect of the creditor in releasing an execution against the principal debtor, the liability of the surety is, in effect, extinguished. Cooper v. Wilcox, 32 D. 695.

Chancery will entertain a suit by a surety to reach credits of the principal, and apply them to the payment of a judgment obtained against them jointly, where the principal is insolvent, although the surety has not paid the judgment. McConnell v. Scott, 45 D. 583.

A surety of a purchaser cannot obtain relief against his obligation on the ground of fraud in the sale, unless it appear that his principal and the vendor have combined to defraud him. Brown v. Wright, 18 D. 190.

8. Right to indemnity. — Upon a bond of indemnity, the obligee is not obliged to wait until he is compelled to discharge the debt; he may bring an action the moment the first breach happens in failing to perform the condition of the bond. Ramsay v. Gervais, 1 D. 635.

Indemnity taken by one surety cannot be reached by his co-sureties to his prejudice, unless it was taken for their benefit, or in fraud of their rights. Moore v. Moore, 15 D. 523.*

Rent of property conveyed as security to indemnify the grantee against liability as surety for the grantor constitutes a part of the security, and cannot be recovered by the grantor until the liability is discharged. Sellick v. Munson, 16 D. 689.

The surety's lien on such rent is not extinguished, but rather confirmed, by an agreement that moneys in his hands due the plaintiff are to be applied on the debts for which he is surety. Ib.

The undertaking of a principal to pay his surety the amount of the demand for which he stands liable, whenever he is called upon for payment by the creditor, or whenever he should have reason to doubt his principal's ability to ultimately save him harmless, is valid, and may be enforced upon either of these contingencies arising, though at the time the surety has paid the creditor no part of the debt. Fletcher v. Edison, 30 D. 470.

Where one for whom another is surety procures a third person to sign a promise of indemnity to such surety, and there is no new consideration for such promise, and it is not made in pursuance of any contract entered into at the time of the original contract, the promise to indemnify is void for want of consideration. Rizz v. Adams, 31 D. 619.

A promise to remain surety for another for an indefinite time is not sufficient consideration for a promise to indemnify such surety. Ib.

A mortgage given to indemnify one surety, after an adjustment of the loss between them, cannot be construed to be a mortgage given to indemnify two. Hall v. Cushman, 43 D. 562.

Where a mortgage is given to indemnify one surety, he has no cause of action or anything to assign until he has been damnified, when he may recover to that extent. Ib.

A party has an adequate remedy at law, where he has been induced to become a surety on an administration bond by the parol promise of the defendant to indemnify him against loss; and in such a case equity will not entertain jurisdiction to relieve him from the loss he may have sustained. Jones v. Shorter, 44 D. 649.

One of several sureties of a trustee on his bond to secure the beneficiaries cannot maintain a bill to compel him to substitute solvent sureties for those who have become insolvent, or give counter-security, on pain of removal. Ridgeway v. Potter, 55 R. 875.

9. Right to be reimbursed by principal, generally. — A surety having satisfied a judgment which his principal was legally bound to pay is entitled to recover

* Right of surety to indemnity held by co-surety, see note, 43 D. 563-565.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Judgment against him. Pike v. McDonald, 64 D. 597.

A surety may maintain an action against his principal for money paid, where the surety has paid a debt on default of his principal; and this on the ground that defendant's assent is implied in all cases where the plaintiff is under a legal obligation to pay the money through the default of another. Snider v. Greathouse, 63 D. 54.

A surety cannot maintain indebitatus assumpsit against his principal before payment; but a bill of exchange or a negotiable note given and received in satisfaction will support the count for money paid. Miller v. Howry, 24 D. 320; Neale v. Newland, 38 D. 42.

Where a surety holds a counter-bond in the amount of the sum secured, given in consideration of his liability, he may sue thereon before payment. Miller v. Howry, 24 D. 320.

Sureties of a guardian are entitled, in equity, to be relieved from their suretyship, or secured against loss, before payment of their principal's debt. Howell v. Cobb, 68 D. 591.

Under the Tennessee code, a surety has a right of action against the principal before the debt is due, but no final decree shall be made until the debt is due; or if the principal will secure or indemnify the surety, the attachment may be discharged. Id.

10. Scope and extent of the right. — A surety is entitled to recover from his principal for money paid by the surety on behalf of the principal on a usurious contract made by the principal, and although the latter might have avoided such contract. Ford v. Keith, 2 D. 4; Jackson v. Jackson, 31 R. 688.

A surety who has been obliged to pay his principal's debt is entitled to an immediate action against him for his indemnity, without giving him any previous notice of such payment. Ward v. Henry, 13 D. 119.

A general count in indebitatus assumpsit for money paid, laid out, and expended is proper in all cases where a surety has been obliged to pay the principal's debt. Id.

As between a surety who has paid a judgment against his principal, and a subsequent judgment creditor of the principal, the former has preference. Fleming v. Beaver, 19 D. 629.

The surety of a purchaser of land at a sale on a specified credit under a decree in chancery, the title being retained until the purchase-money should be paid, may charge the land for the payment of the sum for which he is liable, in the hands of an assignee of the purchaser who took it in good faith, without notice; nor is the title of the assignee benefited by the fact that he had afterwards bought in the same land at a sale under execution against his assignor, paying a valuable consideration therefor. Poll v. Gallant, 34 D. 410.

Actual payment need not be made by a surety, to enable him to sustain an action. Id.

Where a surety has paid money for his principal, the chancellor has original jurisdiction to decree the repayment thereof; and where there is no personal estate, he may, without any judgment at law, set aside a fraudulent conveyance, and subject real property to such repayment. Partlow v. Lane, 39 D. 473. S. P., Godbold v. Lambert, 70 D. 192.

Where a mere surety for another is compelled to pay a debt, which the latter in equity and justice ought to have paid, he is entitled to relief against him who was in fact the principal debtor, whether he became such surety by actual contract or by operation of law. Hunt v. Amidon, 40 D. 283.

Where a surety on a bond discharges the obligation of himself and principal by giving his own negotiable note, which the obligee accepts in full satisfaction, he may maintain an action against his principal for the amount of such note before he pays it; but where he has discharged the obligation by giving a bond or other non-negotiable security, he can recover only the amount actually paid by him since giving the security. Bouthorse v. Robinson, 58 D. 117.

A surety who has paid the debt of his principal may, in equity, enjoin an execution on a judgment against him in favor of said principal, to the extent of the amount so paid as surety, although the money was not paid until after the commencement of the action in which the judgment was rendered, and consequently would not have been good as a set-off at law, if it appears that the principal has removed from the state, leaving no property. Brittain v. Quiet, 62 D. 202.

Several heirs of a deceased surety can maintain a joint action against the principal debtor for money paid by them in satisfaction of a joint judgment rendered against such heirs. Snider v. Greathouse, 63 D. 54.

A surety secured by a collateral mortgage may foreclose it before paying the debt of the principal, and for the whole amount of his liability, although the creditor has obtained judgment for less. Hellams v. Abercrombie, 40 R. 684.

11. Its limits and exceptions. — A surety cannot have a right of action on a general promise of indemnity until he has been compelled to pay the debt for which he is bound. Brentnal v. Helms, 1 D. 44.

Where a surety on a note takes up the same, his right of action accrues when the note is paid. Conn v. Coburn, 26 D. 746.

A surety on an appeal bond who has been compelled to pay the judgment can recover interest on the amount of the original judgment, but not on the damages and costs of appeal. McClung v. Beirne, 34 D. 739.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A surety paying the debt with his own non-negotiable note cannot recover against the principal in an action for money paid, where he has not paid his note. Pitzer v. Harmon, 44 D. 738.

If a surety discharges a joint judgment against himself and principal, the judgment is satisfied and its legal efficacy destroyed. Lyon v. Bolling, 44 D. 444.

12. Right to retain funds of principal.—A surety may retain funds in his hands belonging to the principal debtor, upon the latter's insolvency; and an assignee of the principal debtor has, in such case, no better right to such funds than his assignor would have. Williams v. Helme, 18 D. 580.

A surety receiving from his principal as security property to which the latter subsequently releases to the former all right and interest for a grossly inadequate consideration is entitled to deduct from the value of the property all sums expended under the original contract, and other bona fide payments, on behalf of the principal, but must account to the latter's creditors for the residue. Ripley v. Sererance, 17 D. 397.

Where the principal engaged to pay an annuity, the surety was permitted to compute the value of such annuity in ready money, and retain that sum out of the property placed in his hands. Id.

If the parties all concerned agree, the plaintiff may relieve the surety, summoned as trustee, from his future liability in respect to such annuity. Id.

A surety in whose hands are funds of his principal, created for his indemnity, is responsible to the latter for the same, if they are not needed to effectuate his discharge from liability. Fletcher v. Wilson, 30 D. 470.

A surety on an official bond of a committee of a lunatic may maintain assumpsit for money had and received against one by whom it is collected under an agreement between the three parties, that the defendant was to collect the money due the lunatic, and retain it subject to the order of the surety until he should be released from his suretyship, although the action is begun before judgment in a suit against the surety on his bond is obtained. Keller v. Rhoads, 30 D. 539.

13. Right to be subrogated to position of creditor, generally.—A surety, on paying the debt of the principal, is entitled to be put in the place of the creditor, and avail himself of all or any of the collateral securities, means, or remedies which the creditor has for enforcing payment against his principal. Bank of Montpelier v. Dixon, 24 D. 640; Loundes v. Chisolm, 16 D. 667; Eddy v. Traver, 31 D. 261; Cullum v. Emanuel, 34 D. 757; Pratt v. Thornton, 48 D. 492; Edgerly v. Emerson, 55 D. 207; Mitchell v. De Witt, 78 D. 561.

A surety paying a judgment against his principal is substituted by operation of law to the rights of the creditor. Fleming v. Beaver, 19 D. 629; McClung v. Beirne, 34 D. 739.

Sureties have the right in equity to be subrogated to the lien that the judgment creditor has on the debtor's land, upon the payment by them of the debt for which they are security, though such payment be voluntary, and they are preferred to a creditor who acquires a lien upon the land by a foreign attachment, sued out in chancery after the entry of such judgment, although no elevis or execution was issued thereon. Watts v. Kinney, 23 D. 266.

Subrogation as a matter of course, without any agreement to that effect, arises only in cases where the one advancing money to pay the debt of a third party stands in the situation of a surety, or is compelled to pay it to protect his own rights. Sandford v. McLean, 23 D. 773.

In other cases the demand of a creditor which is paid with the money of a third person, and without any agreement that the security shall be assigned or kept on foot for the benefit of such third person, is absolutely extinguished. Id.

Sureties who have paid the debt for which they were security may reach in equity any fund set apart by the principal debtor for the payment of such debt, no matter who the trustee or custui que trust is. Rodes v. Crockett, 24 D. 489.

If a debtor mortgage his land to a creditor on condition that the mortgagee pay out of the land another debt for which certain sureties of the mortgagor are liable, such sureties may in equity set up that condition by parol, and enforce it upon the property in the hands of the mortgagee. Id.

A surety compelled to pay a note is subrogated to the rights of the payee, under a mortgage given by the principal to secure the payment of the note. Jones v. Tincher, 77 D. 92.

Equity recognizes the right of a surety to pay off a note or obligation of the principal debtor, and be subrogated to the rights of the creditor. Rucker v. Robinson, 90 D. 412.

Where one of several co-sureties pays a joint judgment against them, intending to save his right to be subrogated to the right of the judgment creditor, he can afterwards sustain an action to be subrogated, notwithstanding the legal extinguishment of the judgment; and the intention to save such right will be presumed from the payment until the contrary is shown. Neilson v. Fry, 91 D. 110.

The surety of a deceased debtor to the state, having paid the debt to the state, is entitled to be subrogated to the state's prior claim in the distribution of the debtor's assets. Orem v. Wrightson, 34 R. 286.

The general agent of an insurance company appointed a local agent, and took from him a bond in the name of the company, with sureties, conditioned that the local agent should pay over all moneys received by him. The local agent having made default in paying over certain moneys received for premiums, the general agent paid the same in accordance with his contract with the company. In an action upon the bond, in the name of the company, for the use of the general agent, — held, 1. That the payment by the general agent did not discharge the bond so as to prevent subrogation; 2. That notice to the sureties of defalcation of the principal was not necessary in order to charge the sureties. Hough v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 11 R. 18.

14. Scope of the right to subrogation. — By the payment of the debt, a surety has a right to be put in the place of the creditor, and to whatever means and remedy the creditor possesses, to enforce payment from the principal debtor. Accordingly, if a creditor takes a mortgage from the principal debtor, the surety is entitled to it as an indemnity, and the creditor must do nothing by which it may be impaired as a security. Hayes v. Ward, 8 D. 554.

A surety who pays the judgment debt of his principal may in equity compel the creditor to assign the judgment, with all the liens given by the principal to secure it. Creager v. Brengle, 9 D. 516.

Although equity will compel an assignment of the judgment against the debtor which a surety has satisfied, yet it will not authorize the surety to proceed against the bail of the principal, unless such bail is absolutely fixed at the time of the assignment. Ib.

A surety has a right to be subrogated to all the securities which the obligee has. Smith v. Tunno, 16 D. 617.

A surety who has paid the debt may compel his co-surety to make contribution; or he may by substitution take the place of the creditor and acquire all his rights against the principal debtor. He can acquire no rights that the creditor did not have, and cannot compel a contribution by the representatives of his co-surety against whom the creditor had no remedy. Waters v. Riley, 18 D. 302.

A surety paying the debt is entitled to be subrogated to the creditor's right to enforce a judgment previously recovered on a note given by a third person after several judgments against the principal and surety, as collateral security to obtain a stay of execution against the principal. Pott v. Nathans, 37 D. 456.

A surety discharging a bond or judgment, which is the only security the creditor has taken, has nothing to which he can be subrogated. Uwell v. Mack, 40 D. 648.

A surety, paying any part of a bond for purchase-money, when the vendor also reserved a lien upon the land, is subrogated to the vendor's rights under the lien. Ib.

A surety is entitled to the appropriation of a collateral security, held by the creditor for the same debt, to the payment thereof, or to have it retained for his benefit and to be subrogated to the creditor's right thereto if he pays the debt. New Hampshire Savings Bank v. Colcord, 41 D. 685.

Where a surety on an injunction bond was sued, and judgment obtained against him (the injunction being of a judgment and being afterwards dissolved), — held, that the surety is entitled to the benefit of the creditor's judgment lien upon the property of the judgment debtor. Rodgers v. McCluer, 47 D. 715.

A surety paying the debt may stipulate for an assignment of all the collateral securities of the creditor against the principal, and such assignment will be protected in courts of law as well as in equity. Edgerly v. Emerson, 55 D. 207.

Payment of the debt by the co-debtor who is a surety does not discharge the debt, but the debt will be held undischarged so far as is necessary to preserve and give effect to the collateral securities against the principal, assigned by the creditor to the surety, either voluntarily or by a decree of a court of equity. Ib.

The lien of an attachment is preserved for the benefit of a surety who pays the debt and takes an assignment of the creditor's securities, in the same manner and to the like extent whether the payment be before or after judgment. Ib.

If, after judgment against principal and surety, a third person gives his note for the debt to obtain a stay of execution for the principal, and the surety is afterwards obliged to pay the debt, he is entitled to have an assignment of the judgment on the note of the third person to indemnify him for such payment. So held, where the original principal in a debt prosecuted a writ of error, and the original surety or indorser of the note afterwards paid the debt, and asked to have the judgment against the original defendants and sureties on the superedeas bond assigned to him. Mitchell v. De Witt, 78 D. 561.

A surety who pays a judgment, and is thereby subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the principal debtor, may issue execution on the judgment in the name of the creditor for the amount which he has paid as surety. Connely v. Boury, 79 D. 568.

The right to recover costs as well as principal and interest of debt, against a first indorser as surety, is transferred to a second indorser by the effect of the legal subrogation, which results from his payment of the debt to the judgment creditor. Ib.

A surety on a note secured by trust deed,

by paying off the debt thus secured, becomes substituted to the rights of the creditor under the trust deed, and may enforce the lien for reimbursement, but not in such manner as to affect the right to redeem of one who purchases the land at execution sale. James v. Jacques, 82 D. 613.

A second indorser having given an injunction bond in an action on the note, his surety in that bond, who has been compelled to pay the note, may recover it from the first indorser. Chrisman v. Harman, 26 R. 387.

15. Rules of pleading in actions against sureties.—A demand must be alleged and proved in an action against a surety on a bond filed by a plaintiff on commencing an action, conditioned that such plaintiff will pay, "on demand," all costs awarded to the defendant, because the demand is parcel of the contract, though no demand need be averred in suing a party on his agreement to pay his own debt on demand. Nelson v. Bostwick, 40 D. 310.

Breaches must be assigned in a declaration on a bond other than for the payment of money at a particular time or in specified installments, under 2 N. Y. R. S. 378, sec. 5. Hence such an assignment is necessary in an action against a surety on a bond filed by the plaintiff in an action conditioned for the payment by such plaintiff, on demand, of all costs awarded to the defendant, and the omission of such assignment is fatal, even after verdict, and nominal damages cannot be allowed. Id.

An administrator of a deceased officer cannot be joined with the sureties on such officer's bond, in an action brought thereon. Wayello County v. Bigham, 74 D. 370.

16. — of evidence.*—Judgment against the principal prima facie establishes the liability of the sureties who were not parties to the action; but the sureties may impeach the judgment for fraud, collusion, or mistake. Charles v. Hoskins, 83 D. 378. S. P., Lévescomb v. Postell, 77 D. 651.

Parol evidence is admissible, on the part of a surety on a note, to show that the payee, to induce him to become such security, represented that he had in his hands funds belonging to the principal in the note, which should be applied as a credit thereon; and if the proof establish such facts, the security is entitled to the benefit of such assurance. Matheson v. Jones, 76 D. 647.

Where a financial officer is his own successor, his entries of balances in his hands at the expiration of his first term, made in pursuance of legal requirements, are conclusive on himself and his sureties on his bond for the new term. Chicago v. Gage, 35 R. 182.

* Judgment against principal, effect of, as evidence against surety, see notes, 83 D. 280-290; 83 R. 802-804.

17. Limits to their liability.—The defendant became surety for the faithful performance of a book-keeper's duties in the department of docks in the city of New York. The book-keeper was required also to assist the treasurer in receiving and depositing the department funds, and he embezzled the same by means of false entries or omissions to make entries. It was conceded that the additional duties did not hinder his faithful performance of the duties of book-keeper. Held, that the question of damages was for the jury. Mayor etc. v. Kelly, 50 R. 699.

2. Of Co-sureties.

18. In general.—A surety is entitled to share the benefit of any security which his co-surety has taken from the principal, for his own indemnity against loss, before being damnified. Brown v. Ray, 45 D. 361; McMahon v. Fawcett, 14 D. 796.

A promise of indemnity is void for want of consideration, where one of the sureties on an administration bond, after the execution of the bond, promises his co-surety to indemnify him for any loss he may sustain on the bond. Jones v. Shorter, 44 D. 649.

Where a surety takes security to indemnify him generally against loss on several demands upon which he is surety with different co-sureties, it should be apportioned among all the demands. Brown v. Ray, 45 D. 361.

A person being a creditor and a surety, who takes a security for his own indemnity generally, is entitled to apply it first to his own debt, and his co-sureties are only entitled to share the benefit of any surplus then remaining. Id.

The right of a surety to the benefit of security taken by his co-surety attaches when it was taken, and is not divested by a subsequent purchase of demands against the principal, unless it was part of the agreement at the time when the security was taken that such co-surety should purchase such demands, the security being taken for them also. Id.

A surety, before he has paid the debt of his principal, or more than his aliquot portion of it, is entitled to an injunction restraining a co-surety from a fraudulent disposition of his property, the principal being insolvent. Bowen v. Hoskins, 7 R. 728.

19. When the right to contribution exists.—Sureties have a right to claim contribution from each other in proportion to the amount paid by each upon the common debt; and this right is the result, not of any implied contract between the parties, but of an acknowledged principle of natural justice, which requires that those who voluntarily assume a common burden should bear it in equal proportions. White v. Banks, 56 D. 283; Moore v. Moore, 15 D. 523; Russell v. Faylor, 59 D. 631.

For Index to Notes to American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Contribution between sureties will be decreed whether they be on the same or different bonds, although they knew nothing of the obligations of each other; but they must be sureties for one and the same debt or obligation. Harrison v. Lane, 27 D. 607. S. P., Bosley v. Taylor, 30 D. 677.

Co-sureties on a bond have a right to call on each other to contribute to pay the debt of their principal who is insolvent, and to have the benefit of a judgment obtained by the creditor against them all, although satisfaction had been entered up on such judgment, in order to allow them to stand as judgment creditors against one of the co-sureties, deceased, whose estate was insolvent, but which, nevertheless, could pay his proportion, if this debt be considered a judgment debt. Burrows v. Carney, 1 D. 677.

Where three persons give a note for their joint debt, each is to be regarded a principal with respect to one third and as surety with respect to two thirds of the debt. And if one is insolvent and another pays the whole debt, he may recover a moiety thereof from the third. Henderson v. McDuffee, 20 D. 557.

All the solvent sureties must bear the burden equally, where some of the sureties have become insolvent. Bosley v. Taylor, 30 D. 677.

Non-residency of a surety is equivalent to his actual insolvency, so far as the application of the doctrine of contribution is concerned. Ib.

A surety whose liability is collateral merely, may justly submit to suit in order to ascertain the extent of his liability, and is entitled to contribution for the costs of such suit. Ib.

The execution and forfeiture of a forthcoming bond by a surety against whom judgment had been obtained on a bond cannot operate so as to destroy the right of the surety for the original principal, to call for contribution, he having paid the debt. Preston v. Preston, 47 D. 717.

A co-surety may recover contribution against another for money paid after defendant's discharge in bankruptcy, though the obligation on which they were co-sureties was payable before petition in bankruptcy was filed. Dole v. Warren, 52 D. 640.

Judgment against one co-surety entitles him to contribution, though the other co-surety's name was stricken out by the plaintiff in the suit on the bond to which the co-sureties had signed their names. Ib.

A surety's right to contribution from his co-surety is an equity arising with the relation created, and is fully consummated when the surety pays the debt. Wayland v. Tucker, 50 D. 78.

The sureties' right of contribution for costs and expenses in defending suit exists against a co-surety when the defense was made under such circumstances as to be regarded hopeful and prudent. Fletcher v. Jackson, 56 D. 98.

Sureties or indorsers against whom judgment has been rendered, and who have obtained title to property under a judgment rendered against them in an action of trespass brought by one upon whose goods they levied by mistake as upon the property of the principal, and who have sold this property and applied it to the satisfaction of the judgment against them, may enforce contribution from co-sureties in a proportionate amount of the sum applied to the satisfaction of the judgment against them. Ackerson v. Miller, 59 D. 663.

A surety discharged from the principal obligation is not released from liability for contribution to his co-sureties if they are not discharged. Clapp v. Rice, 77 D. 387.

The estate of a deceased co-surety is liable to contribute in a suit by a co-surety. Johnson v. Harvey, 38 R. 515.

One surety, paying the whole obligation after judgment, may compel contribution from his co-surety for the costs, although the latter was not served with process. Van Winkle v. Johnson, 50 R. 495.

The parties were sureties on an official bond, upon which judgment had been recovered and paid by the plaintiff. In an action against the co-sureties for contribution, the latter alleged, in defense, that they had never been served with process, nor appeared in the action upon the bond; that the plaintiff had appeared for them without authority, and suffered judgment to be entered, to defraud them; that he had, without their knowledge, entered into a special contract with the relators in that action to pay the judgment out of funds then in his hands, belonging to the principal in the bond, and, in consideration of such agreement, received an extension of one year's time on said judgment; that but for such extension of time the judgment could have been made out of the property of the principal. Held, that these facts did not constitute a defense to the action. Bagott v. Mulles, 2 R. 351.

The defendants further alleged that they signed the bond out of which the liability arose at the request of the plaintiff. Held, that they were, nevertheless, liable to contribution. Ib.

The estate of a deceased surety of a principal debtor was discharged from liability to the creditor, through his negligence, by operation of the statute of limitations. A co-surety afterward paid the debt. Held, that the estate was liable to contribute to such co-surety, notwithstanding it was released from direct liability to the creditor. Camp v. Bostwick, 5 R. 669.

Plaintiff and defendant were sureties upon a promissory note which the maker failed to pay at maturity. Action thereon having been brought, plaintiff paid the note before judgment, and brought this action for contribution. Held, that he was entitled to recover, although there existed a good defense to the note, he being ignorant of the fact and having acted in good faith and without negligence. Hickborn v. Fletcher, 22 R. 562.

The parties to the action were co-sureties on a note, all the parties to which lived in Vermont. After the statute of limitations had run against the note, the plaintiff in good faith went to New Hampshire, where the statute was no defense, and judgment was recovered against him on the note, and he was compelled to pay it. Held, that the defendant must contribute. Aldrich v. Aldrich, 48 R. 791.

20. When it does not.—If indemnity be taken by a surety to secure him from loss, and as a condition precedent to his becoming a surety, his co-sureties are not entitled to the benefit of the indemnity until after he for whose benefit it was given is fully repaid. Moore v. Moore, 15 D. 523.

Sureties on a joint bond, while living, are both liable to the creditor of their principal, and one may recover against the other a just proportion of what he is made to pay; but if one dies, the remedy as to him is gone, and the duty and the remedy survive against the survivor. If the survivor pay the debt, his only remedy is against the principal. Waters v. Riley, 18 D. 302.

A surety on one bond is not entitled to contribution from a surety on another, if the latter bond was not to be pursued, unless the principal could not obtain payment from the sureties on the former. Harrison v. Lane, 27 D. 607.

A surety engaging to pay only if the creditor cannot get payment from other sureties is not liable to contribution at the suit of the latter. Id.

Sureties are supposed to assume the same risk, and to stand, in relation to their principal, in the same situation, obtaining no benefit from the transaction, but each equally subjecting himself to responsibility. McPherson v. Talbot, 32 D. 191.

Where a surety, without his co-surety's knowledge, by a previous arrangement with the principal, receives one half of the sum borrowed, he is not entitled to contribution from such co-surety. Id.

One surety is not entitled in equity to contribution from another, if, by ordinary diligence, he can obtain indemnity or reimbursement from their principal. Morrison v. Poynts, 32 D. 92; McCormack v. Obannon, 5 D. 509.

Assumpsit by one surety against another does not lie where recovery can be had from the principal debtor, or out of property which such principal had placed in the hands of plaintiff for his indemnity. Morrison v. Poynts, 32 D. 92.

A surety's collateral obligation of contribution is released by his co-sureties executing to the principal a general release of all liability for any sums they should pay; and it does not make any difference that the release was only intended to remove the principal's interest, in order that he might testify in the suit against the co-sureties. Fletcher v. Jackson, 56 D. 98.

If an offer of security is made by the principal upon condition that the sureties execute a release, the refusal by one to accept the terms offered would not prevent the other from acceding to the proposition; and in such case, although the surety refusing would have a right to demand that the proceeds of the securities received should be fairly devoted to the reduction of the common debt, such proceeds could in no other way inure to his benefit; and the payment, so far as the right of contribution is concerned, would be considered as made by the paying surety out of his own funds, and if it amounted to his proportion of the debt, it would discharge him from contribution. White v. Banks, 56 D. 283.

Refusal by a surety to accept a fraudulent deed of assignment by the principal for the benefit of his creditors deprives him of his right of contribution against a co-surety who has accepted the deed, when the deed has been executed, as to the assenting creditors, and the co-surety has received under it an amount exceeding his contributive share, and has applied it on the debt. Id.

Contribution against a co-surety cannot be claimed by a surety who voluntarily pays money on a void note. Russell v. Failor, 59 D. 631.

One surety who has obtained security from his principal debtor by a mortgage must be regarded as a trustee for the other, as the mortgage inures to the benefit of all the sureties, and he is bound to the exercise of the duties which attach to that relation. If such surety gives up such security without the consent of his co-surety, he cannot obtain contribution from him. Taylor v. Morrison, 62 D. 747.

A surety who pays the debt after it is barred by the statute of limitations cannot compel his co-surety to contribute. Cocke v. Hoffman, 40 R. 23; Cochran v. Walker, 56 R. 891.

21. Proceedings to obtain contribution.—1. Right of action, generally.—A surety who pays the debt may maintain an action in a court of law for contribution. Henderson v. McDuffee, 20 D. 557.

Assumpsit by one surety against the other for contribution can be sustained as soon as the former has paid the debt for which they are sureties; it need not be shown that the principal debtor is insolvent, nor that payment from him cannot be obtained. Roberts v. Adams, 31 D. 694.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A surety could not maintain an action against a co-surety at law formerly in North Carolina; the remedy was in equity. Powell v. Matthis, 40 D. 427.

The liability of a surety at common law was his aliquot proportion of the money, ascertained by the number of sureties; the death or insolvency of one of the sureties did not enlarge the other's liabilities. Ib.

The rule of the common law of England was adopted by the act of 1807: R. S., c. 113, sec. 2. Ib.

A surety, before payment, may maintain a bill in equity against his co-sureties and their principal to compel the latter to pay, if able, or to require the sureties to contribute, when the principal is unable to make payment. Morrison v. Poyntz, 32 D. 92.

Where one surety holds a note against his co-surety, and the latter has paid a debt for which both were sureties, the promisor may set up his equity of contribution from his co-surety as an offset against the note. Wayland v. Tucker, 50 D. 76.

Failure to set up the equity of contribution as an offset will not preclude a recovery of the claim in a distinct action, nor will it preclude him from applying to chancery for relief. Ib.

2. Necessity of demand or notice.—Notice of payments for principal is requisite before bringing suit for contribution. Sherrod v. Woodward, 25 D. 714.

A surety is liable to his co-surety who has paid the whole debt, for a moiety thereof, without demand, the principal being insolvent. Cage v. Foster, 26 D. 265.

Application to a co-surety for payment or contribution is not indispensable to a recovery against him for his share of the moneys actually paid by his fellow-surety to discharge the debt of their principal. Morrison v. Poyntz, 32 D. 92.

The Ohio code limits to six years the right to maintain an action against a co-surety demanding subrogation and a judgment for contribution; and the costs in such action cannot be recovered of the co-surety without notice to him of the payment. Neilson v. Fry, 91 D. 110.

3. Parties.—In a suit by a surety against his co-surety for contribution, their common principal, or if he is dead, his personal representative must be made a party defendant. Rainey v. Yarborough, 38 D. 681; Aiken v. Peay, 53 D. 684.

The surety cannot call upon his co-surety for contribution without showing that he cannot obtain satisfaction from their common principal. Rainey v. Yarborough, 38 D. 681.

A surety cannot maintain a joint action against his co-sureties, at law, to recover their share of the liability, but each must be sued separately for his own liability. Powell v. Matthis, 40 D. 427.

In a suit in equity by a surety for contribution, all the co-sureties must be joined; but if some of them are without the jurisdiction of the court, the plaintiff, by stating that fact in his bill, may proceed against those within its jurisdiction. Jones v. Blanton, 51 D. 415.

A co-surety has to make contribution without regard to the share of another co-surety who is without the jurisdiction of the court and therefore not made a defendant. Ib.

Sureties jointly paying a judgment against them may sue jointly in equity the heirs of a deceased co-surety for contribution; and a decree may be made against the defendants severally for so much as each is liable. Fletcher v. Jackson, 56 D. 98.

Sureties may join in an action to recover from a co-surety the amount paid for his benefit, when each being liable for the full amount, they joined in making the payment by a contribution agreed on among themselves for that purpose. Clapp v. Rice, 77 D. 387.

4. Evidence.—The record of a recovery against sureties on a bond is competent evidence against co-sureties, in a suit for contribution, of the amount of recovery, but not of the default of the principal; and the fact that the case was referred in the county court, and that judgment was entered by consent in the supreme court, will not affect the judgment as evidence, the necessity of these steps being sufficiently explained. Fletcher v. Jackson, 56 D. 98.

In an action by an apparent principal against an apparent surety on a sealed note for contribution, evidence is competent to show that both were principals. Williams v. Glenn, 53 R. 416.

22. *Computing the amount to be contributed.—If one of several sureties pays the debt, he is entitled to demand contribution from his co-surety for whatever he has paid more than his aliquot part. Aiken v. Peay, 53 D. 684.

Where one of three sureties is insolvent, and another pays the whole debt, he may recover one half thereof from the third surety. Henderson v. McDuffee, 20 D. 557.

Interest is allowed to a surety who has paid, from the time of the payment up to the final decree. Bosley v. Taylor, 30 D. 577.

A surety of an insolvent debtor is entitled to contribution from his co-sureties, and, if all are solvent, each is liable for his share of the sum advanced by one to relieve them of the common burden. Preston v. Preston, 47 D. 717.

Sureties who are severally and not jointly bound in two thousand dollars each upon an official bond taken in the penal sum of twenty thousand dollars from ten sureties may be held liable in the full sum of two thousand dollars, if an unsatisfied defalcation of the principal exceeds that sum, although such defalcation is less than twenty thousand dollars. Bank of Brighton v. Smith, 90 D. 144.

* Whether entitled to dividend for whole debt against estate of insolvent co-surety, see note, 45 R. 295-297.

The holder of a note, by arrangement with a solvent surety on it, proved it against the insolvent estate of another surety, and assigned the note and the claim against the estate to the solvent surety, who paid him in full. Held, a payment of the note, and that the proof was properly expunged, and that the surety could prove only one half against the insolvent estate, although he would receive not more than half of what he had paid if allowed to prove in full. New Bedford Inst. etc. v. Hathaway, 45 R. 289.

3. Of the Creditor.

23. When creditor is in a position to sue surety. — Where there is a surety for a debt secured by mortgage, the creditor has an election, of which he cannot be deprived, whether he shall proceed in equity upon his mortgage or at law against the debtor or surety. Culham v. Emanuel, 34 D. 757; Allen v. Woodard, 28 R. 250.

The payee of a note is entitled to judgment against both principal and surety, and has the right, the principal being insolvent, to subject the property of the surety to the discharge of the judgment, without first proceeding to foreclose a mortgage, given by the principal to secure the note, and executed and received concurrently therewith. Jones v. Tincher, 77 D. 92.

When a principal debtor delivers to his surety money to pay the debt to the creditor, he may redemand it before payment, and the creditor gets no lien on it, and can maintain no action for it against the surety. Spalding v. Henshaw, 44 R. 463.

24. Exhausting remedy against principal. — A surety cannot require a creditor to exhaust his remedies against the principal before resorting to the surety, except under special circumstances. Abercrombie v. Knox, 37 D. 721.

A surety cannot have the benefit of discussion, if he has bound himself as principal debtor by the contract. Aston v. Morgan, 5 D. 733.

The right of a surety continues after a judgment, and he can require the creditor to make an effort to obtain satisfaction from the principal debtor. Commercial Bank v. Western Reserve Bank, 38 D. 739.

A surety of a principal to refund advances cannot compel a factor to assert his lien upon the goods or money of the principal before proceeding against him personally. Martin v. Pope, 41 D. 66.

The creditor is under an equitable obligation to obtain payment of the principal debtor, and not from the surety, unless the principal is unable to pay; and the fact that courts of law now assume jurisdiction in such cases does not affect the jurisdiction originally and intrinsically belonging to courts of equity. Hempstead v. Watkins, 42 D. 696.

A surety cannot issue execution against the principal without the consent of the execution creditor, when he has not paid the debt, and the creditor has a right to call it in and discharge the levy if it had been made, without prejudicing himself. Forbes v. Smith, 49 D. 432.

25. Right to be substituted to benefit of securities held by rival creditor or surety. — A surety receiving money or claims to be applied to the payment of his principal's debt holds as trustee of the creditor, and must account to him. Green v. Dodge, 25 D. 736.

The creditor is entitled to the benefit of all collateral obligations for payment of the debt which a surety thereon has received for his indemnity. Klapsworth v. Dressler, 78 D. 69; King v. Harman, 26 D. 485.

Property mortgaged to a surety to secure him for indorsing the mortgagor's note, whether such property be real or personal, may be subjected to the payment of such note by a bill filed by the creditor, where the debtor is insolvent. New London Bank v. Lee, 27 D. 713.

A creditor need not levy execution so as to obtain a lien upon property mortgaged to a surety for the same debt for his indemnity, as he has an equitable lien on the property so mortgaged. Id.

An infant's guardian executed a mortgage as security to a surety on his bond. Held, that the infant was entitled to the benefit of it as security for what was due from the guardian. Morrill v. Morrill, 38 R. 659.

III. WHAT WILL EXONERATE THE SURETY.

26. In general. — 1. Surety released. — As a general rule, the obligation of a surety becomes extinct by the extinction of the obligation of the principal. An exception to this rule exists whenever the extinction of the principal's obligation arises from causes which originate in the law, and not in the voluntary act of the creditor. Johnson v. Planters' Bank, 43 D. 480.

The liability of a surety is presumed to have been extinguished after the lapse of more than ten years from the time when the obligation was incurred by him, and a deed of trust executed for his indemnity; and in the absence of proof of any payment made by him, such deed cannot be upheld as effective against the rights of the grantor's creditors. Waller v. Todd, 28 D. 94.

One of several joint obligees may make such an arrangement with the principal debtor, without the consent of the co-obligees, as will release the surety. Chapman v. Pottor, 20 D. 203.

One joint obligee may release the debt. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Co-obligees, like partners, are in general bound by the acts of one another. Ib.

A release of goods of the principal debtor by order of the owner of the judgment is a release pro tanto of the sureties. Bank v. Fordyce, 49 D. 561.

A surety is released from payment of a judgment against him and his principal, though in the hands of assignees without notice, where, after an execution has issued upon the judgment and become a lien upon sufficient personal property of the principal to pay the debt, the judgment creditor, under color of a fraudulent assignment from the principal, removes the property out of the county, sells it, and appropriates the proceeds to his own use, in order that the judgment may be collected out of the property of the surety, and then assigns the judgment. Robeson v. Roberts, 83 D. 308.

Where the maker of a note with sureties makes a tender in United States treasury notes in payment thereof to the payee, and such tender is refused, the sureties are discharged. This is so in any event, and more especially when the insolvency of the maker is known to the payee. Johnson v. Ivey, 94 D. 206.

A creditor having received a portion of his claim under his debtor's general assignment cannot afterward assert a claim for that portion against a surety for the debt. Bank v. Alexander, 39 R. 702.

2. Surety not released. — Revoking a levy on the goods of one of two sureties does not release the other; for as between themselves they are both principals, and the creditor may pursue either. Whitehill v. Wilson, 24 D. 328.

A surety cannot be discharged on the ground of fraudulent representations made to his principal except when that principal would be. Bryant v. Crosby, 58 D. 767.

A surety is not released by any act or conduct of the payee which does not place the surety in a worse position than he would otherwise have been. Driakell v. Mateer, 80 D. 105.

A surety is not released by the creditor's declaring to him that the debt is paid, if such surety does not in consequence change his situation or otherwise suffer loss. Ib.

Part payment of the amount due will not discharge the surety, even where it is agreed that such part payment shall have that effect. Where a party is bound to pay a certain sum, there is no consideration in contemplation of law for a promise that a less sum shall be received in satisfaction. Obern-dorf v. Union Bank, 1 R. 31.

Where the principal in a note payable to a bank has funds on deposit in the bank after the maturity of the note, and before suit, exceeding the sum due thereon, the surety is not discharged by the omission of the bank to apply the same to its payment. Voss v. German-Amer. Bank, 25 R. 415.

One who, at the request of the principal, and without the knowledge of the obligee, signs a bond for the principal's faithful conduct as an insurance agent, is not released by the principal's previous neglect in the same employment to make payments promptly, which were subsequently made good; nor by the obligee's continuing him in his employment after such default; and if the surety allows his name to remain without protest after learning of such default, he is liable in future. Home Ins. Co. v. Hol-way, 39 R. 179. S. P., Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 41 R. 196.

Sureties on the bond of a book-keeper of a bank are liable for his defalcations or overdrafts, although the cashier consented and the directors were negligent in discovering them. Chew v. Ellingwood, 56 R. 429.

A leased premises to C, and B became surety for the rent. A distrained for non-payment of rent, but C replevied and repossessed himself of the goods. Held, that the pendency of the replevin suit was not a bar to an action by A against B as surety. King v. Blackmore, 13 R. 684.

If the surety is told by the creditor that the debt is paid, and thereby loses an opportunity of securing himself, he is discharged, although the debt was not paid, and the creditor acted under a mistake. Baker v. Briggs, 19 D. 311; Carpenter v. King, 43 D. 405.

Any settled agreement or active interference by the obligee, whereby the surety may be injured or subjected to increased risk, or deprived of or suspended in the assertion of his equitable right to force the obligee to sue the principal, or of his right to pay the debt and occupy the attitude in equity of the obligee, will release the surety in equity. Sneed v. White, 20 D. 175.

27. Impairing the surety's remedy. — 1. In general. — If the obligee undertakes to discharge the principal, or in any considerable degree to lessen his responsibility without the knowledge of the surety, the latter is released; but the mere acceptance of a common appearance in a suit by the obligee against the principal, in consequence of which the latter executed an assignment to secure part of the debt, will not affect the surety's obligation. Commissioners v. Ross, 5 D. 383. S. P., Stratbridge v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 74 D. 541; Craig v. Cox, 5 D. 609.

Positive and willful interference by a creditor, embarrassing the recovery of the claim against the principal, will release the surety. Bank of Manchester v. Bartlett, 37 D. 594.

2. Laches of creditor. — Where a creditor does an act injurious to the surety, or omits to do an act when required by the surety, which he is bound to do as to the surety, and the omission is injurious to the surety, the latter is discharged, and may set up such conduct of the creditor as a defense to a suit at law. King v. Baldwin, 8 D. 415.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The mere omission by the holder of a promissory note to present it to the assignee (for benefit of creditors) of the principal will not discharge the surety. Dye v. Dye, 8 R. 40.

The sureties upon a bond given by an employee to his employer, conditioned that the former will faithfully account for all moneys and property of the latter coming to his hands, are not discharged from subsequent liability by an omission on the part of the employer to notify them of a default on the part of their principal known to the employer, and a continuance of the employment after such default in the absence of evidence of fraud and dishonesty on the part of the employee. Atlantic & Pac. Tel. Co. v. Barnes, 21 R. 621.

Seemly that the rule is otherwise where the default is of a nature indicating want of integrity in the employee, and this is known to the employer. Id.

The agent of a corporation, being under bond to account and pay over daily, cannot be trusted with more money at his surety's risk after dishonesty of the agent is discovered by the corporation. But he may be so trusted, so long as the circumstances, fairly interpreted, point, not to moral turpitude, but to a want of diligence or punctuality, rather than to a want of integrity. Charlotte etc. R. R. Co. v. Gow, 27 R. 403.

A surety on the bond of the treasurer of a secret society, conditioned for the faithful application of the trust moneys, cannot evade liability for a misappropriation, by the mere fact that the treasurer had misappropriated the trust funds in the preceding year, to the knowledge of the officers and members of the society, but not of the surety, and had been re-elected without any communication of such defalcation to the surety. Roper v. Sangamon Lodge, 33 R. 60.

A life insurance company holding the note of a deceased policy-holder, for money loaned, and knowing that his estate was insolvent, and that the note was signed by a surety, paid the money due on the policy to his personal representative, to whom it was payable by the terms of the policy, although the latter offered to deduct the amount due on the note, or to receive the note in part payment. Held, that the surety was thereby discharged. White v. Life Ass'n, 35 R. 45.

A surety became bound on the bond of a loan officer whose accounts the supervisors were ordered to examine annually, and if a deficiency occurred, they were empowered by law to remove the officer, and elect another. Deficiencies occurred in 1791, and continued for several successive years. No notice of these deficiencies was taken by the supervisors at their annual meeting until 1798, when suits were ordered against the officers on their bonds, but they were not prosecuted, and indulgence given until 1803, when suits were again begun. Had the suits been prosecuted with due diligence in 1798, the principal then being solvent, the amount of the deficiency might have been collected. The surety was held to be discharged by the laches of the supervisors. People v. Jansen, 5 D. 275.

3. Parting with security.—The surety is discharged if the creditor, having the means of satisfaction actually or potentially in his hands, refuses to retain it. The same rule applies when the surety apprises the creditor of the means of recovering the debt, and the latter declines to pursue it. Lichtenthaler v. Thompson, 15 D. 581.

A surety is discharged by the creditor's surrender of collateral security held for the same debt, either pro tanto or entirely according to the value of the security, if surrendered without his consent, but not otherwise; nor is such discharge obviated by the creditor's taking additional sureties in lieu of the security so surrendered. New Hampshire Savings Bank v. Colcord, 41 D. 685. S. P., Baker v. Briggs, 19 D. 311; Cullum v. Emanuel, 34 D. 757; Springer v. Toothaker, 69 D. 66.

A creditor who has disabled himself from surrendering to the surety the means of reimbursement which he once possessed is not to be injured thereby, if he acted without a knowledge of the rights of other persons, and with good faith and just intentions. Cullum v. Emanuel, 34 D. 757.

Sureties on a replevin bond are discharged by the discharge of one of two defendants by the voluntary act of the plaintiff, where the undertaking of the sureties was in the joint behalf of both defendants. Harris v. Taylor, 67 D. 576.

A surety is released by the creditor's surrendering attached property of the principal to the amount of the property so surrendered, where it is done without his consent and after the creditor's lien has become absolute by the recovery of judgment. Springer v. Toothaker, 69 D. 66.

A surety is not discharged by act of the creditor in parting with security of the principal debtor, where he does so for the purpose of securing other property of greater value, which would be otherwise unavailable. Young v. Cleveland, 82 D. 155.

A surety is discharged where, by the wrongful act of the creditor, goods of the principal, upon which an execution not levied has become a lien, are taken away and sold, so that they are placed beyond the reach of any subsequent execution. Robeson v. Roberts, 83 D. 308.

A surety is entitled to have levied upon and sold real estate of his principal, upon which a judgment against himself and his principal is a lien, before his own is levied upon. Ib.

Where a judgment creditor released from the operation of his judgment certain land which the debtor formerly owned, but which he had conveyed away previous to its rendition, but in which it was thought that such debtor might have some contingent interest, for the purpose of relieving the premises from a possible cloud, this does not discharge the surety of said debtor, where it is shown that in fact the debtor had no interest whatever in the land released, and that in consequence the judgment never was a lien upon it. Blydenburgh v. Bingham, 98 D. 49.

To release a surety by surrender of security for payment by principal, the security released must have an actual value, rather than a supposititious or imaginary one. Ib.

The contract of a surety is strictissima juris, and the creditor must not deal with the debtor, or the security which he holds upon the debtor's property, to the prejudice of the surety, unless he intends to release him. Ib.

4. Fraud or concealment. — A surety on notes given for the purchase-money is not discharged by a subsequent conveyance of the land in pursuance of the contract, nor by failure, through fraud of the principal, to record a mortgage given at the time of the conveyance, whereby intermediate claims acquired precedence. Coombs v. Parker, 49 D. 459.

Fraudulent concealment of facts from the principal will not discharge the surety necessarily; the concealment which entirely discharges a surety is one of facts known to the other party and not known to him, and known to be of a character to materially increase the risk beyond that assumed in the usual course of business of that kind, he having a suitable opportunity to make them known to the surety. Bryant v. Crosby, 58 D. 767.

Where the payee of a note intrusts it to the principal for a fraudulent purpose, and consents that he shall induce the sureties to believe that the debt has been paid, and they are thus led to forego an advantage which they would otherwise have had, they will be released from the contract in equity, and also at law, if sued alone. But if such payee gives the note to the principal for some honest purpose, and the latter, without his knowledge or consent, represents to the sureties that the debt is paid, and even if he should tear off the names of the sureties, or destroy the note, this will not release the sureties, if the payee at the earliest opportunity corrects their misapprehension. Wilson v. Green, 60 D. 279.

28. Altering the terms of the contract. — If the obligee releases any of his securities, or enters into a new contract with the principal, by which the terms of the original contract are varied, without the knowledge or consent of the surety, he will be discharged from his liability. Smith v. Tunno, 16 D. 617; Mayhew v. Boyd, 59 D. 101.

A novation between the principal and creditor, whereby time is given, to the prejudice of the surety, discharges him; but the new contract should be made clearly to appear, and that it was so prejudicial to the surety in its tendency that the obligee ought to be compelled to rely upon it, and not be allowed to resort again to the surety. Brown v. Wright, 18 D. 190; Sneed v. White, 20 D. 175.

Sureties on a bond for a writ of error are discharged by the principal's agreeing with the adverse party, without their consent, that the judgment may be affirmed, and that he will deliver indorsed bills for the amount, payable in installments, and that no execution shall be levied, except on non-payment of the bills. Comegys v. Cox, 18 D. 45.

The release of sureties who have signed as joint obligors is not effected, at law, by anything short of what amounts to a release or discharge of all the parties to the bond. Thus where a bond for the payment of money was without interest, a separate agreement by the principal, subsequently entered into under seal, that the amount of the bond should bear interest, does not avoid the liability of the sureties. Tremper v. Hemphill, 31 D. 673.

There is no consideration in contemplation of law for a promise by a creditor that a sum less than the debt shall be received in satisfaction, and such a promise will not release a surety. Oberndorf v. Union Bank, 1 R. 31.

Sureties on the bond of a railroad ticket and freight agent are not discharged by the company's changing the station from second to first class, thereby increasing the freight, but leaving unchanged the agent's duties; viz., to receive all sums payable at his station, both for freight and passengers. Strawbridge v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 74 D. 541.

B was appointed ticket agent of defendant at Memphis, and gave a bond, with sureties, for faithful performance of his duty. There were two ticket-offices, but the bond did not specify to which he was appointed. Subsequently the offices were consolidated, and the duties of both were imposed on him, and his salary was increased, without the knowledge of his sureties. Held, that his sureties were discharged. Mumford v. Memphis etc. R. R. Co., 31 R. 616.

A bond was executed for the faithful performance of duty by an "assistant clerk" in a bank. He was employed as a messenger. Afterward he was promoted to the next higher clerkship, and still later to the position of book-keeper. In the last position he was stationed near the money-drawer, and from time to time abstracted money from it, and made false entries to conceal his crime. The last promotion was without the knowledge of his sureties on the bond. Held, that they were not liable for the embezzlement. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Dickerson, 32 R. 237.

A city superintendent of water-works gave a bond for the proper discharge of his duties and the payment of moneys coming to his hands. At that time there was no law or ordinance specifying his duties or requiring any bond. Subsequently an ordinance was passed defining his duties, one of which was to collect water rents. Held, that his sureties were not liable for his default in paying over such rents collected by him. City of Lafayette v. James, 47 R. 140.

29. — or departure from it. — Where a surety bound himself to make good a deficiency arising from a sale of goods consigned to the correspondent of the creditor who had entire control of the consignment, a sale by the consignee at another place than that agreed on releases the surety. Ludlow v. Simond, 2 D. 291.

A surety is released by the creditor's agreement to take land from the principal debtor for the whole or a part of the debt without such surety's consent. Bangs v. Strong, 42 D. 64.

An agreement by a creditor to accept a certain percentage within a specified time, in full of his claim, but containing no stipulation for delay or extension, and never complied with, does not discharge a surety for the debt. Miller v. Haick, 39 R. 346.

30. Taking a new or further security. — Taking collateral security, though of a higher nature, from the principal debtor, or a stranger, does not preclude the principal debtor from suing on the first contract, and consequently does not discharge the sureties upon it. Burke v. Oruger, 58 D. 102.

Where a creditor received the note of a third person from the principal debtor, and gave a receipt that it was received "in security for all notes signed by" the debtor, in an action against the surety, parol evidence was admitted to show that the note was received in payment, with the intent to discharge the debtor and his surety. Baker v. Briggs, 19 D. 311.

Defendant indorsed a note for the accommodation of the maker, who also gave the payee a mortgage as further security pursuant to an agreement between all the parties. The payee failed to have the mortgage recorded, and afterward canceled it and took another. Held, that defendant was discharged, and this even though the original mortgage would have been worthless if recorded, by reason of prior liens. Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Douglass, 21 R. 234.

31. Giving further time to principal, when a discharge. — Where the creditor has disabled himself to pursue the principal, the surety is ipso facto discharged. United States v. Simpson, 24 D. 331; Johnson v. Planters' Bank, 43 D. 480; Rucker v. Robinson, 90 D. 412.

A surety is discharged by a valid agreement for delay for any length of time, however short, entered into by the creditor with the principal debtor, without the surety's assent. Bangs v. Strong, 42 D. 64; Grafton Bank v. Woodward, 20 D. 566; Bank of Montpelier v. Dixon, 24 D. 640; Steele v. Boyd, 29 D. 218; King v. State Bank, 47 D. 739; Lime Rock Bank v. Mallett, 56 D. 673; Yates v. Donaldson, 61 D. 283; Dickerson v. Ripley County, 63 D. 373; Place v. McIlwain, 97 D. 777; but it must appear that such credit was given either expressly or impliedly against his consent or inclination, or that he was prejudiced thereby. Butler v. Hamilton, 2 D. 692.

The fact that a creditor has received money collected by her brother on a note does not warrant a presumption of her recognition of his authority to bind her by an indulgence granted to the debtor, where no direct authority is proved. Canton v. Dunlap, 23 D. 194.

A surety is released by the creditor's accepting interest in advance beyond the day of payment from the principal debtor without the surety's assent, there being no evidence of any reservation of a right to sue, such acceptance of interest being evidence of a contract to delay. New Hampshire Savings Bank v. Colcord, 41 D. 685.

The holder of a promissory note extending the time of payment to the maker by contract, upon sufficient consideration, discharges an apparent maker that he knows to be a surety, and whose consent to the extension has not been given. Lime Rock Bank v. Mallett, 56 D. 673.

An agreement between the indorsee and principal maker of a note to extend the time of payment for a definite period, in consideration of usurious interest paid in advance, discharges a surety on the note who was known to the indorsee as to be when he took the note. Stillwell v. Aaron, 33 R. 517; Hamilton v. Prouty, 36 R. 866.

Taking a note, draft, or check of the principal debtor, payable at a future day, suspends the creditor's right of action until their maturity, and consequently would operate as a discharge of the surety. Place v. McIlwain, 97 D. 777.

A statutory extension of the time of a collector of taxes to pay over his collection operates to discharge the sureties on his bond previously given. State v. Roberts, 30 R. 788.

The payment of usurious interest for time

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

already elapsed constitutes a valid consideration for the extension of the time of payment of an obligation to pay money, although under the law the debtor or his sureties may recoup the amount so paid; and such a payment discharges the innocent surety. Lemmon v. Whitman, 39 R. 150.

A wife joined her husband in a note, and mortgaged her separate property as security. The husband subsequently was discharged in bankruptcy. After that, the creditor, knowing all the facts, agreed to extend the time of payment for a definite period and to reduce the rate of interest, and the husband in consideration thereof promised to pay the debt. This agreement was indorsed on the note. The wife did not know of it. Held, that she was released. Post v. Losey, 60 R. 677.

32. — when not a discharge. — A surety on a promissory note is not discharged by the holder giving time to the principal debtor, or even by his discontinuing a suit commenced against the debtor without the privity and consent of the surety, it not appearing that the surety had suffered any injury by the delay, or that the holder had made any agreement with the debtor which prevented the holder from suing him. Fulton v. Matthews, 8 D. 261; Rucker v. Robinson, 90 D. 412; Berry v. Pullen, 31 R. 243.

Sureties cannot be prejudiced by an arrangement between the creditor and principal debtor, whereby time is given to the latter, unless they had knowledge thereof and acquiesced therein. Everett v. United States, 30 D. 584.

When it appears that the time of payment has been extended by a creditor at the instance of the principal debtor, and no evidence is offered to show that the sureties of the latter had any knowledge of such extension, an instruction that from the acts of the creditor the jury may infer a knowledge of such extension by the sureties is erroneous. Id.

A surety fully indemnified by the principal debtor is not released by an extension of time given the latter. Chilton v. Robbins, 37 D. 741.

The participation of a surety in payments of interest in advance furnishes evidence of his assent to the agreement for delay implied from such payment. New Hampshire Savings Bank v. Colcord, 41 D. 685.

Extension of time of payment of a promissory note, to which one of two sureties assents, and the other does not, does not release the surety assenting. Wolf v. Fink, 44 D. 141.

A covenant by the holder of a bond with the principal obligor for a definite extension of time does not release the surety at law, but his remedy is in equity. Devers v. Ross, 60 D. 331.

A surety is not discharged, where, for a valuable consideration, the holder of a note gives an extended time for payment to the principal debtor, but reserves to himself the right to sue whenever required by the surety. Rucker v. Robinson, 90 D. 412.

The payee and holder of a promissory note agreed with the principal maker, without the consent of the surety, to extend the time of payment "until after harvest." Held, not to discharge the surety because too indefinite. Findley v. Hill, 34 R. 578.

An extension of the time of payment, granted by the payee of a note to one of two joint makers, without the knowledge or consent of the other, who is in fact a surety, but not known as such to the payee, does not release the non-consenting joint maker. Mullendore v. Werts, 39 R. 155.

A surety on a tax collector's bond is not released by subsequent extension of the collector's time by the legislature. State v. Swinney, 45 R. 405.

33. Forbearance to sue. — Forbearance, without any binding promise to grant it, will not release the surety. Sneed v. White, 20 D. 175; Smith v. Tunno, 16 D. 617; United States v. Simpson, 24 D. 331. Therefore neglect to sue or to attempt to collect the debt at the time it falls due does not discharge the sureties, although the principal had ample means at the time, and subsequently became insolvent. King v. State Bank, 47 D. 739. To escape liability, the surety must do some act, such as giving notice to the holder of the instrument to proceed against the principal, to warn him and put him on his guard. Marberger v. Pott, 55 D. 479.

The indulgence granted to a principal which is to discharge a surety from his engagement must be of that kind whereby the nature of the contract is changed, or whereby the creditor without the consent of the surety, and by his own act, puts it out of his power to enforce the payment of the debt by the principal. It does not mean a mere forbearance to sue the principal, which a court of equity on application of the surety might direct him to do, on pain of foregoing his claim upon the surety. Buchanan v. Bordley, 1 D. 387.

Forbearance to sue the principal will discharge the surety, although it be for a limited time only. Dickerson v. Ripley Co., 63 D. 373.

34. Effect of mere indulgence. — Mere indulgence to the debtor does not discharge the surety unless there is an agreement upon a sufficient consideration, and binding upon the creditor, to give time to the principal debtor. Burke v. Cruger, 58 D. 102. S. P., Martin v. Pope, 41 D. 66; Brinager v. Phillips, 36 D. 575; Oberndorf v. Union Bank, 1 R. 31.

* See note on the release of the surety by indulgence of the principal, 80 D. 267, 268.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Forbearance or passive indulgence, by the obligee, will not release a surety. Sneed v. White, 20 D. 175; Newell v. Harner, 35 D. 415; as the surety ought to have warned the creditor to proceed. In such case actual detriment is not the criterion or material ingredient. United States v. Simpson, 24 D. 831.

An indorser is not discharged by an agreement for indulgence by the creditor to the principal debtor founded upon a usurious consideration paid in advance, and reserving his rights and remedies against the indorser. First Nat. Bank v. Lineberger, 35 R. 582.

The act of the creditor entitling the principal to indulgence after the debt has matured will release, in equity, the non-assenting surety. Sneed v. White, 20 D. 175.

The surety's assent to the indulgence given cannot be inferred from his silence or neutrality. Id.

35. — or more delay to prosecute.

— A surety is not discharged by delay or negligence in proceeding against the principal, unless there be a binding contract for such delay. Caston v. Dunlap, 23 D. 194; Hunt v. Bridgham, 13 D. 458; Police Jury v. Haw, 20 D. 294; Cooper v. Wilcox, 32 D. 695; Carter v. Jones, 49 D. 425; Wright v. Yell, 58 D. 336; Cook v. Southwick, 60 D. 181.

Delay or neglect to sue the principal, although urgently requested thereto by the surety, is not a discharge of the surety. Bank of Montpelier v. Dixon, 24 D. 640.

A surety on certain bonds is not released merely on the creditor not urging his demand. There must be an express extension of credit to the principal. If one of the bonds has been prosecuted to judgment and an execution returned nulla bona, there is therefore less necessity to sue on the others. Butler v. Hamilton, 2 D. 692.

An omission on the part of the accounting officers of the commonwealth for a year and upwards to compel the prothonotary of the common pleas to settle his account of fees does not discharge the sureties in the official bond of the prothonotary, although the officers are authorized to compel an account at the end of each year, and to enforce payment by execution. Com. v. Wolbert, 6 D. 452.

Where a joint and several note, made by T. as principal and the defendant as surety, payable to a bank, on demand, as collateral security for a check given by the principal for a loan of money, remained in the bank six months before it was entered on the bank's books, the loan being intended to be temporary, and the surety was not called on for payment, nor was notice given to him of the non-payment of the note until the further lapse of six months, when the principal had become insolvent, these circumstances were held not to release the surety in an action upon the note. Commercial Bank v. French, 32 D. 280.

A surety is not discharged by the creditor's failure to present a claim to the administrator of the deceased principal within the time prescribed by law. The sureties may, in such a case, compel the presentment of the claim in due time, and thus preserve their recourse against the estate. Johnson v. Planters' Bank, 43 D. 480; Minter v. Branch Bank, 58 D. 315; Ashby v. Johnston, 79 D. 102.

The surety of a vendee on a continuing contract of purchase is not discharged by mere forbearance, or neglect of the vendor to enforce payment at the times stated in the contract. McKechnis v. Ward, 17 R. 281.

W. became surety on the bond of B. for the performance of an agreement between B. and plaintiffs, whereby "the agency for the sale of their ale" at S. was let to B., he agreeing to pay on the first of each month for the amount of ale delivered, and "not to purchase" ale of any but plaintiffs. The agreement might be terminated on three months' notice by either party. In an action for breach of the bond, — held, that B. was not the agent of plaintiffs under a fair construction of the agreement; and that W. was not discharged as surety, although plaintiffs neglected or forbore to enforce full payment at the times stated in the agreement, and did not give notice to W. that B.'s account was in arrears. Id.

A surety is not discharged by an executed usurious agreement for delay, between the principal debtor and the creditor, although made without the surety's knowledge or assent. Howell v. Sevier, 27 R. 771.

36. Staying proceedings against principal. — On an execution against a principal and surety, the release of property of the principal seized will discharge the surety. Dixon v. Ewing, 17 D. 590; Baird v. Rice, 1 D. 497; Sneed v. White, 20 D. 175; Curran v. Colbert, 46 D. 427.

Dismissal of a suit and release of an attachment sued out by the payee against the principal on a promissory note is not a discharge of the surety. Bank of Montpelier v. Dixon, 24 D. 640; Baker v. Marshall, 42 D. 528. Contra, see Bank of Missouri v. Matson, 72 D. 208.

Where, on a judgment against the principal in a bond and his two sureties, an execution is levied on property of the principal sufficient to satisfy the judgment, but the property is released by the execution of a delivery bond by the principal and one of the sureties, together with other parties, the other surety refusing to join therein and desiring the sheriff to proceed, the latter is discharged, and is not liable for contribution to his co-surety, who, after forfeiture and judgment on the delivery bond, pays the whole amount of the judgment. Brown v. McDonald, 29 D. 112.

Forbearance to enforce an execution neither suspends nor extinguishes a surety's liability, nor deprives him, as a binding novation or levy might have done, of any right to pay the debt, nor requires the creditor to proceed against the principal. Blandford v. Barger, 33 D. 519.

But where the debt could have been satisfied out of the property of the debtor, had it not been for the interference of the creditor, then the surety is entitled to relief to the extent of his loss, on the ground that in prosecuting the execution the creditor was his quasi trustee, and had violated the trust, to his prejudice. Ib.

Holding up an execution on a forthcoming bond does not discharge the surety, where it is a voluntary act upon the part of the creditor, for which the consideration has been given; though during the time that the writ is so held the principal debtor becomes insolvent. Newell v. Hamer, 35 D. 415.

A surety is not discharged by an agreement to suspend execution where no positively defined period was agreed upon for the suspension, and the direction to the sheriff was "not to execute the execution until ordered to do so," as in such a case, the time being indefinite, the stay could have been arrested at any time that the surety requested it to be done. McGee v. Metcalf, 51 D. 122.

A surety of an execution debtor is not released by a mere countermand by the creditor of an execution after it goes into the hands of the sheriff, but before it is levied. Humphrey v. Hitt, 52 D. 133. Compare Robeson v. Roberts, 83 D. 308.

A surety is not discharged by the creditor's discontinuing proceedings against the principal, where there is no abandonment of any absolute lien or security. Springer v. Toothaker, 69 D. 66.

A surety is discharged when the creditor relinquishes any hold which he has actually acquired on the property of the principal, and which might have been made effectual for the payment of the debt. Robeson v. Roberts, 83 D. 308.

Sureties on an undertaking on appeal are released by the creditor's private agreement to stay execution in consideration of a confession of judgment. Kendall v. Grice, 47 R. 243.

A receiver was imprisoned for not paying over money in obedience to an order of the court. He was released with the assent of the party to whom he was ordered to pay the money. Held, that this did not discharge the surety, although he was able to pay when in prison, and afterward became insolvent. Hawkins v. Mims, 38 R. 30.

Co-sureties should be parties, as well as the principal, to a bill by a surety on a replevin bond to be released by reason of a stay of execution granted by the creditor. Sneed v. White, 20 D. 175.

37. Discharge of surety by notice to creditor to proceed against principal. — Where a surety apprehends a danger from the delay of the creditor, he may compel the latter to sue the principal debtor; especially on indemnifying the creditor for the consequence of risk, delay, or expense. Hayes v. Ward, 8 D. 554.

If the holder of a security payable on demand is requested by the surety to proceed without delay to collect the money from the principal, who is then solvent, but neglects so to do, and the principal afterwards becomes insolvent and absconds, the surety will be exonerated. Pain v. Packard, 7 D. 369; provided the request be proved clearly and beyond a doubt, and be positive and accompanied by a declaration that unless it be complied with, the surety will be considered discharged; and though such request should be in writing, yet if made verbally it will not be void. Cope v. Smith, 11 D. 582. S. P., Bruce v. Edwards, 18 D. 33; Greeham v. Kreider, 45 D. 639; Jackson v. Huey, 43 R. 301.

After the principal's death, the creditor is not bound, unless requested by the surety, to resort to his estate, notwithstanding a statute requiring creditors to exhibit their accounts to executors and administrators within twelve months after public notice. Cope v. Smith, 11 D. 582.

Sureties on official bonds cannot set up as a defense that before the breach for which the suit was brought against them on the bond, they gave notice of the officer's unfitness for the office, and requested his removal. Crane v. Newell, 13 D. 461.

A request made by the widow of a surety five months after the latter's death, to the obligee of a bond, to sue the principal, will not discharge the administrator of such surety. Gardner v. Ferree, 16 D. 513.

The surety, or after his death, his personal representative alone, can request the obligee to sue the principal; and the obligee may treat the request of the widow as that of a mere stranger. Ib.

The obligee is bound to do no more than permit the surety to manage the legal responsibilities of the parties, so as to cast the burden where it ought to be borne; and if, when requested to sue, he offers the bond to be sued on, the surety who refuses such offer will not be discharged. Ib.

Where the creditor fails, after request by the surety, to do any act which his duty enjoins him to do, his omission, if injurious to the surety, will, in equity, discharge the latter. Hempstead v. Watkins, 42 D. 698.

The statute of Arkansas providing that a surety shall be exonerated from liability unless the creditor brings suit against the principal debtor within thirty days after service of notice upon him is but declaratory, and an extension of an existing and originally equitable remedy, so qualifying such remedy that the surety is not bound to show the injury resulting from the subsequent insolvency of the principal in order to entitle himself to a discharge from his suretyship. Id.

Where a surety on a bond gives the holder thereof notice, under the Arkansas statute, to sue the principal debtor, and he fails to bring a valid suit thereon within thirty days thereafter, such surety may plead his exoneration either at law or in equity. Id.

If the surety notifies the holder of promissory notes, to whom they have been pledged as collateral security, that he signed said notes as surety, and requires him to bring suit against his principal, it seems that this would be a substantial compliance with the statute. The holder may waive notice in writing. If the notice does not comply with the requirements of the statute, it would be good at common law, when connected with proof showing failure to sue, and damage to the surety resulting therefrom. Pickens v. Farborough, 62 D. 728.

The Mississippi statute requires notice from sureties to the holder of a note to sue the principal, or all the parties, to be in writing. A verbal notice will not discharge the sureties from liability. Bridges v. Winters, 97 D. 443.

If a surety on a bill give notice to the creditor to sue, and after suit brought, the creditor discontinues and gives further time to the principal, without the consent of the surety, and subsequently the principal fail, the surety will still be bound. Manning v. Shotwell, 8 D. 622.

Notice by a surety to the creditor that he would no longer consider himself bound, and requesting the creditor to get payment from the debtor, will not absolve the surety, upon the creditor's failure to sue the principal debtor. Grecanwall v. Kreider, 45 D. 639.

Notice by a surety to the cashier of a bank, requesting him to put the note on which he was surety "in a train of collection," will not release him from liability upon the bank's failure to comply therewith. Bates v. State Bank, 46 D. 293.

Notice by a surety on a note not due, that he will not remain responsible if the holder does not sue the principal debtor as soon as the note falls due, or get other security, will not discharge the surety. Hellen v. Crawford, 84 D. 421. S. F., Hunt v. Purdy, 37 R. 587.

A surety is not discharged from his liability by failure of creditor to sue the principal debtor when requested so to do by the surety. Dane v. Corduan, 85 D. 53; Caston v. Dunlap, 23 D. 194.

If a creditor fails to sue his principal debtor when solvent, at the request of the surety, and he afterward becomes insolvent, still the surety is not discharged. Findley v. Hill, 34 R. 578; Pintard v. Davis, 47 D. 172; Smith v. Freyler, 47 R. 358.

The creditor is entitled to select his own attorney, and a tender of the services of an attorney is not equivalent to furnishing money to pay the expense of procuring one, under a decree obtained at the suit of a surety, and requiring the creditor to sue the principal, on the surety tendering the creditor a sufficient amount to pay reasonable costs and expenses in the action. Dane v. Corduan, 85 D. 53.

A decree in equity obtained at the suit of a surety, and requiring the creditor to sue the principal debtor, is not a bar to an action against the surety, though the creditor fails to sue the principal debtor, unless the surety specifically performs the conditions imposed by the decree; and where the decree prescribes the condition that the surety tender to the creditor a sufficient amount to pay reasonable costs and expenses in the suit against the principal, a payment to the clerk and sheriff of a sufficient amount to pay their fees in the contemplated suit is not a compliance with the condition. Id.

A surety may pay the debt and prosecute his principal, and one who for value transfers a debt or security, and thereupon becomes guarantor or indorser, may thus protect himself against the consequences of delay in enforcing the principal obligation; but he cannot, by notice, impose upon the creditor or holder the duty of active diligence at the risk of discharging the surety by omitting it. Wells v. Mann, 6 R. 93.

One of several sureties for a debt notified the creditor, upon the maturity of the debt, to sue the principal debtors within thirty days, which he failed to do, whereby, by statute, the surety was discharged. Held, that his co-sureties who had given no notice remained liable. Wilson v. Tebbetts, 21 R. 165.

38. Death of surety, and liability of his estate.—One who obligates himself that another will faithfully perform the duties of an office is liable upon the default in the performance of those duties, although such default takes place after the death of such surety. Greene v. Young, 22 D. 218; Susong v. Vaiden, 30 R. 50.

An undertaking given upon appeal in an action read thus: "We" (naming sureties) "do hereby, pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, undertake," etc. Held, 1. That the obligation was joint, and not several; 2. That upon the death of one of the sureties his estate was discharged from liability thereon, both in law and in equity; and 3. That the liability of the parties was not affected by the fact that the undertaking was given in pursuance of a statute. Wood v. Fisk, 20 R. 528.

The obligors in a bond, one of whom was a surety only, bound themselves, their "heirs, executors, and administrators." The surety died, and after his death a breach occurred. Held, that his estate was liable. Royal Ins. Co. v. Davies, 20 R. 581.

The estate of a deceased surety on a bond given by an insurance agent for faithful conduct and accounting is liable for moneys coming into the agent's hands after the surety's death, but not for moneys coming to his hands on his retention in the agency after he had made default to the knowledge of the obligee. Rapp v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 55 R. 427.

39. New promise. — A new promise by a surety, after discharge, in consideration of forbearance for a definite term, to be holden for a longer period, is binding, and waives the discharge, though he had no knowledge of the matters discharging him, if there has been no fraudulent concealment, and if the principal was still liable when the new promise was made. New Hampshire Savings Bank v. Colcord, 41 D. 685.

A new promise by a surety, after discharge, with knowledge of the facts discharging him, is binding, without any new consideration; otherwise, if he has no such knowledge. Id.

1. What constitutes a survey, generally, and how made. — Astronomical observations may be employed to find the true location of a line, and are likely to be more accurate than a survey made by commencing at the initial point and running by the compass. Taylor v. Shafford, 15 D. 512.

The allowance to be made for the variation of the compass, and whether any allowance should be made to determine the location of a survey, are questions of fact for the determination of the jury. Harlan v. Brown, 41 D. 436.

Lines actually marked on the ground constitute the survey, in all cases, whether an adjoining survey be called for or not. Hall v. Tanner, 45 D. 686.

An allotment by plan may indicate with certainty the location of each and every lot, although no lot lines may in fact have been run out; if the lots can be made certain, that will be sufficient. Wells v. Jackson Iron Mfg. Co., 90 D. 575.

In New Hampshire the courses in a deed are presumed to have been run according to the magnetic meridian, unless there is something in the instrument to indicate a different method. And the word "due" prefixed to the courses will not justify the inference that a different method is intended. *Id.

2. Surveys of land bounded on water. — To run the lines of water lots from the upland to low-water mark, under the Maine colonial ordinance of 1641, draw a base line between the two corners of each lot where they strike the shore, and from these corners extend parallel lines perpendicular to the base line to low-water mark, and if the shore line is straight, the lines thus extended will be the boundaries of each lot. Emerson v. Taylor, 23 D. 531.

Where the shore line is curved, either regularly or irregularly, so that the lines of adjoining lots thus extended diverge from or interfere with each other, the triangular parcels thrown out or included thereby must be equally divided between the adjoining proprietors. Id.

A survey of land bounded on a stream, the quantity of land and length of line on the stream being given, the meanderings of the stream are to be followed until, reduced to a straight line, the same will be of the required length. From the ends of this line other lines are to be projected at right angles with it, far enough so that a line drawn between the two, parallel with the straight line, will leave the required quantity between it and the stream. Hicks v. Coleman, 85 D. 103.

The quantity being given, without specifying the length of line on the stream, the required quantity of land is to be located by making the first line follow the meanderings of the stream from the starting-point named in the deed until, reduced to a straight line, it shall be of sufficient length to form one side of a square large enough to contain the required quantity; and this square is to be formed by projecting straight lines at right angles from the ends of the first straight line to such a distance that a line drawn from one to the other, parallel with such first line, will include the required quantity between it and the stream. Ib.

Where a line opposite a river is, by the express terms of the deed, to run "parallel with river," it means parallel with the river in all its meanderings, and not parallel with its general course. Ib.

If the government survey of a fractional lot contains a mistake, so that either a quarter-section line or the meandered line of a stream, both of which are called for by the survey as constituting the boundary lines between two fractions, must be abandoned, the quarter-section line should be adhered to as the more certain call. Martin v. Carlin, 88 D. 696.

3. Ascertaining corners—Closing line.—Where all the corners of a survey are made, but the closing line is left open, the course must be so varied as to strike the corners. Brown v. Hobson, 13 D. 187.

A line marked part of the distance must be followed in the same direction for the whole distance, unless there is some marked corner to divert it. Thornberry v. Churchill, 16 D. 125.

When marked corner trees cannot be found, the point where the lines intersect is treated as the corner. Ib.

The order of the corners in a certificate of survey is of no importance in determining a question of boundary. Ib.

To bring a plat with the rule of closed survey, the line of division must be marked on the ground. Neuman v. Foster, 34 D. 98.

4. When set aside.—The refusal of the court to set aside, at plaintiff's instance, a survey of a tract of land, made in pursuance of a final decree in favor of the defendant, ordering it to be made with the usual front on the river, on the ground that it gives too large a front on the river, is not erroneous, where it does not appear, by any statement of facts or otherwise by the record, that a less front could have been given so as to include the defendant's improvements, and have due respect to the surveys of the proprietors of the adjacent lands. Smith v. De la Garza, 65 D. 147.

V. REMEDIES FOR ILLEGAL TAXATION.

I. THE POWER TO IMPOSE TAXES.

1. Scope and extent of the power.*

—The power of taxation and of apportioning the same is vested exclusively in the legislature, unless limited or restrained by some constitutional provision. People v. Mayor, 55 D. 266; Anderson v. Kerns D. Co., 77 D. 63.

The power of the legislature with reference to taxation is limited only by their own discretion. For the abuse of it, members are accountable to nobody but their constituents. Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 59 D. 759. S. P., Williams v. Cammack, 61 D. 508.

The taxing power is an incident of sovereignty, the exercise of which belongs exclusively to every state, and attaches alike upon everything that comes within its jurisdiction. People v. Coleman, 60 D. 581; McKeen v. County of Northampton, 88 D. 515.

The right of taxation is an inseparable incident of sovereignty, delegated in the general grant of legislative authority, and, the provision against poll-taxes excepted, is subject to no express limitations or restrictions, when used by the legislature as a means to accomplish a lawful purpose. Hill v. Higdon, 67 D. 289.

The taxing power in this country is not altogether arbitrary. Equality, as far as practicable, and security of property against irresponsible power, must govern the legislature in the exercise of the taxing power. City of Lexington v. McQuillan, 35 D. 159.

The power of eminent domain and that of taxation explained and distinguished. People v. Mayor, 55 D. 266.

The power of apportionment of taxation is unlimited, unless restrained as a part of the power of taxation, since the two powers are identical and inseparable. Id.

Constitutional limitation or restraint on the power of apportionment of taxation does not exist in New York, and taxes may be apportioned according to the benefit each tax-payer is supposed to receive from the object on which the tax is expended. Id.

Constitutional prohibitions that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law and that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation do not apply to taxation. Id.

Property may be taxed in one state, although taxed in another, especially when it is within the limits of the former, and without the limits of the latter. Minturn v. Hays, 56 D. 366.

Taxation is a legislative right and duty, which must be exercised by the legislature, or under the authority of laws passed by them. Sharpless v. Mayor etc., 59 D. 759.

The imposition of a tax upon all lands within a certain county, for the purpose of establishing a work of improvement for the general good and benefit of all persons interested in such lands, is not a taking of private property for a public use, but is a legitimate exercise of the power of taxation by the legislature. Williams v. Cammack, 61 D. 508.

The power to sell lands upon failure to pay a tax levied thereon is a mere incident to the power of taxation. Id.

The legislature has power to impose a tax on a local district for the construction of local public improvements. Id.

The power to tax for a lawful purpose necessarily includes power to determine the extent and upon what property the tax should be levied. Hill v. Higdon, 67 D. 289; State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699.

Taxation may be limited by the legislature. State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699.

A tax, in California, is a personal debt or obligation in the nature thereof, due from the property holder, and is not a mere charge upon the property created by and depending upon the regularity of the proceedings given by statute. People v. Seymour, 76 D. 521.

* Definition of taxation, see note, 1 R. 222.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

The power of the legislature to tax is neither restricted as to mode nor limited as to time; and therefore, though payment of a tax can only be enforced according to law, yet, if from accident, or oversight, or remission, on the part of the tax-payer, the time for payment has passed, or the mere mode of charging him has not been followed by the officers, the legislature may still compel him to pay. Id.

Rights of eminent domain and taxation may be exercised for the construction of works of public use and benefit, where no constitutional restriction forbids it. Anderson v. Kerns D. Co., 77 D. 63.

The objects for which money is raised by taxation must be public, and such as subserve the common interest and well-being of the community required to contribute. Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 88 D. 711.

The court will not be justified in declaring a tax void, and arresting proceedings for its collection, unless the absence of all possible public interest in the purposes for which the funds are raised is so clear and palpable as to be immediately perceptible to every mind. Id.

Claims founded in equity and justice, in the largest sense of those terms, or in gratitude or charity, will support a tax. Id.

The right or power of taxation, originally inherent in the states, is not abridged by the grant of similar power to the government of the Union; and it may be concurrently exercised by the two governments. Southern Exp. Co. v. Hood, 94 D. 141.

A tax duly assessed is not a debt within the clause of the constitution prohibiting the passage of a law impairing the obligations of a contract. City of Augusta v. North, 2 R. 55.

For a discussion of the taxing power of the legislature, see Hanson v. Vernon, 1 R. 215; Stewart v. Polk Co., 1 R. 238; People v. Salem, 4 R. 400; Whiting v. Sheboygan R. R. Co., 3 R. 30.

2. Its limits and exceptions. — The power of taxation is a necessary accompaniment of the power of legislation, and is limited only by the extent of that power. Battle v. Mobile, 44 D. 433.

Taxation means a certain mode of raising revenue for public purpose in which the community that pays it has an interest. The right of the state to lay taxes has no greater extent than this. Sharpless v. Mayor etc., 59 D. 759.

The power of taxation is limited only by discretion of legislature, when exercised by the government itself, and when exercised by subordinate bodies is limited by the objects for which the legislature has seen fit to authorize it to be exercised, and by such restrictions as the legislature has seen fit to prescribe, unless, indeed, it is further limited by some constitutional provision. Nichols v. Bridgeport, 60 D. 636.

Local taxation must be permitted only to defray expenses in cases of public use and benefit. Anderson v. Kerns D. Co., 77 D. 63.

The legislature cannot validate an invalid tax sale by a subsequent law. Conway v. Cable, 87 D. 240.

The legislature cannot create a public debt, or levy a tax, or authorize a municipal corporation to do so, in order to raise funds for a mere private purpose. Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 88 D. 711.

An act of the legislature authorizing contributions to be levied for a mere private purpose, or even for a public purpose in which the people from whom they are to be exacted have no interest, is not a law, but a judicial sentence, and not within the legitimate scope of legislative authority. But within this limit, the power of the legislature to impose taxes, or to authorize their imposition by subordinate municipal authorities, is discretionary. Grim v. Weissenberg School District, 98 D. 237.

A de facto government, which is able to maintain its supremacy by its armies, may exercise the taxing power; and those who are subject to its control are bound to obedience. But if it assesses a tax, and is overthrown before it is collected, the rightful sovereign, whose power is established, will not enforce such assessment against the subjects of the government de jure. O'Byrne v. Mayor, 5 R. 532.

Under a railroad charter binding the company to pay a certain fixed rate annually in lieu of all other taxes, and reserving the power to the state to repeal or modify the charter, the state may not at will increase the annual rate. State v. Board of Assessors, 57 R. 516.

3. Constitutionality of statutes imposing taxes. — An act of the legislature would not be law when it authorizes contributions to be levied for a mere private purpose, or for a purpose which, though it be public, is one in which the people from whom they are exacted have no interest. The act would be but a sentence commanding the periodical payment of a certain sum by one portion or class of people. The power to make such order is not legislative, but judicial, and was not given to the legislature by the general grant of legislative authority. Sharpless v. Mayor etc., 59 D. 759.

A tax law is not unconstitutional on the ground that the act authorizes contributions to be levied for a public purpose in which those from whom they are exacted have no interest, unless it is apparent at first blush that the community taxed can have no possible interest in the purpose to which their money is to be applied. And this is more especially true if it be a local tax, and if the authorities have themselves laid the tax in pursuance of an act of the legislature. Id.

An act levying a tax on consigned goods in the hands of the consignee is not in violation of the clause of the constitution of the United States which guarantees to citizens of one state the same privileges and immunities to which they are entitled in their own states. People v. Coleman, 60 D. 391.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The revenue act of 1853 is not in derogation of the constitution of California, or of the constitution of the United States. Id.

A state law providing that all goods, wares, etc., brought into California from any other state, or from a foreign country, to be sold in the state, owned by any person not domiciled in the state, shall be declared consigned goods, and that every person selling such goods shall be taxed a certain rate on the value of the goods so sold, the tax to be paid by the seller, and to be a lien on the goods in the hands of the owner, does not violate those provisions in the constitution of the United States which confer upon Congress the power to regulate commerce, and prohibit any state from levying any impost or duties on imports or exports. Id.

An act authorizing a levy, for levee purposes, of a uniform tax of not exceeding ten cents per acre on all lands in a certain county lying within ten miles of the Mississippi River, and a uniform tax of not exceeding five cents per acre on all lands in said county lying ten miles from said river, prescribes a rule of taxation for all the taxable lands in the county, as well for those lying beyond the range of ten miles from the river as for those lying within ten miles of it. Williams v. Cammack, 61 D. 508.

An act which exempts from taxation for levee purposes lands lying between the river and the levee does not confer exclusive privileges upon the owners of such lands, and does not violate the constitutional provisions "that all freemen are equal in rights," and "that no man or set of men are entitled to exclusive, separate, public emoluments or privileges from the community but in consideration of public services." These provisions declare that honors, emoluments, and privileges of a personal and political character are alike free and open to all the citizens of the state; but they have no reference to the private relations of the citizens, nor to the action of the legislature in passing laws regulating the domestic policy and business affairs of the people, or any portion of them. Id.

A statute making an assessment prima facie proof of delinquency of property for taxes, and of the amount thereof, and all that the forms of law in regard thereto have been complied with, merely affects the remedy, and is therefore constitutional. People v. Seymour, 76 D. 521.

A statute providing for enforcing the collection of taxes assessed in a former year is not unconstitutional because the delinquent tax list for such year was not properly published, as the liability for the tax preceded the publication of the delinquent list, and the suit would be based upon such liability. Id.

A tax levied in Sacramento County for wagon-road from eastern boundary line of said county through El Dorado County to Carson Valley, under the California act of 1858, and the tax levied for the agricultural hall under the act of 1859, are constitutional. Id.

The legislature may impose a tax on a local district to pay for a public improvement already made; and such action interferes with no contract, and divests no vested rights. Schenley v. Com., 78 D. 359.

In so far as it imposes tax upon bills of lading for the transportation of gold or silver from any point in this state to any point without the state, the act of the California legislature of April, 1858, amending the act of April, 1857, "to provide for the support of the government of this state from a tax to be levied and collected from foreign and inland bills and other matters," is in conflict with that clause of the constitution of the United States which declares that "no state shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws," and hence the provisions of the act must be restricted to the enforcement of the tax against instruments other than such bills of lading. Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 79 D. 176.

A state tax on the gross receipts of an express company doing business from points within the state to points without, in other states, is not unconstitutional, as tending to regulate commerce between the several states, or as laying any imposts or duties on imports or exports. Southern Express Co. v. Hood, 84 D. 141.

A tax imposed by a school district to raise money to pay bounties is for a public purpose and to subserve an end eminently advantageous to the community upon which it was levied. The legislature has, therefore, power to authorize such a tax, and can consequently cure any irregularity or want of authority in levying it by a retroactive law, even though thereby a right of action which had vested in an individual should be divested. Grim v. Weissenberg School Dist., 98 D. 237.

The Nevada stamp act requiring revenue stamps upon bills of exchange drawn in that state and payable in another state is a valid exercise of the taxing power, and is not in conflict with the United States constitution. Ex parte Martin, 8 R. 707.

By a convention ordinance of Missouri, it was provided that an annual tax of ten and fifteen per cent of the gross earnings of the North Missouri Railroad Company should be paid to the state in lieu of other taxation.

TAXES, I.

and applied in payment of the debt due from the state, on the bonds issued to the company by the state. Held, not unconstitutional, either as in violation of articles 5 and 7 of the amendments to the United States constitution (for these articles are only restrictive of federal power), or as impairing the obligation of contracts. Such an ordinance is a valid exercise of the taxing power. North Missouri R. R. Co. v. Maguire, 8 R. 141.

A statute of Pennsylvania provided that in addition to taxes already collectible, the owners of ore-beds in L. township should pay to the supervisors of the roads one and a half cents for each ton of ore mined and carried away by teams over the roads. In default of payment, the amount should be collected as debts were collected by law. Held, that the statute was constitutional, and that the owner of an ore-bed was bound to pay the tax, although he had leased it. Weber v. Reinhard, 13 R. 747.

A statute imposing a tax upon each suit at law, to be paid by the unsuccessful party, is not in contravention of a constitutional provision that "all courts shall be open, and every man shall have right and justice administered without sale, denial, or delay." Harrison v. Willis, 19 R. 604.

The constitution authorized the legislature to tax certain specified business classes, among which litigants were not included. Held, that its power to tax was not limited to the classes named, and that a statute imposing a tax upon one commencing a suit at law was constitutional. State v. County Comm'rs, 19 R. 641.

A state tax upon "the entire amount of premiums received by insurance companies," although it covers premiums drawn from sources outside the state, is not in conflict with the federal constitution. Ins. Co. of No. Amer. v. Com., 30 R. 352.

A tax on gifts, legacies, and collateral inheritances is constitutional. Matter of McPherson, 58 R. 502.

4. Delegation of the taxing power.*

—A state has an undoubted power to tax persons and property within its limits, and it may delegate such power to a civil corporation, so far as it may be necessary for the good government of the corporation. Harrison v. Mayor, 41 D. 633.

A statute authorizing a levee company to levy a tax per acre upon the land-owners within a certain district, for the purpose of reclaiming the lands within such district from inundation, by leveeing, ditching, and embanking, is constitutional, and not in conflict with the constitutional provision which requires all property subject to taxation to be taxed in proportion to its value. Egyptian Levee Co. v. Hardin, 72 D. 276.

The legislature may delegate the power of levying a tax for special purposes to police commissioners appointed by the legislature instead of to the city authorities. Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. State, 74 D. 572.

When the legislature provides for a tax by any agency whatever, it is, in contemplation of the constitution, the act of the people, and binding on all alike. Ib.

A statute authorized towns in which manufacturing establishments should be located to exempt the same from taxation for a term of years. Held, that the statute was unconstitutional, because,—1. It in effect authorized unequal taxation; and 2. The legislature could not delegate to a municipal corporation its power of determining upon what property taxes shall or shall not be imposed. Brewer Brick Co. v. Inhabit. of Brewer, 16 R. 395.

The remission of a tax by a vote of a town is in substance and effect the same as a gift, and a statute authorizing it is void. Ib.

5. Equality and uniformity of taxation.—Taxation, although not universal, must be general and uniform. City of Lexington v. McQuillan, 35 D. 159.

To exact from one citizen or from one county the entire revenue would be equivalent to taking private property for public use. Ib.

Persons in the same class, and property of the same kind, must generally be subjected to the same burden, in Kentucky, to constitute taxation. Ib.

An ordinance passed by a city, under authority of the legislature, taxing insurance companies, is not invalid because it exempts a particular company from the payment of the tax, where such ordinance recites a sufficient consideration for the granting of such exemption. Com. v. Milton, 54 D. 522.

A revenue law intended by the legislature to affect all persons and property alike, as near as possible, does not violate a constitutional provision that "laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation." In the very nature of things, it is impossible to devise a tax law that shall operate with perfect equality upon all. People v. Coleman, 60 D. 581.

A constitutional provision that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state" does not operate as a limitation upon the taxing power of the legislature, and apply to every species of taxation, but applies only to direct taxation upon property as such. It was intended to prevent the legislature from fixing an arbitrary standard as to kind or quality. Ib.

Although the Virginia constitution provides that taxes shall be equal and uniform, it is within the constitutional power of the legislature to impose a tax upon the transmission of estates by devise or descent, and prescribe the rate of the same. Eyre v. Jacob, 73 D. 367.

* Delegation of powers of taxation by legislature, see note, 74 D. 560-565.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Neither legislature nor courts can disregard provisions of the constitution on the subject of taxation because they may think them to be unjust and unequal, or even arbitrary and oppressive. People v. Worthington, 74 D. 86.

Local taxation for objects in themselves local is not prohibited by constitutional provisions that the rate of taxation shall be uniform and equal, and that local laws authorizing taxation are prohibited. They require a general uniform levy for state purposes, but they do not forbid local taxation under general laws. Anderson v. Kerns D. Co., 77 D. 63.

Discrimination in taxation may be made between foreign corporations and domestic corporations of the same character. Ducat v. Chicago, 95 D. 529.

A tax imposed upon a corporation is not a tax upon persons or property of corporators or stockholders. It is the artificial being, the mere legal entity, which is taxed, and the tax is paid out of its funds. And as a foreign corporation has no status as a citizen of the state creating it, the objection that a tax imposed upon it is not uniform cannot be maintained. Id.

A tax was imposed upon the gross receipts of all railroad companies in lieu of all other taxes. Held, not a direct tax upon the property of such companies within the meaning of the constitution, which required all direct taxes on property to be equal and uniform. State v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 24 R. 511.

The constitutional provision that taxes shall be equal and uniform does not prevent the legislature, or any municipal corporation authorized thereto by the legislature, from dividing the objects of taxation into different classes, and imposing different taxes on each class, but merely requires that the tax on each member of the same class shall be the same. New Orleans v. Kaufman, 29 R. 328.

The law imposing a smaller license tax on proprietors of bars or drinking-saloons kept on steamboats owned and registered in Louisiana, than on the owners of bars kept on land, does not violate the clause of the constitution prescribing equality and uniformity of taxation. State v. Rolle, 31 R. 234.

A statute exempting from taxation property to the amount of five hundred dollars of widows and maids or any female minor whose father is dead, and whose exempt property does not exceed one thousand dollars, is unconstitutional, because unequal, and not for "charitable purposes." State v. City of Indianapolis, 35 R. 223.

A statute taxing some railroad companies upon gross receipts and others upon capital stock is unconstitutional for inequality. Worth v. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co., 45 R. 679.

A law imposing a tax on owners of sleeping-cars for running them over the railway of another, but exempting the act of running the same kind of cars over the road of the owners of the cars, is unconstitutional. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. State, 53 R. 758.

For the valuation and assessment of a tax upon certain classes of corporations a special board may be constituted by the state. State v. Board of Assessors, 57 R. 516.

A tax on the property of railroad and canal companies alone is unconstitutional. Id.

II. WHO MAY BE TAXED, AND FOR WHAT PROPERTY; EXEMPTIONS.

6. Non-residents.* — Personal property of a ward cannot be taxed in the district in which his guardian has his domicile, where the ward lives with his mother in another district, the father being dead and the mother having since remarried. School Directors v. James, 37 D. 525.

Personal estate of a citizen of another state, when employed in this state is as much the subject of taxation as property of the same kind belonging to our own citizens; and the fact that it is also elsewhere held subject to taxation is not a circumstance which interferes with the exercise of the power in the state where it is. Battle v. Mobile, 44 D. 438.

Non-residents are not exempted from taxation because section 8 of the California revenue act of 1851 provides that "every person shall be listed in the county where he resides." Minturn v. Hays, 56 D. 368.

A change of domicile, so far as it respects the question of taxation, cannot be effected by intention alone, and without actual removal. Stoddert v. Ward, 100 D. 83.

A person is liable to taxation as a citizen of a certain county so long as he continues in fact to reside in such county; and the levy of the year being completed while he so continues to reside in the county, and before he removes therefrom, he is chargeable with the taxes assessed for that year. Id.

The question of change of domicile, in respect to taxation, is a question of fact; and if a tax-payer has actually changed his domicile, he cannot afterward be lawfully assessed in the place from which he has removed, although his removal was for the purpose of avoiding or lessening the taxation of his property. Thayer v. Boston, 26 R. 650.

Under a statute providing for taxation of all personal property within the state, owned by non-residents, a tax cannot be imposed on choses in action owned by a non-resident, and left with an attorney in the state for collection, nor on municipal bonds so owned and temporarily on deposit in a bank in the state for safe-keeping. Herron v. Keenan, 26 R. 87.

* Taxing property of non-residents, see note, 56 D. 584.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

For purposes of taxation, a residence, once acquired, will not be presumed to be changed from the mere fact that, leaving his family, a man has gone elsewhere and entered into business. Nugent v. Bates, 33 R. 117.

Mortgages of non-residents may be taxed where recorded without regard to the time of the execution of the contract. Mumford v. Sewall, 50 R. 462.

Notes and mortgages belonging to a non-resident, but placed in the hands of an agent in this state for collection and reloading in this state, are taxable here. Finch v. County of York, 56 R. 741.

A statute provided that persons residing outside of a city or town, and electing to be transferred to such city or town for educational purposes, or who should send their children to a school in such city or town, should be liable to taxation on their property in such city or town as if they resided therein. Held, constitutional as to persons so sending their children to school, without making such election to be transferred. Kent v. Town of Kentland, 30 R. 182.

One domiciled in Boston, Massachusetts, went to Europe in 1876 with his family for an indefinite term of absence, and remained abroad until 1879. On leaving he had determined never to return to reside in Boston, and before May 1, 1877, he had decided to take up his residence, on his return, in Waterford, Connecticut, and on his return he went there to reside. Held, that his "domicile," for the purposes of taxation, was in Boston on the 1st of May, 1877. Borland v. Boston, 42 R. 424.

7. Corporations, generally.—A franchise, as property, is liable to taxation, according to its value, for the support of government, whether paid for by a bonus or not. Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 48 D. 531.

A burden or bonus imposed by charters upon the corporation, or by the acts of assembly renewing the charters, is not a tax, but a price or condition arbitrarily or discretionally fixed by the legislature as the consideration of its grant. Id.

A banking corporation's property is liable to taxation, like the property of individuals, unless it is otherwise agreed upon in their charter; and such property consists in their franchise, or right to do banking business, within the limits of their charter; their capital invested in such business; their surplus earnings, set apart undivided; and such other property, real and personal, as they may be authorized to have. State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699.

The tax law of Kentucky applies to persons only, and not to political bodies exercising in different degrees the sovereignty of the state. City of Louisville v. Com., 85 D. 624.

The gross receipts of an express company upon which it is taxed does not include such sums as it collects for forwarding goods over connecting lines, as agents for such lines; nor such sums as the company are compelled to pay to the railroad and steamship companies over which it does business. Southern Exp. Co. v. Hood, 94 D. 141.

A telegraph line is taxable as real estate, although it has paid a privilege tax. Western U. Tel. Co. v. State, 40 R. 99.

The legislature may authorize the taxation of a toll-bridge against the corporation, and of the shares of the stock of the corporation against the stockholders. Cook v. City of Burlington, 44 R. 679.

8. Foreign corporations.*—A state cannot tax a foreign corporation upon a different principle or in a different manner from what she can tax one of her own domestic corporations. Erie Ry. Co. v. State, 86 D. 228.

The act of taxing property is an acknowledgment of the legal status of a person or company upon whom the tax is levied. A state under a tax law cannot require a foreign corporation to pay any sum it may please, and then defend the act upon the plea that the company taxed has no rights but such as of grace may be conferred upon it. Id.

A state may impose upon corporations of other states a tax for the privilege of carrying on their business within it, although no equivalent burden is imposed upon its domestic corporations. Com. v. Milton, 54 D. 522; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Com., 96 D. 331.

For purposes of taxation, a bridge over the Potomac River, and other property lying within the state of Maryland, belonging to a bridge corporation which does business in Virginia, is assessable in the county in which it is situated under a Maryland law, which provides that the property of a corporation having no place of business in the state shall be assessed for taxation in the county where such property is situated. O'Neal v. Virginia Bridge Co., 79 D. 669.

The Massachusetts legislature may, under statutes of that state, constitutionally tax foreign corporation having an office or place of business within that commonwealth. Attorney-General v. Bay State M. Co., 96 D. 717.

Stock in a foreign corporation may be taxed to the resident owner. Worth v. Ashe County, 33 R. 692; McKeen v. County of Northampton, 88 D. 515; although the capital of such corporation is taxed where it is located. Bradley v. Bauder, 38 R. 547.

9. Railroad companies.†—The rolling stock of a railroad company is personal property, and, as such, liable to be seized and sold for the collection of a tax against the company. Randall v. Ethell, 11 R. 747; Sangamon etc. R. R. Co. v. Morgan Co., 56 D. 497; Hoyle v. Plattsburgh etc. R. R. Co., 13 R. 595.

The rolling stock of railroad is so connected with the purposes and uses of the track and superstructure that it is within the power of the legislature to treat it as real property, for the purposes of taxation. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. State, 87 D. 358.

A county in which a railroad company has no residence cannot tax the proportion of the company's personal property which the length of track in that county bears to the whole length of the track within the state. Sangamon etc. R. R. Co. v. Morgan Co., 56 D. 497.

A county authorized to tax property within its limits may tax the portion of a railroad track within its limits. Id.

Valuation for county taxation of a portion of a railroad within the county must be of that portion of road within the county, irrespective of the value of the whole road, and not of an undivided part of the value of the whole road. Id.

Rules for assessment and valuation of a railroad for city purposes are the same as those for county purposes. Id.

A railroad, from one end to the other, is an entirety, and as a whole only may be subject to taxation or coercive sale; it, with its appurtenances, is considered by the law as one entire thing, and in such consolidated character it must be taxed for state revenue, and is not subject to local taxation by the counties through which it runs. Applegate v. Ernst, 96 D. 272.

A railroad cannot be taxed to raise funds to pay the amount of a county's subscription to aid in building the road. Id.

A railroad company carrying on also an independent express business on its own account is subject to taxation as an express company. Memphis etc. R. R. Co. v. State, 42 R. 673.

Sleeping-cars hired and run by a railway company in Colorado, from a company in Illinois having no office or place of business in Colorado, are taxable in the latter state. Carskile v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 54 R. 553.

10. What property is taxable, generally.—Taxes are laid for the support of government, and all property made liable to contribute to this end ought to be embraced in assessments for that purpose. O'Neal v. Virginia Bridge Co., 79 D. 369.

No property is exempt from execution in case of defaults for taxes. Scales v. Alvis, 46 D. 269.

Credits are property within the meaning of a provision of the Illinois constitution authorizing the legislature to provide for levying a tax upon every person in proportion to the value of his property. People v. Worthington, 74 D. 86.

The people of a state, in framing their constitution, have an absolute right to tax, or to exempt from taxation, rights or credits, or any other interest or property. The exercise of such right is not restrained by any provision of the federal constitution; nor is there any compact between the federal and state governments forbidding it. Id.

The constitution of Illinois has conferred upon the legislature authority to tax all credits according to their real value. And the legislature, in imposing such tax, have simply carried out the intention of the constitution in letter and in spirit. Id.

A resident of Iowa had deposited for safe-keeping in Illinois promissory notes that had never been brought by him into Iowa. Held, that they were subject to taxation in Iowa. Hunter v. Supervisors etc., 11 R. 132. Contra, Wilcox v. Ellis, 19 R. 107.

A state legislature has power to tax persons residing in the state for money lent by them to persons residing out of the state and secured upon real property out of the state. Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 19 R. 548.

A state constitution provided that "all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value." Held, that debts due were not property, and were not, therefore, taxable. People v. Hibernia Bank, 21 R. 704.

The notes, bills, etc., representing money loaned at interest by a corporation are its "property," and are liable to taxation within the constitution. New Orleans v. Mechanics' etc. Ins. Co., 31 R. 232.

11. What real property, or interest thereon, is taxable.—The jurisdiction of a county to levy a tax on real estate does not extend beyond its own limits, for real estate necessarily has a fixed and unchangeable locality. Sangamon etc. R. R. Co. v. Morgan Co., 56 D. 497.

A tax is a charge attaching to land under all circumstances, regardless of encumbrances, or the rights of any one whomsoever. Ferguson v. Eiter, 76 D. 361.

A tract of land, though uninhabited, may be properly taxed. Wells v. Jackson I. M. Co., 90 D. 575.

A sale of lands by an assignee in bankruptcy does not divest the lien of the state for taxes. Stokes v. State, 12 R. 588.

12. What personal property is taxable, generally.—A person is legally taxable for personal property in the town of which he is an inhabitant when the tax is assessed; but the election to pay such taxes in one town instead of another is not conclusive of such person's habitancy, but only a circumstance to be considered with others, in order to determine where he is liable. Lyman v. Fiske, 28 D. 293.

Personal property may be taxed where it is permanently located, although in general personal property follows the residence of the owner and is there taxable. Mills v. Thornton, 79 D. 377; Sangamon etc. R. R. Co. v. Morgan Co., 56 D. 497.

Personal property temporarily absent from the owner's residence and to be immediately returned is taxable at the owner's residence. Sangamon etc. R. R. Co. v. Morgan Co., 56 D. 497.

The situs of personal property does not follow the domicile of its owner for purposes of taxation. New Albany v. Meekin, 56 D. 522.

Chattels purchased in one state by a citizen of another, and remaining in the former to receive a finishing process of manufacture, are taxable in the state where purchased. Standard Oil Co. v. Combs, 49 R. 156.

A billiard-table erected and used merely for the purpose of amusement is liable to the tax on "billiard-tables," in the same way as if used for the purpose of gaming. Sears v. West, 3 D. 694.

Pipes of a gas company laid in the streets of a city are part of the "establishment" of the company, and are subject to taxation, under a statute providing that certain enumerated "and other manufacturing establishments" shall be taxable; for the apparatus for delivery is merely an extension and continuation of the apparatus for the manufacture of gas, and both belong to the "establishment"; but this, of course, does not include pipes owned by the city or by private persons, into which the company delivers gas for consumption. Memphis G. L. Co. v. State, 98 D. 452.

A law taxing dogs and appropriating the proceeds to payment of damage done by dogs to sheep is a constitutional exercise of police power. Van Horn v. People, 41 R. 159; Holt v. Roe, 48 R. 459.

Deposits in savings bank are not taxable to the bank and also to the depositors. Berry v. Windham, 47 R. 202.

13. Stocks and shares in banks.* — The personal property of a bank subject to taxation is so much of the capital stock paid in or secured as will remain after deducting therefrom the actual cost of all the real estate of the company. Bank of Utica v. Utica, 27 D. 72.

The mere fact that some corporations or some personal property are subject to a less rate of taxation than banks will not vitiate the law imposing taxes upon bank shares, unless it clearly appears to be the legislative intent to effect discrimination against them. McMahon v. Palmer, 55 R. 796.

The provisions of the act authorizing proceedings to punish for misconduct in refusing or neglecting to pay a tax upon personal property are not unconstitutional. 76.

A bank, shortly before the legal day for assessment of taxes, and with the intent to escape such tax, converted its capital stock into United States bonds not taxable. Soon after the day of assessment the bank sold the bonds and reconverted its capital stock. Held, that the capital stock was taxable by the state. Holly Springs etc. Ins. Co. v. Supervisors, 24 R. 668.

By the Massachusetts statute of June, 1868, chapter 349, entitled "An act concerning the taxing of bank shares," it was provided that the shares in national banks owned by non-residents of the commonwealth shall be assessed to the owners thereof in the cities or towns where the banks are located; that the rate of taxation shall be the same as on other moneyed capital; that the value of such shares shall be omitted from the valuation upon which the rate is to be based, and that the act shall "apply to taxes assessed and collected for the present year in the same manner and to the same effect as if it had been in force on the first day of May." Held, that the act was not unconstitutional, either as being in violation of the act of Congress of 1864, chapter 106, section 47, and 1868, chapter 7, or as levying a tax in a disproportional manner, or as being retrospective in its operation. Providence Inst. v. Boston, 3 R. 407.

The Bank of Smyrna was incorporated under the legislative condition that the company should pay the state semi-annually at the rate of one half of one per cent per annum on the stock actually paid in, during the continuance of the charter. This provision, however, was repealed at the ensuing session of the legislature, and before the bank was organized. This repealing supplement or act provided that "in lieu of other taxes" the bank should pay a tax semi-annually at the rate of one fourth of one per cent on the whole of the capital stock actually paid in, during the continuance of the charter. By a subsequent act, a tax of one fourth of one per cent was imposed on seventy-five per cent of the surplus or contingent fund of the state banks generally. The words "in lieu of other taxes," contained in the supplemental act to the charter, were held not to exempt the bank from the payment of the last-mentioned tax imposed on its surplus, or contingent fund, by the general act of the legislature. It was also held that these words would not warrant the inference that the state thereby agreed not to impose any tax thereafter on this or any other property of the bank. The general act imposing the tax on the surplus or contingent fund of the state banks generally, so far as it related to the Smyrna bank, was also held constitutional, and the bank bound to pay it. State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

14. — national banks. — Shares of stock in a national bank are liable for the same tax that shares of stock in a bank authorized by state laws are compelled to pay; and the officers of the national bank may be compelled to pay such tax for the respective share-holders. Com. v. First Nat. Bank, 96 D. 285.

Congress has constitutional power to establish a national bank in any state, and to provide that the shares of its capital stock shall be exempt from taxation by other states. Flint v. Board of Aldermen, 96 D. 713.

By the United States statute of 1864, chapter 106, section 41, Congress prohibited state taxation upon shares of national bank stock by any other state than the one where such bank was located. Thus shares of capital stock in a national bank located in New York City, and owned by a resident of Boston, Massachusetts, could not be assessed to the latter in Massachusetts. Id.

The owner of stock in a national bank is taxable in the city or town where he resides, and not where the bank is located. Clapp v. City of Burlington, 1 R. 355. [Otherwise under a subsequent act.]

A statute empowering the authorities of a town to impose the same taxes, for municipal purposes, upon non-residents pursuing their ordinary avocations within the corporate limits as upon the inhabitants, with a proviso that non-residents so taxed shall have the right to vote at municipal elections, is not abrogated by a change in the state constitution which deprives the non-resident taxpayer of his vote, and authorizes a tax upon the shares in a national bank located in the town, and held by one who conducts his ordinary business therein, but whose residence is in the county, outside the corporate limits. Moore v. Mayor etc. 30 R. 75.

In the assessment of shares of national banks in a city, when the owner does not reside in the ward where the bank is located and has no real estate therein, the assessment may be made upon a special list, although the owner lives and is assessed for personal property in another ward. McMahon v. Palmer, 55 R. 796.

15. — other corporations. — Shares of stock in a foreign manufacturing corporation are personalty, and if owned by citizens of Massachusetts, are taxable there for their full value, without deducting the value of machinery and real estate belonging to the corporation, which is in the place of its corporate existence, and there taxed. Dwight v. Mayor, 90 D. 149.

The owner of shares of stock in a foreign corporation is liable to taxation thereon in the state where he resides, although he has paid a tax thereon in the state where the corporation is located. Dyer v. Osborne, 23 R. 460.

The stocks and bonds of an interstate railway are liable to taxation by any state in which it is situate in proportion to the length of the road in such state. Pittsburg etc. R. R. Co. v. Com., 5 R. 344.

Stockholders in a moneyed corporation are liable to taxation on their shares, although the capital stock has also paid a tax. Memphis v. Ensley, 32 R. 532.

Stock of a corporation may be taxed to the owner, independently of taxation upon the corporate franchises and property. Belo v. Foreyth County, 33 R. 688.

Stock of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange is taxable as property. Schreiber v. Board of Assessors, 55 R. 525.

16. Validity of statutes taxing travel and means of transportation. — Property employed in foreign or domestic commerce may be taxed. Battle v. Mobile, 44 D. 438.

A transfer-boat, registered at Cairo, Illinois, plying between that place and Fillmore, Kentucky, on the opposite shore of the Ohio River, and owned half by a railway corporation of Illinois and half by a railway corporation of another state, and used for the transfer of cars of both companies, laid up at Cairo when not in use, both companies having a business office and the boat-hands residing there, is properly taxed there to both corporations. Irvin v. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co., 24 R. 208.

Steamers used by a railroad company in transporting freight-cars across water intervening between the termini of the tracks are not taxable as a part of the "roadway" or "road-bed." San Francisco v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 49 R. 98.

17. — taxing vessels — Tonnage taxes. — Steamboats employed within the state may be taxed under a general ordinance levying a tax on all personal estate, although regularly enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States. Battle v. Mobile, 44 D. 438.

Steamboats may be taxed where the owner resides, though they are navigated beyond the boundary of the state; and a statute requiring them to be so taxed does not conflict with the constitution of the United States nor the ordinance of 1787. Perry v. Torrence, 32 D. 725.

The share of a part owner of a steamboat occasionally touching at a city in which he resides, but not enrolled or usually lying there, is not taxable there under a charter providing for the taxation of property within that city. New Albany v. Meekin, 56 D. 522.

A state tax on the tonnage transported by railroads, — held, not in violation of the federal constitution. Com. v. Erie R'y Co., 1 R. 399; reversed, 15 Wall. 282.

18. — taxing trades, professions, and employments.* — The power to tax trades, professions, and occupations is entirely within the control and rests in the sound discretion of the legislature. People v. Coleman, 60 D. 581.

Indirect taxation by way of licenses upon particular pursuits or tariffs is not prohibited by a constitutional provision requiring the general levy of direct taxes for state purposes to be upon a uniform assessment. Anderson v. Kerns D. Co., 77 D. 63.

A trader is one who sells goods substantially in the form in which they are bought, and who has not converted them into another form of property by his skill and labor; therefore one who carries on the business of buying timber and converting it into lumber for sale is a manufacturer, and not liable to indictment for failure to pay a tax and obtain a license as a "trader." State v. Chadborn, 30 R. 94.

The legislature has the power to levy a license or occupational tax upon lawyers. Young v. Thomas, 35 R. 93; Simmons v. State, 49 D. 131.

A license tax upon merchants, graduated by the average amount of their stock, is not unconstitutional. City of Newton v. Atchison, 47 R. 486.

A commission merchant who is also an agent for steamships and other vessels is taxable for both occupations. Wilder v. Mayor etc., 48 R. 598.

A company printing and publishing a newspaper is not a "manufacturer," but one doing the business of job-printing, engraving, electrotyping, etc., is a "manufacturer." Evening Journal Ass'n v. Board of Assessors, 52 R. 107, note.

A state statute imposing a license tax on drummers, and allowing drummers paying a dealer's tax an equal rebate on their purchase tax, is not unconstitutional. State v. Long, 59 R. 263. And see Ex parte Asher, 59 R. 276.

A statute provided for the assessment of a specified tax on liquor dealers, the money thereby raised to be devoted to the use of the towns, villages, and cities in which the business was carried on. Held, 1. Not a "state tax," and therefore not within the constitutional provision directing the application of "specific state taxes"; 2. That the fact that the same tax was levied on all dealers without regard to the amount of business did not render it unjust or unequal; 3. That the parties taxed could not object because the municipality had no voice in the levy, nor because the sheriff, and not the tax collector, was made the collector; and 4. That the tax was not equivalent to a license so as to come within the constitutional prohibition of licensing the sale of liquors. Youngblood v. Sexton, 20 R. 654.

19. What is not subject to state taxation. — The right to keep any species of property cannot by the legislature be converted into and taxed as a privilege. Stevens v. State, 35 D. 72.

The right to use a billiard-table is a common right possessed by every citizen, and cannot be taxed as a privilege. Id.

The power to tax privileges conferred by the constitution means such privileges as cannot be exercised by any citizen without the aid of some statutory provision granting such privilege or right to one or more individuals, as, for instance, the right of keeping a ferry or public road and collecting tolls thereon, the right of banking, etc.; but a right not created by or dependent upon statute, as, for instance, the right to acquire and use property, is not a privilege subject to taxation. Id.

The draining of marshes and ponds for the promotion of public health is a public object for which taxes may be assessed. But the draining of farms to render them more valuable to the owners is not a work of public utility, and a corporation organized for such purpose could not collect a tax to pay for the work. Anderson v. Kerns D. Co., 77 D. 63.

20. Relinquishment by state of right to tax. — A state may make a valid contract to exempt property from taxation. State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699.

The power of taxation operates upon all persons and property belonging to the body politic. Its relinquishment ought never to be presumed. Battle v. Mobile, 44 D. 438. S. P., State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699; Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. State, 74 D. 572; Erie R'y Co. v. Com., 5 R. 351. And such surrender is never made, unless it be the result of express terms or necessary inference. Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 48 D. 531.

The legislature does not, by implication, divest itself of the power of taxing a corporation, by the exaction of a bonus as the condition of a grant of corporate powers. Id. Thus where a railroad was constructed under a law requiring it to pay for the franchise a fixed annual sum, and to submit to taxation on its stock, — held, that this did not preclude the state from levying a further and general tax upon the corporation. Erie R'y Co. v. Com., 5 R. 351.

21. Power of legislature to pass exemption laws. — The legislature has no power to exempt from taxation any species of property, however owned, under section 13 of article 11 of the California constitution, which declares that "all property in this state shall be taxed in proportion to its value." Minturn v. Hays, 56 D. 366; People v. Eddy, 13 R. 143.

The legislature cannot grant to a corporation or individual exemption from taxation forever; it has no authority to convey away upon any consideration the taxing power over any property so as to bind the action of future legislatures. Mott v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 72 D. 664.

Tax-payers, state creditors, and canal commissioners have such beneficial interest as entitles them to be heard in opposition to the validity of an act of the legislature which seeks to grant away forever the taxing power over certain property, or to improperly sell or dispose of the state's system of railroads and canals. Ib.

Exemption of property from taxation is a question of policy, and not of power. State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699.

The legislature has power to bind the state by contract with a corporation created by its charter not to tax for a given time the franchise or property of such corporation further than is agreed upon in the charter. Ib.

22. — and to repeal or alter them. — A statute exempting property from the payment of rates is not a contract, and may be repealed and the property taxed. Lord v. Litchfield, 4 R. 41; East Saginaw Mfg. Co. v. East Saginaw, 2 R. 82.

An act declaring that all estates granted for any religious, educational, or charitable uses shall forever remain to such uses, and shall also be exempt from the payment of rates, is not a contract between the state and the grantor or grantees; and a subsequent act taxing such of those estates as have been leased or conveyed in such a manner as to yield no longer an annual income for such use is valid. Lord v. Litchfield, 4 R. 41.

The legislature passed an act exempting from taxation all property used for the purpose of manufacturing salt, and offering a bounty of ten cents a bushel for salt manufactured in the state. Two years later the said act was amended by limiting the exemption from taxation to five years. The five years having elapsed, the complainant, a corporation for the manufacture of salt, organized after the passage of the original act, filed a bill to restrain the collection of a tax upon their property, on the ground that the exemption from taxation was in the nature of a contract between the state and the parties acting under it, and therefore protected by the United States constitution. Held, that the act was not in the nature of a contract, and could be amended or repealed at any time. East Saginaw Mfg. Co. v. East Saginaw, 2 R. 82.

23. How such laws are construed. — A statute exempting the property of a railroad company and its shares from taxation exempts the company from all taxation. Worth v. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co., 45 R. 679.

The express exceptions specified in the tax law of Kentucky do not imply that no property not excepted shall be exempt, or that municipal property, used for public purposes of local government, was intended to be subject to taxation. Property owned and used by city of Louisville, in its social or commercial capacity, as a private corporation, and for its own profit, such as vacant lots, market-houses, fire-engines, etc., is subject to taxation, but property dedicated to charity is not. City of Louisville v. Com., 85 D. 624.

Provisions of Kentucky statute law defining property subject to and exempt from taxation, where embodied. See Ib.

24. What property is exempt, generally. — A statute exempting from taxation lands, tenements, and other estates, extends to money at interest. Attwater v. Woodbridge, 16 D. 46.

Internal revenue stamps are exempt from state and local taxation. Palfrey v. Boston, 3 R. 364.

Land of a county used for county purposes is exempt from all taxation, whether imposed for public purposes or for local improvements of a public nature. Worcester v. Worcester, 17 R. 159.

Property the title to which is held by the United States, for whatever purpose, is exempt from state taxation while so held. People v. United States, 34 R. 155.

25. What is not. — Gasometers and gas mains and pipes of a gas company are not part of its "machinery actually used in the manufacture" of gas. Consolidated Gas Co. v. Mayor etc., 50 R. 237.

Fruit trees are not "growing crops" exempted by the constitution from taxation. Cottle v. Spitzer, 52 R. 305.

Vessels employed to convey timber to saw-mills are not exempt from taxation as "property employed in the manufacture of articles of wood." Martin v. New Orleans, 58 R. 194.

26. Exemptions in favor of corporations, generally. — The exemption of stock of a corporation from taxation protects the specific articles of property of the company, as the shares of stock embrace every species of property owned by the company. Mayor etc. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 48 D. 531.

Exemption of the stock of a corporation from taxation, when there are no words used by the legislature qualifying or limiting the extent of the immunity conferred, covers county and city as well as state taxes. Ib.

The corporation's right of exemption from taxation is not lost by the stockholders assenting to the fifteenth section of the Maryland act of 1835, chapter 395. Ib.

Property of a corporation is exempt from taxation only in so far as it is necessary and not merely convenient for the company to acquire and hold for the purposes for which it was incorporated, under a charter which, after making provision for the payment of certain duties, enacts "that no other tax or impost shall be levied or assessed upon the said company." State v. Commissioners, 57 D. 409.

The franchise of a corporation may be exempted from taxation by charter; but this affords no such immunity beyond what is expressly stipulated in the charter. The franchise is one property and the capital stock another. State v. Bank of Smyrna, 73 D. 699.

The exemption of property of a corporation from taxation can last only during the continuance of the charter granting this immunity. And unless this exemption is expressed when the charter is renewed and extended, the power to tax will revive. Id.

A charter providing that the franchise or property of a corporation shall not be taxed for a given time, or further than agreed upon in the charter, is a contract between the state and the corporators, which is inviolable under the constitution of the United States; and an agreement to limit or restrain the power of the state to impose further taxes on the franchise of a corporation during the continuance of its charter may enter into such a contract and have binding force. Id.

A bonus is a price paid for a franchise, or power to do banking business, and may be measured by a tax on the capital stock, or by a specific sum stipulated; but unless otherwise stipulated and agreed upon in the charter, the payment of a price for a franchise no more exempts from taxation other property of the corporation, such as the surplus accumulation of earnings derived from that business while in its hands undivided, than it does the dividends in the hands of the stockholders, or the banking-house, or any other real property which it holds. Id.

A corporation is exempt from all other taxes, where, by the laws under which it is incorporated, it is required to pay a certain annual specific tax on its paid-in capital, to be "in lieu of all other taxes upon all the property of said company." Le Roy v. East Saginaw City R'y, 100 D. 162.

Under a statute exempting from taxation a lot of ground for the use of a private banking institution, the bank is not entitled to exemption of such parts of the banking-house as are leased to others. De Soto Bank v. Memphis, 32 R. 530.

A grain-elevator erected by a railroad company on its lands and used by it in transshipping grain is exempt from taxation as for railroad and transshipping purposes. State v. Mayo, et al., 60 R. 648. But see Matter of Swigert, 59 R. 789.

27. — Charitable and educational institutions. — Lands granted to the trustees of Davidson Academy, in Tennessee, are exempt from taxation for ninety-nine years, under the language of the act, notwithstanding into whose hands they may come. State v. Hicks, 30 D. 423.

A statutory exemption from taxation of school-houses and seminaries of learning extends to such as are founded by a particular religious sect for instruction according to its doctrines. Ward v. Manchester, 22 R. 504.

A building used partly as a dormitory and boarding-house for students of an academy, and partly as a public house, is not exempt from taxation as land "for the use of the academy." Philips Exeter Acad. v. Exeter, 42 R. 589.

A charitable corporation which is, by its charter, "exempted from taxation of every kind," is not exempted from special assessments against its property for improvements in a street on which it abuts. Sheehan v. Good Samaritan Hospital, 11 R. 412; Broadway Bapt. Church v. McAtee, 8 R. 480; Boston Seamen's Friend Soc. v. Boston, 17 R. 153.

The constitution of a state provided that "such property as the general assembly may deem necessary for schools, religious and charitable purposes, may be exempt from taxation." Held, that only such property could be exempted as was actually used for the purposes named in the constitution; and that there could be no exemption of lands held for profit merely, although such profit was devoted to educational, religious, or charitable purposes. Northwestern University v. People, 22 R. 187.

Under a statute exempting all public libraries, grounds, and buildings of literary, scientific, benevolent, agricultural, and religious institutions and societies, devoted solely to the public objects of these institutions, not exceeding 640 acres in extent, and not leased or otherwise used with a view to pecuniary profit, — held, that the dwellings of professors on the grounds of literary institutions, and of clergymen, owned by religious societies, exclusively so used, and producing no income, are appropriate to the objects of those institutions and societies, and exempt from taxation. Griswold College v. State, 26 R. 138.

Such a statute is not in conflict with the constitutional provision that "the general assembly shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, nor shall any person be compelled to attend any place of worship, pay taxes, tithes, or other rates, for building or repairing places of worship, or the maintenance of any minister or ministry." Id.

A seminary originally owning eight acres of land, on which its buildings were located, afterward acquired about seventy-five acres, embraced in the same inclosure, and used for walks, lawns, garden, orchard, pasturage, and wood, all for the exclusive use of the institution. Held, that all the land was exempt from taxation, as not "used with a view to profit." Monticello Seminary v. People, 46 R. 702.

28. — religious societies. — A statute exempting from taxation the property which should be thereafter given for the support of the ministry of the Gospel is in the nature of a contract which the state cannot rescind or impair. Atwater v. Woodbridge, 16 D. 46.

The residence of a priest or clergyman is not exempt from taxation as a "building for religious worship" because it contains one room set apart as a religious chapel. St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors of Taxes, 34 R. 597.

A statute exempted from taxation churches and other public buildings for religious worship, with the appurtenant lots of ground used therewith for that purpose. Held, that this did not embrace a parsonage or rectory. First Presb. Church v. New Orleans, 31 R. 224.

Under a statute exempting from taxation "churches, meeting-houses, or other regular places of stated worship, in actual use and occupation for the purpose aforesaid," the land on which a church is in process of erection is not exempt. Mullen v. Commissioners, 27 R. 650.

Vacant lots bought by the authorities of a church and held in private ownership, in anticipation of the increase of the city, and with the intention of possibly erecting thereon a church, school, or hospital when needed, are not exempt from taxation as a "place of public worship" or a "charitable institution," or "property used for colleges or other school purposes." Enaut v. Tax Collectors, 51 R. 14.

29. Cemetery company. — The charter of a cemetery company provided that all property held and actually used by the corporation for burial purposes, or for the general uses of lot-holders, or subservient to burial uses, and which had been platted and recorded as cemetery grounds, should be exempt from taxation. The company had ground in actual use for cemetery purposes. It had also other lands, separated therefrom by a public highway, which were platted and recorded as cemetery lands, but never used for burial. The company had erected on the latter stables and houses, occupied and used by horses and men in the employ of the company, and removed mold and sand therefrom for the improvement of the burial-grounds, and used them for pasturage for horses. Held, that such use of the property did not render it exempt from taxation. People v. Cemetery Co., 29 R. 32.

III. ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION.

30. In general. — Taxes legally assessed upon an estate create a lien thereon, and lay the foundation for a title paramount to that derived by deed or mortgage. Williams v. Hilton, 58 D. 729.

The Wisconsin statute providing that any tax or assessment which has been set aside, by reason of irregularities or defects, may be reassessed, etc., has no application to a case where the tax or assessment was not authorized by law. Dean v. Charlton, 99 D. 205.

The time for making a return of taxable property in Indiana stated. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. State, 87 D. 358.

31. Powers and duties of assessors. — Assessors and collectors of taxes are independent public officers, not agents, of the towns in which they are respectively elected. Lorillard v. Monroe, 62 D. 120.

Assessments for taxes ought not to be vacated, and property released from taxation, because public officers have not strictly followed the statutes, which are merely directory. A substantial compliance with the statutory directions is sufficient. O'Neal v. Virginia Bridge Co., 79 D. 669.

32. Their liabilities. — Assessors are liable for taking property to pay a tax illegally assessed. Ingles v. Bosworth, 16 D. 419.

A tax assessed by the selectmen of a town for an object not within their corporate powers is illegal and void, and the selectmen are liable for property sold to satisfy such tax. Drew v. Davis, 33 D. 213.

Where a tax for legitimate purposes is blended with an illegal tax, by the vote creating both, the whole proceeding is void, and the matter stands as though no vote had been taken imposing a tax for any purpose. Id.

Selectmen, in the assessment and collection of taxes, do not act as a court. Their acts are not regarded as judgments. They are liable to an action by a party aggrieved, for any wrongful exercise of their authority. Henry v. Sargeant, 40 D. 146.

Selectmen who assess the tax and issue a warrant for its collection are responsible, if such tax is illegal by reason of informality in the listing. Id.

Assessors are not servants or agents of the town or parish so as to be civilly liable to such town or parish for neglect of duty. First Parish v. Fiske, 54 D. 755.

Parish assessors are not liable to the parish for neglect to assess the full tax voted by the parish, where they act in the bona fide belief that they are performing their duty; so especially where the tax, if assessed, would have been illegal. Nor for neglect to qualify by taking the oath required by law. Id.

Malice need not be proved, although alleged in the declaration, in an action on the case against a town assessor for altering the assessment list after it has been perfected and lodged with the town clerk, by reason of which alteration the plaintiff is compelled to pay an increased tax in order to save his property from sale under the tax warrant. And it is error for the court to charge the jury, in such case, that the allegation of malice is a material part of the declaration, which it is necessary to prove. Bristol Mfg. Co. v. Gridley, 71 D. 56.

An unlawful alteration of an assessment list by an assessor after it has passed out of his power is a direct violation of the rights of the owner of the property assessed, for which he may sustain an action, irrespective of the motive with which it was done. Ib.

Plaintiff's property was seized and sold to pay an assessment which was illegal because of want of jurisdiction of the assessors. Held, that plaintiff had two remedies, either against the assessors in tort, or against the town in assumpsit, for the proceeds of the property; but having elected the latter remedy and recovered judgment against the town, which was satisfied, he could not proceed against the assessors. Ware v. Percival, 14 R. 565.

33. Time, place, and manner of laying the assessment. — Taxes in Vermont must be assessed upon the lists in being and completed at the time the taxes are authorized. Henry v. Sargeant, 40 D. 148.

The acts of an assessor in making assessments for taxes are invalid, unless the provisions of the statute are strictly followed, and all its conditions fully complied with by him. Moss v. Shear, 85 D. 94.

An invalid assessment constitutes no charge upon the land, and no legal obligation is thereby imposed upon any one to pay the taxes. Ib.

The legislature has power to prescribe the form of proceedings in the assessment and collection of taxes, and, in matters of form, may declare what steps shall or shall not be essential to the validity of a tax sale or tax deed. Smith v. Smith, 88 D. 707.

A valid assignment in the name of a county may be written over the name and official title of the clerk of the county board of supervisors, where certificates of sale of land for taxes have been issued to the county as purchaser, where the purchaser has been authorized by law to assign the same by writing his name in blank on the back thereof, and where such clerk, having authority to sell and assign the certificates, has assigned the same by writing his name and official title in blank on the back thereof. State v. Winn, 88 D. 689.

34. Validity of assessment. — An assessment of a tax is valid, and is not vitiated as to those that are liable, although certain persons are assessed who are not liable to be taxed. Inglee v. Bosworth, 16 D. 419.

The assessment of "part of a lot," or of "one acre of a lot," without any location, is too vague to authorize or support a sale. Mannis v. Long, 15 D. 547.

The owner of real estate who does not return his property nor pay his tax, as required by statute, cannot dispute the legality of an assessment in the name of another, made upon the return of the owner's agent. Kingman v. Glover, 45 D. 756.

If the law relating to the levy of a tax is not strictly pursued by the officers, the tax will be void, and cannot be enforced by a sale of the property upon which it is levied and assessed. Mayor etc. v. Porter, 79 D. 686. Thus a tax assessed by assessors not sworn as required by law is illegal. First Parish v. Fiske, 54 D. 755. But a tax ought not to be rendered invalid by mere non-compliance with some direction of a statute, notwithstanding which the tax may have been entirely just and equal, or by any objection which does not go to the very groundwork of the tax. Mills v. Gleason, 78 D. 721.

The legislature has power to provide means for enforcement and collection of taxes, and as a means of fixing the amount of the tax it may require an assessment; and in the event of an informal or incorrect assessment, may as well prescribe a mode for the correction thereof as to prescribe the form thereof in the first instance. People v. Seymour, 76 D. 521.*

The intentional omission of taxable property by the assessor, materially affecting the equality of taxation, and increasing the burden of the party complaining, will avoid the tax; but the unintentional omission of such property by the officer attempting in good faith to carry out the requisitions of the law will not. Smith v. Smith, 88 D. 707.

35. The valuation. — Property may be taxed, but the taxation must not be disproportionate to its value. Stevens v. State, 35 D. 72.

The provision of the Missouri constitution requiring taxation to be proportioned to value of the property on which it is laid is only applicable to taxation in its usual, ordinary, and received sense, for state, county, city, and town purposes, and is not intended to apply to local assessments where the money raised is to be expended on the property taxed. Egyptian Levee Co. v. Hardin, 72 D. 276.

Property should be assessed, for purposes of taxation, at its present value, and not at its prospective value. State v. Ill. Cent. R. R. Co., 79 D. 396.

Railroad property should be assessed according to its value for the purposes for which it is constructed, and not for any other purposes to which it might be applied. Ib.

In ascertaining the present value of railroad property, an important element is the amount of net profits, if the property is devoted to the use for which it was designed, and is in a condition to produce its maximum income; but in connection with this, there should be considered what prudent men would give for the property, as a permanent investment, with a view to present and future income. Ib.

The Indiana constitution does not require a uniform method of valuation of property for taxation, but only "such regulations as shall secure a just valuation"; and in determining how this end shall be secured, the legislature must exercise a discretion, and unless the method adopted be clearly inadequate to secure the result, the courts cannot interfere. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. State, 87 D. 358.

A statute providing that appraisers, in estimating the value of a railroad for purposes of taxation, shall take into consideration the location of the road for business, the competition of other roads, its earnings, etc., is constitutional. Ib.

An assessment of a joint tax on two parcels of land of different owners, based upon a joint valuation thereof, is invalid. Jennings v. Collins, 96 D. 687.

Such an assessment creates no lien; but an apportionment, made as a formal reassessment of a separate parcel, upon a separate valuation thereof, and entered on the assessor's list and recommitted to the collector, does create a lien from that time upon such parcel. Ib.

Where one makes affidavit that his indebtedness exceeds his taxable personal property, and it appears that part of such indebtedness is a demand note for twenty-five thousand dollars, the proceeds of which were used to purchase government bonds which were pledged as collateral thereto, and it does not appear that the note is not a just debt, the assessors must allow a deduction therefor, although the transaction may have been a device to escape taxation. People v. Ryan, 42 R. 238.

36. Tax lists, assessment rolls, etc.

— Failure to perfect the list according to the convention of listers invalidates any tax assessed thereon. Henry v. Sargeant, 40 D. 146.

Under the California revenue act of 1854, the assessor is required to list the land in the name of the owner, when known, whether the land be vacant or occupied. If the land be listed to the owner, nothing more need be stated by the assessor. Moss v. Shear, 85 D. 94.

Under that act, the assessor must, when the owner is unknown and the land is unoccupied, list it as the land of a person unknown. If the land is unoccupied and the owner unknown, both of these facts must appear in the assessor's list, in order to make an assessment to an unknown owner valid. And if the land be listed as the land of a person unknown, the assessor must state that the land is so listed because the owner is unknown and the land is unoccupied. Ib.

The assessor must, when the owner is unknown, list the land, if occupied, in the name of the occupant. If the land is occupied and the owner unknown, both of these facts must appear, in the list, in order to make an assessment to the occupant valid. Where the land is occupied, ignorance of the true owner is a condition precedent to the validity of an assessment against an occupant; and if the land be listed in the name of an occupant who is not the owner, it must be stated by the assessor to have been so listed because the owner was unknown to him. Ib.

Where a single sum is assessed upon an unincorporated place, the treasurer's warrant is a list within the meaning of the statute, and the certificate of the deputy secretary upon the copy of it returned by the collector is competent evidence of the time of filing and return. Wells v. Jackson I. M. Co., 90 D. 575.

The assessment roll need not be signed, the signature of the assessor to his certificate attached thereto is sufficient. Lacey v. Davis, 66 D. 524.

An assessor's certificate to a township assessment roll is fatally defective when it states that the assessors have estimated the real estate at a sum which, for the purpose of assessing, they believed to be the true value thereof, instead of at what they believed to be the true cash value thereof, as required by law; and a sale for taxes levied on the basis of such assessment roll conveys no title to the purchaser. Clark v. Crane, 71 D. 776.

What the law requires to be done for the protection of the tax-payer in the assessment and collection of taxes is mandatory, and cannot be regarded as merely directory. Ib.

The intentional omission of taxable property of a city from an assessment roll invalidates taxes levied thereon, notwithstanding such omission is made by the assessor for the sole purpose of giving effect to an ordinance passed by the common council of the city in good faith, under the honest belief that it had authority to exempt such property from taxation, for the purpose of advancing the interests of the city. Hersey v. Supervisors, 82 D. 713.

Unintentional omissions of taxable property from the assessment roll, arising from accident, mistakes of fact, erroneous computations, or errors of judgment, do not necessarily vitiate a tax levied thereon. Ib.

37. Equalization of assessments. — Where the law requires the board of supervisors, in a proper case, to equalize assessments, and no record of such equalization exists, the presumption is that no cause existed requiring it. Lacey v. Davis, 66 D. 524.

An assessment was made and entered on the assessor's books against the "Potomac Bridge Company," when the true corporate name was "The Virginia and Maryland Bridge Company at Shepherdstown," and the company knew of the assessment, and did not appear before the board of commissioners, which had authority to determine complaints, etc., of persons aggrieved by the valuation of the assessor, to have such error corrected, or for any purpose. Held, that equity could not interfere in behalf of such corporation to relieve it from the payment of the tax assessed. O'Neal v. Virginia Bridge Co., 79 D. 669.

38. Proceedings to enforce collection, generally.—A statute authorizing suit to be brought for unpaid taxes of former years, and prohibiting the defendants from setting up in defense any informality in the levy or assessment of the tax, and making duly certified copies of the delinquent tax list, or the original or duplicate assessment rolls, evidence of the delinquency of the property assessed, of the amount of taxes due and unpaid, and that all the forms of law in relation to the levy and assessment have been complied with, is constitutional. People v. Seymour, 76 D. 521.

A complaint averring the indebtedness of defendant for taxes, amount thereof, kind of tax, description of property assessed, and value thereof, that the assessment was to defendant, and that he has refused to pay the same, is sufficient, under the California act of 1860, to put upon defendant the burden of showing that he is not liable. Id.

A judgment for taxes is fatally defective unless the amount is specified in dollars and cents, and the use of numerals, without words, marks, or characters to indicate for what they were intended, is not sufficient to support a sale thereunder. Eppinger v. Kirby, 76 D. 709; Lawrence v. Fast, 71 D. 274.

A precept on a judgment for taxes is not fatally defective, it seems, or at least it may be amended so as to conform to the judgment, where, instead of specifying the amount in dollars and cents, numerals are used, without words, marks, or characters to indicate for what they were intended. Eppinger v. Kirby, 76 D. 709.

A judgment for taxes will not support a sale and deed, where the amount of the judgment varies from the amount for which the land was sold, and which is recited in the deed. Id.

The record-book of judgments for taxes is a separate and independent record, under the Illinois statute, and the record of a judgment therein must be complete in itself, without reference to the general records of the court. Lawrence v. Fast, 71 D. 274.

Taxes were assessed on land May 1st; the tax bill was issued to the collector October 1st. Held, that the taxes were an encumbrance on the land from May 1, 1870. Cochran v. Guild, 8 R. 296.

A statute authorized "the county judge of the Jefferson County court" to appoint a collector of taxes. Held, that the appointment might be by parol, and need not be evidenced by any record or other writing. Hoke v. Field, 19 R. 58.

A collector of taxes is under no obligation to give a receipt for taxes paid to him, unless the statute expressly requires it; and a custom to do so will not bind him. Stiles v. Hitchcock, 19 R. 121.

39. Additions for delinquency.—The addition of ten per cent to all taxes becoming delinquent, being done by virtue of a statute authorizing such addition, cannot be objected to as excessive. Lacey v. Davis, 66 D. 524.

A statute is not unconstitutional because it compels a property owner who is delinquent in the payment of taxes, if sued, to pay costs, and a percentage by way of attorney's fees, in addition to the tax assessed. People v. Seymour, 76 D. 521.

40. Issuing the warrant.—A tax-warrant issued by de facto trustees of a school district, and regular on its face, is a sufficient protection to the collector, and in trespass against him for a seizure thereunder, evidence showing that the requirements of the statute, as to notice, etc., in the proceedings for the organization of the district were not complied with, is inadmissible. Reynolds v. Moore, 24 D. 116.

A warrant signed by two school trustees for the collection of a tax is good, and the presence of the third trustee at the previous proceedings will be presumed until the contrary appears. McCoy v. Curtis, 24 D. 113.

A misrecital in the warrant for collecting a tax of the date of a statute under which the tax was levied renders void a tax sale made thereunder. Brown v. Wright, 42 D. 481.

The abbreviation "est." in a tax-warrant, will be construed to mean estate. Kingman v. Glover, 45 D. 758.

A tax-warrant, delivered to the collector before an execution delivered to the sheriff, but not levied until after levy under the execution, has priority over it. Evans v. Walsh, 32 R. 201.

41. Liabilities of collectors.—A tax collector is not liable for any irregularities antecedent to the commitment of the assessment to him for collection, his warrant being his protection against all illegality but his own. Ford v. Clough, 23 D. 513. And this, even though the assessors had not in fact any jurisdiction over the person they assumed to tax. Nowell v. Tripp, 14 R. 572.

The protection that the law affords to ministerial officers acting in obedience to process fair and regular on its face, and issued from a court of competent jurisdiction, is extended to collectors of taxes. Sprague v. Birchard, 60 D. 393.

Such collectors, sued for acts done by vir tue of warrants issued to them, need not prove the authority for making the assessment, nor show the regularity and legality of the proceedings antecedent to the issuing of the warrant. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A tax-warrant, regular on its face, although the tax is void, protects the officer in replevin, but not the purchaser of the property seized and sold. Power v. Kindschi, 46 R. 652.

Such warrant, regular on its face, will not afford the collector protection in an action of replevin for property levied upon and taken by him to satisfy unauthorized taxes, although it would protect him from personal responsibility as a trespasser or wrong-doer. Le Roy v. East Saginaw City R'y, 100 D. 162.

Since the adoption of the Louisiana code in 1825, no mortgage exists in that state, on behalf of the state or a parish, on the property of its collecting officers for taxes collected and unaccounted for. Police Jury v. Haw, 20 D. 294.

A purchase by a tax collector at his own sale is not absolutely void, but voidable, at the option of the owner of the property. Pierce v. Benjamin, 25 D. 396.

The owner's right to maintain trover for goods so sold is doubtful, where he has not previously elected to annul the sale by a demand of the property or otherwise. Id.

A tax collector who has collected money without objection from tax-payers must account to the town therefor. Inhabitants of Orono v. Wedgewood, 69 D. 81.

A tax collector is liable for a false return of nulla bona, whereby the owner of a mortgage of lands is compelled to redeem from a tax sale. Rayneford v. Phelps, 38 R. 189.

In an action of trespass against a tax collector for arrest and false imprisonment, the defendant justified under a warrant from the assessors of the town. Held, a good defense, although the plaintiff was not liable to taxation by the assessors. Nowell v. Tripp, 14 R. 572.

A tax collector whose statutory duty was, after selling a distress, to deduct the tax and expense of sale, and restore the balance to the former owner, applied a portion of the proceeds in payment of a tax already paid, and of illegal charges, before returning the balance. Held, an abuse of authority which rendered him a trespasser ab initio. Carter v. Allen, 8 R. 420.

42. — and their sureties. — A parish loses no rights against the sureties of its collecting officers by a failure to enjoin an execution issued by the state against such officer for failure to account for taxes collected. Police Jury v. Haw, 20 D. 294.

In an action against a tax collector and his sureties on his official bond, for not paying over moneys received for taxes, it is no defense that the meeting at which he was chosen was not legal; or that the bills of assessment were defective and irregular, or that there was any neglect or omission of duty on the part of the assessors or other officers of the town concerning the assessment. Ford v. Clough, 23 D. 613.

The collector and his sureties are estopped by a recital in his bond that he was "duly chosen" at a particular meeting, to deny the legality of the meeting, in an action against them on such bond. Id.

Sureties on the official bond of a tax collector are not liable for breaches of duty committed by the same individual as sheriff. Moss v. State, 47 D. 116.

Sureties on a tax collector's bond are liable for moneys their principal ought to account for; but they should not suffer from a mistake of the treasurer in passing a credit to the wrong account. Inhabitants of Orono v. Wedgewood, 69 D. 81.

Appropriations by selectmen of the town of moneys collected for taxes for subsequent years, to make up a deficiency of a prior year of the same collector, are unauthorized, and inequitable as respects the sureties on the collector's bonds for the subsequent years, and the sureties on the bond for the first year remain liable for the deficiency. Inhabitants etc. v. Stanley, 74 D. 501.

A surety who signs a town collector's bond on condition that it shall be signed by all whose names have been accepted by the town as sureties, otherwise the bond should not be delivered, will not be liable on such bond, if all do not sign it, unless he subsequently waives the condition. But if without such condition he signs the bond to indemnify the town, and the bond is left to be delivered and used for that purpose, and is so delivered, he will be bound, notwithstanding he may have expected when he signed it that all whose names were accepted by the town would become sureties. Inhabitants etc. v. Shaver, 79 D. 592.

A party executing an instrument creating liability is ordinarily presumed to know its contents, if no fraud is practiced upon him. Id.

If a surety signs the bond of a collector after erasure of one of the names accepted as sureties by the town, it is immaterial whether he knew of such erasure or not, if he did not annex to his signing the condition that the bond was not to be delivered until all those accepted by the town should sign. Id.

Neglect of town officers to enforce the collection of taxes, and their payment over by the collector, or to take the tax bills from him, does not release the sureties on his official bond. Id.

Where a collector for two successive years proves to be a defaulter at the end of the second year, he had the right at the time he made payments to the town to have approprated them to either year; if he then failed to have them appropriated, the town might have had them appropriated as they desired; but if neither party made any appropriation, the law will appropriate such payments to the oldest debts, although by so doing the whole deficit be made to fall on the second year. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Where a collector for two successive years, and the sureties on his bond for the second year of his term of office, are sued for an alleged default of such collector, it rests upon the defendants to show what part of the deficit belonged to each year. Id.

A county collector, owing two thousand seven hundred dollars of taxes not paid over, concealed about four thousand five hundred dollars on his person, and set out on horseback, unarmed, from his residence, to go to the county seat to pay it over. On the way he was attacked by a highway robber, and some three thousand three hundred dollars was taken from him. Held, that he was negligent in carrying more than the amount required, and that it was for the jury to say whether he was not negligent in going unarmed; and that, being negligent, his sureties would be liable. State v. Houston, 56 R. 59.

IV. SALE OF LAND FOR NON-PAYMENT; TAX TITLES.

43. Necessity of a sale. — The right to sell property for taxes is founded on the non-payment of the tax. If it be paid before the sale, the lien of the state is discharged, and the right to sell no longer exists. Wallace v. Brown, 76 D. 421.

44. Notice to owners or occupants. — The notice of tax sale required by statute is essential to the validity of the sale. Bidwell v. Webb, 88 D. 56.

The notice must give a particular and certain description of land to be sold, so that the owner may know that it is his land, and bidders may ascertain its locality with a view to the regulation of their bids. Id.

A notice of tax sale headed as follows: "Auditor's Office, Ramsey County, Minnesota, St. Paul, December 8, 1882," and containing no further description of the premises than as "Roberts and Randall's Addition, lot 11, block 20, lot 12, block 20," and nowhere describing the addition or lots as being in any particular city or county, is insufficient. Id.

Where the notice of a tax sale is insufficient, the officer has no authority to sell, the sale is void, and the purchaser acquires no title and takes nothing by his deed. Id.

A description in a notice of a collector's sale is insufficient if it merely states the owner's name, the assessed value, and that it is situated on the east side of South Street, without designating the dimensions of the lot or the particular part of the street on which it is located. Alexander v. Walter, 50 D. 688.

The mortgagee, being the legal owner of the land mortgaged, is the person to whom notice must be given by the sheriff of a levy and sale of such land for unpaid taxes. Whitehurst v. Gaskill, 12 R. 655.

45. Advertising the sale. — Where an advertisement of land sold for taxes did not contain the description, and was not published for the length of time required by law, the title is invalid. Lyon v. Hunt, 46 D. 216.

Two insufficient advertisements of a tax sale cannot be coupled together so as to make one complete legal advertisement, even though a verbal consent thereto is given by the delinquent. Scales v. Alvis, 46 D. 269.

Where a statute requires that the advertisement shall be published in a newspaper "three weeks successively," and after the first insertion the date of publication is so changed that the advertisement appears on Tuesday instead of Saturday of the respective weeks, — held, that three such insertions were a sufficient compliance with the statute. Cass v. Bellows, 64 D. 347.

The advertisement of sale of land for taxes need not be posted in unincorporated place which is not inhabited. Wells v. Jackson I. M. Co., 90 D. 575.

46. What lands may be sold. — Land cannot be sold for taxes, under the Alabama statute, where the delinquent owner has goods and chattels within the county. Scales v. Alvis, 46 D. 269.

The sheriff cannot sell an undivided part of certain property for the payment of taxes, but he must sell a certain portion thereof, and if the same is insufficient, another portion, until sufficient has been sold to pay the same. Macdonough v. Elam, 20 D. 284.

A sale of land as unseated land, for non-payment of taxes, for a number of years, is valid, if the statutory requisites are complied with, where it appears that the land had been vacant and unoccupied during the whole time up to and including the time of sale, except during one year, for which taxes were assessed, when a mere intruder raised a crop on part of it, and then wholly abandoned it. Dikeman v. Parriah, 47 D. 455.

A change of county boundaries after land has been assessed for taxes does not affect the lien of the tax on the land; and the collector of the old county has power to sell the land to enforce the lien, where the land falls into another county by reason of such change. Moss v. Shear, 85 D. 94.

47. Selling whole tract or parcels. — A sale by the sheriff of an entire tract of land for taxes on the whole, when a tax is due for a part only, is void. Jones v. Gibson, 7 D. 690.

Tax sales of certain specified quantities of land, supposed to embrace the whole tract, will not support a conveyance of the entire tract which subsequently turns out to be of greater extent. Blight v. Banks, 17 D. 136.

48. Conduct and validity of the sale.*—A tax sale is not valid unless all substantial requirements of the statute are shown to have been strictly complied with. Brown v. Wright, 42 D. 481; Terry v. Bleight, 16 D. 101; Scales v. Alvis, 46 D. 269; Dikeman v. Parrish, 47 D. 455; De Witt v. Hays, 56 D. 352. Therefore, when such sale is made within the court-house, under a statute requiring that it shall take place "before the court-house door," it is void, and passes no title. Rubey v. Huntsman, 82 D. 143.

A tax sale of land on which no taxes were due conveys no title. Blight v. Banks, 17 D. 136.

A sale under a f. fa. and a forced sale for taxes do not differ, except as to the mode and period of advertising, and the form of the deed. Macdonough v. Elam, 20 D. 284.

To validate a tax sale, the land must be properly entered on the tax duplicate. Perrins v. Doble, 36 D. 97.

A tax duplicate describing the land as being in "range 3, township 13, section 1, lots 8 and 9 N. part, one hundred acres," without specifying the quantity of land in each lot, is not sufficient under the act of February 3, 1835, and a tax sale under it is void. Ib.

A sale, for taxes, of land of non-residents must appear from the record to have been made to the highest bidder. Bean v. Thompson, 49 D. 154.

The purchaser under a collector's sale must show affirmatively and positively the regularity of the proceedings out of which the sale grows, and the existence of all the prerequisites upon which it depends. Alexander v. Walter, 50 D. 688; Polk v. Rose, 89 D. 773.

A sale of land for taxes, after service of injunction upon the commissioners who levied the tax, enjoining them "from collecting or proceeding to collect" the tax on such land, is irregular, and will be set aside. Williams v. Cammack, 61 D. 508.

A sale of land for taxes, part of which were illegal, is void in an action of ejectment, where the validity of the sale depends upon the validity of the tax and subsequent proceedings. In personal actions against the collector it is different. If the illegal part can be separated, it alone is rejected. Lacey v. Davis, 66 D. 524.

A tax sale, to be valid, need not extend to the interest of both tenants in common. One having paid his share of the tax, the interest of the other may be sold for the balance. Payne v. Danley, 68 D. 187.

Under the Arkansas theory of tax sales, they are void or valid, and there is no intermediate ground. Wallace v. Brown, 76 D. 421.

A tax sale is valid if substantially made in conformity with statutory provisions. Ib.

A tax sale is void if the statute is not followed in any matter material to the sale. Thus if the sale is made on the wrong day; or if the land is not advertised; or if it is misdescribed in the advertisement; or if no demand is made of the resident tax-payer for the taxes charged upon the land before sale, etc. Ib.

A tax sale is void where lands have been sold for an illegal excess of five per cent more than the amount of taxes and charges for which they were liable to be sold. Kimball v. Ballard, 88 D. 706.

The power of a tax collector to make sale of real estate for payment of taxes, so as to convey a valid title to the purchaser, is a specially delegated one, and must be strictly pursued. Polk v. Rose, 89 D. 773.

A series of acts preliminary in their character are required by law to precede the execution of the power of a tax collector to make such sale, each of which is separate, independent, and essential; and if any one of them be wanting, the whole proceeding is defective for want of sufficient authority to support it. Ib.

A clerk at an auction sale for taxes is not an officer making or controlling the sale, and may become a purchaser thereof. Wells v. Jackson I. M. Co., 90 D. 575.

Charging land on a tax list in the name of a person other than the true owner invalidates the tax sale, unless the land be otherwise correctly described, and the taxes be due and unpaid at the time of the sale. Greve v. Coffin, 100 D. 229.

49. Form and sufficiency of the deed.—A grant of power includes the usual ordinary and necessary means for the exercise of the power. Bruce v. Schuyler, 46 D. 447.

Power given an officer to sell lands for delinquent taxes includes, by implication, the power to make a conveyance in pursuance of the sale. Ib.

A sale for taxes made by a public officer is a contract, the obligation of which the legislature cannot impair, by repealing that portion of the statute which provides that the officer making the sale shall execute a conveyance in pursuance thereof. Ib.

Custom is the best interpreter of the law. A comptroller's deed will not be adjudged void when in the form sanctioned by long years of usage, during which many recoveries have been had in the courts. Bank of Ulrica v. Mercereau, 49 D. 189.

A comptroller's deed for taxes need not be technically in the name of the people of the state, nor need it state the year in which the tax was assessed. Ib.

A tax deed is not void because it fails to show that everything has been done by the assessor, county court, clerk, and collector that the law requires. Such a rule would violate the statutory regulations concerning the effect of tax deeds, and the principles of interpretation to be applied to them. Pleasant v. Scott, 76 D. 403.

A tax deed shows no actual violation of law simply because it appears therefrom that the sale was made on the first day, and not upon the first Monday, of November. Ib.

A tax deed need not contain recitals of the various acts, required under the California revenue act of 1854, showing a compliance on the part of the revenue officers with the several conditions of the statute. These acts are only required to be recited, in the certificate of purchase. Their omission from the deed only affects the question of proof. If inserted in the deed, they are prima facie evidence; but if not inserted, they may be proved aliunde. Moss v. Shear, 85 D. 94.

The statute requires only a deed of conveyance in fee-simple to the purchaser; and any deed is sufficient if, according to the rules of the common law, it will transfer the title of the former owner, and vest the estate in the purchaser, provided it recites the power under which it was made, and is accompanied by proof that the law was strictly complied with. Ib.

A deed of land sold for taxes, described as "ten acres and one half of lot number 70, in the second division of lots in said Danbury," is void for uncertainty. Beas v. Thompson, 49 D. 154.

A tax deed is properly excluded for uncertainty in description, where the property is therein described as "a lot on Dupont Street, 137 feet and 6 inches from the northwest corner of Washington Street, with the improvements thereon, — 12 x 100." Keane v. Cannovan, 82 D. 738.

The description of property in the deed must must be certain in itself, and not such as to require evidence aliunde to render it certain. Ib.

A register's deed upon sale of land for taxes may be properly rejected as evidence for uncertainty of description; notwithstanding the statute makes it prima facie evidence of title in the purchaser. Alexander v. Hickox, 86 D. 118.

An error of the sheriff in neglecting to affix a seal to a deed of land sold for taxes will not be corrected by a court of chancery, tax titles being purely technical as distinguished from meritorious titles, and depending for validity upon strict compliance with the statute. Alles v. Hinckler, 85 D. 406.

The omission of the words "as the fact is," in a tax deed, where their insertion is required by statute, is a fatal defect; and the deed will not give the vendee a title on which he can recover in an action of ejectment, or transfer to him the constructive possession of vacant lands. These words are in the nature of a certificate on the part of the officer who executes the deed that he has examined the records and finds the facts to be as stated in the deed. State v. Winn, 88 D. 689.

A county treasurer having given an imperfect tax deed which does not pass title may afterward of his own motion give a second and corrected deed. McCready v. Sexton, 4 R. 214.

50. Its validity and effect as evidence. — 1. Validity. — The validity of a tax deed is governed by the law in effect at the time of the sale, though this has been altered before the execution of the deed, where, in the statute working the change, no words are to be found extending its operations to prior sales. Garrett v. Wiggins, 30 D. 653.

A treasurer's deed defining the quantity, but not the location, of part of a tract of land sold for taxes, is valid, and the grantee may locate such part for himself. Coxe v. Blanden, 26 D. 83.

A subsequent conveyance of the residue to the same grantee, in such a case, supercedes the necessity of an election as to the part first conveyed. Ib.

The antiquity of a tax deed, if no possession has been taken under it, affords no presumption in favor of it. Brown v. Wright, 42 D. 481.

The deed of an assessor and collector of taxes for land sold for non-payment of taxes is a "deed" within the Texas statute, and may be relied on to support the statute of limitations. Wofford v. McKinna, 76 D. 53.

A sale of land by the comptroller for taxes which have in fact been paid to the collector is of no validity, and the deed executed pursuant to such a sale conveys no title to the purchaser. Jackson v. Morse, 9 D. 225.

A comptroller's deed is void if the lands intended to be conveyed cannot be located from the description given. Bank of Utica v. Mercereau, 49 D. 189.

A tax deed will be held void where the description is so uncertain and incomplete as to require the aid of extrinsic evidence to determine the boundaries therein mentioned. Wofford v. McKinna, 76 D. 53.

Where land in a tax deed is described "to commence at the beginning corner, and taken in a square, if it will admit of it, out of said three fourths of a league granted to W. A." the description is uncertain and the deed void. Ib.

A deed void on its face for uncertainty cannot be relied on to support the plea of the statute of limitations under the Texas statute. Ib.

The failure to recite in a tax deed one of the requisites to a valid levy of the tax, where all the other essential requisites are set out, is evidence by implication that the requirement not recited was not complied with. Long v. Burnett, 81 D. 420.

2. Effect as evidence.—A sheriff's deed of land sold for taxes is sufficient evidence of title in ejectment against a mere intruder on unseated lands, who shows no better right, where title has been proved out of the commonwealth; much more where the purchaser is shown to have taken and retained possession under his deed. Dikeman v. Parrish, 47 D. 455.

A party claiming title under a collector's sale for taxes must show affirmatively a compliance with every substantial requirement of the law. A tax collector's deed is not even prima facie evidence in favor of the purchaser's title, but must be sustained by proof of extraneous facts. Lyon v. Hunt, 46 D. 216.

The law, by making tax deeds prima facie evidence of regularity of all proceedings up to their date, shifted the burden of proof from the holder of the title to the adverse party. To invalidate the deed, or to throw the burden upon the former, the latter must show irregularities of such a nature as to require explanation or counter-proof; they must be of matters which are peremptory, and not directory. It is not sufficient to cast a general doubt over the title, but it is necessary to point out some specific defect, or raise a reasonable presumption against the sufficiency of some specific act, or of the non-performance of some necessary duty. Lacey v. Davis, 66 D. 524. S. P., Long v. Burnett, 81 D. 420.

A tax deed, though void on its face, is sufficient to show color of title in the grantee who in good faith took possession thereunder of the premises conveyed, and claimed to hold them as against the real owner, and is therefore admissible in evidence for that purpose. Edgerton v. Bird, 70 D. 473.

A tax deed should be received as evidence of title where the only objection to its regularity is, that the person to whom the land was assessed became the purchaser. But this will not preclude the objecting party from afterwards showing that the purchaser occupied such a position as required him to pay the taxes. Pleasant v. Scott, 76 D. 403.

A tax deed, irrespective of its irregularity or goodness, may be read in evidence by defendant, where it is coupled with proof of possession that would be sufficient under any statute of limitations to bar an action for the lands. Id.

A tax deed is not admissible as evidence of title without proof that all the requirements of the law authorizing its execution have been complied with. Keane v. Cannon, 82 D. 738.

The statute making a tax deed prima facie evidence of transfer of title of the delinquent can apply only to deeds executed upon a sale for taxes levied subsequent to its enactment. Id.

The Indiana statute prescribing the degree of credibility to be attached to an auditor's deed of land sold for taxes, and its recitals, does not preclude the introduction of evidence to show non-compliance with positive statutory requirements in reference to the steps necessary to vest in him the power to sell. Wilson v. Lemon, 85 D. 471.

A statute declaring a tax deed conclusive evidence that all of the essential requirements of the law regulating the exercise of the taxing power were complied with is unconstitutional. McCready v. Sexton, 4 R. 214.

51. Effect of recitals in tax deed.—A recital in a tax deed of compliance with statutory requirements is not even prima facie evidence of such compliance. Brown v. Wright, 42 D. 481; Jackson v. Shepard, 17 D. 502; unless made so by statute, but the burden is on the party claiming under such deed to prove by other evidence full compliance with the requirements of the statute. Working v. Webster, 71 D. 543.

Such recitals are not evidence against the owner of property. The facts must be established by proof alimunde. Polk v. Rose, 89 D. 773.

Under a statute which required a sale of land for taxes to be made on the first Monday in the month, and to be continued from day to day until the amount has been realized, a deed which recites that the sale took place on the 11th of the month is not invalid, nor does such recital throw the burden of proof upon the defendant. The law may have been complied with, and it is for the plaintiff to show that it was not. Lacey v. Davis, 66 D. 524.

52. Rights of the purchaser.—1. *Who may purchase.—A partnership to purchase at tax sales is against the policy of the law, is a fraud on the owner, and the purchaser cannot obtain an available title. Dudley v. Little, 15 D. 575.

A tenant in possession, who is under obligation to pay the taxes, cannot acquire title to the premises by a purchase at a tax sale made in his own name, or in the name of another person for his benefit; and it seems that a title so acquired would remain void in the hands of a bona fide purchaser without notice. Blake v. Howe, 15 D. 681.

A person who holds a defective title to property may perfect the same by purchase at tax sale, if he stands in no relation of trust to, and is implicated in no fraud against, the owner. Coxe v. Gibson, 67 D. 454.

The fact that lands are assessed to and sold in the name of a particular person does not preclude his purchase of them at a tax sale, and acquiring title thereto, if the taxes

*See note on who may purchase at tax sale 14 D. 484-494.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

were illegally assessed to him, and he is under no legal obligation to pay them. Pleasant v. Scott, 76 D. 403.

Neither a tenant in common nor a mortgagee can acquire a tax title and set it up as against his co-tenant or mortgagor, as a general rule; but a purchaser of land at a tax sale, under the California statute providing for the collection of delinquent taxes in Sacramento, is entitled to a writ of assistance to obtain possession of the premises, notwithstanding the existence of such relation. Mills v. Tukey, 83 D. 74.

One who is under no legal or moral obligation to pay taxes is not precluded from purchasing at the tax sale, although in possession at the time the assessment was made, or when the land was sold. Moss v. Shear, 85 D. 94.

One who enters upon and occupies land as a mere intruder is under no obligation to pay the taxes, and may acquire title to the land under a tax deed adverse to the former owner or his grantees. Link v. Doerfer, 24 R. 417.

2. Rights and liabilities of purchaser.—The owner of land incurs no forfeiture by permitting his land to be sold for taxes in a manner not according to law. The purchaser at a tax sale is bound to see that all of the essential requirements of the law have been performed before he can acquire title. Conway v. Cable, 87 D. 240; Jackson v. Shepard, 17 D. 502; Garrett v. Wiggins, 30 D. 653.

The record made by the officer of the quantity of land sold by him for taxes prevails over the certificate given to the purchaser. Blight v. Banta, 17 D. 136.

The quantity certified by the officer to have been sold by him is prima facie correct. Ib.

A sheriff's deed to land, made several years after a sale on tax execution, relates back to the date thereof, so as to protect a purchaser who has taken possession before the execution of the deed, but after the sale. Kingman v. Glover, 45 D. 756.

A mistake of a treasurer who told complainant's agent that no taxes had been assessed against his land, by which he allowed the same to be sold for delinquent taxes, cannot operate to invalidate a decree vesting the title in the purchaser, unless some collusion or fraudulent combination between the treasurer and the purchaser can be shown. McGowan v. Carr, 71 D. 421.

The objection that property was assessed in a wrong name comes too late after a decree has been entered establishing title thereto in a purchaser at a sale thereof for delinquent taxes. Ib.

Every purchaser at tax sale takes his deed subject to a condition that the tax has not been paid; and if his title is defeated, he must look to the government for that relief which such a case may require. Wallace v. Brown, 76 D. 421.

Claims of estates or interests in real property adverse to the occupant are the only matters within the purview of the Minnesota statute allowing an action to be brought by the party in possession of real estate, or by his tenant, against any person claiming an adverse estate or interest therein, and a lien acquired through a tax sale is not a proper subject for adjudication in an action brought under such statute. It must be enforced in a separate action. Bidwell v. Webb, 88 D. 56.

Defendant, in an action by a tax-title claimant, must make the deposit required by chapter 22, Wisconsin Laws of 1859, in certain cases, or show conditions of the act in which a deposit is not required, or that the taxes are unjust and void in equity. Smith v. Smith, 98 D. 707.

In an action by a tax-title claimant, it is not sufficient that defendant's answer alleges such deposit; but it must be proved, and there must be a finding of the fact, to sustain a judgment for the defendant. Ib.

3. Compelling execution of deed.—Where a tax deed, fatally defective in form, has been issued to the owner of a valid certificate of a sale of lands for taxes, he may, though he has never been in actual possession of the land, compel the clerk of the county board of supervisors, by mandamus, to execute to him a proper deed. State v. Winn, 88 D. 689.

Such clerk cannot refuse to execute a proper deed on the ground that the certificates of sale of said land, which were issued to the county, had no other proof of assignment than an indorsement of the name and official title of the person who was clerk at the time of such alleged assignment, where such officer was authorized by the supervisors to assign such certificates. Ib.

Such clerk cannot refuse to execute a proper deed on the ground that such certificate is defective in omitting the words "according to the facts," or that, after being assigned in blank, it was transferred to a town or city which had no power to purchase or sell such certificates, and was received by the plaintiff from such town or city. It is doubtful whether these objections would be good if taken by one who had a right to insist upon them; but the clerk cannot raise them, especially after he has received and canceled the certificate. Ib.

Such clerk, upon presentation to him of the holder's certificate of purchase of lands sold for taxes, shall execute in the name of his county, as clerk, a deed. If the certificate has been assigned, the assignment is to be presented with it. His duty is simply to receive the certificate and assignment, and make the deed to the holder. He is not to inquire through whose hands the certificate has passed. But the only assignments which he is required to take any notice of are such as are on the back of or attached to the certificate. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A quitclaim deed from a purchaser of land sold at tax sale is not such assignment of the certificate of purchase as to authorize the clerk of the board of supervisors, under the Wisconsin statute, to issue a deed from the county to the grantee in such quitclaim deed. Ib.

53. What title passes. — A party who claims title to land listed for taxation in his name cannot enlarge his interest therein by permitting it to be sold for taxes and purchasing it himself, either directly or indirectly. Pleasants v. Scott, 76 D. 403; Moss v. Shear, 85 D. 94.

A purchase at tax sale by a part owner who is liable for the tax does not strengthen his title. Choteau v. Jones, 50 D. 460. S. P., Willard v. Strong, 39 D. 240.

Successive purchases of the same property, at different sales thereof, for delinquent taxes, do not operate to strengthen the title first acquired. Lacey v. Davis, 66 D. 524.

A purchaser with the record before him that the collector was "sworn into office" takes title subject to the same rights as regards the record as had existed with respect to former owners. Cass v. Bellows, 64 D. 347.

One in possession of property as a trespasser, or under color of title, by suffering the same to be sold for taxes and becoming a purchaser at such sale, acquires no additional title. Every act of his which is in obedience to a law imposing such burden upon the land must be regarded as done by him by reason of his own claim of title, and in protection thereof; and he cannot thereby acquire a new or superior title, as every such act is deemed to be subordinate to his own title. That such taxes were a lien upon the land at the time of his entry thereon makes no difference, nor does it matter in whose name the property was assessed. Lacey v. Davis, 66 D. 524.

A claimant under a tax title whose title has been established by decree entered upon default of the former owner must prove that all the requisites of the law have been complied with; and unless the steps which the law requires to be taken have been regularly pursued, the court has no jurisdiction, under the law, to divest a party of his property, and vest it in the state or another person. McGahan v. Carr, 71 D. 421.

Payment of taxes by the grantee in a tax deed for a portion of the time he was in possession under such deed is not of itself, disconnected with other circumstances, evidence that the owner has abandoned the property. Keane v. Cannon, 82 D. 738.

The presumption in favor of a tax deed from lapse of time since its execution, and the possession of the grantee under it, can be indulged only in favor of acts between the assessment and the execution of the tax deed; but no presumption can be indulged in favor of the assessment itself, which is the foundation of all subsequent proceedings. It is only the intermediate proceedings, if any, that can be presumed in such cases. Ib.

A tax deed is conclusive against an intruder without color of title. Wheeler v. Winn, 91 D. 186.

A party claiming under a tax deed must show that the land had not been redeemed when such deed was made, before it can be received as prima facie evidence of title, under the Minnesota statute. Greve v. Coffin, 100 D. 229.

54. What will defeat a tax title. — The operation of a tax deed may be defeated by showing that the taxes were paid before the sale, or that no proper notice to redeem was given to the occupant of the premises. Bank of Utica v. Mercereau, 49 D. 189. S. P., Wallace v. Brown, 76 D. 421.

A suit for recovery of lands sold for taxes, except in cases where the taxes have been paid or the lands redeemed according to law, must by the Wisconsin statute be commenced within three years from the time of recording the tax deed of sale, and cannot be commenced thereafter. Edgerton v. Bird, 70 D. 473.

Lapse of time will not afford presumptive evidence of regularity of a tax sale, if the purchaser and those claiming under him have had no possession under the deed. But an ancient deed and its recitals, together with subsequent, long-continued, and uninterrupted possession, are evidence from which compliance with a statute in regard to tax sales may be presumed, and the question thereon is one for the jury, upon all the evidence in the case. Worthing v. Webster, 71 D. 543.

A city being owner of land assessed and sold for taxes as the land of another, by its officers, without authority, is not estopped to deny regularity and validity of the proceedings by which the purchaser claims title. St. Louis v. Gorman, 77 D. 536.

The owner can maintain suit to cancel a tax deed to his premises, where they have been sold for an illegal excess above the amount of taxes for which they were liable, by tendering the amount for which they should have been sold, with interest at seven per cent. Kimball v. Ballard, 88 D. 705.

The fact that a party sets up a claim under a conveyance from a certain person does not prevent him from also setting up a tax title, if he has acquired such, nor from relying upon mere possession. Wells v. Jackson I. M. Co., 90 D. 575.

55. Confirmation. — Proceedings for confirmation of a tax title are in the nature of a bill of peace, and are governed by the ordinary rules of chancery practice. All evidence resting in parol must be presented in the form of written depositions, unless dispensed with. Payne v. Danley, 68 D. 187.

Though a sale of land after owner's payment of taxes thereon is void, yet after decree of confirmation, where the court is shown to have jurisdiction, the owner will not be permitted, in a collateral proceeding, to prove the payment. Any other construction would take from the judgment that conclusiveness which the law expressly says shall be given to it. As the non-payment is the essential fact upon which the power to sell rests, the decree necessarily includes within it the finding of that fact. Wallace v. Brown, 76 D. 421.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Errors and irregularities in a tax sale are cured where the purchaser obtains a decree under a statute confirming the sale, if there was no fraud in procuring the decree. Id.

56. Redemption from tax sales, generally.—A purchaser at tax sale acquires the legal title to the land, subject to redemption by the owner, or some one having an opposing interest therein; but persons having no right or interest in the land cannot divest such purchaser of his interest by redemption, nor can the owner avail himself of a redemption made by a third person having no interest in the land, so as to divest the title of the purchaser at the tax sale. Byington v. Bookwalter, 74 D. 279.

In proceedings for the foreclosure of the equity of redemption under a tax deed, if a party claiming title to the land is on his own motion admitted a party defendant, such admission to defend does not determine his title; and when he properly sets up his claim to the land in his answer, the plaintiff may take issue thereon. Id.

A certificate of redemption of a county treasurer is not conclusive evidence of the amount to be paid for redemption in a proceeding to foreclose the equity of redemption under a tax deed; and further evidence is admissible to show the payment of subsequent taxes by plaintiff, that there were still unpaid costs in the action, and the like. Id.

Redemption of land is not invalidated by failure of the county treasurer to enter a memorandum of the redemption in the list of tax sales. The party redeeming cannot be held responsible for the omission of the officer. Id.

In order to avoid costs in an action by minors to redeem from a tax sale, tender of the amount due the defendant for taxes paid, and that the tender has been kept good, should be shown. Curl v. Watson, 95 D. 763.

In a proceeding to redeem from tax sales, it was found that one of the sales was invalid, while the others were valid. Held, that the plaintiff should pay the amount of legal taxes paid by the defendant, with interest thereon at six per cent, under the invalid sale, and the statute penalty and interest upon the valid sales, and also the subsequent taxes paid by the defendant. Id.

The owner of any interest in real estate subject to redemption from tax sale may redeem the whole property, and the purchaser may require him to redeem the whole, if any. Id.

57. Time to redeem.—A purchaser at tax sale to whom the owner tenders the amount of his bid, with twenty-five per cent interest, for an assignment of the certificate of sale, and who orally agrees to make such assignment to the owner within a few days and receive the money, but in fact obtains a deed from the auditor-general after the owner, relying upon this promise, has allowed the time for redemption to expire, and refuses, upon tender of the amount of his bid, with interest and charges, to convey to the owner, is guilty of a fraud upon the owner, cannot avail himself of the statute of frauds as a defense, and will be compelled by equity to convey to the owner. Loring v. McKee, 87 D. 738.

58. Who entitled to redemption money.—A purchaser at a tax sale acquires an equitable interest in the lands sold; and if they are conveyed by him before the time for redemption expires, his grantee acquires such equitable interest, and a right to the redemption money, if the lands are redeemed, as completely between the parties as by an assignment of the certificate of purchase. Scott v. Kelsey, 95 D. 415.

But if the purchaser should convey such premises to one person, and assign the certificate to another, both being innocent purchasers, the holder of the certificate might, with some reason, insist on a superior right to the redemption money. Id.

Where K., a purchaser at a tax sale, conveyed the lands to C., a married woman, who, without her husband joining in the deed, conveyed them to S., and the premises were redeemed, the redemption money being paid to K.,—held, that S. took nothing by such conveyance, and that a suit to recover the redemption money from K. should have been brought by C. and her husband. Id.

V. REMEDIES FOR ILLEGAL TAXATION.

59. In general.—After a party has been, by decree, divested of his title to land sold for delinquent taxes of one year, he cannot have such decree set aside because he has paid the taxes for other and succeeding years. McGahan v. Carr, 71 D. 421.

A property owner must seek relief against the improper exercise of the power of taxation in the manner pointed out by statute. If he fails to do so, he must present a very strong case to get relief in equity, if indeed he can be relieved at all. O'Neal v. Virginia Bridge Co., 79 D. 669.

One seeking relief against certain illegal taxes levied on his property must pay the legal taxes levied thereon before he is entitled to relief against the illegal taxes. Hershey v. Board of Supervisors, 82 D. 713.

The owners of taxable property can maintain a suit to annul illegal acts of municipal officers when such acts will increase the municipal taxes, and the state is not a necessary party. Newmeyer v. Missouri etc. R. R. Co., 14 R. 394.

A bill was filed by tax-payers of a county on behalf of themselves and all other tax-payers, to set aside an order of the county court making a subscription on behalf of the county to the capital stock of a railroad, and to have the same declared null and void on the ground that it was illegal. Held, that there was no defect of parties. Id.

60. Abatement or deduction. — The tax imposed by the Massachusetts statute of 1865, chapter 283, on corporations chartered by the commonwealth, or organized under its general laws for purposes of business or profit, and having a capital stock divided into shares, was a tax on their franchises, and not on their property; and it is no reason for the abatement of any portion of such a tax, that, in computing the market value of the capital stock of a corporation as the true value of its corporate franchise, the tax commissioner omitted to make any deduction for a portion of its property invested in United States bonds, which are exempt from taxation by any state. Manufacturers' I. Co. v. Loud, 96 D. 715.

61. Action to recover back. — 1. Generally. — Where personal property is taken by a collector in satisfaction of an illegal tax, and sold, and the avails paid to the town, the owner may recover back the money in an action of assumpsit against the town. Bailey v. Town of Goshen, 87 D. 191.

A party cannot recover city taxes paid by him for ten consecutive years through an alleged mistake of law, especially where he helped to impose the tax, and otherwise ratified it, and was under an honorary obligation to his fellow-citizens, who therefore paid their portions of it, to contribute his share of the self-imposed burden. Hubbard v. City of Hickman, 96 D. 297.

The payment of a municipal tax to one having formal authority to collect it is involuntary, and if the tax is illegal the amount paid may be recovered back. Tuttle v. Everett, 24 R. 622.

2. Voluntary payments. — Money voluntarily paid on an unconstitutional assessment of taxes cannot be recovered from the sheriff, especially after he has paid it into the treasury. Dickins v. Jones, 27 D. 488.

Taxes collected under a state statute which is afterward declared unconstitutional cannot be recovered back, if no protest or objection is made against the payment of such taxes. Taylor v. Board of Health, 72 D. 724.

Payment of taxes extinguishes them, and a voluntary second payment, by another, amounts to a gratuity to the taxing power. Morrison v. Kelly, 74 D. 169.

Where an assessment has been set aside by a court, one who has paid it, though voluntarily, may recover it back. Mayor ad. Riker, 20 R. 386.

An illegal tax voluntarily paid by mistake of both law and fact may be recovered. City of Louisville v. Anderson, 42 R. 220.

3. Compulsory payments. — Payment of taxes is not compulsory because made under a threat, express or implied, that unless paid, legal remedies to compel payment would be resorted to. Taylor v. Board of Health, 72 D. 724.

An illegal tax paid under duress may be recovered of the county treasurer receiving it, if he had notice of the facts while the money was yet in his hands. Greenabaum v. King, 96 D. 172.

A payment of a tax was made under duress where the circumstances were, that after plaintiff had commenced proceedings against the county treasurer to enjoin the collection of an illegal tax, his clerk, in the absence of plaintiff, paid the same, upon the false representation made to him by the treasurer, that the supreme court had decided that the tax was legal, and the notification that unless paid, a seizure would be made of plaintiff's stock of goods therefor. Id.

Demand is not a prerequisite to the maintenance of a suit to recover back the amount of an illegal tax paid under duress. Id.

4. Payments under protest. — A party who pays an illegal tax under protest and notice of suit, upon being threatened with a distress, may maintain an action to recover it back. Grim v. Weissenberg School Dist., 98 D. 237.

The pendency in the supreme court of an application for a perpetual injunction to restrain the collection of a county tax is sufficient notice to the county treasurer not to pay over or appropriate money collected for such tax, and which has been paid to him only after protest, and to prevent seizure. Greenabaum v. King, 96 D. 172.

Assumpsit will not lie against a town for money paid, under protest, by a resident owner for taxes on real estate, where the only objection is, that "the assessments were not legally made." It seems that the proper course for the tax-payer is to refuse to pay the taxes, and, when the land is sold by the collector, to defend his title. Rogers v. Inhabs. of Greenbush, 4 R. 292.

A tax was assessed on land under a statute

* Action for money had and received, to recover money paid as taxes, see note, 23 R. 519-521.

afterward decided to be unconstitutional. Prior to such decision the owner paid the tax, under protest, to prevent a threatened sale. Held, that the payment was voluntary, and that the money could not be recovered back. Detroit v. Martin, 22 R. 512; Benson v. Monroe, 54 D. 716.

A sale of land for taxes laid under an unconstitutional law does not constitute a cloud upon the title; and, therefore, payment of such taxes to prevent a sale is voluntary, though made under protest, and cannot be recovered back. Detroit v. Martin, 22 R. 512.

To recover taxes paid to a municipal corporation, it must appear that the tax was wholly unauthorized; that the amount was actually received by the corporation; and that it was paid under compulsion, to prevent the immediate seizure and sale of plaintiff's goods, or arrest of his person. Voluntary payment accompanied by protest will not suffice. First Nat. Bank v. Mayor etc., 45 R. 478.

62. Action for damages. — A collector selling property for taxes, after the expiration of the time prescribed by statute therefor, becomes a trespasser ab initio, though the original taking was rightful. Pierce v. Benjamin, 25 D. 396.

The owner may sue in trover without a demand and refusal, in such a case, the taking constituting a conversion. Id.

The owner does not waive his right of action against a tax collector for an illegal seizure and sale of his property by paying the balance of the tax, and taking a receipt for the whole. Id.

The rule of damages in an action against selectmen for property sold to satisfy an unlawful tax is the value of the property. Drew v. Davis, 33 D. 213; less the amount applied to the owner's tax. Pierce v. Benjamin, 25 D. 396.

63. Injunction.* — 1. When lies. — Proceeding by injunction is a proper mode by which to test the legality of a levy made by an officer under the supposed authority of a law the constitutionality of which is denied. Byre v. Jacob, 73 D. 367.

An injunction to stay a tax sale of city lots assessed by the city council of Cincinnati will lie. Burnet v. Cincinnati, 17 D. 582.

Equity may, by injunction, stay the collection of a tax, when the law has conferred no power to levy the tax, or where a person or officer not authorized by law to exercise such a power levies a tax, or when the proper persons make the levy for purposes on the face of the levy not authorized, or for fraudulent purposes. Ottawa v. Walker, 74 D. 121.

* See notes on injunction against collection of taxes, 69 D. 198-206; 23 R. 622, 628; 49 R. 287-289; 66 R. 110-112.

A bill to enjoin collection of taxes on personal property in a certain district must affirmatively show that the property was not taxable there. Mills v. Thornton, 79 D. 377.

The interest of a tax-payer is sufficient, where money is to be raised by taxation or expended from the treasury, to entitle him to proceed in equity to test the validity of the law which proposes the assessment or expenditure. Page v. Allen, 98 D. 272.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to enjoin a sheriff from making a sale of personal property for the payment of taxes on which he has levied, where the bill alleges that said taxes have been fully paid and discharged. Lewis v. Spencer, 23 R. 619.

Upon proof that the taxes have been paid off and discharged, the injunction will be perpetuated. Id.

An injunction will issue to restrain the collection of a real tax, when the property proceeded against is not that on which the tax is laid, and the party whose property is proceeded against is not the one who owes the tax. Seeley v. Westport, 36 R. 70.

At the suit of one or more dog-owners, on behalf of themselves and all other dog-owners in the county, an injunction may issue to restrain the collection of a dog-tax on the sole ground of illegality, in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits. Williams v. County Court, 53 R. 94.

2. When does not lie. — An injunction against collecting a tax assessed in the ordinary way, and unaccompanied by any circumstances of peculiar injury, will not lie, although the act authorizing the tax be unconstitutional. McCoy v. Chillicothe, 17 D. 607.

Equity cannot take cognizance of cases involving simply the question of taxation; the issue is strictly one at common law. Minturn v. Hays, 56 D. 366.

Where the illegality appears on the warrant for the collection of taxes, an adequate remedy at law lies by an action of trespass, should the payment of the tax be attempted to be enforced by a sale of the property. Bank of Utica v. Utica, 27 D. 72.

A perfect remedy exists at law, and equity has no power to interfere, if a tax upon a franchise has been illegally interposed, or a valid objection appears upon the face of the proceedings. De Witt v. Hays, 56 D. 352.

A cloud on title is not cast, nor irreparable injury wrought, by the sale of a wharf for taxes, where the plaintiffs do not pretend to a title in the soil, but only to an interest in the franchise. Id.

Equity will not enjoin the collection of a general tax or of a sidewalk tax of a city, on the mere ground that the tax was illegally assessed against the complainant, and that his real estate has been levied upon, and is about to be sold for its payment, where no special equities are shown, and the law affords an adequate and more appropriate remedy. Greene v. Mumford, 73 D. 79.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

Equity will not restrain the collection of a tax levied by officers de jure or de facto, where irregularities are charged, much less where no irregularities are charged. The remedy is at law. Metc v. Anderson, 76 D. 704.

A sale of personal property, rolling stock of a railroad company, for the purpose of collecting a tax claimed to be illegal, will not be enjoined. The sale of the property is a trespass, for which the company would have a remedy at law. Chicago etc. Ry Co. v. Ft. Howard, 91 D. 458.

Rolling stock of a railroad which a statute provides to be real estate is personal property for the purpose of sale to collect delinquent taxes. It is realty only for purposes contemplated by the statute. Id.

Tax assessments ought not to be vacated, and property liable to taxation released altogether, because the public officers have not strictly followed the provisions of the law, which are merely directory. And equity cannot interfere for such cause to relieve a party from the payment of taxes assessed upon his property by the proper authority. Stoddert v. Ward, 100 D. 83.

A tax-payer cannot as such maintain a suit to restrain the collection of a tax, or the application of the proceeds to the purposes for which it was raised. Kilbourne v. St. John, 17 R. 291.

Equity has no jurisdiction to restrain the collection of a personal tax, even if it be illegal; nor will it assume jurisdiction to prevent a multiplicity of suits when the parties have, severally, remedies at law. Youngblood v. Sexton, 20 R. 654.

An action does not lie in the name of the state at the relation of the attorney-general for an injunction to restrain the collection of a tax levied to pay void bonds issued by a public (school district) corporation. State v. McLaughlin, 22 R. 264.

Equity will not enjoin the collection of an illegal tax, in the absence of special circumstances, as, for example, to prevent multiplicity of suits, or irreparable injury, or cloud upon title. Douglas v. Harrisville, 27 R. 548.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE COMPANIES.

[Includes the duties and liabilities of telegraph companies to the public, and to those employing them; also, the decisions relating to telephone companies.]

1. The liability distinguished from that of common carriers.*—A telegraph company is not a common carrier, but a bailee, performing, through its agents, a work for its employer, according to certain rules and regulations, which, under the law, it has a right to make for its government. Birney v. Printing Tel. Co., 81 D. 607.

A telegraph company is not liable as a common carrier, but only for want of proper care and attention. Leonard v. New York etc. Tel. Co., 1 R. 446. Contra, Parks v. Alta California Tel. Co., 73 D. 589.

2. Liability for delay, or failure to transmit. — A telegraph company is responsible for any loss or injury which results from its failure or neglect to transmit a message received by it for transmission. Birney v. Printing Tel. Co., 81 D. 607.

A telegraph company receiving a message in its office is bound to transmit it with impartiality and good faith in the order of time in which it is received; and a failure to do so makes the company liable to the person whose dispatch is neglected or postponed. But private dispatches must give way to the transmission of intelligence of general and public interest, and to communications for and from officers of justice. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ward, 85 D. 462.

A party is entitled to recover of a telegraph company a penalty of one hundred dollars, under the Indiana statute, where he took a message to the company's office, and after being informed by the agent that it could be transmitted immediately, paid the charges demanded, but the message was not sent until the following morning, when it was too late to be of any service, unless the company shows that, after receiving the message, the same could not be sent by reason of some derangement of the wires, or that it was postponed in consequence of the transmission of intelligence of general and public interest, or of communications for or from officers of justice. Id.

A telegraph company is guilty of gross negligence, and is therefore liable to the sender of the message for such damage as he sustained in consequence thereof, where a prepaid message, sent from one place to another over the company's line, did not get beyond an intermediate point, and no reason was given by the company for its failure to transmit the message to its destination. United States Tel. Co. v. Wenger, 93 D. 751.

A telegraph company is not liable for loss

* See monographic note on the general duties and liabilities of telegraph companies, 81 D. 613-618. See also note, 45 R. 486-500.

For index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

consequent upon a failure to send a message which is in cipher, or which on its face does not indicate that any such loss might result, unless the purport of the message is communicated to the company's agent at the time it is offered to be sent, so that proper precautions to avoid the risk could be taken. So held where one broker telegraphed to another, "Sell fifty (50) gold," which meant, as between them, "sell fifty thousand dollars gold," and the message was not explained at the time it was offered to be sent, and the brokers, by the decline of gold, as a consequence of the non-delivery of the message, suffered loss. United States Tel. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 96 D. 519.

A statute denouncing a penalty against telegraph companies for failure to transmit messages does not apply to messages delivered out of the state, for transmission to the state. Carnahan v. Western Union Tel. Co., 46 R. 175.

A statute imposing a penalty on a telegraph company for failure to transmit a message is not unconstitutional, even as to a message addressed to another state, and the sender may recover the penalty. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 48 R. 692.

Conditions upon a telegraph message that the company will not be liable for mistakes and delays in transmission or delivery will not exempt the company for a mistake or delay occasioned through its negligence. Menville v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 R. 8.

The plaintiff delivered to the defendant, a railway company operating a telegraph, a message on Sunday, announcing the death of his wife and child to his father, and requesting him to come to him. The defendant negligently failed to deliver the message until the next day, too late for the funeral. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and that exemplary damages were proper. Gulf etc. Ry Co. v. Levy, 46 R. 278.

3. — for failure to deliver. — The burden of proof is on plaintiff, in an action for a breach of a contract to deliver a message by telegraph, to show affirmatively that there has been negligence or want of faith in the sending or delivery of the message. United States Tel. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 96 D. 519.

If the telegraph company is in default, but their default is made mischievous to a plaintiff only by the operation of some other intervening cause, such as the dishonesty of a third person, the rule, Causa proxima non remota spectatur, applies, and the company cannot be made responsible for the loss occasioned by the act of such third person. First Nat. Bank of Barnesville v. Tel. Co., 27 R. 485.

A telegraph company is liable for injury to the feelings of a son by willful neglect to deliver to him a message announcing the death of his mother, whereby he was prevented from attending her funeral. So Relle v. Western Union Tel. Co., 40 R. 805. But reversed, 46 R. 278.

4. — for mistakes in messages. — A telegraph company must send the very message prescribed. They must follow the copy; and for a failure to do so, they are liable in damages, in an action on the case, to the party to whom the message is sent. New York etc. Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 78 D. 338.

Malice is not the gist of an action against a telegraph company for damages for a failure to send a telegram as it was written. Id.

A message as delivered by plaintiff to a telegraph company read: "If we have any Old Southern sell same before board. Buy five Hudson at board"; but the message as transmitted read: "If we have any Old Southern sell same before board. Buy five hundred at board." Plaintiff's agent, who received the message, bought five hundred Old Southern; but plaintiff, hearing of this, immediately directed the sale thereof, and the purchase of five hundred shares Hudson River, according to the intention of the original message as delivered. In the mean time Hudson River had risen, making a difference to plaintiff of $1,375. In an action against the company for damages, — held, that plaintiff could recover, and that the measure of damages was the rise in the price of the stock. Rittenhouse v. Independent Line of Tel., 4 R. 673.

It is gross negligence in a telegraph company to employ an operator who is ignorant of the existence of a county town which is one of the stations on its line. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buchanan, 9 R. 744.

Plaintiff delivered to defendants, a telegraph company, in Maine, a message to be sent during the night to plaintiff's agent in Chicago, directing him to "ship ten thousand bushels" of corn. Defendants received and transmitted the message, but through an error in transmission, it read, as delivered to the agent: "Ship one thousand bushels." The agent bought and shipped one thousand bushels; but some days after, on learning of the mistake in the message, he purchased the other nine thousand bushels, paying ten cents more per bushel therefor, the price having advanced. The message, as delivered to defendants, was written on a blank in which it was provided that the defendants would receive messages to be sent during the night "at one half the usual rates, on condition that the company shall not be liable for errors or delays in the transmission or delivery, from whatever cause occurring." In an action to recover the additional price paid for the nine thousand bushels, — held, 1. That the condition exempting the company from liability was against public policy, and therefore void, even though assented to

* Liability for mistakes in transmitting message, see note, 9 R. 149-156.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume E.

by the sender of the message; 2. That the plaintiff made out a prima facie case by proof of the undertaking, error, and damages, and that thereupon the burden of proof was on the defendants to show that the error was caused by some agency for which they were not liable. Bartlett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 16 R. 437.

A mistake in the transmission of a telegram is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company, and the burden of proof rests upon it to show itself free from fault. Rittenhouse v. Independent Line of Tel., 4 R. 673; Bartlett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 16 R. 437; Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 20 R. 605; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Tyler, 24 R. 279.

B. sent a message by defendant's telegraph to plaintiff, asking for five hundred dollars. By negligence of defendant's servant the message was changed to five thousand dollars, which sum plaintiff sent, and B. absconded with it. Held, that defendant was not liable for the loss, its negligence not being the proximate cause thereof. Lowery v. Western Union Tel. Co., 19 R. 154.

An impostor, at Cincinnati, sent a dispatch in the name of B. over defendant's telegraph line to C., at Selma, Alabama, requesting C. to send a telegraphic money-order to B., at Cincinnati; C. complied, and defendant paid the money to the impostor at Cincinnati. Held, that defendant was not liable for the mistake, in the absence of any suspicious circumstances. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meyer, 32 R. 1.

A telegraph company may not stipulate for immunity for liability for its own negligence. Telegraph Co. v. Griswold, 41 R. 500.

Where a telegraph company has inaccurately transmitted a message, the burden is on it to show its freedom from fault. Ib.

Proof of due care by a telegraph company, or of the absence of negligence and carelessness on its part, is a good defense to an action against it for damages for negligence in receiving and transmitting a dispatch. Pinckney v. Telegraph Co., 45 R. 499, note.

A telegraph company is not liable for a mistake of its clerk in endeavoring, at the request of the sender, to correct a mistake in the written message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Foster, 53 R. 754.

5. Cipher dispatches. — When a message was written in cipher, and the company ignorant of its contents, — held, that it was liable only for the amount received for transmission. Candee v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 R. 452.

Under a statute rendering telegraph companies liable in damages for failure to transmit dispatches, a company altogether failing to transmit a cipher dispatch which it undertakes to deliver, is liable in damages as if the message had been intelligible. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 46 R. 715.

For non-delivery of a cipher dispatch, the meaning of which is not known or explained to the company, a telegraph company is liable in the same damages as if its purport had been apparent, and where such dispatch directs the sale of goods owned by the sender, the measure of damages is the difference in the market price between the time when they would have been sold if the dispatch had been delivered, and the actual sale. Daughtery v. American Union Tel. Co., 51 R. 435.

For failure to deliver or for delay in delivery of a cipher dispatch, a telegraph company is liable only in nominal damages. Daniel v. Western Union Tel. Co., 48 R. 305.

A telegraph company is liable in damages for unreasonable delay in the delivery of a cipher dispatch, and the recovery is not limited to nominal damages. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fatman, 54 R. 877.

6. Negligence in other respects. — A telegraph operator of T. received a message dated at E. and addressed to bankers at P., which read as follows: "Keystone bank will pay the check of T. F. McCarthy to the amount of twenty thousand dollars ($20,000). J. J. Town, cashier of Keystone bank." The person presenting the message was known to the operator by the name of McCarthy, but no authority from the cashier was shown. The message was transmitted, and proved to be fraudulent. Held, that the operator was guilty of gross negligence, for which the telegraph company was liable. Elwood v. Western Union Tel. Co., 6 R. 140.

7. Regulation as to repeating messages. — 1. Generally. — A condition in a telegraph blank upon which a message is written, exempting the company from liability for unrepeatable messages, is not a contract binding in law. Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 14 R. 38.

A condition in a telegraph blank exempting the company from liability for errors in unrepeatable messages exempts them only for errors arising from causes beyond their control; and an error being proved, the onus is on the company of proving that it arose from such causes. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Tyler, 24 R. 279.

It is not unreasonable for telegraph companies to require the repetition of a message, or otherwise the company will not be liable for any error in its transmission. Wana v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 D. 395; Womack v. Western Union Tel. Co., 44 R. 614; being liable only for willful misconduct or gross negligence. Hart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 56 R. 119; Breece v. United States Tel. Co., 8 R. 526. And a person who, having notice of such regulation brought home to his knowledge, sends a message without having it repeated, is to be regarded as having sent it at his own risk. Camp v. Western Union Tel. Co., 71 D. 461. And where the condition as to repeating exists, and is known to the party, or where he is bound to take notice of it, and a mistake occurs in an un-repeated message, the mere proof of such mistake, without some other evidence of carelessness on the part of the company, will not make it liable. Sweetland v. Illinois etc. Tel. Co., 1 R. 285; Becker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 38 R. 356. And in such case the receiver cannot recover more than the stipulated rate of damages where he had reason to suspect an inaccuracy, and neglected to demand repetition, relying on the receiving operator's assurance of correctness. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Neill, 44 R. 589.

* Conditions exempting company from liability for error, see note, 24 R. 283, 284.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

The sender of a telegram is chargeable with notice of the printed conditions on the blank form on which it is written. Womack v. Western Union Tel. Co., 44 R. 614.

One who sends messages by telegraph is supposed to know that the company's engagements are controlled by those rules and regulations which it has a right to make, and in law, he ingrafts them in his contract, and is bound by them. Birney v. Printing Tel. Co., 81 D. 607. Whether or not the particular message be expressly declared to be subject to the terms and conditions prescribed by such rules and regulations, unless it is otherwise provided by special contract. United States Tel. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 96 D. 519.

A telegraph company which has adopted a rule that it will not be liable beyond a certain sum on any un-repeated message is still bound to use ordinary diligence in the delivery of such a message, but it is not bound to exercise any extraordinary degree of care or caution. Id.

Telegraph companies may specially limit their liabilities, but will not be protected from the consequences of gross negligence. Wann v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 D. 395; United States Tel. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 96 D. 519.

The exemption from liability for a non-transmission and a non-delivery of an un-repeated message does not apply to a case where no effort was made by the company, or its agents, to put the message on its transit. Birney v. Printing Tel. Co., 81 D. 607.

A printed heading upon a telegraph blank limiting the liability of the telegraph company for mistakes in the transmission of un-repeated messages to the amount received for sending the message constitutes, when underwritten with a signed dispatch, a contract between the company and the dispatch sender, although it has never been read by him; and, unless, perhaps, in case of willful default or of gross negligence on the company's part, limits its liability to the specified amount, even though the mistake is of a kind not to be prevented by the repetition of the message. Grinnell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 R. 485; Redpath v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 R. 69; Aiken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 R. 210.

The mere fact that the message as delivered at its destination differs from that delivered for transmission in a single letter, is not sufficient to warrant a larger recovery than that provided for in the limitation. Womack v. Western Union Tel. Co., 44 R. 614.

2. Illustrations. — In an action against a telegraph company by the sender of an un-repeated dispatch, to recover the statutory penalty for failure to transmit it, — held, that a regulation of the company limiting its liability in such cases to the amount paid for transmission, and of which plaintiff had no notice, was no defense. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buchanan, 9 R. 744.

A telegraph company cannot, by a notice printed on a blank on which a message is written that it will not be liable unless the message is repeated, relieve itself from liability for a negligent failure to deliver a message not repeated, after it was received at the office to which it was addressed. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Graham, 9 R. 136.

A telegraph company received the following message for transmission: "Cover two hundred September and one hundred August," and transmitted it, "Cover two hundred September and two hundred August." The expressions were common and well understood in the cotton trade. Held, that the company was liable for the full amount of damage suffered, although the message was not repeated according to its regulation, and although in such cases its regulation undertook to limit its liability. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 45 R. 486.

The following telegram was written upon a blank stipulating that the company should not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery of any un-repeated message, by negligence of its servants or otherwise, beyond the amount received for sending the same: "Send bay horse to-day. Mock loads to-night." The message was not repeated, and was delayed in transmission by the defendant's negligence, and the sender lost the sale of the horse in consequence. Mock was a well-known horse dealer, in the habit of shipping horses at that place. Held, 1. That the stipulation did not prevent a recovery for a want of ordinary care and diligence; 2. Actual damages were recoverable. Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 54 R. 644.

8. Other conditions limiting liability. — A telegraph company cannot by tending his funeral, compensation for injury to the feelings may be recovered, where the company was notified of the emergency. Stuart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 59 R. 623.

2. Illustrations. — Plaintiff's agent in Chicago telegraphed to his agent in Oswego for five thousand sacks of salt. By the carelessness of the operator the telegram was made to read "casks"; and five thousand casks were sent, for which there was no market in C., and which were sold at a loss. In an action against the telegraph company for damages arising from the mistake, — held, that the measure of damage was the difference between the market value at O. and at C., together with the cost of transportation from O. to C. Leonard v. New York etc. Tel. Co., 1 R. 446.

The failure of the plaintiff's agent at Oswego to attempt to withdraw the shipment, on learning the mistake, after the goods had been shipped, and, as he supposed, had actually gone, but in fact, as afterward appeared, before they had gone, was not such legal negligence as would prevent the plaintiff's recovering. Id.

Plaintiff, having received an offer of a cargo of corn at ninety cents a bushel, delivered to defendant, a telegraph company, for transmission, a message in reply to the offer, written on a "night-message blank," in these words: "Ship cargo named at ninety, if you can secure freight at ten; wire us the result," and paid forty-eight cents, the rate for night messages, and which was less than the day rates. The blank contained the following printed condition: "It is agreed between the sender of the following message and this company that the company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message, beyond the amount received by said company for sending the same." The message was sent, but was not delivered, by reason whereof the plaintiff failed to obtain the corn at the terms offered, and the price of corn and freight having advanced, plaintiff was compelled to purchase at higher terms. Held, that assuming that the corn would have been forwarded at the terms named but for the non-delivery of the message, the measure of damages was the difference between the price stated and that which the plaintiff would have been obliged to pay at the same place in order by due diligence, after notice of the failure of the telegram, to purchase the like quantity and quality of corn, together with the additional freight. True v. International Tel. Co., 11 R. 156.

A condition in a blank message that the company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of a message, beyond the amount received for sending the same, — held, unreasonable, and not binding in case of non-delivery. Id.

A message, conditioned against liability for error or delay if unreported, directed the sale of one hundred shares of stock. The "100" was changed to "1,000" in transmission, and the latter number was sent. Held, that the measure of damage was the amount paid by plaintiff by reason of an advance in price of stock to replace the excess of nine hundred shares sold in obedience to the erroneous message. Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 14 R. 38.

A message sent by plaintiff, but not delivered by defendant, directed plaintiff's agent to buy a certain quantity of wheat, to be delivered at any time in June at seller's option. The price of wheat fluctuated during the month of June, but was at the close of the month less than on the day when the message should have been delivered. Held, that the court could not presume that the plaintiff would have sold at the right time to make a profit, had the wheat been bought, and that he was, therefore, only entitled to nominal damages. Hubbard v. Western Union Tel. Co., 14 R. 775.

Plaintiff was directed by his correspondent to "ship your hogs at once." The message containing the directions was delayed by defendant's negligence four days. Held, that the measure of damage was the difference at the place of delivery between the market value of the hogs on the day when they would have been delivered had the message been promptly delivered, and the market value on the day the plaintiff was able to deliver them after the actual receipt of the message. Manville v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 R. 8.

Defendant, a telegraph company, agreed to furnish plaintiff, a grain dealer at S., with daily reports of the grain market at C., a point beyond defendant's line. By reason of an error in the report, plaintiff was induced to purchase a quantity of grain to fill a contract for future delivery. Held, that the measure of damages was the difference between the actual purchase price and the price as represented in the report. Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 20 R. 605.

The defendant telegraph company received from a banking-house acting as agent for plaintiff a message to another banking-house, directing the latter to protect the plaintiff's note. The sender paid the price of repeating. The message never was delivered. Held, 1. That the defendant was liable to the plaintiff; 2. That the damages should not be measured by the limitation provided in case of repeated messages, in the blank form on which the message was written, but would embrace all actual damages, including injury to credit; 3. But not exemplary damages, in the absence of proof of express or implied authority or adoption by the company. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 44 R. 610.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE COMPANIES — TENANTS IN COMMON. 3195

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The plaintiff sued a telegraph company for delay in delivering to him a message announcing the death of his son's wife and child, whereby he was prevented from attending the funeral. Held, that there could be no recovery for his mental suffering. Gulf etc. Ry Co. v. Levy, 46 R. 278.

Plaintiff's agent telegraphed him the price at which he could buy apples, but owing to mistakes in the address and signature, the plaintiff paid no attention to it. The price of apples advanced, and the plaintiff was obliged to pay more than the price named in the telegram. In an action for damages, there being no evidence of any difference between the cost of a car-load at the price named, and the value thereof in the same market at the same time, — held, that only the amount paid for the telegram could be recovered. Pennington v. Western Union Tel. Co., 56 R. 367.

13. Poles in streets.* — A telegraph company having a right to place its line in a public street is bound only to reasonable care, can be made responsible for an injury occurring from the breaking of one of its poles only by proof of culpable negligence in the construction or maintenance of the line, and is not bound so to construct or maintain the line as to guard against storms of unusual severity, the occurrence of which could not reasonably be expected. Ward v. Atlantic & Pac. Tel. Co., 27 R. 10.

Legislative authority to telegraph companies to erect poles in public streets is subject to the liability to make compensation to the adjacent land-owners for the use. Board of Trade Tel. Co. v. Barnett, 47 R. 453.

Telegraph poles and wires in a public street are not necessarily a nuisance which will be prohibited at the suit of one in front of whose lot they are erected. McCormick v. District of Columbia, 54 R. 284.

Under a statute authorizing telegraph companies to erect their lines in any streets in a city designated for that purpose by such city, a common council cannot revoke such a designation of the streets, when the company has conformed to the condition upon which the designation was made, and has expended money in placing poles upon the designated streets. Hudson Telephone Co. v. Jersey City, 60 R. 619.

14. Decisions relative to telephone companies.† — The defendant, a Connecticut telephone company, had purchased from a Massachusetts telephone company, owning the patent, the right to use its magnetic telephone system for a certain period, on the condition that it should not permit telegraph companies to use the system unless they had purchased the right from the Massachusetts company. A statute of Connecticut provides that every telephone company shall impartially permit persons and corporations to transmit speech through its wires by its instruments. The plaintiff, a telegraph company in Connecticut, not having purchased the right, sued to compel the defendant to permit it to use the system. Held, not maintainable. American etc. Tel. Co. v. Connecticut Telephone Co., 44 R. 237.

A telephone company may not arbitrarily refuse its facilities to any person desiring them and offering compliance with its regulations, and mandamus will issue to compel the company to do its duty. State v. Nebraska Telephone Co., 52 R. 404.

A telephone company being bound by statute to receive dispatches from and for all telegraph companies may not justify a discrimination in favor of a particular telegraph company by the fact that its contract with the company controlling the telephone patents requires it to do so. Chesapeake etc. Telephone Co. v. Baltimore & O. Tel. Co., 59 R. 167.

A telephone company is liable for an injury to a traveler caused by the fall of wires on a street, although the fall was occasioned by ice produced by water thrown upon them by the fire department. Nichols v. City of Minneapolis, 53 R. 56.

The state may limit the price which telephone companies may charge for their patented facilities. Hackett v. State, 55 R. 201.

Under a license from city authorities for the erection of a telephone line, there is no right to enter private property and cut off the limbs of trees, although they project over the sidewalk. Memphis Bell Telephone Co. v. Hunt, 57 R. 237.

TENDER.

[Includes the necessity of a tender; the time, place, and validity of tender; rules of pleading and evidence in respect to tender; and decisions relative to the legal-tender acts of Congress.]

Necessity of, before suit, see CONTRACTS, 160; TROVER, 10.
Of deed, duty of vendor to make, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 19.
Of mortgage debt, effect of, see MORTGAGES, 133.
Of performance, see CONTRACTS, 123.
Of performance, effect of, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 25.
Of stock, before suit for subscription, see CORPORATIONS, 213.
Plea of, see PLEADING, 38.
When bank notes are good tender, see BANKS AND BANKING, 34.
When necessary before bringing ejectment, see EJECTMENT, 22.

1. When necessary.—A tender of a conveyance is unnecessary where the other party has declared his unwillingness to accept it. Lynch v. Postlethwaite, 12 D. 495.

The averment of actual tender and payment of money into court is not necessary in the case of an executory agreement, where the acts of the parties are to be concurrent, as where one is to make a deed and the other to pay the purchase-money; an offer to pay and demand of performance is sufficient, if performance be refused, and the money may be brought into court at the trial. Henry v. Raiman, 64 D. 703.

2. Who may make or receive a tender.*—Tender of money due the beneficiary should be made to the trustee. Chahoon v. Hollenback, 16 D. 587.

A party has no right to make tender on his own behalf of amount due on mortgage, where he has no interest in the mortgaged premises, or in making the tender. Mahler v. Neubaur, 91 D. 571.

A creditor has the right to be informed on whose behalf a tender is made, when made by a stranger, or one not a party in interest, or he will not be required to accept it, or reject it at his peril. Id.

3. In what currency tender may be made, generally.—A tender in bank notes is valid if no objection is made on that account at the time, but the only objection to receiving the notes is placed upon the ground that a larger sum is due. Ball v. Stanley, 26 D. 263.

A written agreement to pay a sum of money on or before a day certain, with a provision that it may be paid in Arkansas currency, is not discharged by a tender of the amount due thereon, in Arkansas currency, after maturity. Hoys v. Tuttle, 46 D. 309.

*To whom and by whom must be made, see note, 77 D. 477, 478.

4. — in cases of contracts expressly made payable in gold coin.—A contract to pay a sum of money in gold coin of United States "of the present standard weight and fineness, notwithstanding any law which now may or hereafter shall make anything else a tender in payment of debts," is not payable in legal-tender notes. Dutton v. Pailaret, 91 D. 135; McGoon v. Shirk, 5 R. 122; Myers v. Kauffman, 95 D. 367; McGoon v. Shirk, 5 R. 122; Killough v. Alford, 5 R. 249.

5. Depreciated or uncurrent money.—Where a party objects to a tender on the ground that it is not made in lawful money, although the jury may be satisfied that his real motive is to get rid of the contract, they are not at liberty to disregard his objection. Decamp v. Feay, 9 D. 372.

6. What is a valid tender.*—An offer of money in bags is a legal tender. It is sufficient that the party offered to pay the requisite amount. Behaly v. Hatch, 12 D. 570.

An objection made at the time of a tender precludes all others, and if that be not well grounded, the tender will be held good. Moynahan v. Moore, 77 D. 468.

7. What is not.—It is not a legal tender to say, "Here I am ready"; the tenderer must have the money ready also. North v. Mallett, 2 D. 622.

The offer of a certain sum in satisfaction of an unliquidated claim does not operate as a legal tender if refused. McDaniels v. Bank of Rutland, 70 D. 406.

A declaration of willingness to pay for the value of the labor when the article shall be delivered is not equivalent to an actual tender by a plaintiff in an action of replevin. McIntyre v. Carver, 37 D. 519.

To constitute a valid tender, he who makes it must be ready to pay and must actually offer to pay. It is not sufficient that a person is present from whom the money might be borrowed, unless he actually consents to loan it for the purpose of the tender. Sargent v. Graham, 22 D. 469.

8. Proper time to make tender.†—A tender of money or property must be made at a convenient time before sunset. Williams v. Johnson, 12 D. 275.

A tender of principal and interest, when only the latter was due, is good, unless the creditor shows a willingness to accept the amount due. Saunders v. Frost, 16 D. 394.

A creditor cannot be required to accept a part of a debt which has not become due. Id.

*General requisites of tender, see note, 77 D. 470-472.

Duty of debtor to seek creditor for purpose of making tender, see note, 8 D. 520, 521.

† Illustrations of sufficient and insufficient tender, see note, 77 D. 473-476.

‡ Time and place of tender, see note, 77 D. 478-480.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

A tender must precede suit where the plaintiff relies on an equitable title under a contract for a conveyance. Chakoon v. Holtenback, 16 D. 587.

The tender of the amount due on a mortgage of chattels by one who has converted the same, claiming under the mortgagor, is ineffectual after an action commenced for the conversion, unless the costs are also tendered. Farr v. Smith, 24 D. 162.

The Vermont statute allowing a tender in all actions until three days before the term of court does not apply to actions of trover, or to other actions, where no tender could be made without the aid of a statute. Hart v. Skinner, 42 D. 500.

After a writ had been sued out to recover a debt, and delivered to an officer for service, the debtor tendered the amount of the debt, with interest, but without costs. Held, that the tender was good, as the suit was not commenced, except for the purpose of preventing the running of the statute of limitations, until the writ was served. Randall v. Bacon, 24 R. 100.

9. The necessary amount. — An offer of part of the amount due does not avail as a tender, nor, if refused, does it operate as payment pro tanto. Fridge v. State, 20 D. 463.

10. Keeping the tender good.* — The benefit of a tender is lost by a subsequent demand and refusal. Ross v. Brown, 1 D. 22.

The tender of securities in satisfaction of a debt must be kept good by bringing and offering the securities in court. Their destruction annuls the tender. Brooklyn Bank v. De Grauw, 35 D. 569.

Where a tender merely defeats a particular remedy, but does not discharge a debt, it is not necessary to show continued readiness to pay or to bring the money into court. Kortright v. Cady, 78 D. 145.

To save costs, defendant must keep his tender good by actually producing the money and depositing it in court. And it is too late where the amount tendered before suit is not deposited in court until after the trial has begun, and after the accrual of costs not embraced in the amount tendered. Warrington v. Pollard, 95 D. 727.

At common law, the tender of a mortgage debt on the day it falls due, and at the appointed place, discharges the mortgage. Orain v. McGoon, 29 R. 37. But a tender after default of the amount due upon a chattel mortgage must be kept good, to be availing. Tompkins v. Batie, 38 R. 361.

11. Payment into court.† — Money paid into court is not to be deducted from the amount found due, and a verdict returned only for the balance, but the verdict should be for the whole amount due, if it exceeds the amount paid in; otherwise the verdict should be for the defendant. Dakin v. Dunning, 42 D. 33.

Money paid into court must be indorsed on an execution, and the balance only collected, where the verdict is for the plaintiff for a larger sum. Id.

Defendant may pay into court the amount he admits to be due, with costs to that time, and if plaintiff deny that it is sufficient to satisfy his demands, and go to trial, and the jury find more is due him than defendant offers, the latter must pay costs; but if they find the amount sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's just demands, he must pay all costs incurred since the offer was made. Murray v. Windley, 47 D. 324.

Where money paid into court by way of a tender is withdrawn under an order of the court, such withdrawal cannot affect the validity of the tender. Wright v. Young, 70 D. 453.

12. Conditional tender.* — A tender with a condition annexed is invalid. Holton v. Brown, 46 D. 148; Brooklyn Bank v. De Grauw, 35 D. 569; Draper v. Hitt, 5 R. 292. And the money or other thing to be tendered must be actually produced, unless the creditor dispenses with it, either by an express declaration, or other equivalent acts. Brown v. Gilmore, 22 D. 223.

Plaintiff held a mortgage to secure a note, but had lost the note. Defendant, the mortgagor, tendered payment, but demanded the note as a condition, and refused to take a receipt and discharge of the mortgage, which plaintiff offered. Held, such tender was no bar to an action of ejectment brought on the mortgage. Holton v. Brown, 46 D. 148.

A party is not entitled to an abatement of interest on his debt secured by trust deed on the ground of a prior tender, if at the time of such tender he required as a concurring stipulation an impossible condition. Ross v. Dudley, 67 D. 231.

A tender sufficient in amount to discharge a mechanic's lien for repair of personal property is not vitiated by a condition that the property shall be delivered up, where the only objection made to the tender was, that the amount was insufficient. Mognahan v. Moore, 77 D. 468.

Tender made to procure possession of property can hardly be called conditional because it is accompanied with a demand for the property. Id.

A tender of the amount due upon a promissory note secured by a mortgage on real estate, made upon the condition that such mortgage shall be released or canceled, is insufficient. Storey v. Krenwon, 23 R. 668.

* Must be unconditional and unqualified, see note, 77 D. 476, 477.

* Keeping the tender good, see note, 77 D. 481, 482.

† Bringing money into court, see note, 77 D. 482, 483.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

13. Tender of chattels.* — 1. Generally. — A tender of property is not good unless the articles are specifically pointed out, so that their identity can be ascertained. Bates v. Bates, 12 D. 572.

A tender of chattels in pursuance of a contract for their delivery, though it discharges the original obligation, and if not accepted, converts the obligor into the bailee of the obligee, does not justify the obligor in abandoning or destroying the property. He must take care of it at the expense and risk of the obligee. Sheldon v. Skinner, 21 D. 161.

Where property has been tendered as of a certain value, having been appraised by but one of two appraisers agreed upon by the parties, the tender is not good; both appraisers must act, or the amount in money be tendered. Lamb v. Lathrop, 27 D. 174.

Property of a greater value than the debt cannot be tendered, with a demand for the difference; it should be tendered at the amount to be paid, or money should be tendered. Ib.

A tender of a specific article must be of such article, in every material respect, as the contract under which it is made requires. Sharp v. Jones, 81 D. 359.

2. Time and place of tender. — The time and place at which a delivery or tender of specific chattels may be made must be determined from the nature of the contract. Sheldon v. Skinner, 21 D. 161; Roberts v. Beatty, 21 D. 410.

The place where cumbersome chattels may be delivered in pursuance of a contract must be ascertained by notifying the obligee, and requesting him to name the place where he will receive them. Delivery must be made at the place designated, unless it is an unreasonable one. Sheldon v. Skinner, 21 D. 161.

The place where articles are to be delivered, though not named in the contract, may often be determined from the nature of the transaction, and the situation and business relations of one or of both of the parties. Ib.

If no place be fixed, the debtor must seek the creditor, if within the state, and tender performance of the contract. Roberts v. Beatty, 21 D. 410.

Portable property, in such a case, must be taken and delivered to the creditor, or at his residence. Ib.

Where a contract is payable at a certain time and place, in specific articles, and the debtor is at the place appointed at a seasonable hour before sunset on the day fixed, prepared to make delivery, and the creditor neglects to attend to receive the articles, a tender after sunset will be good. Avery v. Stewart, 7 D. 240.

The delivery of portable articles, when the place is not designated in the contract therefor, must be made at the residence of the obligee. La Farge v. Rickert, 21 D. 209. And if the property be ponderous, the debtor must request the creditor, a reasonable time beforehand, to appoint a time and place of delivery. Roberts v. Beatty, 21 D. 410; and then deliver them at the place by him designated, if he appoint a reasonable place, and one within the probable contemplation of the parties. The articles tendered must be separated from other articles, so that the promisee can know which to take. Barns v. Graham, 15 D. 394.

There can be no tender after the contract is broken, and uncertain damages have accrued. Roberts v. Beatty, 21 D. 410.

Tender of specific articles must be made on the day stipulated. Ib.

14. Tender of choses in action. — A chose in action against a creditor is not a good tender in payment of a judgment or execution. Thorp v. Wegfarth, 93 D. 789.

15. Tender of performance. — A tender of performance, if no place is fixed, may be made to the person. Bates v. Bates, 12 D. 572.

Tender by an executor of a deed executed by the testator, in his lifetime, in accordance with a direction in the will, is good. Rearick v. Swinchart, 51 D. 540.

A vendor to exempt himself from costs by tender in an action by his vendee for a specific performance, and for damages on account of a diminution in the amount conveyed, must tender the amount owing the vendee on account of the diminution, and also a conveyance of the land. Walling v. Kinnard, 60 D. 216.

A demand is liquidated so that tender exempts defendant from costs, where he conveys a tract as containing a certain number of acres at a certain price per acre and the tract falls short of that amount. Ib.

The tender of a quitclaim deed, without a release of the dower of the wife of the grantor, is not a sufficient compliance with a contract by which the bargainor agrees to convey the entire estate in the land by a good and sufficient conveyance. Wright v. Young, 70 D. 453.

16. Effect of tender, generally. — A tender of specific articles at the time and place appointed by the contract discharges the contract, and vests the property in the creditor, whether he attends to receive it or not. Barney v. Bliss, 12 D. 696; Mitchell v. Merrill, 18 D. 128. And if the tender is refused, the party tendering becomes the bailee of the party refusing. Spaw v. Baitwell, 46 D. 346.

A tender properly made is a satisfaction of the demand; the debt is paid, and the articles tendered become the property of the creditor, and afterwards are kept at his risk and expense. Lamb v. Lathrop, 27 D. 174.

The relation of debtor and creditor no longer exists between the parties, but that of trustee and cestui que trust, or bailor and bailee. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

A tender after suit brought to recover specific property upon which a lien for services is claimed does not entitle plaintiff to his costs, though the tender be of the full amount claimed by defendant, exclusive of costs, and though the sum offered is thereupon accepted. McIntyre v. Carver, 37 D. 519.

Tender in the bills or notes of a bank is not treated as a tender of specific articles, and does not discharge the debt. A party pleading such tender must, therefore, plead it with a proferet in curia. Spann v. Ball-sell, 46 D. 346.

Money tendered in payment of a debt does not, unless accepted, discharge the debtor, or vest title to the same in the creditor. Stowell v. Read, 41 D. 714.

A tender in payment of a debt prevents the recovery of costs in an action to enforce the demand. Ib.

A tender admits the liability or indebtedness to the amount of the sum tendered. Frink v. Coe, 61 D. 141.

A tender of a thing claimed in suit, when made in the course of judicial proceedings and in an unqualified and unrestricted manner, carries with it the presumption which the law attaches to a judicial confession; but when such tender is made, not of the thing claimed, but of something else, with a special reservation of all legal rights, and with the special defense that the thing claimed is not due, and when such tender is not accepted as made, it does not have that conclusive effect. Davis v. Milaudon, 87 D. 517.

17. Effect of tender in foreign jurisdiction. — Though one country will not execute the penal laws of another, yet if a person be discharged from a debt by a tender and refusal made in a foreign country by virtue of its laws, he may defend himself elsewhere by relying upon such tender and refusal and the laws under which he was discharged. Warder v. Arell, 1 D. 488.

18. Waiver of strict tender. — The positive declaration of one to whom money is to be paid within a certain time, that he will not receive it, will excuse the tender of the money, provided the declaration is made before the expiration of the time. Dorsey v. Barboe, 12 D. 296.

A party waives his objection that a tender is made after a breach of a contract to deliver goods, where he refuses to accept the goods solely on the ground that they are not merchantable. Gould v. Banks, 24 D. 91.

19. Avoiding or preventing tender. — A suit commenced by a creditor who keeps out of the way to prevent a tender of the amount due him will be stayed upon payment of the amount due, without costs, although a technical right of action existed at the commencement of the suit. Noyes v. Clark, 82 D. 620.

20. Rules of pleading respecting tender. — Tender and refusal in covenant need not be pleaded with an averment of being still ready. Where the time and place are fixed, and the covenantor can discharge the covenant without any concurrent act on the part of the obligee, the plea should be tender, etc., and not "ready to pay." Mitchell v. Gregory, 4 D. 655.

A plea of tender should show that the tender was made at the uttermost convenient hour of the day. So on a covenant to deliver whisky at obligor's distillery upon a given day, a plea "that he was ready on the day, but neither plaintiff nor any one on his behalf attended with the vessels to receive it," is bad for want of a statement of the time of the day at which the obligor attended. Jouett v. Wagon, 5 D. 602.

A plea of tender of specific articles must state an actual tender; and a plea stating that the debtor had the property ready at the time and place to deliver to the creditor, and there remained throughout the day, but that the creditor did not attend to receive it, and that it is still ready for the creditor if he will receive it, is insufficient. Barney v. Bliss, 12 D. 696.

To a declaration upon a note payable in good current bank notes, such as will be received in deposit in two banks named, and such as will pass at par at the time of payment, a plea of tender of such bank notes as would be received in the two banks named, which fails to aver that the notes were of par value, is bad on demurrer. McNairy v. Bell, 24 D. 454.

Plea of tender must show an unqualified offer to pay the whole amount, and such plea admits the amount due and a readiness at all times to pay it. Cary v. Bancroft, 25 D. 393.

A tender of a note due the defendant from the assignor of the plaintiff, and the balance in money, does not support a plea of tender. Ib.

A plea of tender of personalty need not aver that the defendant is still ready to deliver, nor that the tender was made in satisfaction of the debt. Lamb v. Lathrop, 27 D. 174.

In an action on a bond payable in notes of a certain bank, a plea of tender which does not aver that the defendants were always ready to pay the said notes from the time of tender, and does not aver that the tender was made on the day of the maturity of the bond, is demurrable. Lanier v. Trigg, 45 D. 293.

Plea of tender is not good unless the party bring the money or other thing tendered into court, and thus give his adversary an opportunity to accept it. An exception exists where the thing tendered cannot, owing to its weight or bulk, be conveniently brought into court. Spain v. Baltzell, 46 D. 346.

Plea of tender and refusal after commencement of the action is no bar, even though the money is brought into court under that plea; but such a plea of refusal, aptly pleaded and in due time, will bar the action and throw upon the plaintiffs the costs of the suit. Murray v. Windley, 47 D. 324.

Tender in open court of thing demanded, or its equivalent, is an admission that the thing itself is due, and is inconsistent with an averment that the thing is not due; and a plea of payment or plea of tender is inconsistent with a general denial. Davis v. Mil-laudon, 87 D. 517.

21. Rules of evidence. — Evidence that goods tendered were unmerchantable is admissible in rebuttal of proof of a tender in an action for the non-delivery of such goods. Gould v. Banks, 24 D. 90.

22. Constitutionality of legal-tender acts. — The act of Congress declaring United States treasury notes a legal tender in the payment of debts is valid and binding. Johnson v. Levy, 94 D. 206.

23. Their interpretation and effect. — The acts of Congress called "legal-tender acts" do not merely confer a privilege on debtors for their benefit, but are measures of public policy, and the right under them to pay in any lawful money cannot be waived even by express consent. Galliano v. Pierre, 89 D. 643.

Legal damages for a failure to pay a stipulated amount in gold cannot possibly exceed that amount in any lawful currency, under the legal-tender act. Id.

The defendant accepted, payable in Boston, a bill of exchange for one hundred pounds, drawn in London. Held, that he was liable to pay only at the rate of $4.84 per pound in treasury notes. Cary v. Courtenay, 4 R. 559.

In 1870 the legislature of Vermont authorized the state treasurer to pay, in gold coin, bonds issued before the passage of the "legal-tender" act of Congress, and due in 1871. Subsequently, the supreme court of the United States decided that the legal-tender act applied to debts contracted before as well as after its passage; and the state treasurer refused to pay the bonds in gold coin. Held, that the payment of the bonds in gold could not be enforced. Kellogg v. Page, 8 R. 383.

The bonds of the state were expressed on their face to be payable in gold and silver coin. The legislature passed a resolution to pay them in legal-tender notes. Held, that the court had no power to compel the state officers to make payment in coin. State v. Hays, 11 R. 402.

A mortgage was executed before the passage of the legal-tender act. After the decision of the United States supreme court (Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. 606) declaring the act void as to contracts made prior to its passage, the grantee of the mortgage tendered payment of the mortgage debt in legal-tender notes, which the mortgagee refused. Subsequently the United States supreme court reversed its decision. (Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall. 457.) Held, that the tender did not discharge the lien of the mortgagee, it being insufficient according to the law as then declared. Harris v. Jex, 14 R. 285.

1. Rules for computing time, generally.*—From the day of the date, and from the date, signifying the same thing, and may either include or exclude the day, according to the intent. Houser v. Reynolds, 1 D. 551; Smith v. Cassidy, 48 D. 420; unless a different intention is manifested by the instrument or statute under which the question arises. Bemis v. Leonard, 19 R. 470. This rule applies to every instrument or contract, and also to the construction of statutes and all proceedings under them. Weeks v. Hall, 50 D. 249. So where mortgaged premises have been sold at foreclosure sale on a certain day, the redemptioner has until the last moment of the same day of the succeeding year in which to redeem. Teucher v. Hiett, 92 D. 440.

Whenever a forfeiture would be incurred by including "the day of the date," or "an act done," it will be excluded in the computation; and whether such day is to be included or excluded is to be determined according to the intention of the parties, so as to effectuate their deeds, and not to destroy them. Williamson v. Farrow, 21 D. 492.

In the computation of time from a certain day, it is a general principle that the time will be so computed as to save the right intended to be favored by the law, or to be secured by the parties to a contract, by including or excluding the first day. Jones v. Planters' Bank, 42 D. 471.

A month referred to without designation of year will be understood to be of the current year, unless from the connection it is apparent that another year is intended. A writ, therefore, made in February, returnable at the court to be held on the fourth Tuesday of April will be understood as returnable on the fourth Tuesday of April next. Kelly v. Gilman, 61 D. 645.

2. Statutory limitations of time within which acts must be done.—If, in a statute, time is to be computed from the doing of an act, the day on which it is done is excluded from the computation. Ex parte Dean, 14 D. 521; McCulloch v. Hopper, 54 R. 146; Owen v. Slatter, 62 D. 745.

Under a statute requiring the copy of the writ and of the return of the attachment to be deposited in the town clerk's office "any time within three days thereafter," the day of the attachment is to be excluded. Bemis v. Leonard, 19 R. 470.

The statute of 21 Henry III. concerning leap-year makes no provision as to how the 28th and 29th of February shall be counted in computing a number of days less than a year; the 29th of February is an independent day in such computations; and so service of a summons on the 25th of February for a term commencing March 6th is a valid ten days' notice. Helphenstine v. Vincennes Nat. Bank, 32 R. 86.

In computing time under the statute of distributions, it is the practice of American courts to include one day and exclude the other, except when the statute requires so many entire days to intervene, in which case both are excluded. Owen v. Slatter, 62 D. 745.

In computing the time allowed to do an act, intervening Sundays are included; but if the day of performance falls on Sunday, it is not counted, and the party is entitled to perform the act on the Monday following. Salter v. Burt, 33 D. 530; Cressey v. Paris, 46 R. 406.

Where the last day for the performance of an act by statute falls on Sunday, it may be done on the next day. Edmundson v. Wrapp, 49 R. 590.

3. Rule that fractions of a day are not regarded.*—Fictions of law are resorted to only for the purpose of attaining justice, and will never be allowed to prevail over the real facts, where such allowance will work a wrong. Murfree v. Carmack, 26 D. 232.

In the computation of time, the law does not know the fractions of a day. Fears v. Merrill, 50 D. 226; unless for the purpose of giving effect to a right which would otherwise be defeated. Williamson v. Farrow, 21 D. 492; Craig v. Godfrey, 54 D. 299. So where two persons claim the same tract of land from a common source, by different conveyances, executed on the same day, the time of day such conveyances were executed may be proved, for the purpose of showing who has the better right. Murfree v. Carmack, 26 D. 232. S. F., Knowlton v. Culver, 52 D. 156; Motts v. Bright, 32 D. 683.

Where in ejectment a plaintiff claims title under a judgment dated a certain day, and defendant by deed from the judgment debtor executed on the same day, and there is no proof that the lien of the judgment attached prior to the execution of the deed, the defendant must prevail. Murfree v. Carmack, 26 D. 232.

4. When "month" means a lunar month, and when a calendar month.—In cases of bills of exchange and promissory

*Fractions of a day, when will be considered, see note, 36 D. 224-226.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume 1.

notes, time is calculated by calendar and not by lunar months. Leffingwell v. White, 1 D. 87.

In statutes and judicial proceedings the word "month" means a calendar month; and it should be so construed in contracts, unless it appears that the parties intended a lunar month. Williamson v. Farrow, 21 D. 492.

The word "month" and the words "thirty days" are synonymous terms in the general railroad law of Indiana. Heaston v. Cincinnati etc. R. R. Co., 79 D. 430.

5. Meaning of the word "day."—Under a statute authorizing the filing of a certain paper in the clerk's office within a specified number of days, the paper need not be filed within the hours appointed by law for keeping the office open, but may be filed after the expiration of those hours at any time up to midnight of the last day. Zimmerman v. Cowan, 47 R. 476.

1. What is a town. — The power to elect representatives without classification is, under constitution of New Hampshire, confined to towns; viz., those places having one hundred and fifty ratable polls, or places with town privileges, which are really towns. No others have such power. Bow v. Allentown, 69 D. 489.

A legislative annexation of other territory to a town will make it part of the town in future, even if it was not a town before. Id.

Towns only are authorized to draw jurors, and fact that a place was required by the courts to return jurors, and that jurors were drawn and returned to the courts, is evidence that the place was reputed to be a town and assumed to act as such. Id.

Evidence tending to prove the existence of a town by a prescriptive right is also evidence proper to be weighed in the attempt to establish its existence by reputation. Id.

Places exercising town privileges are towns by implication. Id.

Powers of unincorporated places under constitution and laws of New Hampshire pointed out, and the gradual approximation of the condition and powers of such places to those of towns shown. Id.

2. Powers of legislature respecting towns. — The legislature has power to restrain, modify, enlarge, or change public corporations which exist for public purposes alone, like counties, cities, and towns, provided, however, that property owed by such corporations shall be secured for the use of those having an interest in it, or for whose benefit it was acquired. North Yarmouth v. Skilling, 71 D. 530.

An act of the legislature authorizing a town to raise by tax a sum of money for the use and benefit of a private educational institution is unconstitutional and void. Curtis v. Whipple, 1 R. 187.

The fact that an educational institution is incorporated does not render it public, so far as relates to the power of taxation for its aid. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The legislature cannot constitutionally authorize a town to loan its credit to persons who will, in consideration thereof, maintain a manufacturing enterprise in the town for their own private emolument. Allen v. Inhab. of Jay, 11 R. 185.

3. Incorporation and organization.* — An act of incorporation cannot be proved by evidence that a place has been classed for the choice of a representative; because unincorporated places are usually classed for that purpose. Bow v. Allentown, 69 D. 489.

The incorporation of a town may be proved by representation, legislative grants necessarily implying a town corporation, or by claim and user of the corporate powers of a town with the knowledge and assent of the legislature, and without objection or interruption for a period long enough to furnish evidence of a prescriptive right, where no charter or act of incorporation of the place as a town can be found. Ib.

A new charter does not extinguish old privileges; and an act of incorporation does not raise any conclusive presumption that the town thus incorporated was not a corporate town before the act was passed. It is evidence to be weighed by the jury. Ib.

4. Divisions of towns. — On the division of a town by the legislature, and incorporation into a new town of part of its territory, with the inhabitants thereon, the old town will retain all the property and be responsible for the existing liabilities, unless there is some legislative provision to the contrary. North Yarmouth v. Skillings, 71 D. 530.

The legislature, on division of a town, has the constitutional authority to provide that the property owned by the original town shall be appropriated or held for the use and enjoyment of the inhabitants of both towns, and to impose upon each town the payment of a share of the corporate debts. Ib.

Where a town holds property in trust for the use of all the inhabitants, the legislature, on division of a town, may provide that the original town shall still hold such property in trust for inhabitants of the old town, and of the new town created by such division. Ib.

Whether the legislature by dividing a town and failing to provide in regard to trust property could deprive part of the inhabitants of their accustomed use of it, quære. Ib.

If a portion of the tract known as "Sargent's Purchase" had been annexed by the legislature to the town of Jackson, what remained would constitute "Sargent's Purchase," and be liable for the proportion of taxes assigned to that location. Wells v. Jackson I. M. Co., 90 D. 575.

When a town is divided and a new town created out of a part of the territory, the latter is not bound to contribute toward the payment of debts contracted before the division, in the absence of any statute to that effect. Town of Depere v. Town of Bellevue, 11 R. 602.

5. Altering boundaries. — The record of an adjudication of the court of sessions, establishing the boundary line between two towns, cannot be given in evidence as to the original line between the townships, in an action between private land-owners. Lawrence v. Haynes, 20 D. 554.

The perambulations of the line made by selectmen of the two towns may be given in evidence in such an action. Ib.

A town is a civil division composed of contiguous territory; and under constitutional powers to county boards to change town boundaries, a town cannot be made to consist of two tracts not contiguous. Chicago etc. Ry. Co. v. Town of Oconto, 36 R. 840.

6. Powers of towns, generally. — A town may, by vote, release a debt as well as contract one. Ford v. Clough, 23 D. 513.

Powers of unincorporated places under the constitution and laws of New Hampshire pointed out, and the gradual approximation of the condition and powers of such places to those of towns shown. Bow v. Allentown, 69 D. 489.

The trustees of a town have implied power to employ counsel to defend the marshal against an action of false imprisonment brought by one arrested by him for violation of a town ordinance. Cullen v. Town of Carthage, 53 R. 504.

7. Township taxes. — Towns are not responsible for errors or wrongful acts of assessors and collectors of taxes in assessing and collecting excessive or unauthorized taxes. Lorillard v. Town of Monroe, 62 D. 120.

A town cannot raise by taxation or by pledge of its credit, or pay from its treasury money for the expenses of a committee directed by a vote of the town to petition the legislature for the annexation of the town to another town. Minot v. Inhab. of West Roxbury, 17 R. 52.

8. By-laws and ordinances. — A town cannot by its by-laws confer authority upon its officers to make sales of impounded animals, except for penalties incurred and the costs of the proceedings, under the Illinois act of 1861, empowering the electors of towns at their annual town meetings to restrain or prohibit the running at large of certain animals, and to authorize the detaining, impounding, and sale of the same for penalties incurred and the cost of the proceedings. Poppen v. Holmes, 92 D. 186.

To ascertain whether a penalty has been incurred is a proceeding purely judicial in its character, and the power cannot be exercised by the pound-master by virtue of his office, under the Illinois act of 1861 empowering the electors of towns at their annual town meetings to restrain or prohibit the running at large of certain animals, and to authorize the distraining, impounding, and sale of the same for penalties incurred and the cost of the proceedings. Id.

A town cannot by its by-laws authorize a pound-master to sell property without a judicial ascertainment that some law has been violated. Id.

A town having passed an ordinance requiring a certain license fee, the legality of which was questioned, its trustees orally agreed, at a regular meeting, with a person required to take such a license, that if he would pay the fee they would record an agreement to refund it if the ordinance should be adjudged illegal. He accordingly paid the fee, and the agreement was subsequently recorded. The ordinance was afterward adjudged invalid. Held, that he could recover the fee. Columbia City v. Anthes, 43 R. 90.

9. Township officers. — Township officers are not personally liable for acts done honestly, in the exercise of the discretion which the law gives them, even though that discretion be exercised so mistakenly as to work an injury to private property or private individuals; but they are liable if they act maliciously or wantonly, and if the work which they perform is done rather to injure an individual than to discharge a public duty. Yealy v. Fink, 82 D. 556.

A town may, out of moneys raised for town purposes, indemnify its officers for reasonable expenses incurred by them in or through the bona fide discharge of their duties. State v. Council, 20 R. 404.

The trustees of a town possess only such powers as are specifically conferred by the act of incorporation, or are necessary to carry into effect the powers expressly granted; and if they transcend the authority so conferred, their acts are not binding upon the town or third persons. Petersburg v. Mappin, 56 D. 501.

The authority of town selectmen is no more a personal trust than that of an administrator, a conservator, or a guardian, — all of whom may submit matters within their charge to arbitration. Hine v. Stephens, 89 D. 217.

The trustees of town may sue and be sued, and take all steps necessary to assert and secure the rights of the corporation. Petersburg v. Mappin, 56 D. 501; Hine v. Stephens, 89 D. 217.

The court in this case was inclined to hold that the selectmen of a town have power, without special authority from it, to submit to arbitration a claim against the town for damages. Hine v. Stephens, 89 D. 217.

The power of trustees of a town to prosecute and defend suits on behalf of the corporation includes the power to compromise the same; and a settlement of an existing controversy, if made in good faith, binds the corporation, though if collusive it is not obligatory. Petersburg v. Mappin, 56 D. 501.

A mere error in judgment will not vitiate a settlement of the controversy by trustees of a town in behalf of the corporation, if made in good faith. Id.

The selectmen of a town, in the performance of a duty imposed upon them by statute, employed a person as nurse in a small-pox hospital established by the town, and suffered him to depart without being properly disinfected, whereby plaintiff caught the disease. Held, that the town was not liable. Brown v. Finkelhaven, 20 R. 709.

An order for goods, signed by township trustees, with the addition of their official description, but purporting in the body to be their personal contract, the contract not being such as the town could legally make, binds the signers individually. Revolving Scraper Co. v. Tuttle, 47 R. 816.

Where a county physician refuses to treat a person in urgent need of medical attendance, a township trustee has authority to employ another; and his declarations concerning payment are competent. Washburn v. Shelby County, 54 R. 332.

The neglect of a town clerk to index a record furnishes no cause of action, under a statute making the town liable for damages accruing to any person from the neglect of the town clerk, unless it is the cause of the alleged injury, which must not result from the plaintiff's want of diligence; therefore it gives no right of action to one who never examined the records, and was therefore not misled by the omission. Lyman v. Edgerton, 70 D. 415.

The false representations of a town clerk as to records in his office will not give right of action against town, under a statute making the town liable for the neglect of the town clerk; but to hold the town liable for a defect in the records, the plaintiff must either examine the records, or prove a refusal of the clerk to permit him to do so upon request. Id.

An excuse for making a request is not provable under an allegation of refusal of the town clerk to show the records upon request. Id.

The request to a town clerk to show records is not proved by testimony that the plaintiff asked the clerk if there was any claim upon the property, and that he made the inquiry to avoid an examination of the records. Id.

The statements of a town clerk respecting records in his office are not official acts; and if false, the town is not liable for the injury accruing therefrom, under a statute making the town liable for the neglect or default of the town clerk. Ib.

The neglect of a town clerk, whether fraudulent or not, to disclose existence of encumbrance upon premises to purchaser is not an official neglect for which the town is liable by statute. Ib.

A town treasurer and collector is not excused from failure to pay over money collected by him by its loss, through theft, without his fault. Hancock v. Hazard, 59 D. 171.

The surety of a township treasurer is not bound by a settlement of the treasurer's accounts with the town by the treasurer's deputy without the treasurer's knowledge, the treasurer being charged by the town clerk in the account upon which the settlement was based, with moneys which his predecessor never paid over. Rice v. Sidney, 38 R. 227.

A committee of a town, executing a contract in their individual names, therein describing themselves as a committee of the town of W., and stipulating that "said committee are to pay," etc., are personally answerable on the contract. Simonds v. Heard, 34 D. 41.

Where the committee of a town contracted with one to clear land belonging to the town, for a municipal purpose, and the contractor, in doing the work, was guilty of negligence, injuring the plaintiff, — held, that the members of the committee were not individually liable; but, quære, Would the town be liable? Wright v. Holbrook, 13 R. 12.

10. Town meetings, how called. — The manner of warning a town meeting is not prescribed by any statute. Ford v. Clough, 23 D. 513.

A meeting will be presumed to have been legally called if the inhabitants assemble at the time and place appointed, and proceed to act under the warrant. Ib.

That a constable's return on a warrant for a town meeting is dated on the day of the meeting is no objection to the legality of such meeting. Ib.

A warrant calling two town meetings on the same day at the same place is not illegal, if the objects of the meetings respectively, and the qualifications of voters thereat, are distinctly specified. Ib.

A public notice of the time and place of meeting must be given; and a meeting cannot be adjourned by the few townsmen present to a distant part of the town on the same evening, of which time and place of adjournment other townsmen subsequently arriving receive no notice. Chamberlain v. Dover, 29 D. 517.

Where no return has been made on a warrant calling a town meeting, the court may, upon satisfactory evidence, permit the selectmen who ought to have made the return to supply the omission, and the town clerk for that year to amend his record accordingly. Bean v. Thompson, 49 D. 154.

11. — how conducted, validity, etc. — An action on the case will not lie against the moderator of a town meeting for rejecting the vote of a qualified elector, without proof of malice or improper motives. Wheeler v. Patterson, 8 D. 41.

A town meeting may vote money for parochial purposes, notwithstanding the parish act of 1821; and may raise money to build a bridge, under an article in the warrant calling the meeting, authorizing it "to see what measures the town will take to build" such bridge. Ford v. Clough, 23 D. 513.

A town clerk may, while he remains in office, amend the records of town meetings, to conform to the truth. Chamberlain v. Dover, 29 D. 517.

The acts of the majority present at town meetings bind not only the minority, but all who are absent. Ib.

A town meeting must be held at the place appointed. A meeting to be held at a school-house must be held within its walls. Ib.

A meeting fairly organized possesses the incidental power of adjournment to a future time; but an adjourned meeting must be from a regular meeting valid as to time and place. Ib.

Where the record shows that the meeting was not at the place appointed, testimony is admissible to show that an irregular meeting was held at another place, and what was there done. Ib.

The reconsideration at a regular meeting of acts done at a previous irregular meeting cannot be construed as a ratification of such acts. Ib.

12. Liability on township bonds. — Town bonds issued pursuant to a law not yet in force for want of publication are without authority of law and void. Town of Rochester v. Alfred Bank, 30 D. 746.

Town supervisors cannot, of themselves, give validity to void bonds, where the assent of the people of the town is required to enable them to issue such bonds. Ib.

A statute authorized towns to issue bonds to raise money "for the purpose of providing the destitute citizens of such townships with provisions and with grain for seed and feed," — the object being to relieve farmers whose crops had been destroyed. Held, unconstitutional, as not being for a public purpose. State v. Osaueke Township, 19 R. 99.

13. — on subscriptions to railroads. — The trustees of a town are not entitled to the affirmative relief of rescission of a contract of subscription to stock of a railroad company, and of the cancellation of the bonds issued by them in payment for the stock, on the ground that the subscription was made and the bonds issued under a misapprehension or misconstruction of, and not in accordance with, the statute authorizing these acts, where the bonds have been delivered to the company, and assigned by them, and the interest accruing thereon has been paid for several years without objection, and there is no charge of fraud against the defendants; though the illegality of the bonds might be available and effectual as a defense against any holder. Goshen v. Shoemaker, 80 D. 386.

A mandatory statute requiring a town to become a stockholder in a railroad, by exchanging its bonds for stock upon terms prescribed by the statute, and without its consent, is unconstitutional. People v. Batchelor, 13 R. 480.

An act of the legislature authorizing towns to appropriate money as a donation, to aid in the construction of a railroad, is constitutional. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 14 R. 99.

Under an act of the legislature the town of H. was authorized to loan its credits to a railway. A vote was directed to be taken, and other acts done, which the selectmen were to certify to the town treasurer, who was to issue the bonds. Held, that the issue by the treasurer, of the bonds signed by the selectmen, was conclusive on the question of their validity in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value without notice. Deming v. Houlton, 18 R. 253.

14. Duties and liabilities in respect to construction of roads and bridges. — The committee of a town appointed to rebuild a bridge has authority to enter into all contracts necessary to accomplish that purpose, including the borrowing of money. Simonds v. Heard, 34 D. 41.

The duty of making and repairing highways is imposed upon towns, and the town acquires a qualified interest in a highway constructed by it, distinct from the right of way, of passing and repassing, and of making and repairing the road, acquired by the public. Troy v. Cheshire R. R. Co., 55 D. 177.

Township supervisors are not personally liable for building a causeway instead of a bridge, in laying out a road across a stream, thereby injuring a mill-owner below, unless they acted with a malicious design to do the mill-owner injury, or with such a reckless and wanton disregard of his interests as would be equivalent to malicious intent. Yeaty v. Fink, 82 D. 556.

A jury may properly inquire whether an injury was committed by a joint act of the supervisors of adjoining townships, in erecting a causeway across a stream. The erection of the causeway was one act, though parts of it were built at different times and by different defendants. Id.

The want of malicious intent in building a causeway instead of a bridge may be shown by a township supervisor in an action against him for an injury caused thereby, by evidence that before the work was commenced he had received a message from a supervisor of an adjoining township that the latter would not join in building a bridge, because the people of his township were opposed to it. Id.

In an action by contractors for services performed in changing the route of a public road by direction of the supervisors, it appeared that the supervisors had no authority to change the route, but that the contractors had no knowledge of this want of authority. Held, that the town was liable. It seems that the town has a remedy over against the supervisors. Cook v. Deerfield Township, 3 R. 605.

15. — and in repairing them. — A town is bound to repair highways within its bounds at the expense of the inhabitants. Bancroft v. Lynnfield, 29 D. 623.

A town may indemnify a surveyor or other officer against liability incurred in the bona fide though mistaken discharge of the duty of the town to repair highways. Id.

A town having appointed a committee to defend an action brought against a surveyor for digging a ditch to improve a highway, or for the purpose of having the bounds of the highway legally determined, is liable for the expenses and services of the committee in discharging that duty. Id.

Towns are not liable for damages caused by the non-repair of bridges and highways, being, like counties, quasi corporations, whose corporate powers and functions are conferred without their solicitation, for the benefit, not of themselves, but of the public at large. Commissioners v. Martin, 69 D. 333.

Towns cannot be indirectly subjected to liability for damages for non-repair of bridges and highways, by a suit, under the Michigan Revised Statutes, chapter 119, against the commissioners of highways; this chapter does not authorize any action to be brought against township officers, by their name of office, except for acts done, or upon contracts made by them while acting within the scope of their official duty and authority. Id.

16. Liability for injuries caused by obstructions and defects in roads. — A town is not required to keep the entire surface between the fences of a highway free from snow-drifts, nor to clear the drifts from the track usually traveled in the summer; but it is sufficient if there is a reasonably safe and convenient path anywhere within the limits. Seeley v. Litchfield, 44 R. 213.

The custom of the inhabitants of Connecticut towns to join and break paths through the snow in highways is ancient, general, and reasonable, and excuses the selectmen from action in ordinary cases. Ib.

17. Action over, by town. — For an injury to the streets, the president and trustees of an incorporated town have not such a possession as will enable them to maintain an action of trespass quare clausum fregit. Conner v. New Albany, 12 D. 207.

A person guilty of negligence, whereby a street is left in a dangerous condition, and the town subjected to an action and judgment for injuries suffered, cannot avoid a recovery by the town on the ground that its officers and agents were also negligent in not replacing the barriers which such person had negligently failed to replace. Lowell v. Boston & L. R. R. Co., 34 D. 33.

A town may maintain an action against a person injuring a highway by destroying a bridge which the town erected, and which it is bound to maintain, and recover all such damages as are sustained by the wrongful act. Troy v. Cheshire R. R. Co., 55 D. 177.

TRADE-MARKS.

[Includes the validity and protection accorded to trade-marks; what constitutes infringement; the remedy by injunction; and the measure of damages in trade-mark cases.]

1. Construction of statutes. — Right of property in a trade-mark is recognized by common law, and does not in any manner depend for its inceptive existence or support upon statutory law, although its exercise may be limited or controlled by statute. Derringer v. Plate, 87 D. 170.

Right of property in a trade-mark is not limited in its enjoyment, by territorial bounds, but may be asserted and maintained wherever the common law affords remedies for wrongs, subject only to such statutory regulations as may be properly made concerning the use and enjoyment of other property. Ib.

The California act of 1863 concerning trade-marks does not take away the common-law remedy for the protection thereof from those who do not register their trade-mark according to the provisions of the act. Ib.

By the term "peculiar name, letters, marks, devices, figures, or other trade-mark or name," as used in the statute, is meant, not the proper and established names by which the "articles" are known in the market, nor something indicating their actual kind, character, or quality, but something new, of the manufacturer's own invention, which is peculiar to him, and not common to him and others, and which is intrinsically foreign to the "articles" themselves, and only serving to designate them because it has been fancifully put to that use, in disregard of all natural relations. Falkenburg v. Lucy, 95 D. 78.

The statute does not vest in the manufacturer or vendor, as the case may be, any exclusive property in the thing manufactured or sold, nor in the name or the words which most aptly describe it, and if it did, it would be so far void for want of power in the legislature to enact it. Ib.

If the statute goes beyond the common law, and embraces within its protection matter which relates to kind, character, or quality of the thing manufactured or sold, it is not perceived why it does not trench upon the law of copyrights and patents, and is therefore void. Ib.

It is suggested that the matter used in the statute relative to designation of kind and quality was inadvertently incorporated under a mistaken notion of the functions of a trade-mark, and in that respect the statute can have no intelligible operation. Ib.

The Missouri statute was not designed to weaken or abridge any existing rights, or any future right, to a trade-mark which might be acquired, or to legalize, in any form or measure, piracy in trade-marks. Filley v. Fassett, 100 D. 275.

The Missouri statute requiring the registration of trade-marks has no application to articles made in another state. Ib.

2. What may be appropriated as a trade-mark. — 1. Generally. — A trade-mark adopted by a merchant or manufacturer for his goods is not entitled to protection as his exclusive property, unless it in some manner designates the true origin or ownership of the goods. Boardman v. Meriden B. Co., 95 D. 270.

The words which compose a trade-mark need not each be new. If the combination thereof be new, and be descriptive of the origin of the goods and their ownership by the manufacturer who devises the mark, it will be unlawful for any other person to flesh the combination or any important part thereof. Wolfe v. Barnett, 13 R. 111.

"Pride" is a good trade-mark for cigars, and its use by others than the original user will be restrained, although accompanied by distinctive labels. Hier v. Abrahams, 37 R. 589.

"Insurance Oil" is a valid trade-mark for an illuminating non-explosive oil. Insurance Oil Tank Co. v. Scott, 39 R. 286.

A trade-mark may be acquired in the words "Boker's Stomach Bitters," and it will not be defeated by the plaintiff's unwarranted use of the word "imported" in connection with it, unless such use is intended to deceive the public, nor by the plaintiff's mere neglect to prosecute others who have infringed it. Funke v. Dreyfus, 44 R. 413.

"Sliced animals," "sliced birds," and "sliced objects" are a valid trade-mark, when used to designate dissected puzzle-pictures for children. Selchow v. Baker, 45 R. 169.

2. *Figures or numbers.—Figures indicating numbers may be protected as trade-marks, especially when they are associated with name of manufacturer upon labels of certain form, color, and arrangement, and in connection with such labels are used by him to indicate his own manufacture; for by virtue of such connection they form an important part of the trade-mark. Boardman v. Meriden B. Co., 95 D. 270.

Where a manufacturer of britannia spoons, for the purpose of distinguishing them from all other britannia spoons in the market, and for the purpose of designating different classes of his own spoons, adopts several different labels of particular size, form, and color, with his own name thereon, together with some term descriptive of the spoons, and in connection therewith certain figures arbitrarily chosen, the different classes of spoons being indicated by fixed numbers; and these labels constitute the only trade-mark under which he introduces his spoons into market; and under these labels and numbers the spoons have become generally and favorably known, and a large demand has grown up for them; and they are generally bought and sold by the numbers on the labels,—the labels thus arranged and used constitute legal trade-marks, and are entitled to protection. Id.

Plaintiff had, for many years, manufactured and sold a steel pen, put up in boxes, with "303" and "Joseph Gillott, extra fine," upon the pens and boxes. Defendant began the manufacture and sale of a steel pen, put up in boxes, with "303," and "Esterbrook & Co., extra fine," upon the pens and boxes. Held, that plaintiff had acquired the right to the exclusive use of the figures "303" as a trade-mark, and that an action would lie restraining defendants from using such figures in such manner. Gillott v. Esterbrook, 8 R. 553.

The figures "523," on hosiery, in combination with a wreath and an eagle, and used to denote the grade and the origin of the manufacture, are a valid trade-mark. Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Lowell Hosiery Mills, 37 R. 362.

3. *Names.—A trade-mark may consist of any contrivance, design, name, symbol, or other thing which is adapted to accomplish the object proposed by it, namely, to point out the true source and origin of the article to which the mark is applied, or to point out and designate the dealer's place of business, distinguishing it from the business locality of other dealers. Filley v. Fassett, 100 D. 275. And the courts will protect him in the exclusive use of such mark, when original with him, so far as it serves to indicate the origin and ownership of the goods to which it is attached, to the exclusion of such symbols, figures, and combination of words which may be interblended with it, and merely indicating the name, kind, or quality. Falkenberg v. Lucy, 95 D. 76.

A name established for a hotel is a trade-mark in which the proprietor has a valuable interest that a court of equity will protect against infringement. Woodward v. Lamar, 82 D. 751.

A tenant, by giving a particular name to a building as a sign of business done by him at that place, does not thereby make the name a fixture to the building, nor transfer it to the landlord upon the expiration of his lease. Id.

The name of a manufacturer, used by him as a trade-mark, may have added to and connected with it some peculiar device as auxiliary to the name in declaring the true origin and ownership of his goods; and a wrongful violation of such a trade-mark may be effected, even though the name of the imitator be substituted for that of the original manufacturer, by such an imitation of the device as indicates a design to deceive, and is calculated to deceive, the public as to the true origin and ownership of the goods. Boardman v. Meriden B. Co., 95 D. 270.

The owner of a mineral spring has the right to the exclusive use of such trade-mark or name as indicates the origin or ownership of the waters. Dunbar v. Glenn, 24 R. 395. The word "Congress," in the phrases "Congress Water" and "Congress Spring Water," is a legitimate trade-mark. Congress etc. Spring Co. v. High Rock etc. Spring Co., 6 R. 82. S. P., Dunbar v. Glenn, 24 R. 395.

The plaintiff corporation took its name from the names of its principal stockholders. Some of these stockholders afterward started a rival corporation, and used their names, with the addition of one other, as its name. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to protection in the use of said stockholders' names, and that defendants would be enjoined from using them. Holmes v. Holmes, 9 R. 324.

Plaintiffs and their predecessors had for many years been engaged in manufacturing water-lime cement from quarries near Akron, Erie County, which was labeled and sold as "Akron Cement," to which they had given a reputation in the market, and the defendants, knowing of such use by the plaintiffs of the word "Akron" as a trade-mark, and for the purpose of availing themselves of the reputation the plaintiffs cement had acquired, applied the word "Akron" to designate a similar cement made by them at a quarry near Syracuse. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled, as against the defendants, to protection in the exclusive use of the word "Akron," by injunction to restrain the use of it by the defendants. Newman v. Alvord, 10 R. 588.

Three brothers named Rogers had acquired a reputation in the manufacture of plated spoons and forks. Petitioners purchased from them the right to manufacture and sell plated spoons and forks stamped with the name "Rogers," and thereupon adopted and used as their trade-mark the words and figure, "1847, Rogers Bros., A 1." The said brothers were also employed by the petitioners in the manufacture of their goods. The goods so manufactured and stamped with the said trade-mark acquired a good reputation in the market. Subsequently, three brothers of another family named Rogers, not previously engaged in the business, made an engagement with the respondent to manufacture for them, and also on his own account, plated spoons and forks. These were stamped "C. Rogers Bros., A 1," and "C. Rogers & Bros., A 1." It was found that these stamps resembled the petitioners' trade-mark to that degree that they were calculated to deceive, and did deceive, "unwary purchasers"; that large quantities of respondents' goods had been sold by him upon the reputation of petitioners' goods, and that the respondent supposed that the resemblance of his stamp to the petitioners' would enable him more readily to sell his goods. Held, that the petitioners had a right to protection in the use of the stamp, "1847, Rogers Bros., A 1," as a trade-mark; and 2. That the respondent was violating that trade-mark by using a stamp so nearly resembling the petitioners', and that therefore respondent would be restrained from using his said stamp, and also from using the name "Rogers Bros." Held, also, that the use of the name "Rogers" would not be restrained. Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 12 R. 401.

A manufacturer has the right in good faith to use his own name as a trade-mark upon his goods, although it is the same as that of another manufacturer of like goods who uses the same as a trade-mark. Rogers v. Rogers, 55 R. 78.

3. What may not be. — A disputed trade-mark cannot be appropriated by filing in the recorder's office a written claim thereto, although the original claimant had never filed such document for registration. Filley v. Fassett, 100 D. 275.

The Missouri statute will not warrant the appropriation of an existing trade-mark by one party, when the ownership and title to it is in another. Ib.

The plaintiff gave to his place of business the name of the "Antiquarian Book Store," by which name it became widely known. The defendant, having a rival store, adopted substantially the same name. Held, that the name could not be appropriated as a trade-mark. Choyndi v. Cohen, 2 R. 476.

The term "Moline," in "Moline plow," is generic, Moline being the name of the place where the plow is manufactured, and is not susceptible of exclusive use as a trade-mark. Candee v. Deere, 5 R. 125.

The combination of letters and figures, "A No. 1," "A X No. 1," "No. 1," "X No. 1," "No. 3," and "B No. 1," respectively, used originally for the purpose of designating the quality of manufactured articles, are not susceptible of exclusive use as a trade-mark. Ib.

Any word or phrase used in circulars, price-lists, or advertisements, to designate a manufactured article, but not placed upon the article, does not constitute a trade-mark. Ib.

Wolfe had for a long time made and sold gin labeled "Wolfe's Aromatic Schiedam Schnappa." Cassin began the manufacture of gin, which he bottled in imitation of Wolfe's, and labeled "Van Wolf's" or "Von Wolf's Aromatic Schiedam Schnappa." Held, that Cassin would be restrained from using any colorable imitation of Wolfe's name, or bottles or labels, but that the words "Aromatic Schiedam Schnappa" were not entitled to protection as a trade-mark. Burke v. Cassin, 13 R. 204.

Plaintiff adopted the name "Glendon" as a trade-mark on its iron; afterward the name was applied to the town wherein plaintiff's furnaces were. Defendants subsequently commenced in the same town to manufacture the same kind of iron, which they stamped with the name "Glendon." Held, that defendants could lawfully use such name. Glendon Iron Co. v. Uhler, 15 R. 599.

The words "gold medal," in the name of a manufactured article, cannot be protected as a trade-mark, whether or not a gold medal has been in fact awarded in a competitive exhibition. Taylor v. Gillies, 17 R. 333.

The coupling together, in a new combination, of words which before had been used apart, and had entered into the common or scientific vocabulary, does not give a right to the exclusive use of such combination, where it is indicative, not of origin, maker, use, and ownership alone, but also of quality and other characteristics. Cassell v. Davis, 17 R. 233.

A medicine was prepared consisting of iron, phosphorus, and elixir of calisaya bark, which was named "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya Bark." Held, that the name could not be protected as a trade-mark. Id.

The family name of a manufacturer cannot be made a trade-mark, so as to exclude other manufacturers of the same name from its use in the manufacture and sale of similar articles, unless unfair means are adopted to mislead purchasers into the belief that the article is of the other manufacture. Marshall v. Pinkham, 38 R. 756.

"Snowflake" is not a valid trade-mark for bread or crackers. Larrabee v. Lewis, 44 R. 735.

"Royal" is not a valid trade-mark for a particular grade of goods. Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Sherrell, 45 R. 229.

"Samaritan" is not a valid trade-mark on medicines. Desmond's Appeal, 49 R. 118.

A business sign with a row of beer-barrels painted on it, with the letters "P. B." on the heads, the words "Depot of the Celebrated" above, and the words "Philadelphia Beer" below, cannot be protected as a trade-mark per se. Eggers v. Hink, 49 R. 96.

Where a patented medicine becomes known to the public by a distinctive name, and by its shape, appearance, and ornamentation, any one after the expiration of the patent can make and sell it and use the name, and no one can deprive him of that right by incorporating the name into a trade-mark. Brill v. Singer Mfg. Co., 52 R. 74.

A tenant has no right to apply to a building, without the owner's consent, a particular name descriptive of the building alone, as distinguished from a trade-mark, and afterward transfer it to another and distinct locality. Armstrong v. Kleinhans, 56 R. 894.

"Health-preserving" is not a valid trade-mark for corsets. Courts will not interfere to protect a trade-mark where ordinary attention on the part of purchasers will enable them to discriminate. Ball v. Siegel, 56 R. 766.

4. Proceedings to obtain protection.

A trade-mark must point out the source and origin of the goods, and not be merely descriptive of the style, quality, or character of them. Filley v. Fassett, 100 D. 275.

5. What protection is accorded. — The exclusive right to a trade-mark is recognized by law as a species of property. Bradley v. Norton, 87 D. 200; which the courts will protect. Filley v. Fassett, 100 D. 275.

The leading principle of the law of trade-marks is, that the manufacturer or merchant who has produced or brought into market an article of use or consumption that has found favor with the public, and who, by affixing to it some name, device, or symbol which serves to distinguish it as his, and to distinguish it from all others, has furnished his individual guaranty of its value, shall receive the reward of his skill, and shall not be deprived thereof by infringement or imitation. Wolfe v. Barnett, 13 R. 111. S. P., Partridge v. Menck, 47 D. 231.

The entire label will not be protected as a trade-mark, where it contains the name of the article manufactured, a statement of the mode of its use, and a laudation of its qualities; only so much of the label will be protected as indicates that the complainants are the manufacturers or vendors of such article. Falkenburg v. Lucy, 95 D. 76.

Plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of a cosmetic known and designated as "Laird's Bloom of Youth, or Liquid Pearl," brought suit to restrain the defendant from using the same name on another compound, and from counterfeiting plaintiff's bottles and labels. It appeared that plaintiff had announced his cosmetic as "free from all mineral and poisonous substances," but the evidence tended to prove otherwise. Held, that the plaintiff was engaged in a fraud upon the public, and was not entitled to protection. Laird v. Wilder, 15 R. 707.

In an action to restrain the infringement of a trade-mark, the complaint alleged that the plaintiffs manufactured brandy which they sold in "quart and pint bottles" with their trade-mark thereon. It appeared that the bottles were of the size ordinarily used in the trade, and there was nothing on them to indicate the quantity; that the brandy was imported and entered at the custom-house at the true quantity; it did not appear that the bottles were used in the trade as measures of quantity; that purchasers did not understand their capacity; that the plaintiffs ever represented that they contained quarts or pints, or that they ever deceived any one as to their capacity. The court found that defendants wrongfully imitated plaintiff's trade-mark, but the plaintiffs did not use quart or pint bottles as alleged in their complaint, but bottles falsely and deceitfully represented to contain those quantities, and that the trade-mark was designed and used to protect this fraud, and dismissed the complaint; this defense was not set up in the answer nor litigated at the trial. Held, that the finding of fact and the conclusion derived therefrom were erroneous. Hennessy v. Wheeler, 25 R. 188.

6. What amounts to an infringement. — The imitation of a trade-mark, to constitute an infringement, need not be a precise copy; but if there is a substantial similarity, so that the community would be likely to be deceived, it is sufficient. Bradley v. Norton, 87 D. 200. It may be limited or partial, nor is it requisite that the whole should be pirated, nor is it necessary to show that any one has in fact been deceived, or that the party complained of made the article; nor is it necessary to show intentional fraud. Filley v. Fassett, 100 D. 275. But to entitle a party to relief for an alleged infringement of a trade-mark, the resemblance of the simulated to the genuine trade-mark must be so close as to amount to a false representation as to the manufacture or proprietorship of the articles. Popham v. Cole, 23 R. 22.

Whether a partial imitation of a trade-mark by one was designed, calculated, and effectual to carry out a fraud upon another is a question upon the evidence for the jury. Barroes v. Knight, 78 D. 452.

It is unlawful to put up imitation goods under the name of the real manufacturer, and the excuse that such act was authorized by a person of the same name as that manufacturer is absurd. Wolfe v. Barnett, 13 R. 111.

A designed imitation of a trade-mark, whereby one is enabled to fraudulently pass off his goods in the market as those manufactured by another, to the latter's injury, renders the former liable for any injury sustained. Such imitation may consist in the appropriation of the words "Roger Williams" from a trade-mark known as "Roger Williams Long Cloth." Barroes v. Knight, 78 D. 452.

Where the imitation of a name of a hotel is calculated to deceive the public into the belief that it is the same name as the original, its use will be restrained by injunction, as where the name of the plaintiff's hotel is the "What Cheer House," and the defendant opens a hotel under the name of the "Original What Cheer House," the word "original" being painted on the sign in smaller letters than the residue of the title. Woodward v. Lazar, 82 D. 751.

Where another manufacturer makes spoons similar to those of complainant, though differing somewhat in style, and prepares labels resembling his, and adopts the same numbers for spoons of a similar kind; the labels being so nearly alike that a purchaser not reading the name upon them might be deceived; and where such labels are adopted with those particular numbers for the purpose of aiding the introduction of his spoons into the market, — it is a violation of the trade-mark of the first manufacturer, although the second manufacturer puts his own name on the labels in the place of that of the first. And the use of the same figures with a cipher prefixed does not vary the case. Boardman v. Meriden B. Co., 95 D. 270.

When plaintiff's article is not conspicuously known by the device which surrounds the name, the whole of which constitutes the trade-mark, but by the name itself, the adoption of such name for an article manufactured by another is an infringement of the former's right, for if the name as used was calculated to mislead, the intention to deceive is inferred. Filley v. Fassett, 100 D. 275.

The complainant had for some twenty years published an almanac entitled "J. Gruber's Hagerstown Town and County Almanack," which had been established and long published by his ancestor. The defendant, in 1879, issued an almanac with the same emblems, devices, marks, representations, and general exterior appearance, and entitled "T. G. Robertson's Hagerstown Almanac." Held, that the defendant's publication should be enjoined. Robertson v. Berry, 33 R. 328.

The plaintiff had for several years made wagons at Eldora, and painted on them in one general style the words "Shaver Wagon, Eldora." The defendant, his brother, had been his employee, and later his partner, in that business. The firm was dissolved, and the plaintiff acquired its property and continued the business. Two years after, the defendant set up the same business in the same town, and painted the same words on his wagons, in the plaintiff's general style, but with slight changes in form, and adding his own initials. The resemblance was calculated to deceive the public. Held, that the defendant should be restrained. Shaver v. Shaver, 37 R. 194.

Three parties had carried on business at Kalamazoo under the name of Kalamazoo Wagon Company. Two of them sold out their entire interest, including the good-will, to the plaintiff, and afterward set up a like business, almost next door, under the name of Kalamazoo Buggy Company, issuing circulars and cards in that name, resembling those of the plaintiff. Held, that such use of that name should be restrained, but that the defendants should not be prohibited from receiving mail matter addressed in their said name. Myers v. Kalamazoo Buggy Co., 52 R. 811.

A trade-mark on the label on matches is not infringed by a label put on the matches of another maker, where the only point of resemblance is that on each label there is a representation of a bee-hive, and that the letters on both are printed on a black ground, and the appearance of the bee-hives is so dissimilar as not to be readily mistaken the one for the other. Partridge v. Menck, 47 D. 281.

The use of a trade-mark consisting of the words "Candee, Swan, & Co.," in a semi-cir-ular form above the words "Moline, Ill.," is no infringement upon a trade-mark consisting of the words "John Deere," in a semi-circular form above the words "Moline, Ill." Candee v. Deere, 5 R. 125.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Plaintiff put upon packages of lard the figure of a fat hog, with his name and the words "prime leaf lard." Defendant put upon packages of lard a globe with a small, lean boar on top, above which was his name, and beneath it the words "prime leaf lard." Plaintiff claimed that the use of the figure of the boar was an infringement of his trade-mark. The two marks were so unlike in general appearance as not to be calculated to deceive any one. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to relief. Popham v. Cole, 23 R. 22.

The sign "Great IXL Auction Co." is not an infringement of the sign, recorded as a trade-mark, "IXL General Merchandise Auction Store." Lichtenstein v. Mellis, 34 R. 592.

The plaintiff sold soap in packages in tinfoil and blue paper labeled on one side, in gilt letters, "Sapolio for cleaning and polishing, manufactured by Enoch Morgan's Sons & Co., 440 West Street, New York," and on the other, "Enoch Morgan's Sapolio," with a well-drawn picture of a human face opposite a pan and reflected in it. The defendants also sold soap, in packages of a different shape from the plaintiff's, in tinfoil and blue paper, labeled on one side, in gilt letters, "Troxell's Pride of the Kitchen Soap," and on the other, "Pride of the Kitchen Soap," with a picture of a small monkey looking at himself in a mirror or pan held in his paw. Held, no infringement. Morgan's Sons' Co. v. Troxell, 42 R. 294.

7. Jurisdiction of equity to restrain infringement.—An infringement of trade-mark may be enjoined by the court of chancery. Partridge v. Menck, 47 D. 281; for the purpose of promoting honesty and fair dealing, and because no one has the right to sell his own goods as the goods of another. Palmer v. Harris, 100 D. 557.

8. Who may sue.—One who has the sole interest in a trade-mark may maintain suit for injunction against the infringement thereof without joining as a party one who is a silent partner with him in the business of manufacturing the article. Bradley v. Norton, 87 D. 200.

The owner of a trade-mark need not be original inventor or proprietor of the article upon which it is placed, in order to be entitled to the protection of a court of chancery. Partridge v. Menck, 47 D. 281.

It seems that where an employee originates and names a medical article, but acquiesces in the appropriation of the article and its name by his employers, and its sale to the public by them under the name given the article, the property in the trade-mark, if a valid one, is in the employers. Caswell v. Davis, 17 R. 233.

The mere sale of a trade-mark, apart from the article to which it is affixed, confers no right of ownership; but where a trade-mark is used to designate the place and person by whom certain goods are manufactured, the right to such trade-mark passes to the purchaser upon the sale and transfer of the business and manufactory at which the goods are made. Wuthaus v. Braun, 22 R. 44.

9. Right of assignee to sue.—The trade-mark, "A. N. Hoxie's Mineral Soap," is assignable, and if the assignee uses it to denote soap made according to A. N. Hoxie's formula, he may have an injunction to restrain infringement. Hoxie v. Chaney, 59 R. 149.

A sale of the owner's business and its goodwill carries a trade-mark, but does not imply that the vendor will not re-engage in the like business at another place, but he may be restrained from representing himself as successor to the business sold, or as having a right to use the trade-mark. Id.

10. Discretionary power of the court to grant or refuse injunction.—An injunction against the piracy of a trade-mark, in case of doubt, should not be granted until the cause is heard on pleadings and proofs, or the complainant has established his right at law. Partridge v. Menck, 47 D. 281.

The simulation of a trade-mark, such as probably to deceive customers of the owner, should be enjoined at once. Id.

11. When an injunction will be granted.*—An injunction will be granted against the use of the name, mark, or label of the complainant, where such use is designed to induce the belief that an article manufactured by defendant is one manufactured by complainant. It is wholly immaterial whether the spurious article is or is not equal to the genuine. Taylor v. Carpenter, 42 D. 114.

An injunction will be granted, without regard to lapse of time, to restrain continued use of another's name, in the designation, in whole or in part, of an existing partnership, without having obtained the written consent of the person if he be living, or of his legal representatives if he be dead, as required by the Massachusetts general statutes, chapter 56, sections 1-4. Bowman v. Floyd, 80 D. 55.

A receipt will not be construed as a written consent to continued use of another's name, when it is given merely in settlement of the claims of executors of a deceased partner against surviving partners, but in which the later are mentioned by the partnership name, under which they continued to carry on business. Id.

Injunction is the sole adequate remedy against an infringement of a trade-mark, where it appears that the party infringing intends to continue the wrong. Bradley v. Norton, 87 D. 200.

An injunction against an infringement of a trade-mark may be granted though the party defendant is in fact only the agent of the manufacturer of the spurious article, where the latter has conducted the business through such agent, and held him out to the public as the proprietor. Id.

Brewer, the proprietor of a medicine called "Brewer's Lung Restorer," sold the exclusive right to manufacture and sell it, with his trade-mark, to the plaintiff, and agreed not to use or permit the use of his name on any preparation which could be recommended and sold for the same purpose. Subsequently, he made and offered for sale a preparation professing to be a cure for all diseases of the lungs and throat, and called "Brewer's Sarsaparilla Syrup." Held, that he should be enjoined from the use of his name thereon. Brewer v. Lamar, 47 R. 766.

The plaintiffs, partners under the name of "D. F. Tayler & Co.," had long manufactured and sold hair-pins, known and readily sold as "Tayler's Hair-pins," put up in pink and yellow packages, with a peculiar device well known to the trade. The defendants also manufactured and sold hair-pins, and had procured from L. B. Taylor the right to mark their packages "L. B. Taylor & Co.," to which they added "Cheshire Conn.," using a device, labels, and wrappers so nearly resembling the plaintiffs' in size and color as to be likely to deceive careless and unwary purchasers. The defendants acted in good faith, and with no design to infringe the plaintiffs' rights. Held, that the defendants should be enjoined. Williams v. Brooks, 47 R. 642.

The complainant made and sold "Morse's Compound Syrup of Yellow Dock Root," in bottles in paper wrappers. The defendant subsequently set up the sale in bottles, without wrappers, of "Dr. Morse's Celebrated Syrup," those words being blown in the glass, with labels inscribed "Dr. Morse's Improved Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla Compound." The bottles were exactly similar in size and shape, but the labels were different. The complainant made his preparation under one trade name and sold it under another, and advertised it as "sold only in quart bottles," whereas the bottles, although known in the trade as quart bottles, held substantially less. Held, that complainant was entitled to an injunction and account of profits. Alexander v. Morse, 51 R. 369.

The plaintiff manufactured and sold chocolate under the description of "German Sweet Chocolate," having obtained authority to use it from Samuel German, the original proprietor. The defendant, with intent to get plaintiff's customers, manufactured and sold chocolate under the description of "Sweet German Chocolate." Held, that the defendant should be restrained therefrom. Pierce v. Guitard, 58 R. 1.

12. When refused.*—An injunction will not be granted to restrain the use of a trade-mark which consists in part of the name of a former partner of some of the defendants, and which was adopted and used by the partnership, without objection, in the lifetime of such partner, and used by the defendants since his death. The right to the use of such trade-mark is secured to the defendants by the Massachusetts statutes. Bowman v. Floyd, 80 D. 55.

The use of a trade-mark will not be restrained, unless it so closely resembles that of the complainant as to raise the probability of mistake on the part of the public, or of design and purpose on the part of the defendant to mislead and deceive. McCartney v. Garnhart, 100 D. 397.

A party is not entitled to an injunction to secure the profits arising from the fraudulent use of a trade-mark bearing on its face a falsehood as to the place where the goods are manufactured, and where, in order to have the benefit of the reputation which such goods have acquired in the market, he is guilty of the same fraud which he complains of in defendant. Palmer v. Harris, 100 D. 557.

For equity to refuse to enjoin the counterfeiting of a fraudulent trade-mark, it is not necessary that any person has been actually deceived or defrauded; it is enough that it is a misrepresentation calculated to have that effect on the unwary and unsuspicious. Id.

A. C. & Co., being the successors, by purchase, of Stillman & Co., woolen manufacturers, continued to use "Stillman & Co." as a trade-mark on their ticket for goods. Latimer, Stillman, & Co., the lessees of a mill formerly used by Stillman & Co., known both as the "Stillman Mill" and as the "Seventh Day Mill," used "Stillman Mills" as a trade-mark. On a petition for an injunction, brought by A. C. & Co. against Latimer, Stillman, & Co., to prevent their so using the word "Stillman," it appearing that no deception could be charged on either complainants or respondents, and that no person of the old firm of Stillman & Co. was a member of the firm of A. C. & Co.,—held, that the injunction could not be granted. Held, further, that a manufacturer has the right to label his goods with his own name or that of his mill, if no fraudulent purpose is intended. Cornmichael v. Latimer, 23 R. 481.

Quere, if a trade-mark whose reputation depends on the excellence of the manufacture, or the skill and honesty of the manufacturer, can be legally assigned. Ib.

13. Rules of evidence.—The acts of respondent are sufficient evidence of his intention to continue the infringement of a trade-mark, without averring and proving threats. Bradley v. Norton, 87 D. 200.

14. Matters of defense.—That goods made or sold under a pirated trade-mark are equal in quality or value to the original is no defense to an injunction against such piracy. Partridge v. Menck, 47 D. 281.

The fact that a party in another state manufactured articles and put them upon the market to compete with plaintiff, using his trade-mark, is no defense for a third party whom plaintiff seeks to enjoin from using his trademark, unless plaintiff assented to or acquiesced in such infringement on his right. In other words, the depredations of others upon plaintiff's rights is no excuse to defendant for similar acts on his part. Filley v. Fassett, 100 D. 275.

The fact that a trade-mark label is copyrighted, but the date of entry is not given as required by the act of Congress, is of no importance in a suit in a state court for damages for imitation of a trade-mark. Wolfe v. Barnett, 13 R. 111.

Every man has the absolute right to use his own name in his own business, even though he may thereby interfere with or injure the business of another person bearing the same name, provided he does not resort to any artifice or contrivance for the purpose of producing the impression that the establishments are identical, or do any act calculated to mislead. Meneely v. Meneely, 20 R. 489.

If there is any right of trade-mark in the words "East Indian," in connection with "Remedy," on bottles of medicine, the false adoption of those words to indicate that the medicine is used in the East Indies will defeat an action for infringement. Connell v. Reed, 35 R. 397.

The plaintiffs manufactured and sold a cordial, under the name of "Angostura Bitters," claiming that name as a trade-mark, with labels stating that it was prepared by Dr. S., formerly at Angostura, but now at Port of Spain, and that the bottles bore the plaintiff's signature. In fact Dr. S. died before this suit, never lived at Port of Spain, and the bottles bore only the signature of the inventor. The plaintiff sought to enjoin the defendants from manufacturing and selling a cordial under the name of "Angostura Aromatic Bitters." Held, that in consequence of these misrepresentations he could not maintain this suit. Siegert v. Abbott, 48 R. 101.

15. When damages are recoverable for infringement.—Damages may be awarded against a person who uses the trade-mark or name of another. Taylor v. Carpenter, 42 D. 114.

In an action to recover for the violation of a trade-mark, the damages awarded was the whole profit realized by defendant from sales of the spurious articles under the simulated trade-mark. Held, on appeal by defendant, that the damages were not excessive. Graham v. Plate, 6 R. 639.

16. Protection of trade names.—Carriage proprietors authorized to use a hotel name as a badge on their carriages and the caps of their drivers, under an agreement with the hotel-owner, whereby they have the privilege of carrying passengers to and from the house, have the exclusive right to the use of such name to indicate that they have the patronage of the house in transporting passengers, and may, without proof of special damage, maintain an action against one who uses the same badge for the purpose of falsely holding himself out as having such patronage, in order to divert custom from the plaintiffs. Marsh v. Billings, 54 D. 723.

Damages for diverting plaintiffs' custom in such a case are not to be confined to the loss of such passengers as the plaintiffs can prove have actually been diverted from their carriages, but the jury are to allow such damages as upon the whole evidence they are satisfied that the plaintiffs have suffered in loss of business by such injurious act. Ib.

Where one has established a business at a particular place, from which he has or may derive profit, and has attached to such business a name indicating to the public where it is carried on,—e. g., "No. 10 South Water Street,"—he thereby acquires property in the name, which will be protected from invasion by a court of equity on principles analogous to those applicable in case of the invasion of a trade-mark. Glen & H. Mfg. Co. v. Hall, 19 R. 278.

II. ACTIONS FOR TRESPASS.

1. For Trespass upon Land.
2. For Trespass upon Personal Property.
3. For Trespass upon the Person.
4. Other Actions for Trespass.
5. The Crime, and Prosecution.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES A TRESPASS.

1. Generally. — One who enters a dwelling-house without permission of the occupant, and remains there after being requested to leave, is guilty of a trespass; and if he had permission to enter, and remained after a request to leave, he would then be liable as a trespasser ab initio. Adams v. Freeman, 7 D. 327.

Where an injury is the immediate consequence of an act, whether it was intentional or unintentional, the doer of the act is liable in trespass. Guille v. Swan, 10 D. 234; Norris v. Litchfield, 69 D. 546.

Any interference, however slight, which unlawfully disturbs another in the enjoyment of his property, is a trespass. Rand v. Sargent, 39 D. 625.

Trespass only will generally lie for an injury directly inflicted by a forcible act of the defendant. Waterman v. Hall, 42 D. 434.

Trespass or case will lie for an injury not effected by the direct and immediate forcible act of the defendant, though flowing from that act without the intervention of any other voluntary or responsible agency, as where the plaintiff's beast is chased by the defendant with sticks and stones and is driven upon a fence, whereby it is injured. Id.

Trespass or wrong done by accident, without design, or against the actor's will, is not a fault, in the sense of that word as used in connection with actions for negligence. It is a misfortune, and not a fault. Norris v. Litchfield, 69 D. 546.

An injury is immediate, and therefore a trespass, only when it is directly occasioned by, and is not merely a consequence resulting from, the act complained of. Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co., 69 D. 233.

Trespass cannot be maintained for an act done under authority of a constitutional statute. Brown v. Beatty, 69 D. 389.

An act may be a private injury as well as a public offense. Hedges v. Price, 94 D. 507.

2. Joint trespassers.*—If several persons co-operate in the performance of an act which occasions an injury, they are liable as trespassers, either jointly or severally, and one may be held responsible for all the damages if it appear that they acted in concert, or that the acts of the others were the natural result of the act performed by the one sued. Guille v. Swan, 10 D. 234.

In trespass all are liable who participate in the wrongful act, either by aiding in, or advising, or assenting to it. Ross v. Fuller, 36 D. 342. S. P., Brittain v. McKay, 35 D. 738; State v. Smith, 57 R. 802; and it is no defense for any one co-trespasser to say that the injury was greater than he intended, and that the particular act done was not contemplated or intended by him. Kirkwood v. Miller, 73 D. 134.

Agreeing to a trespass committed for one's use makes him guilty of trespass, and liable as a trespasser. Harper v. Baker, 16 D. 112; Caldwell v. Sacra, 12 D. 285; Alfred v. Bray, 97 D. 288.

The right to contribution does not exist between joint trespassers. Cumpton v. Lambert, 51 D. 442. But this rule applies only to cases where the persons have engaged together in doing, wantonly or knowingly, a wrong. Contribution lies where one of several persons who join in performing an act which to them appears to be right and lawful, but which proves to be a tort, has paid the amount of the damage. Acheson v. Miller, 59 D. 663.

In actions against several defendants for their joint trespass, damages may be severed and apportioned, according to the degree and nature of the offense committed by each. Smith v. Singleton, 39 D. 122.

The liability is that of joint trespassers, where several different creditors acting separately, without concert, and even without knowledge that they are employing a common agent, cause their debtor to be arrested on their several writs, by the same officer, who serves the writs simultaneously, and by virtue thereof the debtor is committed to jail, where he is confined upon all of such writs at the same time; and full satisfaction by the debtor, obtained from any one of such persons, is a bar to an action by him against the others. Stone v. Dickinson, 81 D. 727.

A person procuring an illegal act to be done by another is a co-trespasser with the person employed to perpetrate the wrong, and is equally responsible with him to the person injured, although not actually present when the trespass is committed; and the acts and declarations of the agent in performing such unlawful service are competent evidence against the principal. Raisler v. Springer, 82 D. 736.

To ascertain the liability of a party in a trespass committed by more than one, it is only necessary to show that he participated in the wrong done. The amount of property taken by him, if he took any, is immaterial, and it need not be shown what degree of efficiency he exhibited in giving aid and countenance to the perpetrators of the trespass. It is enough if he was found acting in concert with them. Alfred v. Bray, 97 D. 283.

Any person present at the commission of a trespass, who in any way or by any means countenances or approves the same, is in law deemed to be an aider and abettor, and liable as a principal. McManus v. Lee, 97 D. 386.

Proof that a person was present at the commission of a trespass, without disproving or opposing it, is evidence from which it is competent for a jury to infer that he assented thereto, and aided and abetted the same. Id.

A mere pretense of a person at the commission of a trespass having no unlawful intent, and doing nothing to countenance or approve those who are actors, does not render such person liable as a participator therein, though he did not make active efforts to prevent the commission of the unlawful acts. Id.

In trespass against two or more acting independently, and producing a result injurious to the plaintiff, one cannot be held for the acts of the others. Blaisdell v. Stephens, 33 R. 523.

3. Trespass by officers.—When process is a protection.—In trespass, the defendant may show as a justification that he acted under the command of an officer in the execution of process, although the process may not be regular and valid; but if he acted officiously, he must show a valid process. Reed v. Rice, 19 D. 122.

An officer having made a lawful levy can only be rendered a trespasser ab initio by a subsequent act of trespass, not by an omission or neglect of duty. Waterbury v. Lockwood, 4 D. 215.

An officer is not a trespasser who peaceably enters the house of the owner or keeper of an unlicensed dog, and kills it, in pursuance of a warrant from the proper authorities, which directs him to kill all dogs not "licensed and collared" as required by statute, and which statute provides that such dogs may be killed "whenever and wherever found." Blair v. Forehand, 97 D. 82.

The theater of the plaintiff was assessed by the assessors under an act of Congress, but erroneously as a dwelling-house; a tax collector executed a warrant of distress under such assessment. Held, that an action of trespass did not lie against him as a ministerial officer for executing such warrant. Henderson v. Brown, 2 D. 164.

4. — when it is not. — Abuse of authority in removing a trespasser's goods renders one a trespasser himself ab initio. Whitney v. Swift, 53 D. 228; Barrett v. Lightfoot, 15 D. 110. Whether the goods were removed in an improper manner is a question for the jury. Whitney v. Swift, 53 D. 228.

Service of void process is a trespass for which the magistrate issuing it, and the officer serving it, are answerable. Barker v. Stetson, 66 D. 457.

5. What constitutes a trespass on land, generally.* — An entry under a contract for the purchase of land, and a trespass committed thereon, and refusal to complete the purchase, make the vendee a trespasser ab initio. Wendell v. Johnson, 29 D. 648.

Abuse of legal authority or license, by one who at first acted with propriety under it, makes him a trespasser ab initio. Dickson v. Parker, 34 D. 78. Contra, Wendell v. Johnson, 29 D. 648.

A recovery of mesne profits is no bar to an action of trespass quare clausum fregit; therefore, the removal of fence rails is a trespass, and for which damages may be recovered in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, notwithstanding a recovery in an action for mesne profits, unless such removal was necessary for the use and occupation of the land. Gill v. Cole, 2 D. 527.

Trespass lies whether the injury is willful or not, if the injurious act is the immediate result of the force originally applied by the defendant, and the plaintiff is injured thereby; thus where defendant cut trees on his own land and one accidentally fell on the land of the plaintiff, the latter may maintain an action of trespass. Newson v. Anderson, 37 D. 406.

Horses and cattle, having been declared free commoners under a township act, do not possess a legal right to trespass upon the vested private rights of either a citizen or a corporation. Williams v. Mich. Cent. R. R. Co., 55 D. 59.

Where one wrongfully cuts timber on the lands of another, and sells it to an innocent purchaser, the entry upon the lands and removal of the timber by such purchaser is a trespass. Hazelton v. Week, 35 R. 796.

Defendant's wife, under the direction of the highway surveyor, cut the grass growing in the highway over the land of plaintiff, that her children might go and come from school without getting their clothes wet. She carried the grass away, when cut, and fed it to her husband's horse. Held, that although she had a right to cut the grass, yet, by carrying it away, she became a trespasser ab initio. Cole v. Drew, 8 R. 363.

6. What estate or interest is the subject of trespass. — A person has no right to go into or upon the premises of another after the owner has forbidden him to do so; nor has he a right, after having entered by leave, to stay upon being requested by the owner to depart; and this though such premises be a business office or mercantile house, workshop, factory, or other place of business. No doubt the very fact that a professional man or a merchant or other person opens an office to transact business with and for the public is a tacit invitation to all persons having business with him, and a permission to others, to enter, unless forbidden; but this does not divest the owner of his control over it, or the right to prevent whom he pleases from entering, and to require any and all persons to depart after they have once entered. Woodman v. Howell, 92 D. 221.

A person who is in the office of another by the latter's courtesy cannot authorize others to use, occupy, or even enter the office; and if he does so, the proprietor has the right, either in person or through a servant, to require them to leave. Id.

7. What entries upon land do not amount to trespass, generally. — Persons who, in a populous town, erect buildings and fences on the line of a street, with doors and gates so constructed as when open to swing over it, or who, in constructing such buildings, place within the limits of the street building materials, and the earth dug from the cellar, if removed within a reasonable time, or spread earth on the street to improve it as a way, or allow horses and carriages to stand on such street, are not liable in trespass for such acts to the owner of the soil of the street. Van O'Linda v. Lotthrop, 32 D. 281.

A traveler going from the highway upon adjoining land from necessity, because the highway is made temporarily impassable by snowdrifts, is not guilty of trespass if he does no unnecessary damage. Campbell v. Race, 54 D. 723.

* Trespass by one co-tenant against another, see note, 29 D. 433-435.

Trespass in forcibly entering upon one's own property, see note, 51 R. 362-363.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The owner of part of a reversion or remainder of land, between whom and another a suit is pending involving a question of waste or improvements, may go upon the premises in a peaceable manner, with witnesses, to examine the same. Council v. State, 56 D. 512.

One purchasing at a wreck commissioner's sale is not guilty of trespass in hauling the goods over the plaintiff's land, although forbidden to do so, where the goods could not be taken off in any other way without great inconvenience. Hetfield v. Baum, 57 D. 563.

An entry into a man's house after a warning not to enter does not necessarily constitute a forcible trespass. Carroll v. State, 58 D. 282.

A husband is not liable as a trespasser for removing a grave-stone placed there by his wife's mother, from the grave of his wife, whom he has buried in a public burying-ground, where he does not injure the stone, and holds it in possession ready to be delivered to the owner on demand, and causes the removal for the purpose of substituting another stone. Dwrell v. Hayward, 69 D. 284.

A party entering upon land in good faith, under the belief that he has a title thereto, is not a naked trespasser, though the title be in fact in another; and he is entitled to all legal protection to his improvements and property placed upon the premises, given by the statute to parties in possession under color of title. Mississippi etc. R. R. Co. v. Devaney, 2 R. 608.

One entering upon the sea-beach of another and removing, for the purpose of restoring to its owner, a boat cast ashore by a storm and in danger of being carried off by the sea, is not a trespasser. Proctor v. Adams, 18 R. 500.

The owner of land may expel, with reasonable force, a wrongful occupant, without being liable to any civil action, although he may be liable for breach of the peace or for forcible entry. Souter v. Codman, 51 R. 384.

When the owner of land, having the right to immediate possession, enters thereon quietly and peaceably, or without force and violence, he is not liable in trespass to an occupant. Fort Dearborn Lodge v. Klein, 56 R. 133.

8. Entry under license from owner. — One who exceeds an authority in fact is liable only for the excess; but if one abuses an authority in law, by committing acts which are in themselves trespasses, not authorized by the authority, he is a trespasser ab initio. Jewell v. Mahood, 84 D. 90.

Trespass quare clausum fregit may properly be brought against a party having a license to enter on another's land, who, in taking down a gate erected thereon to enable him to enter, neglects to restore it to its place, in consequence of which his swine trespass upon the plaintiff's land. And defendant, under this form of action, may be held liable for the damages thus occasioned. Kiescher v. Monn, 78 D. 379.

9. Entry under judicial authority. — Authority to commit a trespass cannot be implied. McCoy v. McKowen, 59 D. 264.

Neither a justice of the peace nor a plaintiff in a judgment becomes a trespasser by enforcing a judgment of the former which remains unrecinded and unpaid; although such judgment may be erroneous, if the justice had jurisdiction of the case in which it was rendered. Deal v. Harrie, 63 D. 686.

10. What constitutes trespass to personal property. — The using of an estray by the taker-up, except in a matter of necessity and for the benefit of the owner, is wrongful, and renders him liable in trespass. Barrett v. Lightfoot, 15 D. 110.

Actual forcible dispossession is unnecessary to maintain trespass de bonis asportatis or trover, any unlawful interference or exercise of dominion with respect to the property by which the owner is damaged being sufficient. Phillips v. Hall, 24 D. 103.

There is a tortious taking whenever there is an unlawful meddling with the property; or an exercise or claim of dominion over it, without any pretense of authority or right. This, without a manual seizing of the property, is sufficient, and an action of trespass or replevin will lie. Haythorn v. Rushforth, 38 D. 540.

Appropriation of another's property to one's own use is not allowed even for a temporary purpose. McCoy v. Danley, 57 D. 680.

Wrongful intent is not necessary to constitute trespass; it is sufficient if the act is done without a justifiable cause or purpose, though it be done accidentally or by mistake. Dexter v. Cole, 70 D. 465; Kirkwood v. Miller, 73 D. 134.

11. What acts relative to the chattels of another do not amount to trespass. — One who receives possession of property known to him to have been wrongfully taken from another does not thereby become a party to the wrong, and cannot be held liable as a trespasser by relation. Harper v. Baker, 16 D. 112.

Private property may be destroyed by an individual in the exercise of the common-law right of necessity, to prevent the spreading of a conflagration, although his own property is not in imminent danger. American Print Works v. Lawrence, 57 D. 420.

II. ACTIONS FOR TRESPASS.

1. For Trespass upon Land.

12. Venue. — Trespass quare clausum fregit must be brought in the county where the land lies, and it must appear on the record that the trespass was committed in the county. Champion v. Doughty, 35 D. 522.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

13. Who may sue. — Trespass quare clausum fregit lies for an occupant of government land against any person wrongfully dispossessing him. Duncan v. Potts, 24 D. 766.

An occupant of public lands is a tenant at will of the government. Id.

14. The title or possession necessary in order to maintain an action for trespass on land. — 1. Necessity of possession. — To maintain trespass, plaintiff must have possession. Forster v. Fletcher, 18 D. 208.

Trespass quare clausum fregit can be maintained only by a person in actual possession of the locus in quo at the time of the injury; a mere legal or constructive possession will not sustain such action. McClain v. Todd, 22 D. 37; Truss v. Old, 18 D. 748; Wilson v. Bibb, 25 D. 118; Bakersfield Cong. Soc. v. Baker, 40 D. 668; McColman v. Wilkes, 51 D. 637.

The gist of the action of trespass is the injury done to the plaintiff's possession, and therefore, in order to maintain it, possession is necessary. This possession may be either actual or constructive; the mere right of entry on the lands is not sufficient, if they be in the actual possession and occupancy of a disseisor. Gent v. Lynch, 87 D. 558; Chandler v. Walker, 53 D. 202.

One who has illegally acquired possession may maintain trespass against any person who unlawfully disturbs his possession. Evertson v. Sutton, 21 D. 217.

Trespass for cutting down and carrying away trees cannot be maintained, unless the plaintiff was in the actual possession of them. McClain v. Todd, 22 D. 37.

Defendant being in possession, although tortiously, will prevent a recovery in such an action. Wilson v. Bibb, 25 D. 118.

A religious society entitled to the use of a meeting-house for all religious purposes, but who are not the owners of the fee therein, this being in a separate society composed of the pew-holders in the meeting-house, cannot maintain an action of trespass quare clausum fregit for a breaking and entering into the meeting-house whereby the exercise of their right was interrupted. Bakersfield Cong. Soc. v. Baker, 40 D. 668.

The owner of a building may be in possession thereof, although he has leased the rooms as such to divers individuals, and he may maintain an action of trespass for its destruction. Curtiss v. Hoyt, 48 D. 149.

Constructive possession is such as the law annexes to the title, and will without entry maintain trespass quare clausum fregit against a casual trespasser; but it is always displaced by actual possession. McColman v. Wilkes, 51 D. 637.

To maintain trespass quare clausum fregit against a mere wrong-doer, it is unnecessary that the land shall be inclosed, where possession is known, marked, and uninterrupted. Chandler v. Walker, 53 D. 202.

Where defendant has entered upon an outlying uninclosed lot of plaintiff's, and has cut and sold wood off it from time to time, these were mere successive acts of trespass, and the title being in plaintiff, the constructive possession is in her, and she may maintain trespass against defendant. Gent v. Lynch, 87 D. 558.

An entry by the holder of a mortgage upon one of several detached lots of wild and unoccupied land in the same county, in the name of all, gives him constructive legal possession of all, so that he may maintain trespass against any person afterwards entering without right upon any of the other lots, if the lots are covered by the same mortgage, upon the same condition. Green v. Pettingill, 93 D. 444.

Under a paper title apparently good, actual possession of part of the land described is sufficient to maintain trespass for entry upon any part of it. Parker v. Wallis, 45 R. 703.

2. When title alone is sufficient. — One having title may maintain trespass for cutting timber, without actual possession, no one being in the actual possession. Gillespie v. Deu, 18 D. 42; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 25 D. 582.

Trespass quare clausum fregit may be maintained by a plaintiff who has any title to the locus in quo, that continued down to the time of the alleged trespass; and a husband seized in right of his wife has, during her lifetime, a title sufficient to maintain such action. Adams v. Cuddy, 25 D. 330.

A disseisor may maintain trespass quare clausum against the disseisor. Stevens v. Hollister, 46 D. 154.

Where plaintiff has possession of a part of a tract of land, claims the whole of it, and has a deed for the whole, he may recover for every successive trespass upon the land, although the trespasser has actually occupied some portion of the land for a great number of years. Id.

3. When possession alone is sufficient. — If a person having a possessory title merely forcibly enters and turns out one who has only a naked possession, the latter cannot maintain trespass against the former. Hyatt v. Wood, 4 D. 258.

If a person having a legal right of entry makes a forcible entry, though he subjects himself to indictment for a breach of the peace, he is not liable in an action of trespass at the suit of the person who has no right, and so turned out of possession. Id.

Possession alone is sufficient to maintain the action against all the world, except the rightful owner. Wilson v. Bibb, 25 D. 118.

A party in possession of land may maintain trespass against a stranger for cutting trees thereon, though he has conveyed to a third person who has never entered into possession. Hayward v. Sedgley, 31 D. 64.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

Possession is sufficient evidence of title to land to maintain trespass against one who cannot show a better title or some legal right of entry. Heath v. Williams, 43 D. 265; Leonard v. Crossland, 60 D. 213; Fuhr v. Dean, 69 D. 484.

Trespass quare clausum fregit may be maintained against a wrong-doer by one in actual possession without, or constructive possession with, title. Chandler v. Walker, 53 D. 202.

Possession is sufficient to maintain trespass against mere wrong-doer for cutting timber from the unfenced portion of a lot, when occupied for several years up to a spotted line, as a part of a farm, and as a wood and timber lot attached thereto, other portions of the lot being cleared, cultivated, and fenced. Id.

15. — as between landlord and tenant. — A landlord cannot maintain trespass quare clausum fregit after having parted with his entire possession to his lessee. Torrence v. Irwin, 1 D. 340. Case is the proper remedy for an injury done to the reversionary interest of the landlord while the property was in the possession of his tenant. Cannon v. Hatcher, 26 D. 177.

Where the owner of land agreed with another to cultivate the land on shares, they may jointly maintain an action of trespass against a third person who cuts and carries off the crop. Foot v. Colvin, 3 D. 473.

Where a tenant holds over the term, and the landlord enters by force and turns him out, he cannot maintain trespass against the landlord. Hyatt v. Wood, 4 D. 258.

A tenant entitled to the waygoing crop, who enters and warns a third person against cutting it, may maintain trespass quare clausum fregit against the wrong-doer, notwithstanding he had, previously to the trespass, given up to his landlord possession of the farm, in a part of which the crop was growing. Stultz v. Dickey, 6 D. 411.

16. Parties defendant. — The liability of trespassers is joint and several; the plaintiff may proceed against all or any one at his election, and judgment without satisfaction against one is no bar to action against the others. Blann v. Crocheron, 54 D. 203. If the damages have been in part satisfied by payment or compromise with some of the defendants, the plaintiff may still proceed against those who remain on the record. Evidence of a sum received by the plaintiff from one of the defendants, on account of the alleged trespass, is, therefore, admissible in mitigation of damages. Bloss v. Plymale, 100 D. 752.

Trespass quare clausum fregit cannot be sustained against a corporation aggregate. Foot v. Cincinnati, 34 D. 420.

Trespass may be maintained on account of damage committed by cattle agisted, either against the owner or the agister, although but one satisfaction can be obtained. The rule of the common law in this respect has not been changed by the revised statutes, chapter 113, section 4. Sheridan v. Bean, 41 D. 507.

The owner of land cannot maintain trespass quare clausum fregit against one who was in possession at the time he acquired title. McColman v. Wilkes, 51 D. 637.

Tenants in possession may be sued jointly in an action for trespass committed by animals kept by them in common upon the premises, although the several animals are owned by them separately and individually. Jack v. Hudnall, 18 R. 298.

17. Declaration. — A declaration in trespass should aver the county in which the trespass was committed; and where, subsequent to the trespass, but before the bringing of the action, a new county was formed, including the land trespassed upon, an allegation that the trespass was committed in the new county is fatal error. Champion v. Doughty, 35 D. 523.

The averment of possession in trespass quare clausum is sufficiently contained in the charge that "defendant broke and entered into the close of plaintiff." Finch v. Alston, 23 D. 299.

18. What may be set up in defense, generally. — To justify, as for a distress damage-tenant, the defendant must show actual possession of the land trespassed upon. Orser v. Storme, 18 D. 543.

A purchaser of land under a decree in chancery may enter peaceably and take possession, and may then distrain cattle doing damage on the premises. Id.

A trespasser will not be permitted to make the person trespassed against his debtor for improvements made without the consent and against the will of the latter; neither will the trespasser be allowed to set them off against damages to which he has subjected himself by reason of his trespass. Beverly v. Burke, 54 D. 351.

Trespass quare clausum will not lie against one who, having a right by deed to enter certain premises for a particular purpose, and having entered for that purpose, after entry exceeds his authority, and commits acts for which he was not authorized to enter. Jewell v. Mahood, 84 D. 90.

The action of trespass is several as to each defendant, and each has a right to make his own defense, and to have it tried, without being compelled to rely upon a defective defense made by a co-defendant. Johnson v. Jones, 92 D. 159.

Duress constitutes a good defense in trespass; but it seems that if the plaintiff gives evidence tending to show that the defendant might have avoided committing the trespass by any reasonable means, it is then incumbent on the defendant to show that he had no reasonable means of escaping from the force or fear after it was applied to him, and before the trespass was committed. Cunningham v. Pitzer, 94 D. 526.

In an action of trespass quare clausum and for assault, defendant pleaded that the locus was part of plaintiff's house, which had been used by him while postmaster, as a post-office; that one G. having succeeded him in that office, had license for him to enter and remove the public property of the United States; that defendant, as assistant-postmaster and servant to G., and by his direction, attempted to enter for that purpose, but was resisted and assaulted by plaintiff, whereupon, etc. (justifying the trespass). Held, that the justification was good, and would have been so without the averment of license. Sterling v. Warden, 12 K. 80.

19. — title in other than plaintiff.

— It is no defense to trespass quare clausum that the title to the premises on which the trespass is charged is in one other than the plaintiff, unless the defendant justify under authority from such other person. Finch v. Alston, 23 D. 299; McColman v. Wilkes, 51 D. 637.

Action of trespass quare clausum fregit is founded upon the actual possession of the plaintiff; but if defendants have title, the damage done to the close is no injury to the possessor, who has no right. Wilsons v. Bibb, 25 D. 118.

A party in possession, though without title, may maintain trespass against a wrongdoer; and defendant's showing the title to be in a third person will not avail him; he must show that the right is in himself. McColman v. Wilkes, 51 D. 637.

The rule that a mere trespasser cannot show title in a third party is generally true, but not universally so. It is true when plaintiff relies on prior possession for his title. Bird v. Liebros, 70 D. 617.

20. The plea or answer. — Liberum tenementum is a sufficient plea in justification in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit. Crockett v. Lashbrook, 17 D. 98; Tribble v. Frame, 23 D. 439.

The plea of liberum tenementum asserts title to the locus in quo in defendants. Wilsons v. Bibb, 25 D. 118.

In trespass quare clausum fregit under such a plea, and issue thereon, evidence of paramount title in either party is admissible. Ib.

Records, papers, etc., bearing upon the question of possession are admissible under a plea of liberum tenementum. Ib.

A plea that the entry was by license of the real owner is good to trespass for breaking a close and carrying off the grain. Rasor v. Qualls, 30 D. 658.

The general issue in trespass will allow proof that the breaking the close complained of was by license of the real owner. Ib.

The plea of liberum tenementum in trespass quare clausum asserts a freehold in the defendant and a right to immediate possession, but it admits possession in the plaintiff and a color of right thereto. Hunter v. Hatton, 45 D. 117.

The general issue in trespass puts in issue both the fact of trespass and title of plaintiff. It follows that any title, whether freehold or possessory, in the defendant, is admissible in evidence; and for this purpose a certificate of the register of the land-office that the defendants had located the land upon which the alleged trespass occurred is competent evidence. Floyd v. Ricks, 58 D. 374.

The answer of defendant need not set forth the lease under which he justifies in an action for breaking and entering a close. Dillon v. Brown, 71 D. 700.

Defendant in trespass, who has pleaded the general issue, may at his option claim benefit of judgment on demurrer in favor of a co-defendant who has pleaded specially, if such special plea shows that the plaintiff cannot maintain his action against either, or he may insist on a trial of the issue made by his own plea. Johnson v. Jones, 92 D. 159.

If such defendant seeks to avail himself of such judgment, and the court permits it, the plaintiff can except, and preserve against them in the record the same question raised by his demurrer to the special plea; but if the defendant insists upon a trial of the issue made by his own plea, a verdict and judgment may be had according to the evidence. Ib.

21. Subsequent pleadings. — A traverse of a plea of liberum tenementum in trespass quare clausum admits the defendant's right to possession if he is entitled to the freehold, and puts in issue only the question of freehold. Hence, evidence of a mere possessory right in the plaintiff is inadmissible, but evidence of a freehold is admissible. Hunter v. Hatton, 45 D. 117.

Plaintiff in trespass quare clausum need not make a new assignment where the defendant pleads the general issue of not guilty to the whole trespass alleged, with or without a brief statement, under the provisions of the statute; but he may give evidence of any act of trespass covered by his declaration. Palmer v. Dougherty, 54 D. 636.

22. What evidence is admissible and sufficient. — Evidence in an action for trespass on timber-lands, under the statute, is regulated by the rules of the common law, and is not confined to the parties to the action; such latter evidence is merely cumulative. Batschelder v. Kelly, 34 D. 174.

In Missouri, under a count for trespass framed under the act approved February 25, 1835, which affixes a penalty for every trespass therein described, evidence of the number of trespasses committed is admissible in order that the jury may ascertain the damages. Cooper v. Maupin, 35 D. 456.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Under the general issue in trespass quare clausum, evidence of title as well as of possession in the plaintiff is unquestionably admissible. Hunter v. Hatton, 45 D. 117.

A valid lease may be given in evidence as a full legal defense in an action for breaking and entering a close. Dillon v. Brown, 71 D. 700.

Under the general issue, everything directly connected with the acts complained of may be proved to show or to rebut malice. Perkins v. Towle, 80 D. 149.

Acts of trespass prior to the earliest day laid in the complaint may be proved under the New York statute, though trespasses laid under a continuando have already been proved. Dubois v. Beaver, 82 D. 326.

An action of trespass was brought against several defendants. As to one of them, Jarrell, the case was dismissed by the plaintiff without trial and before plea. He also dismissed the case as to three other defendants before trial. The defendants pleaded "not guilty," and also accord and satisfaction to Jarrell, who was alleged in the plea to be a joint trespasser, and on the trial they offered in evidence the summons and declaration. Held, that it was not error to permit the declaration and orders of dismissal to go in evidence, for they were parts of the record; but that the plea of "not guilty" estopped the remaining defendants from using the allegations of the declaration to prove that the released defendant, Jarrell, was a joint trespasser. Bloss v. Plymale, 100 D. 752.

23. What is inadmissible or insufficient. — No evidence can be offered, under the general issue, in trespass quare clausum to show that an act prima facie a trespass was authorized by the plaintiff. Finch v. Alston, 23 D. 299.

Parol evidence is inadmissible under a traverse of a plea of liberum tenementum in trespass quare clausum, against a husband by a purchaser at a trustee sale of the locus in quo as the property of the wife, then an infant, to show that the husband, after the wife's majority, received the purchase-money, permitted the purchaser to take possession, and renounced all claim to the land, as this is no evidence of a freehold. Hunter v. Hatton, 45 D. 117.

Evidence of the commission of a trespass upon a tract of land other than that described in the writ is inadmissible. Longfellow v. Quimby, 48 D. 525.

In trespass quare clausum, defendant's parol admission of plaintiff's title is not admissible to prove his title, where the plaintiff relies upon his title, and not his possession, to sustain the action, but introduces no record evidence of it, and offers the defendant's parol admission to supply its place. Bivins v. McEivroy, 52 D. 258.

In trespass, matters not directly connected with acts complained of cannot be shown. Thus in trespass for tearing down plaintiff's house, it is inadmissible to show, for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of malice, that the house was occupied by lewd women; that visitors entered over defendant's land, left the bars down, and disturbed a religious meeting, etc. Perkins v. Towle, 80 D. 149.

In an action for damages for maliciously burning a barn, evidence of the defendant's good character is not admissible under the general denial. Gebhart v. Burkett, 26 R. 61; Barton v. Thompson, 41 R. 119.

24. Burden of proof. — A presumption of guilt arises in an action of trespass if it is proved that two houses, the removal whereof was the cause of action, were, after such removal, in the possession of the defendant. Finch v. Alston, 23 D. 299.

Trespass quare domum fregit cannot be maintained without showing an unlawful entry into the house. Harris v. Gillingham, 23 D. 701.

The burden of proof as to title to land in trespass, by a plaintiff in possession against a defendant out of possession, is on the latter, where both claim the title. Heath v. Williams, 43 D. 265.

Plaintiff in trespass need not prove his possession is rightful; it is deemed to be so until the contrary appears; it devolves on the defendants to show that the plaintiff's was a wrongful possession. Linard v. Crossland, 60 D. 213.

If a prima facie case of trespass is made out against defendant, the burden of proving justification is on him, for the court will not presume its existence. Woodbridge v. Conner, 77 D. 283.

25. Instructions. — The court cannot find, as a legal conclusion, that a trespass was wanton, from the fact that it was committed without a license from the real owners. Longfellow v. Quimby, 48 D. 525.

The court has no right to assume that parties to an action are trespassers, as that is a question of fact for the jury. Beverly v. Burke, 54 D. 351.

The law presumes damage from trespass, and therefore it is error, in an action for a trespass, for the court to charge the jury that if they believe no injury or damage was done by the defendants to the plaintiffs, they should find for the defendants. Attwood v. Fricot, 76 D. 567.

26. The damages recoverable. — Damages in trespass are limited to the injury actually received, and cannot include the trouble the owner has been put to in looking after the trespassers. Longfellow v. Quimby, 48 D. 525.

The measure of damages in an action of trespass for breaking plaintiff's close and taking away his goods and chattels is the value of the goods, together with the incidental damages. Woolley v. Carter, 11 D. 520.

A party intending to commit a trespass on public lands, and by mistake committing trespass upon lands of a private individual, is liable for such trespass in penal damages. Perkins v. Hackleman, 59 D. 243.

A party supposing himself to be cutting timber on his own land, but by mistake cutting on another's land, is liable for the actual damage done. Ib.

Where the gist of the action is disturbance of plaintiff's possession, whatever was done after the breaking and entry is but aggravation of damages. Adams v. Blodgett, 90 D. 569.

Plaintiff in trespass may elect any day prior to the date of his writ as the time when the defendant forcibly entered upon his land and converted property thereon to his own use, and the defendant may be compelled to pay the highest market value for the property taken at the place of the conversion, with interest thereon from the time of the taking to the day of the trial. Ib.

The jury may determine the damages by making a fair average of sales of the same kind of property made near the time and place of the conversion, and both before and after the taking. Ib.

In trespass for wrongfully attaching and seizing goods, damages cannot be mitigated by proof of an offer to return the property in the same condition on the next day. Carpenter v. Dresser, 39 R. 337.

If one having a right, by license, to enter upon another's land for a lawful purpose, exceed his license or abuse his authority, he is liable for consequential damages arising from his wrongful act in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit. Kissecker v. Monn, 78 D. 379.

The rule of damages in trespass for the destruction of a building is the value of the property destroyed, if the defendants acted bona fide under claim of right, doing no unnecessary or wanton injury; but if the defendant acted wantonly and maliciously, the jury may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, allow something more. Curtiss v. Hoyt, 48 D. 149.

Exemplary damages may be recovered in trespass quare clausum, if the facts would warrant such a recovery in any other form of action. Perkins v. Towle, 80 D. 149.

Single damages are recoverable for a trespass which proves to be casual or involuntary, though the complaint was in form for treble damages, under a statute allowing such damages for willful trespass. Dubois v. Beaver, 82 D. 327.

Where the defendant went up in a balloon, and descending in the plaintiff's garden, became entangled, and called for help, whereupon a crowd broke into the garden and injured the fences and plants, — held, that the injury was the natural and ordinary consequence of the act of the defendant, and that he was liable therefor. Guille v. Swan, 10 D. 234.

27. Judgment, and how enforced. — There can be but one final judgment in an action of trespass quare clausum against several defendants; and if some of them should make default, and an interlocutory judgment be rendered against them, it is erroneous to render judgment against those who appear and contest the action, without embracing the defaulting defendants. Bivins v. McElroy, 52 D. 258.

If separate judgments have been recovered against several joint trespassers, there can be but one satisfaction of the damages, but the costs can be collected on all the judgments. Ayer v. Ashmead, 83 D. 154; Lord v. Tiffany, 50 R. 689; Livingston v. Bishop, 3 D. 330; Fleming v. McDonald, 19 R. 711.

2. For Trespass upon Personal Property.

28. When trespass is the proper remedy. — Trespass vi et armis lies if the injury be immediate and direct, but if it be consequential, the action will be trespass on the case. Jordan v. Wyatt, 47 D. 720.

Trespass on the case lies for a violent and immediate injury, unless willful, if occasioned by the carelessness or negligence of the defendant. Ib.

Where an act not willful, but the result of negligence, is the immediate and direct cause of an injury, trespass vi et armis will lie. Accordingly, where a belligerent cruiser chased a neutral, supposing her to be an enemy, and through negligence ran her down in the night, and sank her, trespass vi et armis will lie for the damages sustained. Percival v. Hickey, 9 D. 210.

Trespass vi et armis is the proper form of action for a direct, immediate, and intentional injury to one's fishery; and the fact that the defendant was in the cabin at the time his vessel tore the plaintiff's net does not alter the case, he being still the master of the vessel. Post v. Munn, 7 D. 570.

Trespass, and not case, is the proper remedy where an infant, having hired a horse, uses him with such violence and cruelty that he dies. Campbell v. Stakes, 19 D. 561.

If case is brought for such an injury, it affirms the hiring, and the plea of infancy is a good defense. Ib.

Trespass will not lie for the bare neglect by an infant or adult to use a hired animal with ordinary care, to protect him from injury, and return him as agreed upon. Ib.

A willful and positive act by an infant, in such a case, amounting to an election to disaffirm the contract, entitles the owner to immediate possession. Ib.

For a willful and intentional injury by an infant, to a horse hired by him, trespass will lie. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Want of jurisdiction to render a judgment may be shown collaterally; it avoids the judgment, and in the case of inferior courts, renders all persons concerned in enforcing it trespassers. Putnam v. Man, 20 D. 686.

Where the court has jurisdiction, and the proceedings are regular on their face, trespass will not lie. Id.

Trover and trespass are concurrent remedies for most illegal or tortious takings. Phillips v. Hall, 24 D. 108.

Trespass lies for levying on the goods of a stranger and taking a receiptor, though the goods are not removed, and the receiptor permits the owner to keep possession and dispose of them as his own. Id.

Trespass does not lie for goods delivered by the owner to the defendant, and afterwards sold by the latter to a stranger without authority. Bradley v. Davis, 30 D. 729.

Abuse of a license given by the owner of goods does not constitute the licensee a trespasser ab initio. Id.

Trespass is the proper remedy where there is no right to distrain and the seizure is illegal. Dickson v. Parker, 34 D. 78.

A tree standing directly upon the line between adjoining owners is the common property of both parties, and trespass will lie if one cuts and destroys it without the consent of the other. Griſſis v. Bixby, 37 D. 225.

Trespass is an appropriate remedy where one's property, or the property of a person of whom he has become administrator, has been tortiously taken. Osborn v. Bell, 49 D. 275.

Trespass or trover will lie for a dog. State v. McDuffie, 69 D. 516.

Plaintiff cannot carve two suits out of one cause of action. Therefore where the plaintiff's team was stopped by the defendant, and a horse taken therefrom, — held, that the plaintiff could not bring trover for the horse taken, and trespass for stopping the team and delaying his journey, because it was all one act. Hue v. Long, 18 D. 719.

Plaintiff had wood on defendant's land. Defendant set fire to some rubbish on another part of the land. The fire escaped him and unintentionally burned plaintiff's wood. Held, trespass vi et armis would lie against defendant for the injury. Jordan v. Wyatt, 47 D. 720.

Plaintiff's cow escaped into defendant's land, through a defect of a fence which the latter was bound to repair, and was there bitten by a dog. Held, that trespass would not lie, but semble that case would. Cate v. Cate, 9 R. 179.

Defendant had by contract the right to float logs through plaintiff's dam, and was bound by the same contract to repair and pay all damages done by him. Held, that he was also liable to trespass on the case for damages negligently done by him. Dean v. McLean, 21 R. 130.

29. Who may sue. — A mortgagee of personalty may maintain trespass against one who takes it from the possession of the mortgagor, although at the time the debt is not due. Woodruff v. Halsey, 19 D. 329.

Where a party willfully sets fire to and burns wheat brought to a machine to be thrashed, the owner of the machine may, in an action of trespass, recover from him the value of the wheat destroyed. Ripsey v. Miller, 62 D. 177.

30. Necessary title or possession in plaintiff. — Actual or constructive possession is necessary to maintain trespass for taking chattels. Orser v. Storms, 18 D. 543.

Constructive possession is, when one has such a right as to be entitled to reduce goods to actual possession at any time. Id. Accordingly, where cows and sheep were delivered to a person who promised to redeliver within one year, with the natural increase, and to pay for such as should be lost or destroyed and not redelivered, it was held to be a hiring of the chattels for a year for a valuable consideration, and that the owner could not maintain trespass against a person who took them from the hirer. Putnam v. Wyley, 5 D. 346.

The right to reduce a chattel into actual possession is sufficient to maintain trespass for taking it. Buck v. Aikin, 19 D. 535; Haythorn v. Rushforth, 38 D. 540.

The owner of a chattel may maintain trespass for it, if at the time of the injury he have the right of present possession, though the actual possession be in another. Carson v. Noblet, 6 D. 554; Edwards v. Edwards, 34 D. 711.

One who has bought the timber on a lot belonging to another, and enters and cuts a portion, has sufficient possession to maintain trespass against a stranger who should cut and carry away some of the timber. Goodrich v. Hathaway, 18 D. 701.

An appeal lies in such a case, although the damages claimed do not exceed ten dollars. Id.

The owner of cattle loaned to another for an indefinite time, who retains the right of property therein, may maintain trespass for taking them or their increase from the borrower's possession, though that possession may have been continued for many years. Orser v. Storms, 18 D. 543.

Possession of a part of a tract of land, without title, cannot be extended by construction to the part not in actual possession of the party so as to enable him to reclaim timber cut thereon. Buck v. Aikin, 19 D. 535.

The purchaser of a lot cannot reclaim trees cut and removed therefrom before his purchase. Id.

A mortgagee of a building on a third person's land may maintain trespass against a stranger who tears it down and carries the materials away, it being unoccupied and not in the actual possession of the mortgagee at the time. Woodruff v. Halsey, 19 D. 329.

Trespass de bonis asportatis may be maintained by the owner of the land for the removal of wood cut and severed from the freehold, although such owner was not in actual possession. McClain v. Todd, 22 D. 37.

Heirs cannot maintain trespass for an injury done in the lifetime of their ancestor, by carrying away cord-wood from his land. Id.

A bailor who loans his horses has a constructive possession which will support an action of trespass de bonis asportatis. Root v. Chandler, 25 D. 546.

The possessor of property may maintain trespass against a mere wrong-doer without showing the extent of his right. Potter v. Washburn, 37 D. 615; Barron v. Cobleigh, 35 D. 505.

A wrongful conversion of property gives title thereto against all persons except the true owner. Wincher v. Shrewsbury, 35 D. 108.

Timber cut on public lands and made into rails belongs, except as against the government, to the person cutting it, and he may maintain an action against any one taking the rails, although the person taking has acquired the title from the government. Id.

The possession of plaintiff is generally sufficient to enable him to maintain trespass de bonis asportatis; but where a paramount right is shown to be in a third person, and the defendant connects himself properly with such third person, the rule is otherwise. Hutchinson v. Lord, 60 D. 381.

Proof of possession and claim of ownership of land is sufficient evidence of title to maintain the statutory action of trespass, to recover the specific value of trees alleged to have been cut upon the land; and in such case, in order to defeat the action, it is incumbent on the defendant to show title, either in himself or in some third person. Ware v. Collins, 72 D. 122.

31. Who may be sued. — Trespass lies against one who carries away the materials of a building, although he did not assist in the pulling down. Woodruff v. Halsey, 19 D. 329.

Trespass by him who has a special property in goods will lie against him who has a general property. The principle applied to an action by a bailee for the manufacture of skins into morocco against the assignee of the bailor. Burdiet v. Murray, 21 D. 583.

Trespass de bonis will lie against one who directs an officer to detain property and indemnifies him for such taking. Root v. Chandler, 25 D. 546.

Trespass lies against a bona fide mortgagee of bailee of a chattel, by the bailor without demand, where the bailee mortgages the same for his own debt without authority and the mortgagee takes possession without notice of the owner's title. Stanley v. Gaylord, 48 D. 643.

Those committing trespass by command of another are liable to an action therefor. Woodbridge v. Conner, 77 D. 263.

For a joint injury done by dogs owned by separate owners, an action of trespass against such owners will not lie. Adams v. Hall, 19 D. 690.

The indorser of a non-negotiable note is not liable as a trespasser for the seizure of property under a void attachment issued in a proceeding brought thereon in his name as nominal plaintiff. Ross v. Fuller, 36 D. 342.

An officer is not liable in trespass for using a pitchfork of a debtor in attachment for the purpose of removing certain hay and grain attached by him, where, after the removal, he leaves the fork where he found it, and does it no injury. The maxim De minimis non curat lex is peculiarly applicable in such a case. Paul v. Slason, 54 D. 75.

The doctrine that an officer becomes a trespasser ab initio when he abuses the authority given him by law has never been extended to any case, except where there has been a clear, substantial violation of the plaintiff's rights, and of such a character as to show a wanton disregard of duty on his part. Id.

An officer is not liable as trespasser ab initio for using personal property attached by him, unless it has been injured by him, or been used by him for his own benefit, or for the benefit of some person other than the debtor. Id.

A person who does no more than to prefer complaint to a magistrate is not liable in trespass for acts done under the magistrate's process issuing thereon, though the latter have no jurisdiction. Barker v. Stetson, 66 D. 457.

In trespass for a wrongful seizure of plaintiff's goods made by an officer under a warrant issued against the goods of another at the suit of defendant, — held, 1. That the defendant was not liable for the wrongful acts of the officer, without proof that he had authorized such acts; and 2. That the fact that defendant's attorney had directed such wrongful acts would not render the defendant liable in the absence of proof of special authority in the attorney. Weish v. Cochran, 20 R. 519.

32. Rules of pleading. — A declaration in trespass not alleging property in the plaintiff in the thing taken is bad on demurrer. Hite v. Long, 18 D. 719.

In trespass de bonis, an averment of the value of the articles carried away is not a material averment. The omission of it is a defect of form only; it is cured by pleading in chief and by the verdict, and is no ground of exception to the admission of evidence to prove the value. Baker v. Baker, 48 D. 725.

A count for willfully killing a horse may be joined with one for trespass in entering upon plaintiff's land and setting fire to his buildings; and where no declaration is filed, such additional count will be considered as made. Rippey v. Miller, 62 D. 177.

A complaint in trespass de bonis need not, in terms, allege "wrongful taking," where the facts set up show a wrongful taking. Such an allegation is not one of fact, but a conclusion of law, arising from the facts stated. Buck v. Colbath, 82 D. 91.

To plead property in a stranger is not competent for a defendant in trespass de bonis. Squire v. Hollenbeck, 20 D. 506.

In trespass de bonis, evidence of justification is inadmissible under the general issue. Root v. Chandler, 25 D. 546.

The general issue will not admit evidence in trespass for taking goods, to show that the taking was by the defendant, in his capacity of sheriff. Davis v. Hooper, 24 D. 751.

In trespass de bonis, a plea that the goods belonged to a third person, and that the defendant took them by virtue of an attachment against him, gives no color for the action, and is obnoxious to the objection of amounting to the general issue; but if the plea admits that the property was taken from the possession of the plaintiff, it gives color, and will be held good. Van Etten v. Hurs, 41 D. 748.

33. — of evidence. — The wrong-doer is responsible for the consequences which immediately flow from his wrongful or negligent acts; but in trespass for taking corn plaintiff cannot prove, for the purpose of enhancing damages, that, in consequence of the trespass, he was compelled to work as a day-laborer to obtain the means to purchase other corn. Sims v. Glasener, 48 D. 120.

To constitute a trespass, wrongful intent need not be proved. Stanley v. Gaylord, 43 D. 643.

Trespass de bonis asportatis may be sustained by proof of any unlawful interference with or exercise of acts of ownership over property, to the exclusion of the owner. It is not necessary to prove actual forcible dispossession of the property, in order to maintain the action. Dexter v. Cole, 70 D. 465.

34. Matters of defense. — A judgment for the defendant in an action of trover or detinue for a chattel is a bar to an action of trespass for the same chattel; for the trespass is waived by bringing trover or detinue. Hue v. Long, 18 D. 719.

The owner of a horse which another's servant has harnessed in his team, and is driving violently away, may stop the team, using no more force than necessary, and retake his horse; and a plea setting forth these facts in an action of trespass by the owner of the team for stopping the same is good, where the plaintiff does not claim property in the horse. Id.

In trespass de bonis the defendant may give in mitigation of damages that the goods did not belong to the plaintiff, and that they have come to the use of the owner. Squire v. Hollenbeck, 20 D. 506.

The owner of land is not liable in trespass for cutting and carrying away the grain or grass of one in wrongful possession. Barnes v. Dean, 30 D. 346.

Defendant may show that plaintiff is not the owner or was not in possession of the property upon which the trespass is claimed to have been committed, so as to exclude his right to maintain an action in relation to it; or for the same purpose defendant may show that the owner, against whose property defendant held a writ of attachment, had deposited it with plaintiff, as his servant. Pomroy v. Parmlee, 74 D. 328.

Where a trespass has been committed and goods carried away, the injured party is not obliged to accept an offer of compromise, or receive the goods upon restoration proposed, but he may stand upon his legal rights. Woolley v. Carter, 11 D. 620.

Property in a stranger is no defense in trespass de bonis, though it is otherwise in trover. Buck v. Aldin, 19 D. 535.

Trespassers cannot relieve themselves from responsibility by pleading, in defense, the authority of third persons. Tourne v. Lee, 20 D. 260.

That a trespass was committed under a mistake is no justification. Hobart v. Hagget, 28 D. 159.

The intent with which an act is done is no test of a person's liability in trespass. Id.

That plaintiff kept a bawdy-house is no defense in trespass for entering a dwelling-house, and taking and carrying away the goods of the occupant. Love v. Moynahan, 63 D. 306.

35. Instructions to the jury. — Defendant pleaded, in an action of trespass de bonis, that he took the property under a writ of attachment out of a federal court, and as United States marshal; and that he took it as the property of another party, defendants in the writ. Such taking being admitted by the pleadings, it is erroneous to charge the jury that the right of property in the goods cannot be tried in the state court, and that there must be a verdict for defendant. Buck v. Colbath, 82 D. 91.

36. Damages recoverable. — In trespass for taking a chattel the plaintiff may recover both the value of the property and damages for the violence used. Hue v. Long, 18 D. 719.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The owner of property sold under illegal process, purchasing the same at such sale, either personally or by his agent, can recover only the amount of his bid and interest thereon in trespass for the unlawful taking. Baker v. Freeman, 24 D. 117.

The measure of damages in trespass or trover by a termor against his reversioner is the actual loss sustained by the termor. Harker v. Dement, 52 D. 670.

The measure of damages in trespass de bonis, or trover by a termor against a stranger is the full value of the property. Ib.

When an invasion of right is established, the law gives nominal damages, although no actual damage be shown. But damages will not be given for a trespass to personal property when no unlawful intent or disturbance of a right of possession is shown, and when not only all probable but all possible damage is expressly disproved. Paul v. Slason, 64 D. 75.

In trespass, plaintiff is entitled to damages for all injury done, and the value of goods taken is not the measure of damages. In such case, it is proper that every circumstance going to show aggravation, as well as the actual injury done, should be taken into consideration. Alfred v. Bray, 97 D. 283.

In trespass vi et armis, the damages are not to be limited to the value of the property destroyed, and the interest thereon, and vindictive damages for the force, but the jury may give special damages for circumstances of aggravation attending the act. Churchill v. Watson, 5 D. 130.

An offer of compromise may be given in evidence in mitigation of the damages. Woolley v. Carter, 11 D. 520.

The jury cannot deduct from the amount given in trespass money in the plaintiff's hands belonging to defendant. Hobart v. Haggel, 28 D. 159.

37. Judgment, and how enforced. — A judgment for the plaintiff, in trespass for carrying away goods, vests the property in the goods in the defendant. And a verdict cannot be rendered assessing damages for the taking, and ordering the goods to be returned to the plaintiff. Woolley v. Carter, 11 D. 520.

Damages for a separate trespass of one of two defendants cannot be included in a joint judgment against both. Symonds v. Hall, 59 D. 53.

3. For Trespass upon the Person.

38. When trespass is the proper form of action. — The wrongs for which trespass on the case lies may be either unlawful acts, or lawful acts done under circumstances which render them wrongful, any acts done or omitted contrary to the general obligation of the law, or the particular rights and duties of the parties. Harrison v. Berkley, 47 D. 578.

Trespass vi et armis will lie for an unintentional injury caused by the glancing of a pistol-ball shot at a mark. Welch v. Durand, 4 R. 55.

The plaintiff, a blind girl, taught music in the defendant's family one day every week, and passed the night in his house, lodging in a room assigned her by the defendant and his wife. One night at midnight the defendant came stealthily into her room, sat upon her bed, leaned over her, and solicited her to sexual intercourse, which she refused. Held, a trespass and an assault; that exemplary damages were proper; and that the question whether these acts would have injured a person of ordinary nerve and courage was immaterial. Newell v. Whitcher, 38 R. 703.

39. Parties. — Where a physician takes an unprofessional, unmarried man with him to attend a case of confinement, and no real necessity exists for the latter's assistance or presence, both are liable in damages to the woman, although she supposed at the time that the intruder was a medical man, and therefore submitted without objection to his presence. De May v. Roberts, 41 R. 154.

B seized A by the arm, swung him around, and let him go, thereby throwing him violently against C, who instantly pushed him away and against a hook which injured him. Held, that A could maintain an action of trespass vi et armis against B. Ricker v. Freeman, 9 R. 267.

Three persons at midnight demanded admittance to a restaurant which was closed for the night, but had a light burning within. One of them went around to a side door, entered, and told the keeper that one of the others wanted to come in. The others being at the front door, one said to the other, "fire a salute." The one addressed fired a pistol, and the ball went through the door, and severely wounded the keeper. There was an ordinance prohibiting the discharge of fire-arms in the street. Held, that the person firing and the one advising the firing were responsible. Daingerfield v. Thompson, 36 R. 783.

40. Pleading. — Molliter manus imposit in a plea is no justification of a beating and wounding. French v. Martin, 57 D. 294.

41. Defenses, generally. — Trespass will not lie where the injury is the result of an involuntary act, and no blame attaches to the defendant. Vincent v. Stinehour, 29 D. 145.

The plea of son assault demeene is not sustained where it appears that the defendant's assault was disproportionate to the assault made on him. Scribner v. Beach, 47 D. 265.

A wounding, claimed to be in defense of one's property, is not justified unless it is shown that the party wounded had first forcibly attempted to take the property. Ib.

In an action for excessive personal injuries inflicted by defendant in resisting the attempt of the plaintiff to dig ore from the defendant's mine, it is competent to prove that angry feelings had arisen between the parties in regard to their respective right to the possession of the ore bank previous to the beating, in order to show that the plaintiff would naturally expect and come prepared to meet a vigorous resistance, if he was determined to proceed to assert his right to the possession by force, and this might serve to palliate or excuse the conduct of the defendant. Riddle v. Brown, 56 D. 202.

Where the trespass was committed in an affray, the defendant may show, in mitigation of damages, that the plaintiff, during several years before the affray, had frequently tried to provoke a quarrel with him; had on various occasions threatened to take his life; that some of these threats were made to defendant himself; and that all of them had been brought to his knowledge before the affray. Fairbanks v. Witter, 86 D. 765.

The proprietor of a place of business may use sufficient force to remove from the premises a person who, having no right to remain, refuses to depart after being requested to do so; and he does not incur liability for trespass in so doing; but if in asserting his rights the proprietor uses more force than is necessary to eject the intruder, or inflicts unnecessary injury, he then becomes a trespasser and liable as such. Woodman v. Howell, 92 D. 221.

The public have only an easement in a highway to pass and repass along the same, and when one stops in the road and uses loud and obscene language, he becomes a trespasser, and the owner of the land has the right to abate the nuisance which he is creating; and in case the trespasser is armed with a pistol and acting in a belligerent manner, the principle of molliter manus does not apply. State v. Davis, 30 R. 86.

The defendant, armed and sitting in the road, saw the plaintiff coming toward him with a gun on his shoulder, and thereupon concealed himself and shot the plaintiff, although the latter made no hostile demonstrations and the defendant could easily have got away. The defendant knew that the plaintiff twenty days before had threatened to take his life, but there had been no attempt to carry out such threats. Held, 1. That the threats did not justify the defendant's action; 2. That evidence of the violent and dangerous character of the plaintiff, and of the peaceable character of the defendant, was incompetent. Cummins v. Crawford, 30 R. 558.

42. Process as a defense. — Where the defendant has sufficient real property to satisfy a judgment recovered against him, trespass will lie against the judgment creditor who sues out a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, under which the debtor is imprisoned, although such writ will be a justification to the officer executing it. Allison v. Rheam, 8 D. 644.

A plea defending an alleged trespass on the ground of an application for issuance of a ca. sa. is bad, when it omits to allege the due issuance of the ca. sa., and the arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff by virtue thereof. McDonald v. Willie, 54 D. 423.

43. Instructions. — Whether a beating administered in repelling a trespass upon defendants was excessive and beyond what was necessary for the defense and maintenance of their possession is a matter purely for the jury to determine under all the facts and circumstances of the case. Riddle v. Brown, 56 D. 202.

44. Amount of recovery. — It is the right and duty of the jury, in assessing damages in trespass for an assault, to consider what effect the finding of trivial damages would have to encourage a disregard of the laws and disturbances of the public peace, and it is not error for the court to so instruct them. Beach v. Hancock, 59 D. 373.

An action of trespass vi et armis will lie for an unintentional injury caused by the glancing of a pistol-ball shot at a mark, and if gross negligence and culpable carelessness is proved, additional damages, as expenses of the litigation, will be allowed. Welch v. Durand, 4 R. 55.

4. Other Actions of Trespass.

45. When trespass to try title will lie. — Trespass to try title may be maintained, notwithstanding the pendency of chancery proceedings to sell the land for the purchase-money. Chapman v. Glassell, 48 D. 41.

The plaintiff must have a legal title at the commencement of an action to try title. Bank of South Carolina v. S. C. M. Co., 49 D. 640.

A sheriff's deed, dated after the commencement of the action, will not support trespass to try title to land purchased by plaintiff at judicial sale prior to the proceeding. Id.

To collaterally attack title, such errors as would be good upon appeal or writ of error would not be sufficient. Con v. Davis, 52 D. 199.

The law affords the same protection to an equitable as to a legal title, in an action of trespass to try title. Easterling v. Blythe, 56 D. 45.

A statute directing that trespass to try title shall be tried "conformably to the principles of trial by ejectment" was not intended to introduce all the incidents and consequences attached to that form of action at the common law; its object was simply to furnish a mode of procedure to ascertain in whom the right of property resides. Id.

Trespass to try title may be sustained by the cutting of a fallen tree the roots of which still remain in the soil. Spigener v. Cooner, 84 D. 755.

46. Pleading and evidence. — In trespass to try title, a recovery will be defeated by showing a title in a third person fully matured under the statute of limitations. Fayouez v. Prather, 9 D. 691.

A paper title need not be shown as against a mere possessor without title, where the claimant and those from whom he derives title have a prior possession and have made valuable improvements. Cox v. Davis, 52 D. 199.

Defendant is not estopped to show a better title than common origin, from which both trace title, and under which the defendant obtained possession, in trespass to try title, but it is not sufficient merely to raise a doubt as to which is the paramount title. Martin v. Ranlett, 57 D. 770.

Proof, in trespass to try title, of a claim of title from a common source by both parties is sufficient to enable the plaintiff to avoid a nonsuit, as where it is shown that both claim under execution sales against the same party. Ib.

Defendant supplying proof of common origin of title claimed by both parties, if the plaintiff fails to do so, will prevent a nonsuit in the appellate court although a nonsuit was erroneously refused in the first instance in the court below. Ib.

Special matters of defense may be specially pleaded in trespass to try title. Hunt v. Turner, 60 D. 167.

Defendant has a right to fortify his title and cure defects therein by any releases or conveyances which he can obtain at any time before trial of an action of trespass to try title. Walker v. Winerson, 73 D. 207.

Defendant in trespass to try title, if he can have in that action equitable right, as against plaintiff, to avoid a sheriff's deed for irregularities in the sale, cannot have this relief under plea of not guilty, but must plead specially, bringing in all necessary parties. Ayres v. Duprey, 86 D. 657.

A plea of not guilty in trespass to try title admits only such defenses as are applicable to that action. Ib.

47. Damages — Improvements. — In trespass to try title, damages may be recovered for the retention of the premises. Avent v. Read, 27 D. 663.

In trespass for title, the defendant may not be allowed for improvements made after suit, although with the intention of removal, and after sequestration and replevy. Henderson v. Owenby, 42 R. 691.

48. Trespass to recover possession may be maintained on a contract between the owner of the fee and the plaintiff, by which the plaintiff was to take possession, make certain improvement within a given time, and then receive title in fee. Nor can a stranger resist a recovery on the ground that the plaintiff has not performed the conditions of the contract. White v. Saint Guirons, 12 D. 56.

A right of entry and possession are alone sufficient to sustain trespass. It is not necessary to prove actual possession or ouster, and the plaintiff may recover, though the defendant be in possession of less than is declared for. Ib.

Damages for meane profits may be recovered in trespass, as well as the possession. Ib.

5. The Criminal Prosecution.

49. What constitutes a criminal trespass. — A party who is on a public or private highway, and is violent in his manner and threatening in his language to the party over whose land the highway passes, is guilty of forcible trespass. State v. Buckner, 98 D. 83.

One who pursues with dogs and kills a hog trespassing on his premises, and injuring a growing crop, is guilty of criminal trespass. Thompson v. State, 42 R. 101.

A mere trespass on private property, without disturbance of the peace, is not an indictable offense. State v. Wheeler, 23 D. 212.

Entry by the owner of land, and erection of a building, against the objection of a tenant at sufferance in possession, does not constitute an indictable trespass at common law. State v. Ross, 69 D. 751.

Indictable trespass is that committed manu forti, in a manner amounting to a breach of the peace, or which would necessarily lead to a breach of the peace, if the party in possession were not overawed by the force displayed, and induced to surrender possession because resistance would be useless. Ib.

Whether one having a right of entry may use force if necessary to exert his right is an unsettled question, according to common law; but the authorities may be reconciled on this distinction. One having a right of entry may use force, provided it does not amount to a breach of the peace; but one not having such right is guilty of indictable trespass if he enter with a strong hand, under circumstances calculated to excite terror, although the force used does not amount to a breach of the peace. Ib.

50. Indictment. — An indictment in forcible trespass, which charges that defendant entered the premises with a strong hand, the prosecutor being then and there present, is sufficient. State v. Buckner, 98 D. 83.

The words "willfully, maliciously," etc., used in an indictment to describe the manner in which an act was done, cannot have the effect of making such act a public offense. State v. Wheeler, 23 D. 212.

I. MODE OF TRIAL; WHETHER BY JURY OR BY COURT.

1. Right of trial by jury.*—An amendment to the United States constitution concerning jury trial does not apply to suits in state courts. Lee v. Tillotson, 35 D. 624; Joseph v. Bidwell, 26 R. 102.

Constitutional provisions preserving right of trial by jury apply more particularly to criminal cases. Flint River Steamboat Co. v. Foster, 48 D. 248.

A provision that a trial by jury "as heretofore used shall remain inviolate," in the Georgia constitution, applies to that right as it existed in 1798, and does not require a jury trial in all cases. Id.

All issues of fact must be tried by a jury, if a party desires to have them so tried; and the court should grant him the privilege of such a trial, although the statute which gives him the remedy he is pursuing may be silent on the subject. Scott v. Nichols, 61 D. 503.

2. Constitutionality of statutes restricting the right.—A statute providing that upon the affirmation of a judgment in the court of appeals, judgment shall be given by that court against a surety on a supersedeas bond, is unconstitutional, in that it deprives the surety of a right of trial by jury in a case where it existed before the adoption of the constitution. Gullion v. Bowhore, 2 D. 708.

A trial by jury in common-law causes is a constitutional right, and a law that any such causes shall be tried "agreeably to the course of a court of chancery" is obnoxious to this right, and void. North Penn. Coal Co. v. Snowden, 82 D. 530; Bank of the State v. Cooper, 24 D. 517.

A statute which authorizes the rendition of a judgment without a jury contravenes the provision of the constitution of Florida that "the right of trial by jury shall forever remain inviolate," and is therefore void. Flint River Steamboat Co. v. Roberts, 48 D. 178.

The statute of January 4, 1847, authorizing a court to render judgment without a jury, but upon the affidavit of the plaintiff alone, and without notice to the defendant, is unconstitutional, null, and void. Id.

The act authorizing a judgment without the intervention of a jury is not necessarily unconstitutional, especially if it ultimately guarantees that right, as in the Georgia steamboat lien law of 1841. Id.

* How far legislature may regulate right of trial by jury, see note, 58 D. 791-793.

Power of legislature to dispense with trial by jury, see note, 45 D. 125-124.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A statute hampering the right of trial by jury with restrictions which do not amount to a denial of that right, directly or indirectly, is not unconstitutional, as in the case of a statute requiring defendants in certain classes of cases to pay what they admit to be due, and to give security, etc., before obtaining a jury trial. Id.

A statute providing that in civil actions no party shall be entitled to a trial by jury, unless he files within a prescribed time a notice that he desires such trial, is constitutional. Foster v. Morse, 42 R. 438.

A statute requiring the party demanding a jury to pay the jury fee, and tax the same in his costs, if he prevail, is constitutional. Randall v. Kehler, 11 R. 169.

3. Waiver of trial by jury.—A jury trial may be waived, being a mere constitutional privilege. Flint River Steamboat Co. v. Foster, 43 D. 248.

An agreement that a pending action shall abide result in another case, entered on the docket, binds the parties to it; and the defendant, by entering into such an agreement, waives his right to a trial by jury to determine the damages. Cummings v. Smith, 79 D. 629.

4. When trial by the court without a jury is proper.—Where a jury has been waived, the judge is substituted to the same attributes that would have been vested in a jury. Callahan v. Patterson, 51 D. 712.

A jury is unnecessary in actions founded on bills obligatory. Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694; or in a case of quo warranto. State v. Lupton, 27 R. 253; or in proceedings under a public drainage act. Anderson v. Caldwell, 46 R. 613.

5. Separate trials.—Defendants who submit to be tried jointly without objection thereby waive their right to separate trials. Sere v. Armitage, 13 D. 311.

Separate trials may be allowed, in the discretion of the court, when there are several defendants in ejectment and the testimony of one is material for his co-defendant. Young v. Adams, 58 D. 654.

II. PLACE OF TRIAL, AND HOW CHANGED.

6. Grounds for change of venue, generally.—In an action for a libel, the court will not, upon the common affidavit, change the venue from the county in which the libel was circulated to that in which it was printed and first published. Clinton v. Croswell, 2 D. 235.

7. —disqualification of judge.—When an application for a change of venue is made on the ground that the judge is interested, and the only proof is, that he was interested in the property in dispute a year before suit was brought, and the motion is overruled, the ruling will be sustained on appeal, under the presumption that the judge acted on his own knowledge that at the time suit was instituted he had no interest. Table Mountain G. & S. M. Co. v. Waller's etc. Co., 97 D. 526.

8. Who may move.—Change of venue can be applied for only by a party to the record, under the Illinois statute, and it is not error to deny an application for a change of venue in an action of ejectment made by a third person claiming to be a trustee of the real owner, of whom the defendant on the record is only a tenant. Crowell v. Maughs, 43 D. 62.

The court may, in the exercise of sound legal discretion, grant or refuse a change of venue, upon the application and affidavit made by a person not a party to the record. Shattuck v. Myers, 74 D. 236.

Corporations are entitled to a change of venue equally with individuals. Commercial Ins. Co. v. Mehlman, 95 D. 543.

Any recognized officer of a corporation may make the requisite affidavit upon an application by the corporation for a change of venue, he being regarded as a party to the record pro hac vice. Id.

9. The motion papers.—An application for a change of venue must generally be supported by the affidavit of the party in person; and the affidavit of his attorney is not sufficient basis for the change. But this rule is not applicable in suits by or against corporations. Shattuck v. Myers, 74 D. 236.

An affidavit for a change of venue stating merely the belief of affiant that the judge is disqualified to try the cause on the ground of interest, but without stating any of the facts upon which such belief is founded, or any person from whom he may have learned any facts as to the matter, is too vague and uncertain. Table Mountain G. & S. M. Co. v. Waller's etc. Co., 97 D. 526.

10. Hearing and determining the motion.—In civil actions, an application for a change of venue should be granted when properly presented, the granting or withholding thereof not being within the discretion of the court. Shattuck v. Myers, 74 D. 236.

11. What will effect the change.—On a change of venue, the statute, not in express terms, but by necessary implication, requires the clerk to transmit the transcript over his official certificate and seal. Stringer v. Jacobs, 50 D. 221.

An order for a change of venue divests the court in which the suit is instituted of its jurisdiction over the cause, and in contemplation of law operates to transfer the same to the court to which the change is taken; the latter court, though vested with the jurisdiction, cannot exercise it so as to adjudicate upon the rights of the parties litigant, until such a transcript of the record

* See note on change of venue, 74 D. 241-245.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

and proceedings is filed as is required by the statute. Ib.

On a change of venue, the statute requires a full transcript of the record and proceedings in the cause, with all the original papers filed therein and composing a part of the record; it is not absolutely essential that a copy of the entire record and proceedings, or that every original paper filed in the cause, should be transmitted, but if enough is transmitted to enable the court to determine what is in controversy, and to bring its dormant power into active exercise, numerous irregularities may be waived without impairing the validity of the judgment. Ib.

The transcript on a change of venue is insufficient where the clerk transmitted only a copy of the petition, notice, and order for the change of venue, and totally failed to send up any part of the record and proceedings in the cause. Ib.

12. Consequences of the change. — Where a change of venue has been improperly ordered, the court to which the transfer was made may direct it to be retransferred to the court where it belongs. Rogers v. Watrous, 58 D. 100.

III. BRINGING ON THE TRIAL; POSTPONEMENT.

13. Non-attendance of witnesses. — A continuance for conscience' sake will not be granted because a Jew has scruples in regard to appearing in court as a witness on Saturday. Simon v. Gratz, 23 D. 33.

A motion to suspend a trial to enable defendant to subpoena a witness whom he failed to serve properly is addressed to the discretion of the judge, and his decision thereon is not one to which an exception can be properly taken. If such an exception be taken, the judge should strike it out before he affixes his seal. Rapelye v. Prince, 40 D. 267.

A continuance will not be granted for the absence of a material witness where a party has omitted to employ the means provided by law, when practicable, to enforce his attendance. Hensley v. Lytle, 55 D. 741.

A failure to subpoena a witness is fatal to an application for continuance, in general, for his absence. Ib.

Due diligence to obtain the testimony of a witness, to warrant a continuance for his absence, is not shown by an affidavit admitting that he had not been subpoenaed, but stating that he lived so near that he could be called at any time, and was willing and determined to attend the trial, but had left the state with the intention of returning in time for the trial, and had been unavoidably detained abroad. Ib.

14. Alteration or amendment of pleading. — Where two replications are filed to the same plea, and upon the plaintiff refusing to elect upon which he will rely, the court orders one of them rejected, the defendant is not entitled to a continuance on the ground that plaintiff has made a substantial amendment to his pleadings. Whitler v. Hicks, 33 D. 454.

An amendment of a declaration, made during the trial, which does not affect the merits or prejudice the defendant, is no ground for a continuance. McKinney v. Harter, 43 D. 96.

An application for a continuance on the ground of an amendment to the complaint substituting new plaintiffs must be supported by affidavit showing how the defendant is prejudiced by the amendment. Hubler v. Pullen, 68 D. 620.

15. Continuance to permit execution and return of commission to take testimony. — A refusal to continue for an answer to interrogatories is not error, where they have been filed with a pleading and so framed as to elicit evidence to sustain certain paragraphs of such pleading, if a demurrer to those paragraphs has been sustained, and responsive answers to the questions cannot be properly admitted as evidence under other issues raised by the pleading. If, however, the paragraphs demurred to be sufficient, the demurrer ought to be overruled as to them, and the cause continued, if necessary, to obtain an answer to the interrogatories. Swift v. Ellsworth, 71 D. 316.

A continuance of a cause for a failure to obtain a deposition of an absent witness will no be justified on a mere showing that letters were written and inquiries made concerning his whereabouts, without success, in time to have the deposition at the trial. Stevenson v. Sherwood, 74 D. 140.

16. The motion, generally. — How far granting it is discretionary. — Applications for continuances are addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court, and if not expressly provided for, will be granted or refused, as the ends of justice may require. Wilkowski v. Halle, 95 D. 374; and a second affidavit for a continuance, after the first has been overruled, is not good if it fails to show any reasonable excuse for the failure to embrace all the reasons for the continuance in the first application. Shattuck v. Myers, 74 D. 236.

17. Requisites of moving affidavits. — The continuance of a cause will not be granted unless the party seeking it makes oath that due diligence has been used. Thompson v. Miss. Marine and F. Ins. Co., 22 D. 129.

18. Hearing the motion. — A miscontinuance is cured by the statute of jeofails. Miller v. Plumb, 16 D. 456.

19. Granting the motion on terms. — A court may, as terms for granting a continuance, require the applicant to consent to the reading of an informal deposition. Hamilton v. Cooper, 12 D. 588.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

20. Avoiding continuance by admissions.—The admission that an absent witness, if present, would swear to the facts expected to be proved by them, is not sufficient to defeat a motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses; the admission must be of the facts themselves. Smith v. Creason, 30 D. 688.

IV. IMPANELING THE JURY; CHALLENGES.

21. Qualifications of jurors.*—Where a juror was a freeholder when his name was put into the town jury-box, but was not a freeholder at the time of the trial, it was held that this was not a cause for setting aside the verdict, but exception should have been taken by challenge. Orcutt v. Carpenter, 4 D. 722.

A juror may be excluded on the ground that he does not adequately understand English, at the discretion of the trial judge. Sutton v. Fox, 42 R. 744.

The objection that a juror was not of proper age comes too late after verdict. Johns v. Hodges, 45 R. 722.

22. Hearing excuses.—The charter of the defendant city provided that in an action to which the city is a party no person shall be deemed an incompetent juror by reason of his being an inhabitant of the city. In impaneling a jury in this action, the plaintiff, against the defendant's objection, excused twelve jurors drawn, on the ground that they were inhabitants and tax-payers of the city, and they were set aside. A jury was obtained, and judgment went against the city. Held, that the ruling was a fatal error. Hildreth v. City of Troy, 54 R. 686.

23. Talesmen.—On a tales de circumstantibus, only those actually present in court can be taken. Simon v. Graetz, 23 D. 33.

24. Challenge to the array.—A challenge to the array of the panel will not be allowed for the reason that the clerk who issued the warrants to the constables to summon the jury is a party to the action. Hart v. Tallmadge, 2 D. 105.

If the sheriff who returns the jury is a brother of one of the litigants, this is a good cause of challenge to the array. Munshower v. Patton, 13 D. 678.

25. Challenge for cause, generally.†—Rejecting of one as a juror who has been subpoenaed to impeach the character of an important witness in the cause is not error. Chess v. Chess, 21 D. 350.

It is a good cause of challenge to a juror that the same facts which warrant a verdict in favor of the plaintiff will support an action under the trustee statute in favor of the juror and against the defendant, on a judgment previously recovered against the plaintiff and assigned to the juror. Davis v. Allen, 22 D. 386.

Where jurors who have tried one case are brought to try another in which the issues and evidence are the same, the law presumes them to be under a disqualifying bias, and an objection to their competency should be sustained. Garthwaite v. Tatum, 76 D. 402.

26. — for opinion of juror.*—Impaneling a juror on a former trial, if no verdict or other expression of opinion is given, is not a sufficient ground for challenge. Atkinson v. Allen, 36 D. 361.

A juror having formed a decided opinion, which is positive, and not hypothetical, upon the merits of the case, either from personal knowledge, from statements of witnesses, or of parties, or from rumor, which opinion will probably prevent him from giving an impartial verdict, is subject to challenge for cause. Smith v. Barnes, 36 D. 515.

A light, transient, or hypothetical opinion formed by a juror, which may be changed, and which does not show a conviction of the mind and a fixed conclusion upon the case, is not a good ground of challenge; and a full examination may be allowed if necessary to ascertain the state of the juror's mind. Ib.

An opinion formed by a juror from a rumor as to which party in the case ought to succeed, where he states on his examination that he still retains that opinion if what he has heard is true, but is not asked as to whether or not he believes it to be true, is not a good ground of challenge. Ib.

A person who has expressed an opinion that one undergoing imprisonment for a criminal offense has been sufficiently punished, and who has signed a petition for his pardon, is not a competent juror upon the trial of a civil action against the prisoner founded upon the same charge. Asbury Life Ins. Co. v. Warren, 22 R. 590.

27. Challenge to the favor.—It is a good cause of challenge to the favor that a juror has, before the trial, taken the depositions of the principal witnesses of one of the parties as a magistrate. Rollins v. Ames, 9 D. 79.

But where the objection is made after verdict, a new trial will not be granted for this cause, unless the party and his counsel make affidavit that they did not know of this ground of challenge at the trial. Ib.

A juror who would be incompetent by relationship to a party is equally incompetent if he sustains the same relationship to counsel whose fees depend upon the recovery. Melson v. Dickson, 36 R. 128.

* See monographic note on opinions of jurors as ground for challenge, 36 D. 521-524.

See note on opinions formed from rumor and newspaper accounts, 36 D. 529, 530.

† English language, inability to understand, as ground for challenge to juror, see note, 35 R. 728-731.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

28. Peremptory challenges. — Where when it came plaintiff's turn to exercise his right of peremptory challenge he answers that he has none to make, and the defendant then challenges a juror, and another is called to fill his place, plaintiff may then peremptorily challenge a juror who was on the panel at the time of his waiver; and his neglect to challenge only counts one upon the number of challenges allowed him. Fountain v. West, 92 D. 406.

29. Time to interpose challenges. — It is too late after verdict in a civil case to object to the jury on the ground that they have not been regularly summoned on the venire, or as talesman from the by-standers, or because the venire facias had not been regularly drawn from the box. Shotwell v. Hamblin, 55 D. 83.

30. Waiver for challenges. — Where, at the trial of an action against an insurance company, it appeared that the sheriff, who had returned a talesman to serve on the jury, was a stockholder in such company, and this was known to plaintiff's counsel soon after the trial began, but no objection was made until some time after, this was held to amount to a waiver of any exception to the competency of such juror. Orrok v. Com. Ins. Co., 32 D. 271.

Where a bank is plaintiff, the fact that a juror is the father of a director thereof is a legal ground of principal challenge, but objection to him may be waived by the opposing party, and is waived by his not making, at the proper time, even the ordinary inquiries respecting the qualifications of the juror. Quinebaug Bank v. Leavens, 50 D. 272.

31. The proper number of jurors. — That a jury consisted of thirteen persons, in assumpsit, is no ground of error. Tilman v. Ailles, 43 D. 520.

32. Struck juries. — The court is not required to be active in assigning a struck jury, and is not bound to grant one on demand of the parties, unless such demand be made before the organization of the jury is commenced. McArthur v. Currie's Adm'r, 70 D. 529.

V. CONDUCTING THE TRIAL.

1. In General.

33. Qualifications and powers of the judge. — The rules of court may, in a proper case, be suspended by the judge presiding at a trial, in the exercise of his discretion. Eastman v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 82 D. 201.

In all motions arising during the progress of a trial, the court may act on personal knowledge in regard to things which in their nature are better known by it than they could be by others. Table Mountain G. & S. M. Co. v. Waller's etc. Co., 97 D. 526.

34. What questions are before the court. — Questions in no wise connected with the issue at trial cannot be tried. Sidenesparke v. Sidenesparke, 83 D. 527.

35. Election between counts. — The refusal of a judge to require the plaintiff to elect on which of two counts in slander, for the same cause of action, he will proceed on the trial, is not a ground of exception. Sheffill v. Van Deusen, 77 D. 377.

36. Motion to amend. — Under an act allowing an amendment "on" the trial, plaintiff may amend his declaration during the argument. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Findlay, 37 D. 430.

A motion to amend after defendant's motion for nonsuit does not come too late. A motion to amend is always in time when it immediately follows the objection to the sufficiency of the complaint or answer. Valencia v. Couch, 91 D. 589.

37. The right to open and close, generally. — The affirmative rests on the plaintiff, in contemplation of the law. Benham v. Rowe, 56 D. 342. And the party holding the affirmative has the right to open and close the argument to the jury. The strict rule on this subject is for the party holding the affirmative to open his case, stating and maintaining his several points by reference to such evidence as tends to sustain them, together with the points of law and a reference to the authorities; then for the other side to answer, and illustrate and establish his defense, combating the positions assumed by his adversary, and assuming others of his own; and afterward for the party holding the affirmative simply to reply to what has been said on the other side, confining himself strictly in his reply to what has been urged by his opponent. But this rule is not always observed in practice, and a departure from it can hardly be assigned for error. Matters of this kind are generally under the control of the judge, and rest mainly in his sound discretion, and unless it is clear that he has abused that discretion, the fact that he may have made a mistake affords no ground for reversing the judgment. Marshall v. Am. Exp. Co., 73 D. 381.

In an action for libel, the plaintiff holds the affirmative, although defendant, in his answer, admits signing the alleged libelous publication, but denies all malice, amount of damage, and intentional publication. Fountain v. West, 92 D. 406.

Where plaintiff files an admission and avoidance of facts pleaded by defendant, or where the state of the pleadings and admissions is such that he is not entitled to recover without the introduction of evidence, the burden of proof is deemed to be upon the plaintiff, and he will be entitled to open and close the trial. Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 96 D. 83.

38. When defendant may open and close. — The defendant is entitled to the opening and closing before the jury on a trial of a writ of right upon the mise joined on the mere right. Overton v. Davison, 42 D. 544.

Where the answer of defendant, in an action upon a policy of fire insurance, admits the loss, and sets up matter in avoidance of plaintiff's right to recover, the burden of proof is upon defendant, with the consequent right of opening and closing at the trial. Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 96 D. 83.

39. The counsel's address to the jury, generally. — Counsel should not be permitted to read law to the jury in civil cases. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to what the law applicable to the case is, and the duty of the jury to receive the law as it is given, and apply it to the facts of the case. Tuller v. Tulbot, 76 D. 695; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 83 D. 756.

In argument to the jury counsel cannot read and comment on matter not in evidence, irrelevant and prejudicial. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Cheever, 38 R. 573.

The plaintiff's counsel may not comment to the jury upon the discrepancy between the original and the amended answer, and argue therefrom that the defense is fictitious. Taft v. Fiske, 54 R. 459.

40. Abuses of the right of argument. — Irrelevant evidence read to the jury on the promise of counsel that he will follow it up so as to make it relevant, must not, when not so followed up, be argued upon by counsel, nor given to the jury for consideration. Stewart v. Huntingdon Bank, 14 D. 628.

An argument of counsel may be arrested by the court where there is no evidence to support the argument. Doster v. Brown, 71 D. 153.

Where counsel having the last argument persist, against objection, in arguing to the jury upon facts pertinent to the issue, but not in evidence, or in appealing to prejudices foreign to the case in evidence, a new trial may be granted therefor. Brown v. Swineford, 28 R. 582.

Upon the trial of an action at nisi prius, the judge suffered counsel in opening the case to read, against objection, papers not admissible in evidence, and which were not afterward offered in evidence. Held, 1. That this was such an abuse of discretion as to require the granting of a new trial; 2. That the error was not cured by a subsequent instruction to the jury to disregard such papers. Scripps v. Reilly, 24 R. 575.

It is not within the privilege of counsel in argument to a jury to use language calculated to humiliate and degrade the opposite party in the eyes of the jury and by-standers, particularly when he has not been impeached; and where, on the trial, a witness for plaintiff had been impeached by the testimony of defendant, and plaintiff's counsel said, in addressing the jury, "that no man who lived in defendant's neighborhood could have anything but a bad character; that defendant polluted everything near him or that he touched; that he was like the upas trees, shedding pestilence and corruption all around," — held, that the defendant was entitled to a new trial. Coble v. Coble, 28 R. 338.

On the trial of an action against B., the president of a corporation, for supplies furnished the company, his attorney offered evidence that the secretary of the company had embezzled its funds and appropriated its property. This was excluded. In argument to the jury he treated the matter as proved, and commented on it. Held, error for which a new trial must be granted. Cleveland Paper Co. v. Banks, 48 R. 334.

2. Putting in the Evidence.

41. General rules as to admissibility of evidence. — To sustain an objection to evidence merely on the ground of irrelevancy, it should appear to be so beyond all doubt, for if its competency be doubtful, it should be admitted, leaving its weight to be determined by the jury. Shannon v. Kinney, 10 D. 705.

Defendant's evidence may entitle plaintiff to judgment when his own does not. Jackson v. Town, 15 D. 405.

If, at the taking of a deposition, the adverse party interrogates a witness touching his interest in the suit, this is an election of the mode of proof, and none other can be resorted to at the trial. King v. Upton, 16 D. 268.

Where, in assumpsit by J., a subcontractor, against W., a contractor for carrying the United States mail, to recover J.'s proportion of the compensation received for the services rendered, a letter of the postmaster-general is read in evidence by the defendant, without objection, to prove defaults committed by the plaintiff in the execution of that part of the contract which was underlet to him, a certificate of the postmaster-general, showing the times and places of the defaults in the contract is inadmissible on plaintiff's behalf against defendant's objection. Wilkinson v. Jett, 30 D. 493.

The court cannot reject proof of a fact as immaterial, if the question as to whether it is immaterial or not depends upon proof of another fact. The proper course in such a case is to submit the proof of both facts to the jury. Day v. Sharp, 34 D. 509.

The improper admission of a record copy of an instrument, the original of which is in the possession of the party offering it, is cured by the subsequent production of the original. Hart v. Gregg, 36 D. 166.

Evidence not read in the hearing of the jury is not evidence properly before them. The opposite party has the right to insist that such portions of books and papers as are relied on must be read to the jury. Duke v. C. N. Co., 44 D. 472.

Rules of evidence where several actions are tried together are the same as if they were tried separately, all competent evidence in each action being admissible, though not competent in all the actions. Kimball v. Thompson, 50 D. 799.

It is not error to admit evidence which may be made competent by the introduction of subsequent testimony. Hamilton v. Summers, 54 D. 509.

Evidence admissible against one only of two parties sued cannot be excluded by the other, but if he desires it limited, he must ask an instruction to be given to the jury relieving him from its effects. Goodman v. Walker, 68 D. 134.

Error in introducing secondary evidence is corrected and overcome by the subsequent introduction of primary evidence to the same point. Lockridge v. Baldwin, 70 D. 385.

Plaintiff may avail himself of proof supplied by defendant, to establish a given fact essential to his case, but which he omitted to prove before closing his evidence. Deahler v. Beers, 83 D. 274.

The trial court may exercise reasonable discretion in applying or relaxing rules for introduction of testimony, according to circumstances apparent only to the court itself, and a strict uniformity, at all times, is not to be expected. Runyan v. Price, 86 D. 459.

Defendant who has not been called upon to state whether he expected to prove all the facts essential to his defense should not be prevented from testifying because his offer does not embrace every fact necessary to establish it. Tyler v. Green, 87 D. 130.

The fact that illegal testimony has been permitted to go to the jury without objection is not a ground for allowing other testimony, inadmissible under the rules of evidence, to be given when objection thereto is made. Higgins v. Carlton, 92 D. 666; Wilkinson v. Jett, 30 D. 493.

Testimony ruled out by the court for one purpose, but admitted for another, can only be considered by the jury for the purpose for which it was received. Macdougall v. Maguire, 95 D. 98.

The admission of improper evidence, clearly calculated to arouse the sympathy of the jury and influence the verdict, is not cured by striking it out. Gulf etc. Ry Co. v. Levy, 46 R. 269.

42. Offers of proof, and how made.—Evidence offered at an improper time, though not incompetent in itself, may be rejected, and it will not be error. Irish v. Smith, 11 D. 648.

Where the court does not clearly see that a fact is entirely foreign to the issue, and cannot be connected with it by evidence of other facts, it is the practice to admit proof of it upon the assurance of the counsel offering it that it will turn out to be pertinent and material. Davis v. Calvert, 25 D. 282.

A statement by counsel of what they expect to prove, in reply to a statement on the other side, is not a sufficient foundation for the introduction of adverse evidence otherwise inadmissible. Id.

An offer of evidence should specify the purpose for which it is offered. Carabaden v. Poorman, 36 D. 145.

A party offering evidence apparently unconnected with the issue, if it is opposed, should show its connection with other facts, either in evidence or intended to be given; otherwise the court may lawfully reject it. Orenshaw v. Davenport, 41 D. 56.

Testimony inadmissible for the purpose for which it is offered must be rejected by the court, whether it be inadmissible for the reason assigned or not. Budd v. Brooke, 43 D. 321.

Illegal testimony should be rejected when offered, and not admitted, subject to subsequent exclusion, when the court charges the jury. McCurry v. Hooper, 48 D. 280.

The court is not bound to separate legal from illegal evidence when both are offered together and as a whole; and if the party offering it does not separate the legal from the illegal testimony, the whole may be rejected. West v. Kelly, 54 D. 192.

43. Admissibility of evidence under particular pleadings.—A party is bound by the effect of evidence which, without opposition, he permits to be adduced, contrary to or beyond the allegations contained in the pleadings. Hennen v. Gilman, 96 D. 396.

44. Rule that where part of a transaction, conversation, or document has been introduced by one side, the other is entitled to the whole of it.*—When part of a conversation or declaration is introduced in evidence by one party, the other has a right to call for the whole of it. Nelson v. Iverson, 60 D. 442; Harrison v. Laverty, 13 D. 283; Gordon v. Preston, 26 D. 75; provided it relates to the subject-matter of the suit. Williams v. Keyser, 89 D. 243. Thus where the plaintiff, to show that his property had been applied to the defendant's use in payment of a note made by the defendant and indorsed by the plaintiff, proved that the defendant pointed out the property to the sheriff, and declared that it was plaintiff's, it was held that the defendant was entitled to prove his statement in the same conversation that the note was the plaintiff's debt, and he was to pay it. Rouse v. Whited, 82 D. 337. But he is not entitled to prove other conversations with the same parties, about the same time, qualifying or explaining the conversation which is in testimony against him. Hatch v. Potter, 43 D. 88.

Where the defendant offered an answer in chancery in evidence, and read a part of it and of the exhibits, consenting that the plaintiff might read the whole, the latter may, at any stage of his argument, refer to and read any and all of the answer and exhibits. Bumpass v. Webb, 18 D. 34.

A paper offered in evidence by one party, for a single purpose, may be offered in its entirety by the adverse party, without proof of its genuineness. Young v. State Bank, 39 D. 322.

Plaintiff unnecessarily introduced in evidence certain affidavits used to procure a judgment, together with such judgment, for the purpose of showing his discharge in insolvency. The affidavits showed the judgment to be void. Held, that he was bound by his evidence; that he could not claim the benefit of such part as was favorable to his case, and ignore such as was prejudicial. Ullman v. Leon, 83 D. 783.

A defendant has no right to use other parts of an answer as evidence for himself, from the fact that a portion of the answer is read as evidence by the plaintiff; although he may have the right to read portions affecting the sense, or explaining the portions read. Gunn v. Todd, 64 D. 231.

45. The order of proof. — Rules of the court respecting the closing of proofs and the publication of testimony stated. Murray v. Hay, 43 D. 773.

A rule adopted by a trial court, requiring all the evidence to be offered in a case before any question of law is raised, excepting objections to testimony, is a proper rule, and no one will be heard to complain that he has been injured because of the court's adherence thereto. Gist v. Drakely, 41 D. 426.

Any relaxation of a rule that all evidence in support of the affirmative of an issue must be given in the first instance is but an appeal to the sound discretion of the court in which the issue is tried, and is not reviewable on error. Graham v. Davis, 62 D. 285.

The party on whom rests the burden of proving any fact must first proceed with evidence for that purpose, and if no testimony is given tending to disprove the fact thus sought to be established, no further testimony will be received upon that point. Pingry v. Washburn, 15 D. 676.

Where a case involving questions both of law and of equity is tried without a jury, the more regular and orderly practice is to first dispose of the equitable branch of the case. Martin v. Zellerbach, 99 D. 365.

Where an instrument under seal purports to have been executed by an attorney, and the authority of the attorney is disputed, before the instrument goes to the jury the letter of attorney must be produced to the court, who are to judge of its competency. But in simple contracts, where the agent's authority may be proved by parol, the fact of signing and the power to sign are both questions for the jury, and the order in which they shall be proved is immaterial. Emerson v. Providence Hat Mfg. Co., 7 D. 66.

46. Personal examination. — In an action for personal injuries, the court may, at the trial, compel the plaintiff to submit to a surgical examination. White v. Milwaukee City Ry Co., 50 R. 154; or in its discretion may refuse to compel the plaintiff to submit to a surgical examination. Shepard v. Missouri Pac. Ry Co., 55 R. 390.

In an action of damages for permanent injury to the eyes, the plaintiff having testified, and no medical expert having testified, the court may order the plaintiff to submit to an examination by a competent expert. Atchison etc. Ry Co. v. Thul, 44 R. 659.

On the trial of an action of damages for a personal injury, the court may refuse to order the plaintiff to submit to a physical examination by the defendant's medical witnesses, in private, it not appearing to be necessary, and the plaintiff having already submitted to an examination by such witnesses in the presence of the jury. Sioux City etc. R. R. Co. v. Finlayson, 49 R. 724.

On the trial of an action for personal injuries, the uncontradicted proof showing that since receiving them the plaintiff walked lame, the court commits no error in refusing to compel him to walk across the court-room in presence of the jury. Hatfield v. St. Paul & D. R. R. Co., 53 R. 14.

Where a plaintiff in an action for personal injuries alleges that they are permanent, the defendant is entitled, as a matter of right, to have a surgical examination. But where the evidence of experts is already abundant, the court may refuse the examination, subject to review in case of abuse. Sibley v. Smith, 55 R. 584.

47. View by jury.* — A statutory requirement that no one shall speak to the jury on the subject of trial should be carefully observed on the inspection by the jury of the property in dispute. And where, in violation of this requirement, a witness for the prevailing party was present and made a remark bearing on the case, which part of the jurors heard, and the verdict seemed to be founded upon a theory suggested by the remark, the judgment was reversed. Erwin v. Bulla, 92 D. 341.

48. Evidence in rebuttal. — Evidence, to be rebutting, must apply directly to the matter in controversy, should disprove the particular facts attempted to be shown by the other side, and must not introduce new matter. Foye v. Leighton, 53 D. 231.

Evidence of plaintiff's intemperate habits is admissible to rebut the evidence that plaintiff is a skillful workman. Cummings v. Nichols, 38 D. 501.

Where parol evidence of possession by a grantee, under his deed from a grantor whose deed was not proved to be legally executed, has been admitted to prove possession under the former deed, sufficient to admit it in evidence, it is error to exclude defendant's evidence to rebut and disprove said parol evidence. Shanks v. Lancaster, 50 D. 108.

Evidence to show that plaintiff's testate held a note as agent, and not as owner, may be rebutted by evidence of the state of the accounts and money transactions between such party and his indorser. Burke v. Allen, 61 D. 642.

Evidence in rebuttal is admissible, on defendant's part, to the effect that on a former hearing of the case, a witness for the plaintiff, to prove the genuineness of a paper, testified that she saw the defendant sign it, where the witness on the present hearing testifies in what room he signed it, and that "he stood by the secretary, and stooped over to sign it," without expressly stating that he was seen to sign it, because if there is an essential contradiction the defendant is entitled to the benefit of it, and if there is none, the plaintiff is not injured. Travis v. Brown, 52 D. 540.

49. — in reply. — Plaintiff's evidence in reply may be received or not, in the discretion of the presiding judge. Ashworth v. Kirtledge, 59 D. 178; Onstadi v. Ream, 95 D. 695.

A party upon whom the affirmative of the issue devolves is bound to give all his evidence in support of the issue in the first instance; and he can only give such evidence in reply as tends to answer the new matter introduced by his adversary. Graham v. Davis, 62 D. 285.

50. Opening cause after parties have rested. — A refusal to admit irrelevant testimony after a party has closed his case is not erroneous. Greer v. Caldwell, 58 D. 553.

It is discretionary with the court to allow plaintiff to introduce evidence after motion for nonsuit. May v. Hanson, 63 D. 135.

Where the answer, in an action for the wrongful diversion of water, sets up more than five years' continuous adverse possession in the defendant, and the plaintiff before resting introduces evidence tending to show his possession during the five years, and the defendant then introduces evidence to sustain the answer, the plaintiff may, if he does not wish to rely upon the proof already offered by him upon the same points, produce evidence tending to show that the defendant's case had not been or adverse. S but is a part and is admitted the court, and He has no right upon his original same facts the opening. Ud 145.

Plaintiff's witness is limited by him as to what he has introduced the discretion between the parties as to what watercourse for continued use is, in substance happens more in dispute testified to in evidence.

Evidence of plaintiff's intemperate habits is admissible to rebut the evidence that plaintiff is a skillful workman. Cummings v. Nichols, 38 D. 501.

Evidence to show that plaintiff's testate held a note as agent, and not as owner, may be rebutted by evidence of the state of the accounts and money transactions between such party and his indorser. Burke v. Allen, 61 D. 642.

Evidence in rebuttal is admissible, on defendant's part, to the effect that on a former hearing of the case, a witness for the plaintiff, to prove the genuineness of a paper, testified that she saw the defendant sign it, where the witness on the present hearing testifies in what room he signed it, and that "he stood by the secretary, and stooped over to sign it," without expressly stating that he was seen to sign it, because if there is an essential contradiction the defendant is entitled to the benefit of it, and if there is none, the plaintiff is not injured. *Travis v. 49. — in reply. — Plaintiff's evidence in reply may be received or not, in the discretion of the presiding judge. Ashworth v. Kittridge, 59 D. 178; Onstott v. Ream, 95 D. 695.

A party upon whom the affirmative of the issue devolves is bound to give all his evidence in support of the issue in the first instance; and he can only give such evidence in reply as tends to answer the new matter introduced by his adversary. Graham v. Davis, 62 D. 285.

50. Opening cause after parties have rested. — A refusal to admit irrelevant testimony after a party has closed his case is not erroneous. Greer v. Caldwell, 58 D. 553.

It is discretionary with the court to allow plaintiff to introduce evidence after motion for nonsuit. May v. Hanson, 63 D. 135.

Where the answer, in an action for the wrongful diversion of water, sets up more than five years' continuous adverse possession in the defendant, and the plaintiff before resting introduces evidence tending to show his possession during the five years, and the defendant then introduces evidence to sustain the answer, the plaintiff may, if he does not wish to rely upon the proof already offered by him upon the same points, produce evidence tending to show that the defendant's enjoyment of his asserted right had not been continuous or uninterrupted or adverse. Such evidence is not in rebuttal, but is a part of the plaintiff's original case, and is admissible only in the discretion of the court, and for the furtherance of justice. He has no right, for such a purpose, to enter upon his original case and again prove the same facts that were proved by him in his opening. Union Water Co. v. Crary, 85 D. 145.

Plaintiff's witnesses cannot be re-examined by him after he has closed and defendant has introduced his evidence, except in the discretion of the court, where the issue between the parties is a contest between them as to which had the better right to a watercourse founded on prior possession and continued user, and the object of the offer is, in substance, to prove the same facts, perhaps more in detail, that those witnesses had testified to in chief for the plaintiff. Id.

Where plaintiff, in an action on a contract against a married woman which fails to disclose her coverture, inadvertently omits to introduce evidence constituting his reply to the plea of coverture, he may be permitted, in the court's discretion, to introduce it after the argument of one of defendant's counsel has closed. McCormick v. Holbrook, 92 D. 400.

51. Compelling production of books and papers. — A contract referred to by a witness in his deposition need not be produced if the interrogatories do not call for its terms or mention the contract. Hooker v. Eagle Bank, 86 D. 351.

Documents, testified in a deposition to have been seen by a witness, need not be produced, where the evidence shows that they were left in the hands of the adverse party, giving rise to the presumption that they were at the time in his custody. Id.

52. Withdrawal of evidence. — A party who has offered testimony which the court has admitted against objection by the opposite party may afterwards, and before instructions are asked for, and before the cause has been argued by counsel, ask to have the same withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, and the court may allow its withdrawal. Boone v. Purnell, 92 D. 713.

3. Objections and Exceptions.

53. The proper time to object, generally. — A failure to object at the time to a ruling admitting testimony provisionally, and reserving objection to its competency till the evidence is closed, if the judge ultimately directs the jury to disregard the testimony, precludes the party from objecting that it should have been excluded when offered. McKnight v. Dunlop, 55 D. 370.

An exception comes too late, or must be regarded as waived, when taken to a paper offered as evidence because it purports to be a copy, and not the original, such paper having been received as evidence without any call being made for the original, or any objection made that the paper was but a copy. Iaeye v. Bossieux, 76 D. 189.

It is competent to urge for the first time on the argument that the record of a judgment has not been established; if an objection goes merely to a defect in an exemplification of a record, it should, perhaps, be made while the evidence is being developed. Lyon v. Bolling, 48 D. 122.

54. — to object to evidence. — An objection to evidence as incompetent is waived unless made when the evidence is offered. Wait v. Maxwell, 16 D. 391; Parks v. Foster, 71 D. 221.

55. General and specific objections. — A general objection to admissibility of evidence, without specifically pointing out the causes or defects for which objection is made, should be disregarded and the evidence received. McCartney v. Shepard, 64 D. 250; Smoot v. Kelava, 58 D. 310; Donnell v. Jones, 48 D. 59; Martin v. Hardesty, 62 D. 773; Smith v. Causey, 65 D. 372; Morrison v. Whiteside, 79 D. 661; Folk v. Wilson, 83 D. 599. But evidence offered as a whole may be rejected as a whole, on objection thereto, if part of such evidence is illegal. Barlow v. Lambert, 65 D. 374.

An objection to evidence must be confined to that which is inadmissible, where testimony is taken under a commission, and a part is admissible and a part is not. Pettigrew v. Barnum, 69 D. 212.

The rule that objections to evidence must be specific applies only to such objections as can be obviated by other evidence, or by the act of the party or the court. Clauser v. Stone, 81 D. 299.

If evidence is admissible for any purpose in the inquiry before the jury, it would be error to exclude it as irrelevant and inadmissible under the general exception. Wilms v. White, 90 D. 113.

General objections to evidence will be held good in some cases, as, for instance, if it is attempted to prove a written contract by parol, or the wife of a party should be offered in her husband's behalf, or if a party should offer himself as a witness. These objections only raise the question of competency; but when the technical sufficiency of the particular kind of evidence is relied on, the objection must be specific. Rindskoff v. Malone, 74 D. 367.

56. The requisite definiteness and certainty in objections. — The rule of practice with regard to objection to evidence is, that when it is not illegal upon its face, the ground of the objection must be stated, to enable the court to judge its legality. Cunningham v. Cochran, 52 D. 230; Briggs v. McCabe, 89 D. 503; George v. Thomas, 67 D. 612; Beets v. Bull, 27 D. 150; or the objection will not be considered by the court on appeal. Rindskoff v. Malone, 74 D. 367.

But evidence objected to, without stating the precise ground of objection, if it is illegal upon its face, may be refused, notwithstanding such failure to state the cause. Cunningham v. Cochran, 52 D. 230.

An objection to the proof of the service of a notice required by law in an action for a penalty for unlawfully marrying the plaintiff's minor child, that the copy served was not a true copy because it omitted the word "one" in the expression "twenty-one years," is too refined. Carekadden v. Poorman, 36 D. 145.

General, vague, and indefinite motions will not be entertained by the court; such as "exclude the latter part of the answer of John D. Winthrop to the fourth interrogatory," or "exclude so much of the answer to the fifth interrogatory as was matter of opinion." Donnell v. Jones, 48 D. 59.

57. Waiver of objections. — If one party proffers a paper to be read to the jury, and it is accordingly done, he cannot afterwards take exception because it was so read. White v. Fox, 4 D. 643.

A plaintiff may waive the absence of original papers and proof of their execution, and thus he will be presumed to have done by an omission to object to their introduction or motion to exclude them. Thomason v. Odum, 68 D. 159.

The failure to object to the introduction of a written instrument in evidence is an admission that the instrument is evidence, but is not an admission that it is sufficient evidence to sustain a judgment. Lowie v. Bliss, 76 D. 742.

The question of a reasonable use of a river as a highway by defendant having been, by the consent of both parties, submitted to the jury in an action for damages accruing from an obstruction of the river by a boom, whereby plaintiff's logs were detained, this was a waiver by the parties of their right to except to the instructions of the court upon the subject. Davis v. Winslow, 81 D. 573.

If one party offers himself as a witness, and the other objects because the objector is the representative of a deceased person, and the court decides to take the evidence with leave to the other party to move to strike it out, the motion to strike out must be made when the direct examination is closed. By cross-examining the witness generally, the other party waives the motion to strike out. King v. Haney, 13 R. 217.

58. When exceptions may be taken, and how. — A party has a right to require the opinion of the court upon any point of law pertinent to the issue, and a refusal to give it will be error to which an exception may be taken. Fletcher v. Howard, 16 D. 686.

An exception to instructions must be taken before the jury leave the bar. City Council v. Gilmer, 70 D. 562.

A demurrer to a paragraph of an answer must be regarded as having been sustained, but without exception taken, where an issue of law, upon such demurrer, is submitted to the court at the same time with the issues of fact for trial, under a general denial, and the finding of the court upon all the issues is for the plaintiff. Harrison v. Martinsville etc. R. R. Co., 79 D. 447.

A question involving the determination of facts in dispute is properly left to the jury, and no exception will lie to the refusal of a judge to rule upon it as a matter of law. Pettingill v. Porter, 85 D. 671.

59. Demurrer to evidence, and its effect, generally. — A demurrer to evidence is an unusual and antiquated practice, calculated to suppress truth and justice, and is allowed or denied by the court in the exercise of a sound discretion. State v. Soper, 83 D. 665.

A demurrer to evidence is no longer in use in New York, and a refusal to permit one is not reversible error. Colegrove v. N. Y. etc. R. R. Co., 75 D. 418.

60. — as an admission of truth of evidence demurred to. — A demurrer to evidence admits the facts which that evidence, if admitted, would tend to prove, together with such inferences as may be reasonably drawn from such facts. Doe v. Rue, 29 D. 368; MacKinley v. McGregor, 31 D. 522. And no testimony can be considered which impugns the truth of such facts. Davis v. Steiner, 53 D. 547. But only such inferences can be drawn by the court as the jury might fairly and reasonably have inferred from such evidence if they had been allowed to pass upon it. Union Steamship Co. v. Nottinghams, 91 D. 378.

61. Joinder in demurrer to evidence. — On a demurrer to evidence, the court, in its discretion, may compel the party to join in demurrer, or to abandon his evidence. Brandon v. Huntsville Bank, 18 D. 48.

Upon a demurrer to evidence, final judgment must be entered for the plaintiff or defendant, accordingly as the demurrer is overruled or sustained. Obaugh v. Finn, 37 D. 773. And the jury should be discharged either at once or after a conditional verdict has been taken for plaintiff. It will be error to retain the jury, and to submit to them, after the demurrer has been overruled, the assessment of damages. Id.

4. Nonsuit; Dismissal.

62. Power of court to order nonsuit. — A nonsuit without plaintiff's consent cannot be granted. Boos v. Davis, 33 D. 457; Cahill v. Kalamazoo M. I. Co., 43 D. 457.

A plaintiff has a right to have every question of fact in his case tried by a jury; and to nonsuit him on the trial, against his consent, would be an infringement of that right. Boos v. Davis, 33 D. 457.

Courts do not possess the power to nonsuit in Mississippi; but they instruct the jury to find as in case of a nonsuit. Beving v. Glidwell, 34 D. 96.

A compulsory nonsuit may be directed by the court. Mateer v. Brown, 52 D. 303; Ellis v. Ohio etc. Co., 64 D. 610.

A compulsory nonsuit will not be granted where a party has failed to make out his case, but the court, on motion of the defendant, will instruct the jury to find for the defendant. Martin v. Webb, 39 D. 363.

The trial court may refuse to pass upon the sufficiency of plaintiff's evidence to maintain his action until the evidence is closed upon both sides, as this is a matter within its discretion. Smith v. First Nat. Bank, 97 D. 59; Manning v. Albee, 92 D. 736.

Upon a motion for a nonsuit, where the evidence is conflicting, the court should assume that view which is most favorable to the plaintiff. Sheridan v. Brooklyn etc. R. R. Co., 93 D. 490.

The testimony of plaintiff's witness drawn out on cross-examination may be considered by the court in ordering a nonsuit, as well as that given on examination in chief. Eastman v. Howard, 50 D. 611.

The court is not bound to award a nonsuit where, after verdict for plaintiff, it would grant a new trial because the verdict was contrary to the evidence. Tison v. Yawn, 60 D. 708.

A motion to amend after nonsuit granted, but before it is entered, should be granted. Phillips v. Brigham, 71 D. 227.

63. Upon what grounds ordered, generally. — Evidence from which arises a fair and legitimate inference of facts sufficient to justify a verdict for the plaintiff must be submitted to the jury; but if there be no such evidence, a judgment of nonsuit may be properly entered. Baker v. Lewis, 75 D. 598.

A nonsuit should be ordered if, admitting all facts proved and all reasonable deductions from them, the plaintiff, on all the proof, ought not to recover. Tison v. Yawn, 60 D. 708; Dain v. Cossing, 39 D. 585.

A nonsuit may be granted where there is no proof to support the issue. Tison v. Yawn, 60 D. 708; or if the court would set aside a verdict, if so found, as contrary to the evidence. Mateer v. Brown, 52 D. 303; Deyo v. New York Central R. R. Co., 88 D. 418.

It is proper to direct a nonsuit whenever there is a total failure of evidence, or only light or trivial presumption to support an action; for it would be nugatory to submit such a case to a jury; but where there is testimony of a doubtful nature, or which depends on a long train of circumstances, or on facts contradictory in themselves, or which admit of different interpretations, the plaintiff has a right to have his case submitted to the jury. Brown v. Frost, 1 D. 633.

To leave to the jury the finding of a fact without color of proof is error. Whitehill v. Wilson, 24 D. 328.

A variance between allegata and probata in action of account by tenants in common against their co-tenants is a ground of nonsuit. McPherson v. McPherson, 53 D. 416.

In personal actions a nonsuit will be entered as to all plaintiffs, where one of the several co-plaintiffs shows to the court that the action was brought without his knowledge, consent, or authority, and by petition duly presented, requests to be nonsuited. And an offer of indemnity by the other co-plaintiffs to the petitioning plaintiff, not made till after the presentation of such petition, will not ordinarily prevent a nonsuit. Brown v. Wentworth, 88 D. 223.

64. — and when refused. — Plaintiff will not be compelled to become nonsuited on the trial for the insufficiency of his evidence. French v. Smith, 24 D. 616; Bank of Pittsburgh v. Whitehead, 38 D. 186; Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 51 D. 275; Tison v. Yarns, 60 D. 708; Fickett v. Swift, 66 D. 214; Page v. Parker, 80 D. 172; Phillips v. Brigham, 71 D. 227.

An amendable variance between the declaration and the proof is no ground of nonsuit. Boorman v. Jenkins, 27 D. 158.

An instruction to find as in case of a nonsuit is in the nature of a demurrer to evidence, which admits the evidence, concedes its truth, and is predicated upon it. Bishops v. McNary, 36 D. 592.

The incompetency of a witness from interest is not ground of instruction to find as in case of nonsuit, but the objection should be taken by a distinct motion to exclude the evidence. Id.

A motion for nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiff had shown no property in himself, should be overruled where there is testimony of several witnesses to the acknowledgments of the donor, that she had given the property to plaintiff, that it belonged to him, and that the donor had parted with the possession and dominion of the property. Maxwell v. Harrison, 52 D. 385.

A motion for a nonsuit involves not only admission of truth of evidence adduced by the plaintiff, but the existence of all the facts which the evidence, in any degree, tends to prove. It concedes to the plaintiff everything that the jury could possibly find in his favor, and leaves nothing but the question whether, as a matter of law, each fact indispensable to his right of action has been supported by some evidence. If it has, no matter how slight it may have been, the motion must be denied; because it is the right of the party to have the weight and sufficiency of his evidence passed upon by a jury. Ellis v. Ohio L. I. & T. Co., 64 D. 610.

65. Voluntary nonsuit. — Where the plaintiff failed to make out his case against an accommodation indorser, having had a fair opportunity to do so, on account of the insufficiency of the protest, the court will not give judgment as in case of a nonsuit, on the supposition that the notary, not having been called as a witness before, might testify to something to help out his protest, but will give judgment for the defendant. Dupré v. Richard, 43 D. 214.

A party cannot dismiss his case or be nonsuited after the publication of the verdict. A verdict is considered as published at the instant in which it is handed to the plaintiff's counsel or other person directed by the court to receive it. Merchants' Bank v. Rawls, 50 D. 394.

A plaintiff, when surprised by the rejection of his evidence, may take a nonsuit, and then move to set it aside and reinstate the case; and if the evidence was erroneously rejected, and the court refuses to reinstate, its judgment will be revised on appeal or writ of error. Easterling v. Elythe, 56 D. 45.

A nonsuit with a bill of exceptions may be taken, on motion, before the trial is begun, in consequence of a suppression of plaintiff's deposition. Douglas v. Montgomery etc. R. R. Co., 79 D. 76.

66. Effect of nonsuit. — A nonsuit does not bar a subsequent suit for the same cause, except in some particular case. It differs in this respect from a retrazit. Dana v. Gull, 20 D. 255.

The consequence of a nonsuit is generally to subject the plaintiff to the payment of costs. Id.

67. Setting aside nonsuit. — Nonsuits, when entered, may be set aside, sometimes with, sometimes without, payment of costs. Dana v. Gull, 20 D. 255.

68. Review of judgment of nonsuit. — The question as to the quantum of damages cannot be raised by motion for nonsuit so as to bring it up on error, if the plaintiff is entitled at least to nominal damages. Little v. Hoyt, 40 D. 360.

To nonsuit a plaintiff on the evidence of defendant is irregular, and the supreme court will seldom grant a nonsuit where the motion was not made on the circuit. Jones v. Weatherabee, 51 D. 653.

A motion for a nonsuit on one ground is an implied waiver of others; and a different position cannot be assumed on appeal from that taken in the court below. Mateer v. Brown, 52 D. 303.

In determining the propriety of a nonsuit, the court will assume the truth of facts which plaintiff's testimony legitimately conduced to prove, though their correctness be controverted by defendant's witnesses. Ernst v. Hudson R. R. Co., 90 D. 761.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

69. Review of judgment of dismissal. — An issue of fact raised by the pleadings cannot be adjudicated on a motion to dismiss the cause. Conger v. Dean, 66 D. 93.

VI. INSTRUCTIONS TO THE JURY.

1. Questions of Law and Fact.

70. Questions of law for the court.

—1. In general.^{*}—Fraud is a question of law, especially when there is no dispute about facts. Sturtevant v. Ballard, 6 D. 281; but the credibility of testimony tending to show fraud should be left to the jury. Weaver v. Lepsley, 94 D. 671. So held in the case of fraud in a sale, as against creditors. Chenery v. Palmer, 65 D. 493.

The jury are not the judges of the law; it is the province of the judge to expound and explain the law, and the province of the jury to determine the facts. McCorry v. King, 39 D. 165.

Where there is no dispute as to facts, the question is purely one of law, and the court should decide it. Roth v. Buffalo & S. L. R. R. Co., 90 D. 736.

Where the facts are undisputed that go to prove a promise sufficient to take a debt out of the statute of limitations, whether it amounts to a sufficient acknowledgment or not, is a question of law for the court to determine. Martin v. Broach, 50 D. 306.

In doubtful cases of a sale, the question of a delivery and acceptance is for the jury under proper instructions. But where the facts are clear and undisputed, that question, and what will amount to a waiver of the vendor's lien, is for the court. Southwestern Freight etc. Co. v. Standard, 100 D. 255.

Due diligence is a question of law, where there is no dispute about the facts. Tate v. Sullivan, 96 D. 597. So where a bank took the usual and customary mode to detect the frauds or mistakes of its clerks, this will be sufficient evidence of diligence, and it is erroneous to leave the question of diligence to the jury. Manhattan Co. v. Lydig, 4 D. 239.

Facts must be sufficient to constitute due diligence where they are submitted to the jury to be ascertained by their verdict. Tate v. Sullivan, 96 D. 597.

The determination of what is a reasonable time depends upon the situation of the parties, and the subject-matter of the contract, and where a promise was in consideration that assignments of certain bonds be procured, an assignment procured after the lapse of one or two years was held within reasonable time, the situation of the party proposing having been unaffected by the delay, and it appearing that the assignments were of a nature not to be obtained without considerable delay. Morse v. Bellows, 28 D. 372.

The following have been held to be questions of law for the court to decide: The term when a judgment was entered. Adams v. Betts, 26 D. 79.

What is a reasonable time. Gilmore v. Wilbur, 22 D. 410; Morse v. Bellows, 28 D. 372.

The reasonableness of a custom. Bodfish v. Fox, 39 D. 611.

Ownership. Maxwell v. Harrison, 52 D. 385.

What is a waiver. Spring Garden etc. Ins. Co. v. Evans, 66 D. 308.

The construction of an order granting letters of administration. Sims v. Boynton, 70 D. 540.

Whether letters have been lost or destroyed, and if so, whether such destruction was for a dishonest purpose. Tobin v. Shaw, 71 D. 547.

The abandonment of a contract, and what acts will constitute it. Dula v. Coules, 75 D. 463.

2. Instruments in writing.^{*}—The construction of foreign statutes, like other written compacts, belongs to the court, municipal law being a matter of compact; and written and unwritten foreign laws stand on the same footing in this respect. Sidwell v. Evans, 21 D. 387.

A written contract must be construed by court, and not by the jury. Randall v. Thornton, 69 D. 56. So held as to the construction of patents, conveyances, and other written muniments of title. Thornberry v. Churchill, 16 D. 125.

Whether a note introduced in evidence was a note for $42.25 or for $42.75, is to be determined by the court upon an inspection. Drew v. Towle, 64 D. 309.

The fact and scope of an agency created and proved by a writing are questions of law, and are properly decided by the court. Savings Fund Soc. v. Savings Bank, 78 D. 390.

The construction of a deed is for court. Carson v. Ray, 78 D. 267. So where the facts are admitted, it is a question of law what lands are conveyed by a deed. Stevens v. Hollister, 46 D. 154.

Whether a deed after majority constitutes a disaffirmance of a prior deed executed by the grantor while an infant is a question of law for the court. Peterson v. Laik, 69 D. 441.

The construction of a will or other written paper is, as a general rule, a question for the court, and not for the jury. Warner v. Miltenberger, 83 D. 573. And whether a paper offered in evidence is testamentary in ^{*} Writing, construction of, when a question for court and when for jury, see note, 69 D. 454-456.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

its character, or whether it is to take effect absolutely, or only on condition, is to be determined by proper instructions of the court to the jury. Mages v. McNiel, 90 D. 354.

71. Questions of fact for the jury.—I. Generally.—The credibility of evidence, whether oral or written, is a matter for the jury to decide. Turner v. Child, 17 D. 555.

Where evidence is conflicting in least degree, the court should leave it entirely to the consideration of the jury. Buffington v. Cook, 73 D. 481; Parson v. Donnell, 19 D. 218; Flemming v. Marine Ins. Co., 33 D. 33; Gray v. Allen, 45 D. 523. But the jury must receive the law from the court, and act according to its instructions, whether correct or incorrect. Flemming v. Marine Ins. Co., 33 D. 33; Shelton v. Hamilton, 57 D. 149; Roth v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co., 90 D. 736; Nichols v. Sixth Ave. R. R. Co., 97 D. 780.

Findings of fact must be left to the jury, except where the cause is tried upon admissions at the bar; and while the jury may discredit testimony, they cannot find contrary to the admissions of the parties. Inloes v. American Bk. Bank, 69 D. 190; Birney v. Printing Tel. Co., 81 D. 607.

Collisions upon navigable waters are governed by the same principles of common law as apply in cases of collision of carriages upon highways. In neither case can the exercise of due care and skill be questioned as matter of law. Sawyer v. Eastern Steamboat Co., 74 D. 463.

The following have been held to be questions of fact for the jury to decide: Whether, upon all the facts of the case, a water right and tilt-hammer pass as appurtenances under a sheriff's sale. Hall v. Benner, 21 D. 394.

Whether the defendant had notice of the assignment of the cause of action before he paid the debt sued for to the nominal plaintiff. Marr v. Hanna, 23 D. 449.

Whether a boundary has been so run and marked as to preclude further inquiry. Newman v. Foster, 34 D. 98.

The existence of a custom or usage. Farnsworth v. Chase, 51 D. 206; Allegre v. Maryland Ins. Co., 20 D. 424.

Whether words were spoken by one as agent or in his own behalf. Whitney v. Swett, 53 D. 228.

What is a delivery. Atwell v. Miller, 61 D. 294.

Whether apparatus called a range is a stove or not, within the meaning of the statute exempting certain property from execution. Montague v. Richardson, 63 D. 173.

Whether a passenger injured while standing on the platform of a car was there wrongfully, and if so, whether he can recover notwithstanding, where the injury happened from a derailment, and the evidence shows negligence on the part of the carrier. Zemp v. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co., 64 D. 763.

Whether a person has acted in excess of his authority, in cases where the justification of the act which is alleged to be wrongful and injurious is based on the exercise of authority, whether that authority be incident to the official character and duty of the party exercising it, or arise from the misconduct of the opposite party and the necessities of the case. Hilliard v. Gould, 66 D. 765.

What is reasonable care and unnecessary damage. Dwinel v. Veazie, 69 D. 94.

Whether the assignee of a bond has used due diligence to recover against the obligor. Mackie v. Davis, 1 D. 482.

Whether a highway is or is not in a suitable state of repair for the travel passing thereon, under the particular circumstances of each case. Hubbard v. City of Concord, 69 D. 520.

Whether curb-stones are customary for sidewalks. Schenley v. Com., 78 D. 359.

Whether on the facts, the essential parts of an estoppel are proved, in the absence of proof of the effect of the admission on the party setting up the estoppel. Brown v. Bowen, 86 D. 406.

Whether a failure of the servants of a railroad company, in charge of a train which is stopped by an obstruction upon the track, to notify passengers to leave the cars, where a possible collision might be anticipated, is a neglect of duty. Eaton v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 87 D. 730.

2. Fraud.—Whether there be fraud or not is a proper question for the determination of the jury under all the circumstances of the case. Hamilton v. Greenwood, 1 D. 607; Briscoe v. Bronaugh, 46 D. 106; McMichael v. McDermott, 55 D. 560; Jennings v. Gage, 56 D. 476; Billings v. Billings, 56 D. 319; Kuykendall v. McDonald, 57 D. 212; Burch v. Smith, 65 D. 154; Linn v. Wright, 70 D. 282; Drinkard v. Ingram, 73 D. 250.

So held as to fraud in an agreement for the sale of land. Miles v. Stevens, 45 D. 621; as well as to fraud in a sale of goods. Bidault v. Wales, 59 D. 327.

It is for the jury to determine whether a judgment and execution sale, in a particular case, constituted a mere contrivance to delay and defraud creditors; and such fraud is not to be presumed, but must be proved, though the proof may be circumstantial. Floyd v. Goodwin, 29 D. 130.

Whether representations amount to a fraud or to a warranty. Anderson v. Burnett, 35 D. 425; or are merely the expression of an opinion,—are questions for the jury. Sinar v. Canaday, 13 R. 523.

Meaning, extent, and truth of representations may be properly left to the jury, where there is evidence that a party, on transferring the note of a third person, represented it to be "as good as cash, and that the maker was perfectly responsible," and also that it was understood that the note was not to be presented at once. Abell v. Munson, 100 D. 165.

3. Construction of contracts, generally.—Where the testimony may admit of different and distinct constructions, it is the province of the jury to adopt that construction which is most satisfactory to their minds. Coke v. Hunt, 41 D. 589.

Under a statute providing that in all contracts for or relating to labor ten hours of actual labor shall be taken to be a day's work, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the plaintiff worked for the defendant from November to April, each day from sunrise to sunset, under an agreement for $2.50 a day, without any agreement as to how many hours should constitute a day's work. The plaintiff brought suit to recover $2.50 for each actual day's work. The defendant claimed that he was entitled to $2.50 for each ten hours' work only. Held, that it was for the jury to determine whether or not the work done by the plaintiff in a day was, by the understanding and implied agreement of the parties, to be taken as a day's work. Brooks v. Cotton, 2 R. 172.

In an action by the lessee of a dwelling-house against the lessor, for letting the house, knowing that it was infected with the small-pox, without disclosing that fact, the lessee having taken the disease from the infected house, the question whether vaccination would, under all the circumstances of the case, have been a proper precaution for the lessee to have taken is for the jury. Minor v. Sharon, 17 R. 122.

The following are questions of fact for the jury: The construction of an oral agreement. McFarland v. Neuman, 34 D. 497.

A waiver of the original conditions of an agreement. Savage Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 35 D. 227.

The rescission of a contract. Blood v. Enos, 36 D. 363.

Whether a contract was made for an illegal purpose. Bellows v. Russell, 51 D. 238.

The sufficiency of proof to establish a valid contract between parties. Atwell v. Miller, 61 D. 294.

Whether a contract is joint or several, where it depends, not only on the construction of several written instruments, but also upon oral evidence. Bradford v. South Carolina R. R. Co., 62 D. 411.

4. Contracts in writing.—The construction of a written document may become a question for the jury, when the doubt as to its meaning arises from extrinsic facts not appearing upon the instrument, and the intention of the parties has to be sought for by a recurrence to the state of facts as they existed when the instrument was made, and which the parties are presumed to have reference to. Such an ambiguity is a latent one, and may be explained by parol. Warner v. Miltenberger, 83 D. 573.

The question as to the existence and nature of a prior parol contract, and as to whether a subsequent written instrument contains it all, should be submitted to the jury, where the plaintiff alleges that there was a prior parol contract concerning the same subject-matter, and that the written agreement subsequently signed does not embrace all the terms of such previous parol contract. Cobb v. Wallace, 98 D. 435.

The following are held to be questions of fact for the jury: An objection to a deed upon the ground of the grantor's insanity; and it is not for the court to decide whether or not the grantor was insane. Doe v. Reagan, 33 D. 486.

Whether a deed has been delivered or not. Hannah v. Swarner, 34 D. 442.

Whether a note or a receipt in full is evidence of a contract which extinguishes the original cause of action. Steamboat Charlotte v. Hammond, 43 D. 536.

The ownership of a bill of exchange; and if the jury have passed upon it, it is not the business of the appellate court to disturb their finding. Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 44 D. 665.

The question as to who are parties to a written contract, if it does not appear from the contract itself. Miller v. Ford, 55 D. 687.

The question of usury, where, although there was no direct evidence of a usurious agreement at the time when the loan was made, it was shown that twenty-two days thereafter a sum in excess of the legal rate was paid and received for the use of the money. Callin v. Gunter, 62 D. 113.

The fact and scope of agency not created by writing, but implied from the conduct of the principal, and proved by witnesses. Savings Fund Soc. v. Savings Bank, 78 D. 390.

The construction of a written instrument, if its meaning is to be judged by extrinsic evidence. Ganson v. Madigan, 82 D. 659.

Whether certain characters were intended to represent one word or another. Fenderson v. Owen, 92 D. 551.

72. Mixed questions of law and fact.

—1. In general.—Whether a party has used due diligence to charge the indorser of a note is a question of fact for the jury; but what constitutes sufficient notice of dishonor is a question of law. Thompson v. Bank of S. C., 30 D. 354.

Fraud is a mixed question of law and fact, to be determined by the jury. If the jury find a transaction fraudulent, without any evidence to support it, its finding will be reversed on appeal. Dodd v. McCraw, 46 D. 301.

What acts or declarations amount to a waiver is a question of law to be determined by the court, but whether or not such acts or declarations were done or made is a question of fact for the jury. Minor v. Edwards, 49 D. 121.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Where the facts are disputed that go to prove a new promise sufficient to take a debt out of the statute of limitations, whether a sufficient acknowledgment or promise has been made is a mixed question of law and fact to be passed upon by the jury. Martin v. Broach, 50 D. 306.

The question of reasonable time is ordinarily a mixed one of fact and law. Roth v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co., 90 D. 736.

2. Instruments in writing.—Written instruments must be construed by the court, except when they cannot be understood without reference to facts dehors the writing, in which case the jury, who are to inquire into the facts, should judge of the whole. Watson v. Blaine, 14 D. 669.

What land a deed covers, or what estate it conveys, is a question of law to be decided by the court. What are the termini of the lines are points of construction, but where they are a question of fact; hence it is error to instruct the jury that where there is an irreconcilable difference between a natural boundary and a marked line, it is a matter of evidence, and not of construction. Hurley v. Morgan, 28 D. 579; Doe v. Paine, 15 D. 507.

The construction of written evidence is for the court, and of parol evidence for the jury. But the admixture of parol and written evidence is wholly for the jury to construe. Sidwell v. Evans, 21 D. 387.

The court determines the legality of evidence tending to prove the execution of an instrument, and submits it to the jury for them to weigh and decide upon its sufficiency. Beaman v. Russell, 49 D. 775.

The construction of commercial correspondence is sometimes not a mere question of law, but more a question of fact; and when this is the case, it may properly be left to the jury. Pagin v. Connolly, 69 D. 450.

The factum of a foreign law is for the jury to find upon evidence; but it is the duty of the court to construe such law, especially if it be in writing, and to direct the jury as to its force and effect. Cecil Bank v. Barry, 83 D. 553.

2. What Instructions are Proper.

73. Powers and duty of the court in respect to instructions.*—Where no testimony is offered of a fact, or the proof is so vague and indefinite that the fact to be proved cannot be deduced by any rational inference, the court should instruct the jury that it is not competent for them to find such fact. Riggin v. Patapco Ins. Co., 16 D. 302; Satterwhite v. Hicks, 57 D. 577; Alexander v. Harrison, 90 D. 431; when, looking to the whole evidence adduced, and considering its quality and general tenor, and after deducing all reasonable inferences therefrom, it is satisfied that it is not legally sufficient to constitute the foundation for a verdict, and that a verdict founded upon it could not in justice and judicial propriety be allowed to stand. Sprigg v. Moale, 92 D. 698.

* General duty of the court in giving instructions, see note, 99 D. 118-120.

Instructions should inform the jury of what the evidence must satisfy them; and what they are to find from testimony upon a certain point, in order to find, generally, for either party. Booster v. Rogers, 52 D. 680.

A judge is not bound to give an opinion on facts, or to say what the law is on the whole evidence; he may advise, but if he directs the jury to find in a particular way, it is error. Sidwell v. Evans, 21 D. 387.

Where a witness testifies that the defendant promised the plaintiffs that if they "would wait a while," and "not push his brother," he would pay, the judge is not bound to give the legal construction of the words, the construction of words spoken being exclusively for the jury. Id.

The judge is not bound to present the case in every aspect of which it is susceptible on the evidence. Id.

Instructions should be positive and specific, and should leave nothing to inference. Snyder v. Laframboise, 12 D. 187.

Decision of all questions of fact should be left to the jury, and the court should, when so requested, correct any misstatement of law by counsel in argument before the jury. Kisten v. Hildebrand, 48 D. 416. But the judge need not instruct the jury on the history or object of a law. It is sufficient that he states the law itself. Lincoln v. Wright, 62 D. 316.

The court in answering a point must so present the qualifying facts that they may have their due weight with the jury. Killion v. Power, 91 D. 127.

The court are not bound to charge the jury whether any facts have been given in evidence raising a legal presumption of fraud sufficient to invalidate a will; but can only instruct them as to the law upon certain facts, if they should find them well proved. Irish v. Smith, 11 D. 648.

The failure to leave the bona fides of a transfer of personal property to the jury, where there was no evidence of mala fides, is not error. Horton v. Smith, 42 D. 628.

The court should instruct jury as to conclusions of law arising from the face of an instrument. Hutchinson v. Lord, 60 D. 381.

Evidence admitted under the assurance that it will be followed up by proof of other material facts intimately connected with it should be disregarded by the jury if the assurance is not fulfilled, and it is the duty of the court to so instruct them upon subsequent application of counsel. Atwell v. Miller, 61 D. 294.

An instruction should include all facts in controversy, material to the right of the plaintiff, or the defense of the defendant, where the court instructs the jury upon what state of facts they must find a verdict for a party. Gallagher v. Williamson, 83 D. 114.

74. What instructions are proper, generally.—The court may instruct the jury as to the legal modes of ascertaining the boundaries of land. Seidensparger v. Spear, 35 D. 234.

An instruction that personalty is liable before realty in payment of a legacy given by a will of personalty only does not tend to mislead the jury, and forms no ground for complaint. Guhrte v. Owen, 36 D. 311.

Where a person assigns his property to five assignees in trust for creditors, and the assignees appoint two of their number to carry on the trust business, which two authorize the assignor to act as their agent, and he gives a note signed by himself "for the assignees," in an action against the two assignees on the note, what was meant by those words, and whether the defendants were the only acting assignees, is properly left with the jury. Paige v. Stone, 43 D. 420.

Instructions are not erroneous merely because they do not embrace every aspect in which the law applicable to the case might have been presented to the jury. Linn v. Wright, 70 D. 282.

A head-note to a reported decision is not law, except so far as it is warranted by the judgment of the court upon the facts of the case; and it is not error for the court so to remark in the hearing of the jury while counsel is reading the head-note of a case. Denham v. Holman, 71 D. 198.

An instruction based upon incompetent evidence unobjected to is not erroneous, as when it is based upon a record to which a party to the suit was not a party. Parke v. Foster, 71 D. 221.

It is not error if the court adds to its instruction to a jury, "much is left, and much must always be left, to your sound discretion," if otherwise the instructions are without error. It is better, however, not to add such words. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Ogier, 78 D. 322.

The court may call the jury's attention to the fact that defendant did not testify in the case, and may instruct them that they may consider that fact and give to it such weight as they think it deserves, in an action against the indorser of a promissory note, on the trial of which is adduced proof of demand and notice to the defendant, where the allegation of due notice is controverted by him. Union Bank v. Stone, 79 D. 631.

Where the count in a declaration claims consequential damages for injuries to private property from grading a road by a turnpike corporation, and the recovery of such damages is dependent upon facts to be found by the jury, an instruction that if the corporation did acts unnecessary and improper to the grading of the road, then the corporation would be liable, is proper. Douglass v. Boonsborough Turnp. Co., 85 D. 647.

An instruction in an action against a railroad company for injuries received in jumping from a car, that the defendant would be liable if the injuries resulted from the want of proper skill and care on the part of the conductor, is not erroneous, taken in connection with another instruction, that if the plaintiff was guilty of negligence in jumping from the car, whereby she was injured, then she could not recover, even if the defendant was also guilty of negligence. Evansville etc. R. R. Co. v. Duncan, 92 D. 322.

75. Instructions in respect to damages.—An instruction that the plaintiff has a right to recover if the jury believe the evidence, without saying anything as to the amount of the recovery, is not erroneous if there is uncontradicted evidence establishing the plaintiff's right to any part of his demand. Pleasants v. Pendleton, 18 D. 726.

In an action on a bond, where the defendant agreed for a valuable consideration that if he should, after a specified time, practice medicine, etc., within certain limits, the plaintiff should recover of him one thousand dollars as liquidated damages, an instruction that if the jury should find the issues for the plaintiff they must assess the damages at one thousand dollars is unobjectionable. Miller v. Elliott, 50 D. 475.

An instruction that malice or gross neglect of plaintiff's rights has not been sufficiently established to allow the jury to find exemplary damages is proper, if such is the state of the evidence. Seiden v. Cashman, 81 D. 93.

Where the jury gives more than nominal damages, all instructions given in reference to nominal damages become immaterial, because no state of facts arose to which such instructions could apply. And the same is true in relation to instructions sought upon the assumption that no actual damage was done. Eastman v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 82 D. 201.

To leave the measure of damages entirely to the discretion of the jury is error on the part of the trial court. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Books, 98 D. 229.

76.—in respect to question of negligence.—A jury having agreed upon a verdict, reduced it to writing, sealed it, and separated. When produced in court, the next morning, it was for the plaintiff, for six thousand dollars, and was entered upon the minutes of the court. On the polling of the jury, they failed to agree, and were directed by the court to retire to their room. The jury having retired, returned for instructions as to whether they could increase their verdict. Being instructed that they might decide upon any verdict to which they all agreed, they brought in a verdict for the plaintiff for seven thousand dollars.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Held, no error. Until the polling of the jury takes place, and the assent of the jurors, either express or tacit, is given to the verdict, and the jury is dismissed, and has become no more a jury in the case, the verdict is, within certain limits, in the power of the jury, and to a certain extent within the direction of the court. Warner v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 11 R. 724.

77. Comments upon the evidence. — The court may properly instruct the jury on the legal effect of a certain instrument, without violating the rule that an instruction shall not be given on the weight of evidence. Austin v. Richardson, 2 D. 543.

Where there is no conflict of testimony, a statement of its legal effect by the court is not considered as taking the facts from the jury. Johnston v. Gray, 16 D. 577.

An instruction that there is no evidence of a fact sought to be proved is proper, where the evidence is so loose and inconclusive that the jury cannot make a legitimate and reasonable inference, and find such fact to be established, without indulging in conjecture and speculation. Spring Garden etc. Ins. Co. v. Evans, 66 D. 308.

The rule that a judge should not charge on the weight of evidence applies only where there is doubt, and the jury are required to weigh the evidence. Winslow v. Stokes, 67 D. 242.

78. Assuming existence of facts. — An instruction which assumes the existence of a fact is not erroneous when that fact is clearly established by the evidence, where there is no testimony to disprove it, and where it was not contested at the trial in the court below. Heirn v. McCaughan, 66 D. 588.

An instruction assuming the existence of a fact admitted at a trial is not erroneous, where the admission is made for the benefit of a party, and is of a fact without the existence of which he could not, in any event, recover. Inloes v. American Ex. Bank, 69 D. 190.

An instruction assuming that there is no evidence tending to establish a proposition is not ground for reversal, if such is the case. Sharp v. Parks, 95 D. 565.

79. Expressions of opinion. — The court's opinion upon the facts may be submitted to the jury, if they are at the same time informed that they are to judge of the facts. Gordon v. Little, 11 D. 632.

A judge's expression of opinion on a matter of fact will not be intended to have misled the jury. Robinson v. Justice, 21 D. 407.

A jury is the proper tribunal to determine questions of fact; but the judge is not thereby precluded from expressing to the jury his opinion on the weight and effect of evidence. Kirkwood v. Gordon, 62 D. 418.

An opinion of the court, based on evidence as he remembered it, and not upon the verdict alone, is unobjectionable, if the verdict alone is sufficient to sustain it. Bruggerman v. Hoerr, 82 D. 97.

An expression of opinion on the state of facts by a judge is not matter of legal exception. Phillips v. Kingfield, 36 D. 760; Matthews v. Allen, 77 D. 430; if he also told the jury that they were the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses. Porter v. Seiler, 62 D. 341.

A judge's intimation of an opinion on the facts that the presumption is that a deed was delivered as an escrow is no ground for reversal, where the fact as to whether it was so delivered is correctly left to the jury. Jackson v. Rowland, 22 D. 557.

80. Rule that instructions be written. — It is the duty of a judge in all cases to give the jury a knowledge of the definitions and principles of law applicable to the case; and under the statute of Louisiana, in all appealable cases, the judge may be required by counsel to charge the jury in writing, they having the power to disregard his instructions. Tresca v. Maddox, 66 D. 198.

The court should charge jury in writing, when requested to do so, and without any verbal additions or explanations. Campbell v. Miller, 95 D. 390. And if the court then instruct orally, it is error; but exception must be taken, or the error is waived. Heaton v. Cincinnati etc. R. R. Co., 79 D. 430.

If instructions are not modified or changed by any oral charge, but go to the jury as they were written, there is no violation of the provision of the code requiring all instructions to be in writing, although the court repeated orally a part of one of the charges, and in reading another charge remarked orally that he had not intended to read so far as he had, and then reread the charge as he intended to give it. Pate v. Wright, 95 D. 705.

81. Interpreting instructions. — An instruction must be understood in reference to the issue and evidence in the case. The words employed must be taken in their ordinary and popular acceptance. Mitchell v. Zimmerman, 61 D. 717.

The universal rule of construction is, that the general language of the court is to be understood as limited by the conditions to which it is addressed. Barroilhet v. Hathaway, 89 D. 193.

82. Withdrawal of instructions. — The court may withdraw an instruction given to the jury before they retire. Donnell v. Jones, 62 D. 194.

3. What Instructions are Improper.

83. In general — Limiting the issue. — An instruction is not necessarily correct because given in the same words used by the court of last resort in a case wherein they acted both as judge and jury. Booster v. Rogers, 52 D. 680.

An instruction is erroneous when its effect is to take a case from the jury, as where the instruction is simply that there is no evidence to a certain point, this point only impliedly affecting the point in controversy, and there being other evidence from which a verdict might have been rendered for the defeated party. Tibeau v. Tibeau, 59 D. 329.

An instruction to the jury outlining facts upon which plaintiff would be entitled to recover, which hypothesis of facts takes from the jury the finding of other facts by which his right to recover might be impaired or defeated, is erroneous. Adams v. Capron, 83 D. 566.

Instructions should not be so framed, nor given and refused, as to exclude from the jury the consideration of the points which are fairly raised by the evidence. Sawyer v. Hannibal etc. R. R. Co., 90 D. 382; Alexander v. Harrison, 90 D. 431.

Instructions removing from the consideration of the jury the sanity of an alleged testator, where there is testimony upon this point, are erroneous. Booster v. Rogers, 52 D. 680.

It is error to instruct that the finding of one issue in favor of plaintiff will entitle him to recover, when, in order to gain the suit, all of the issues must be found in his favor. Galbreath v. Davidson, 99 D. 233.

84. Instructions assuming facts, or unsupported by evidence. — Want of evidence upon which to base an instruction, though good law, will render it erroneous if given. Druggins v. Watson, 60 D. 560; O'Fallon v. Boisemau, 26 D. 678; Heirn v. McCaughan, 66 D. 588; Gulther v. Myrick, 66 D. 316; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 81 D. 521; Stouffer v. Latschaw, 27 D. 297.

It is the province of the jury to find facts from the evidence, and it is error for the court in its charge to assume as proven a fact which is in issue. Caldwell v. Center, 89 D. 131; Tyner v. Stoops, 71 D. 341; Crozier v. Kirker, 51 D. 724; Warren v. Jacksonville, 58 D. 610; McKenzie v. Branch Bank, 65 D. 369.

So an instruction assuming a fact to be doubtful when there is no conflict of evidence respecting it, or assuming an hypothesis at variance with the fact, should not be given. Winta v. Morrison, 67 D. 658.

It is error for the court to annex to a charge properly asked, a material qualification not required nor authorized by the evidence given at the trial. Walker v. Stetson, 84 D. 382.

An instruction assuming that property was damaged in the manner complained of is defective, notwithstanding the proof established the fact beyond a reasonable doubt. Baltimore & S. R. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 59 D. 72.

A charge which assumes that a rule of law is established from certain facts, when such result does not necessarily follow, is erroneous. Clark & Co. v. Goddard, 84 D. 777.

85. Abstract propositions and remarks calculated to mislead the jury. — An instruction authorizing the jury to find one of three alternate and distinct propositions of fact, without saying which, is erroneous. Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 39 D. 640.

An instruction not perspicuously worded, whose precise import is not clear, is objectionable for that reason. Thompson v. Thompson, 68 D. 638.

An ambiguous instruction which may mislead the jury, and conflicting instructions, are irregular, and should not be given. Southern R. R. Co. v. Kendrick, 90 D. 332.

Instructions amounting to mere abstract propositions of law are erroneous. They should be made applicable to the case in hand. New Orleans etc. Co. v. Statham, 97 D. 478.

It is erroneous for courts to give instructions containing only a portion of material facts connected with any particular transaction, and to omit others of equal importance, which, if included in the instruction, might lead the mind of the jury to a different conclusion. Id.

An instruction must be applicable to the testimony, and where there is testimony tending to bring the case fairly within an exception to a general rule, an instruction will be misleading which states the general rule as applicable to the testimony without stating it to be merely a general rule, and subject to exceptions, and without adverting to such testimony. White v. Thomas, 80 D. 347.

86. Comments upon the evidence or credibility of witnesses. — The jury should attempt to reconcile all contradictions and discrepancies in testimony of witnesses, and it is error for the court to instruct them that such attempt should not be made. Moore v. Kendall, 52 D. 145.

An instruction should not state the testimony of a particular witness, as what that testimony was is a matter to be determined by the jury. Southern R. R. Co. v. Kendrick, 90 D. 332.

The court has no right to instruct the jury that the testimony proves a certain fact, although it may greatly preponderate in favor of that fact. Trovillo v. Telford, 31 D. 484. Such an instruction amounts but to a comment upon the testimony, and is an encroachment upon the province of the triers of fact. Wilson v. Huston, 53 D. 138.

A general charge on the evidence in favor of a party is an invasion of the province of the jury, where an inference of fact is necessary to be drawn before such party is entitled to recover. White v. Hass, 70 D. 548.

An instruction declaring that upon the evidence a plaintiff cannot recover is justified only where there is a total failure of evidence to uphold a verdict, but where there is any evidence tending to prove the issue, it must be submitted to the jury. Claffin v. Rosenberg, 97 D. 336; Houghtaling v. Ball, 59 D. 331.

For the judge to charge the jury that a book of farriery, referred to by counsel, in addressing them, is entitled to as much weight as the testimony of an expert witness in the science, who had been examined in the case, is a clear violation of the act of 1796, which prohibits the judge from expressing any opinion as to the credibility or weight of the testimony. Melvin v. Easley, 62 D. 171.

The weight of evidence is not subject of legal direction or of error. Brittain v. Doylestown Bank, 39 D. 110.

Jurors should test the truth and weight of evidence, when heard, by their general knowledge derived from experience, observation, and reflection; and an instruction to them to apply special circumstances and facts connected with the case in forming their verdict is erroneous. Ottawa Gas Light Co. v. Graham, 81 D. 263.

An instruction that "other things being equal in regard to witnesses, the testimony of those examined in open court is entitled to greater weight than the testimony of witnesses embodied in depositions," is erroneous. Müller v. Eglin, 31 R. 121.

87. Expressions of opinion.—The court in charging the jury has no right to express or intimate his opinion as to what has or has not been proved during the trial. Beverly v. Burke, 54 D. 351.

The sufficiency of the evidence ought to be left wholly to the consideration of the jury; so where the court instructed the jury that "from the whole testimony before them, the demand of the plaintiffs was not barred by the act of limitations,"—held, that the instruction was erroneous. Fisher v. Duncan, 3 D. 605.

An instruction evincing an opinion that a contested fact has been proved is erroneous, because it is calculated to bias the jury. Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 39 D. 640.

It is error for the court in its charge to the jury to intimate doubts as to the competency of legal testimony which has been submitted to them, it being calculated to paralyze its influence in their estimation. Potts v. House, 50 D. 329.

If a judge feels it to be his duty to intimate his opinion to the jury, that a certain fact is or is not sufficiently proved, he should always instruct them, at the same time, to consider the evidence and to decide as they shall find the truth to be. Id.

88. Instances of erroneous instructions.—It is error to instruct a jury that they are at liberty to find conditional damages, sufficient in amount to enforce specific execution of a contract, and that the court will take care that no improper use is made of the verdict. Decamp v. Peay, 9 D. 372.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary a record, and a charge is erroneous the effect of which is to shift from the court to the jury the duty of determining what parol evidence is inconsistent with the record. Thomason v. Odum, 68 D. 159.

Where a question at issue is the delivery of personal property, it is error for the court to charge that he knew of nothing in the case that went to show that the delivery was not valid under the circumstances, so far as it was within the province of the court to determine the question, though the statute provides that the court must instruct the jury as to all matters of law which it thinks necessary for their information in giving their verdict; and if it presents the facts, must also inform the jury that they are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact. Caldwell v. Kennison, 77 D. 499.

It is error to instruct the jury that there was no evidence to take the case out of the statute of limitations if there is proof tending to show that a party was defendant's agent, attended to his books, and settled his accounts; that such agent had, within three years, made entries in plaintiff's books verifying the accounts sued upon. Morrison v. Whiteside, 79 D. 661.

Instructions were held erroneous in an action against a wharf superintendent for wrongfully ordering the captain of a vessel discharging at plaintiff's wharf to remove therefrom, whereby the plaintiff was injured and deprived of his wharfage, where the jury were charged that it was not enough for the defendant simply to have believed that he had no authority to make the order complained of and to have made the same in good faith, but that he was bound to act with reasonable caution. The defendant was entitled to an instruction that there could be no recovery unless he had acted with a malicious and fraudulent design to injure the plaintiff. Gregory v. Brooks, 95 D. 278.

4. The Prayer for Instructions.

89. Necessity of a prayer, or request.*—In the absence of a prayer for a specific instruction, the silence of the judge is not error. Holliday v. Rheem, 57 D. 628; Brittain v. Doylestown Bank, 39 D. 110; Jacobs v. Bangor, 33 D. 652; Herbert v. Huie, 34 D. 755; Churchman v. Smith, 36 D. 211; Mearns v. Commissioners, 49 D. 412; Deal v. Bogue, 57

D. 702; Moses v. Boston & M. R. R., 64 D. 381; Kauffman v. Griesemer, 67 D. 437; Lim v. Wright, 70 D. 282; Wright v. Boynton, 72 D. 319; Reeves v. Del. etc. R. R. Co., 72 D. 713; Weamer v. Stuart, 72 D. 627; Borngeesser v. Harrison, 78 D. 757; Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co. v. Hagan, 86 D. 541; Siegel v. Robinson, 93 D. 775; Moore v. Fitchburg R. R. Corp., 64 D. 83; if such omission does not mislead the jury in investigating the main question in the case. Mullen v. Wilson, 84 D. 461. But this rule does not apply where the charge given by the court upon the questions involved is itself erroneous. Chambliss v. Tarbox, 84 D. 614. And where a charge on the requisites prescribed by statute for the execution of wills omitted some of the requisites, and the omissions, when considered in connection with the evidence, appeared to have the effect of authorizing the jury to conclude that they were unnecessary, the omissions are error, although the adverse party did not ask the court to supply the omissions in its charge. Tynan v. Paschal, 84 D. 619.

That proper instructions were given will be assumed; and where a party desires definite instructions, he should make a request therefor. Sidensparker v. Sidensparker, 83 D. 527.

Charges tending to mislead should be corrected by asking additional and explanatory instructions. Kenan v. Holloway, 50 D. 162.

90. Form and sufficiency of the prayer.—1. *In general.—A prayer for an instruction, not referring to the pleadings, that if the jury believe certain evidence, the plaintiff is or is not entitled to recover, authorizes the court, under the Maryland act of 1825, merely to pass upon the sufficiency of the facts as a cause of action, assuming the pleadings to be correct, and not upon the sufficiency of the pleadings or their agreement with the facts, and on appeal from the granting or refusal of such instruction the court will not pass upon the pleadings. If an opinion is required upon the sufficiency of the facts under the pleadings, the prayer must be so framed. Stockton v. Frey, 45 D. 138.

A prayer that there is no evidence of a waiver concedes the truth of opposing party's evidence, and all legitimate inferences which may be drawn from it. Spring Garden etc. Ins. Co. v. Evans, 66 D. 308.

The rejection or granting of a prayer depends for its correctness upon evidence to which it alone refers, and not upon the state of the pleadings, where the prayer neither points nor refers to the pleadings. Bitney v. Printing Telegraph Co., 81 D. 607.

2. Defective prayers which should be denied.—A prayer for an instruction based on a hypothetical statement of part of the facts proved, and assuming the existence of other material and indispensable facts, also proved, but not stated, will not be granted unless justified by a consideration of all the facts assumed as well as stated. Bosley v. Chesapeake Ins. Co., 22 D. 337.

A prayer for an instruction involving a complicated statement which it would be difficult for the jury to understand should be denied. Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 39 D. 640; Fell's Point Sav. Inst. v. Weedon, 81 D. 603.

If a charge asked embraces several different propositions, part of which are good and a part bad, the court may refuse the whole. Inglebright v. Hammond, 53 D. 430.

A court of common pleas may make rules regulating a request for instructions on points; and where requested instructions have not been furnished to opposite counsel, according to rule, it is not error to refuse them. Haines v. Stauffer, 53 D. 493.

Plaintiff's prayer for an instruction, based upon his own evidence, cannot be given, when the proof of the defendant, if believed by the jury, would establish any proposition inconsistent with the theory of such prayer. Plaintiff must assume or admit the truth of all the defendant's proof on the subject. McTavish v. Carroll, 61 D. 353.

Where limitations and non assumpsit are both pleaded, a prayer for instructions which overlooks the evidence offered under the plea of limitations and directs the jury to find for the plaintiff, notwithstanding they may find the debt barred by the statute, is fatally defective in not limiting the finding of the jury to the plea of non assumpsit. Hurst v. Hill, 63 D. 705.

The refusal of an instruction in the alternative is right, when one of the alternatives is erroneous, although the other may be correct. Berry v. Griffin, 69 D. 123.

A prayer that plaintiff is not entitled to recover upon the pleadings and evidence in a cause is too general in its terms, since the Maryland act of 1825, chapter 117. Fell's Point Sav. Inst. v. Weedon, 81 D. 603.

A prayer is objectionable in assuming a fact and leaving to the jury a question of law, where it is to the effect that if the jury find "that the fund deposited" was still in bank, and that "proper" letters of administration have been taken out and granted to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. 76.

An instruction predicated upon a statement of facts that does not enumerate all the other facts material to the right of recovery, of which evidence was offered, is defective. Adams v. Capron, 83 D. 566.

Inconsistent instructions should not be given. And where one of two inconsistent instructions correctly presents the case to the jury, but does not appear to have been submitted in such terms as would impose any limitations upon the inconsistent and opposing theory of the other, the error is not cured. Ib.

A charge is erroneous when the jury is instructed that if the creditor received a note "in settlement for or in payment of the account sued on," the debtor was entitled to a credit for the amount of the note, although the maker and first indorser became applicants for the benefit of the insolvent laws and were finally discharged. Berry v. Griffin, 69 D. 123.

A written request to charge the jury must be applicable to facts and to law, or the court need not notice it; and the court may give the charge with verbal modifications, but the whole taken together must be correct. Campbell v. Miller, 95 D. 389; Fulton v. Maccracken, 81 D. 620; Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 39 D. 640.

3. What prayers are proper. — A party may ask an instruction on the testimony of a single witness, though there is other testimony on the same point. Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 39 D. 640.

A party may ask an instruction as to the applicability and effect of evidence when testimony is taken under a commission, and the parts that are admissible are so inseparably blended with those that are not that distinct objections cannot be made. Pettigrew v. Barnum, 69 D. 212.

It is no objection to a charge asked for by a party that he asks for less than he is entitled to upon the facts submitted to the jury. Trieber v. Knabe, 71 D. 607.

A prayer is not erroneous, as assuming the existence of a partnership, where the jury are left to find that the note sued upon was "discounted for the use and benefit of the defendants, under the firm name of Fulton and Linn, and that they received the proceeds of said note." Fulton v. Maccracken, 81 D. 620.

If counsel, in a case tried by the court without a jury, desires to present points of law, as applicable to the facts established, or sought to be established, upon which the court might be called to charge a jury, were there a jury in the case, the proper course is to present them in the form of propositions, preceding them with a statement that counsel makes the following points, or counsel contends as follows. Touchard v. Crow, 81 D. 108.

A prayer may raise a question of law out of the facts enumerated in it, and demand an opinion upon it, not as conclusive of the plaintiff's right to recover, but as ancillary to that right. Parkhurst v. Northern Central R. R. Co., 81 D. 648.

A prayer should not be rejected because an apparently independent proposition contained in it is erroneous, when it is limited by another more definite and substantial proposition, with which it is so connected as to form one entire proposition. Ib.

91. *What prayers should be granted. — A party is entitled to an instruction containing even a hypothetical statement of law whenever there is any competent and relevant testimony, however slight, upon the point. Farish v. Reigl, 62 D. 666; Bradford v. Marbury, 46 D. 264; Plummer v. Gheen, 14 D. 572; Clealand v. Walker, 46 D. 238; Cook v. Wood, 76 D. 677.

Where there is no tendency of proof to a conclusion from conflicting evidence, it is certainly a right of the parties to have from the court a declaration of the legal effect of the evidence. Rhodes v. Otis, 73 D. 439.

A general charge on the point raised is sufficient to substantially comply with the request to charge upon it. Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Schreffler, 82 D. 501.

A party may require the court's opinion on a question of law arising upon any hypothesis as to the facts in testimony in the cause. Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 39 D. 640.

A party liable to be prejudiced has the privilege of asking an explanatory charge. Taylor v. Kelly, 68 D. 150.

The direction of the court upon the effect of testimony in a cause may always be asked by a party, without reserving objections as to its admissibility or effect at the time of its introduction. Inloes v. Amer. Exch. Bank, 69 D. 190.

An instruction may be had upon any given statement of facts, only when it is subordinate to or in aid of a theory which embraces all the facts material to establish or defeat the right in controversy. Adams v. Capron, 83 D. 566.

Under the evidence showing a constructive delivery, either party has the right to ask instructions of the court as to the legal effect of any particular circumstance which may be offered to the jury, and from which the delivery is to be deduced. Atwell v. Miller, 61 D. 294.

A party defending against an obligation on account of misrepresentations, etc., is entitled to specific instructions to the jury directing their attention to the particular fact in which the alleged misrepresentations, etc., consist. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Deale, 79 D. 673.

The court is precluded from instructing the jury as in case of a nonsuit, where the plaintiff omits to prove a material fact; but the defendant may in such case move the court to instruct the jury that if the given fact was not proved they should find in his favor. Deahler v. Beers, 83 D. 274.

92. What may be properly refused.† — Abstract instructions should not be given.

Porter v. Robinson, 13 D. 153; Irish v. Smith, 11 D. 648; Hathorn v. Stinson, 25 D. 228;

* What prayers should be granted, see note, 98 D. 126, 127.

† What prayers may be refused, see note, 99 D. 127-128.

Oresinger v. Welch, 45 D. 565; Zachary v. Pace, 47 D. 744; Stevenson v. McReary, 51 D. 102; Pennington v. Yell, 52 D. 282; Cole v. Sprowl, 56 D. 696; Benham v. Rowe, 56 D. 342; Cowles v. Bacon, 56 D. 371; Jellison v. Goodwin, 69 D. 62; Hunt v. Crane, 69 D. 381; Crommelin v. Thiess, 70 D. 499; Gunn v. Howell, 73 D. 484.

Instructions substantially embraced in the general charge, or one which is abstract and not warranted by the evidence, should be refused. McCown v. Schrimpf, 73 D. 221; Doty v. Strong, 40 D. 773.

The court need not charge upon a point not arising upon the evidence. Harvey v. Thomas, 36 D. 141; Newman v. Foster, 34 D. 98; Towle v. Leavitt, 55 D. 195; Marshall v. Haney, 59 D. 92; Johnson v. Jennings, 60 D. 323; Pembecot R. R. Co. v. White, 66 D. 257; Treat v. Lord, 66 D. 298; Andre v. Bodman, 71 D. 628; Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. George, 71 D. 239; Abbott v. Gatch, 71 D. 635; Hosley v. Brooks, 71 D. 252; Cooke v. England, 92 D. 618.

Instructions should not assume facts as proved, but should be hypothetical. Floyd v. Ricks, 58 D. 374. And instructions based on rejected testimony may properly be refused. Pleasant v. Scott, 76 D. 403.

The court need not give instructions irrelevant to the evidence offered. Hanse v. N. O. Ins. Co., 29 D. 456; Stout v. McAdams, 33 D. 441; Pomroy v. Parmlee, 74 D. 328; Winston v. Taylor, 75 D. 112; Brown v. Illius, 71 D. 49. And their relevancy must be affirmatively shown by the party complaining. Conger v. Dean, 68 D. 93.

Instructions on mere hypothetical points of law, however correct, need not be given. New Brunswick etc. Transp. Co. v. Tiers, 64 D. 394; Melledge v. Boston Iron Co., 51 D. 59; McIntyre v. Kline, 64 D. 163; Andre v. Bodman, 71 D. 628.

The court need not give an instruction which has been once given. Raver v. Webster, 66 D. 96; Pettigrew v. Barnum, 69 D. 212; Haly v. Markel, 92 D. 182; Price v. Alexander, 52 D. 526; Holbrook v. Utica etc. R. R. Co., 64 D. 502.

The court is not obliged to give an opinion upon the weight of the testimony. Vincent v. Stinehour, 29 D. 145.

A request to charge that one of several matters constitutes a good defense, where each would not do so, may be disregarded by the judge. Bowman v. Teall, 35 D. 562.

The denial of a motion for an instruction containing several propositions is not error if any of the propositions are untenable. For the court is not bound to divide a question involving several members, some of which are competent and some not, and to admit those which are competent. Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 39 D. 640.

An instruction that there is no evidence to prove a particular fact should be refused if there is any evidence whatever tending to prove that fact. Id.

Where part of an instruction asked for is good and part bad, the court may reject the whole, according to its merits, as presented in its entirety. Budd v. Brooke, 43 D. 321; Birney v. Printing Tel. Co., 81 D. 607.

The refusal of a prayer for instructions may be right, although it was made on a wrong construction of the evidence, provided the instruction was one that ought not to be given. Budd v. Brooke, 43 D. 321.

An instruction that may mislead the jury by stating only a part of the evidence, and that if the jury believe the evidence so stated, the plaintiff must recover, but omitting material facts, should be refused. Stockton v. Frey, 45 D. 138.

The court is not bound to give an opinion on a legal question arising on part of the evidence as stated in a prayer for instructions. Melledge v. Boston Iron Co., 51 D. 59.

Instructions on a point assumed by counsel should not be given, without some evidence from which it might be fairly inferred. Haines v. Stauffer, 53 D. 493.

Where evidence is conflicting, on a question of fact material to the defense, the plaintiff is not entitled to a charge asserting his right to a recovery on the whole evidence. Woolfork v. Sullivan, 58 D. 305.

Refusal to give instructions is not error, where they would have accomplished nothing, if given, for the party asking them, or where their refusal does not injure him. Gunn v. Todd, 64 D. 231.

The court is not bound to charge the jury as to the legal effect of the entire evidence, unless, after concession of all points upon which there was a conflict of evidence, the party asking the charge is entitled thereto. Rhodes v. Otis, 73 D. 439.

The court may properly decline to call especial attention of the jury to a particular part of the evidence, by instructions as to the weight to which it is entitled, or the purposes for which it may be considered by them. Castro v. Illius, 73 D. 277.

An instruction whose object is to declare facts enumerated therein to be competent evidence in a case is properly refused, since the court, by admitting the evidence, has already declared it competent. Williams v. Christian Female College, 77 D. 569.

The court is not bound to give an instruction, where the effect of it would, perhaps, be to cause the jury to attach too great importance to evidence too meager to sustain a verdict upon the principle involved in the instruction. Blankenship v. Douglas, 82 D. 608.

The refusal of the court to grant a prayer which submits a question of law to the jury is not ground for a reversal. Cecil Bank v. Barry, 83 D. 553.

A requested instruction is properly refused

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

when it calls upon the court to take from the jury the determination of facts, or when the case does not show the facts to which the requested instruction relates. Brackets v. Persons Unknown, 87 D. 548.

It is not error to refuse to give numerous propositions in gross as a charge to the jury where some of them are plainly erroneous; and under an exception to such refusal, the question as to whether the remaining propositions were correct is one which the appellate court will not consider. Mages v. Badger, 90 D. 691.

An instruction is properly refused which does not include all of the facts material to be considered in determining the issue presented by it, if the effect of giving it would be to exclude from the consideration of the jury the material facts not referred to in it. Cornelius v. Burford, 91 D. 309.

Where counsel in his argument takes a certain position with regard to the effect which certain evidence should have, and the court charges in accordance therewith, counsel cannot after such charge ask the court for a charge giving to such evidence a different effect. Wilnot v. Howard, 94 D. 338.

A prayer offered by one party, and granted upon the concession of the other, should be withdrawn by the court, if it thereafter be found not to express the law applicable to the case. Northern C. R. R. Co. v. State, 96 D. 545.

An instruction is practically refused which is not marked by the court as either given or refused. Vastine v. Wilding, 100 D. 347.

A party is not entitled to an instruction on a patent not located on the plats in the cause nor introduced in evidence. Casey v. Inloes, 39 D. 658.

A defect in a declaration is not subject of instruction to a jury. Brittain v. Doylestown Bank, 39 D. 110.

An instruction based upon a different state of facts from that proved is properly refused, as where an instruction was asked in an insurance case that a sale of damaged goods at auction by the assured, without the insurer's consent, did not furnish a proper measure of damages, when the proof was that the insurer consented to the sale. Henderson v. W. M. F. I. Co., 43 D. 176.

An instruction to the effect that an actual delivery is necessary to make valid sale, in all cases where it depends upon delivery alone, will be refused. Atwell v. Miller, 61 D. 294.

An instruction placing a construction on a contract at variance with its plain meaning must be refused. Benson v. Atwood, 71 D. 611.

An instruction that a man claiming to own land is bound to know the state of his own title is not in all cases correct, and is properly refused. Davis v. Davis, 85 D. 157.

A judge may refuse to charge upon the effect of a given state of facts when the facts are themselves in dispute. It was therefore not error to refuse to charge the jury that there was no evidence that the accident which was the basis of the action was caused by the sole negligence or want of care of the defendants and their servants, and that the verdict must therefore be in their favor. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co. v. Hagan, 86 D. 541.

An instruction is properly refused which takes from the jury the power of determining whether a railroad company was acting in the capacity of a common carrier, or of a warehouseman, when the loss occurred, if the evidence upon this point is conflicting. North Missouri R. R. Co. v. Akers, 96 D. 183.

93. Modifying prayer.* — A party has no right to modify his opponent's prayer for instruction, based upon a certain hypothesis as to the facts, so as to include other facts, against the will of the party moving for the instruction, and it is error to permit any such modification. Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 39 D. 640.

The court may qualify instructions asked, so as to make them conformable to law. Walker v. McDowell, 43 D. 476.

Thus in an action against two for a tort, where instructions are asked, assuming the relation of principal and agent between the defendants, to the effect that the agency must be proved, and that the assumed principal is not liable unless the agent was acting within the scope of his authority when he committed the tort complained of, and did not transcend his authority, nor unless such agent acted with the principal's assent or under his directions, which must be proved, and cannot be presumed from the agency, the court may give such instructions with the modification that they are correct so far as the alleged principal is sought to be made liable for the agent's acts. Johnson v. Barber, 50 D. 416.

A charge should be given in the terms in which it is asked, where it is conformable to law and authorized by the evidence adduced. Clealand v. Walker, 46 D. 238.

The court is not bound to give a requested instruction in the precise words of the request. It is sufficient if it be substantially given in any form, so that the jury may not misunderstand the law of the case. Treat v. Lord, 66 D. 293; Tainter v. Lombard, 87 D. 552.

A party has the privilege of raising any question of law arising out of the facts of the case, and to demand the opinion of the court distinctly upon it; and the opposite party has the equal privilege of asking an opinion on additional facts not embraced in the hypothesis assumed by the adversary in his prayer, but not the privilege of control-

* Modifying the prayer, see note, 99 D. 123, 124.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

ling or modifying that hypothesis. Birney v. Printing Tel. Co., 81 D. 607.

A party is entitled to a full, fair, and explicit answer to his prayer for instruction, if pertinent; but where the evidence so requires, the court should make such qualification as will adapt the instruction to the facts, and enable the jury to make the necessary discrimination and decide the cause correctly. Hays v. Paul, 88 D. 569.

The court is not bound to give in a charge a general proposition, although it be the law, unless it be applicable to the facts of the case. If such a charge is requested, the court may refuse it entirely, or may modify it and make it applicable. Southern Eap. Co. v. Newby, 91 D. 783.

The court may reject all the prayers asked, and instruct the jury in its own words, or it may grant the prayers with such explanations or qualifications as may be necessary to a proper understanding of the case. Higgins v. Carlton, 92 D. 666.

Where an instruction asked contains two independent branches, one of which states the law correctly, while the other does not, that branch which states the law correctly should be severed from the other and given to the jury. Peshine v. Shepperson, 94 D. 468.

Where the refusal of an improper instruction is calculated to mislead the jury, the court should explain the refusal, or give such an instruction as will make the matter clear to the jury. Id.

Where an instruction asked is equivocal, being correct upon one construction of it, the court, instead of refusing it, should amend it so as to insure its being understood by the jury in the proper sense, and give it to the jury as so amended. Ward v. Churn, 98 D. 749; Rosenbaum v. Weeden, 98 D. 737.

The court may generally refuse an instruction asked which does not correctly state the law, and is not bound to modify it, or give any other instruction in its place. Rosenbaum v. Weeden, 98 D. 737.

Misleading instructions to the jury should be explained or modified, or be refused. Snyder v. Brosse, 99 D. 551.

5. Further Instructions: Directing Verdict.

94. Further instructions after retirement. — On the application of the jury, it is proper for the judge to instruct them, in an action for tort, what amount of damages will carry costs. Elliott v. Brown, 20 D. 644.

Charging the jury in the absence of counsel is error, even though the instructions do not vary, in the estimation of the judge, from those previously given in the presence of the parties. Davis v. Fish, 48 D. 387.

It is settled practice in New Hampshire, that upon receiving a written request from the jury, the court may send them written instructions in the absence of counsel; such request and instructions must be filed with the verdict by the court, so that they may be seen by counsel. Leighton v. Sargent, 64 D. 323.

It is not error to instruct a jury in the absence of a party and his counsel, where the jury, after retiring, come into court while it is still in session and ask further instructions, and the absent party and his counsel are first loudly called for at the door. Preston v. Bowers, 82 D. 430.

Where, after a jury had retired to consider their verdict, they again came into open court, and, at their request, there received additional instructions in the absence of the defendant and his counsel, — held, 1. That such instruction was not a privy instruction or communication to the jury; 2. That the giving of notice to absent counsel or suitors, before proceeding in causes in which they are interested, is a matter of grace or favor on the part of the court, and not a legal obligation or duty. Chapman v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 7 R. 81.

A jury came into court and reported that they could not agree, and "stood eleven to one, and divided on two hundred dollars." The judge told them it would be better for one or both sides to yield, and that a disagreement over so small a matter would be unfortunate. Held, error. Goodsell v. Seeley, 41 R. 183.

95. Directing a verdict. — A verdict may be directed independent of the consent of the parties, whenever the party on whom the burden of proof lies wholly fails to sustain it by evidence. People v. Cook, 59 D. 451.

Where there is no evidence to warrant the jury in finding a material fact, the judge is not at liberty to leave it to them to determine whether or not such fact is proved; but he should direct them to find that it is not proved. Story v. Brennan, 69 D. 629.

The court does not always invade the province of the jury by directing a verdict. It has a right to pronounce its judgment on the legal effect of admitted facts; and on such facts it is not only the province, but the imperative duty, of the court to determine. Todd v. Old Colony etc. R. R. Co., 83 D. 679.

A party is not entitled to have the jury instructed to render a verdict in his favor, upon a hypothetical statement of the facts of a case, if the statement omits material facts upon which testimony has been offered, and where the finding of the omitted facts against the party would change the result of the case. Cleveland etc. R. R. Co. v. Crawford, 15 R. 633.

VII. THE VERDICT, OR FINDING.

96. Custody and conduct of the jury.

— A jurymen should not converse with any person other than a fellow-juror, upon the merits of the cause under consideration. Dana v. Roberts, 1 D. 38.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

97. Taking out papers, etc. — Sending out with the jury, in an action for malicious prosecution, the defendant's affidavit before the magistrate, in instituting the prosecution complained of, is not error. Selbert v. Price, 40 D. 525.

Depositions sent to a jury, which contain improper matter, will vitiate the verdict, unless the same are wholly immaterial or were sent through mistake. Kittredge v. Elliott, 41 D. 717.

The jury are not required to take all the papers of the case with them into the consulting-room. Phillips v. Runnels, 43 D. 109.

Sending out of papers with jury is in discretion of the court, as a general rule, with some exceptions. Little Schuylkill N. etc. Co. v. Richards, 98 D. 209.

It is error for the jury, after retiring for consultation, to send for and have read to them a decision in the state reports. Reed v. Roberts, 71 D. 210.

Permitting the jury to take to the jury-room pleadings in a case is not error. Brail v. Moran, 83 D. 772.

Pleadings in a cause are for the consideration of the parties and the court, and not for the jury. It is, therefore, not good practice to allow the jury to take the declaration to their room when they retire to consider their verdict. Good v. Martin, 91 D. 703.

A deed offered in evidence to prove the plaintiff's title is competent for the consideration of the jury, and may be taken to their room with such other documentary evidence as is ordinarily committed to the custody of a jury, notwithstanding the deed contains conditions and reservations not binding upon the defendant; the jury being instructed that the deed is only competent to prove the plaintiff's title to the premises, and is not to be considered at all upon any other point. Moore v. Davis, 6 R. 460.

It is not error for the judge to allow the jury to take to their room written instructions asked by one of the parties and refused. Langworthy v. Connelly, 45 R. 117.

98. Mode of arriving at verdict. — A juror having knowledge of facts not in evidence has no right to consider them in making up a verdict. Before he can do so, he should be sworn and testify to the facts, precisely as any other witness. Ottawa Gas Light Co. v. Graham, 81 D. 263.

99. — or of assessing damages. — If the jury, in the decision of a cause, determine the amount of damage by a resort to chance, it is a good cause for an arrest of judgment. Warner v. Robinson, 1 D. 38.

The amount of a verdict is improperly made up where each juror names a certain sum, and the aggregate of the sums specified is divided by the number of the jury. Sawyer v. Hannibal etc. R. R. Co., 90 D. 382; Elledge v. Todd, 34 D. 616; Wilson v. Berryman, 63 D. 78.

The verdict of a jury is not vitiated where one juror, without any knowledge of the others, took the different amounts suggested by his fellow-jurors, and having ascertained the result of one twelfth of the aggregate sum, proposed that the verdict should be for that amount, which was then assented to by the others. Bennett v. Baker, 34 D. 655.

A verdict of a jury may be determined by average, or other similar means, provided the jurors agree upon such sum, after it is found, as their verdict; but they must not previously be bound by the contingent result, and must reserve to themselves the right to dissent therefrom. Wilson v. Berryman, 63 D. 78.

100. Reception of the verdict. — A mistake in stating the title of a case in entering a verdict is a mistake of the clerk, not of the jury. Ramsey v. McCauley, 58 D. 134.

The refusal of a judge to make special inquiry of the jury, on the morning after they had rendered their verdict, and after their separation, as to their finding upon a particular point, constitutes no ground of exception, because the inquiry would be too late. These inquiries are always made when the jury render their verdict, and before they separate. Green v. Clay, 87 D. 622.

101. Polling the jury. — A party has the right to have the jury polled, whether the verdict is brought in sealed or delivered ore tenus by the foreman. Denial of this right is error. Rigg v. Cook, 46 D. 462.

The right to have the jury polled is waived by omitting to exercise it when the verdict is opened and received in the presence of the jury. Id.

After a sealed verdict was returned, but before it was opened, one of the jury became insane. The court received the verdict in the presence of the rest of the jury, and denied a request to have them polled. Held, error, and that a venire de novo should be granted. Norvell v. Deval, 11 R. 413.

102. Form and sufficiency of the verdict, generally. — The jury can only find on facts put in issue; to find that a sale is "justifiable" is a conclusion of law beyond their province. Jones v. Zollicoffer, 7 D. 708.

A jury sworn to try a case alone cannot decide on anything not embraced by the issue. Shain v. Markham, 20 D. 232.

The verdict of a jury should respond to the issues which they are sworn to try. Jenkins v. Richardson, 22 D. 82.

* Knowledge of juror, when may be employed in rendering verdict, see note, 81 D. 266, 267.

* Right of party to poll the jury, see note, 80 R. 427-500.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Verdicts at common law might in actions ex delicto be separate, but in actions ex contractu must have been joint. Jones v. Pletcher, 24 D. 716.

A verdict for plaintiff on an issue of non assumpsit where payment is also pleaded, without noticing the latter plea, is informal merely, and not defective in substance. Hanna v. Mills, 34 D. 216.

A verdict in an action on a promissory note, which embraces the principal and interest thereon, is good, although it exceeds the damages claimed in the declaration. Phillips v. Runnels, 43 D. 109.

The jury only should assess damages on a note payable in bank notes. Williamson v. McGinnis, 52 D. 561.

The verdict of a jury should designate not only those of the plaintiffs for whom they find, but also those against whom they find; otherwise, the verdict would be imperfect, as not finding upon all the issues submitted. Settle v. Alton, 52 D. 393.

The circuit court cannot determine whether a jury found in conformity with instructions, when that finding, by the conditional instructions given, was expressly left to depend upon their own judgment as to the state of facts upon which they were to predicate such finding. Britt v. Aylett, 52 D. 282.

Where a particular piece of property is sued for in specie, and not in the alternative of damages, and the property sued for is sequestered for the purpose of keeping it within the jurisdiction of the court, a verdict for the plaintiff is sufficient, without assessing the value of the property. Avery v. Avery, 62 D. 513.

Where a plaintiff sues for two or more causes of action properly joined, to which the defendant pleads the general issue, if the jury in their verdict allow him a specified number of his causes of action and say nothing as to the others, the verdict is sufficient to authorize a judgment for him to the extent to which it finds for him, and will bar a second action for the causes of action not mentioned in express words in said verdict. Wittick v. Traun, 62 D. 778.

In an action of detinue for eight slaves, a verdict is defective which recites, "We find for the plaintiff, and assess the value of the slaves sued for," etc., and which proceeds to name and assess the value of seven of said slaves, without mentioning the eighth, and such verdict is not sufficient to authorize a judgment for plaintiff for any of said slaves. Rice, J., dissenting, held the verdict a good finding for plaintiff for the slaves named, and a finding for defendant for the one not named. Ib.

A verdict which finds that plaintiff has no right or interest in certain property is ordinarily sufficient without finding who, in fact, has such right or interest. McDaniel v. Marygold, 65 D. 786.

A verdict which does not refer to a mortgage in an action upon notes and to foreclosure mortgage, securing the same, leaves it doubtful if the jury passed upon the mortgage, and is defective. Barnett v. Caruth, 73 D. 255.

It is counsel's duty to see that a verdict is signed, and that it is for no more than was ordered. Frink v. Frink, 80 D. 189.

A judgment is erroneous when predicated upon the finding of a jury sworn to try "the issues joined between the parties," but instead of finding upon all the issues, they return a verdict special in form and referring to but one issue. Meighen v. Strong, 80 D. 441.

A judge's finding of facts should state the conclusions of facts, and not merely evidence tending to prove them. Trudo v. Anderson, 81 D. 795.

A joint verdict and a joint judgment thereon cannot be objected to by defendants having separate possessions, and who have been joined as defendants in an action to recover land, where no demand was made at the close of the trial for separate verdicts, and no objection or exception was taken to the verdict on that ground in time to afford an opportunity to correct it. Hicks v. Coleman, 85 D. 103.

No injury can result from a joint verdict in an action to recover real estate, where no damages have been claimed. Ib.

Where an issue is conflict of surveys, the verdict and judgment should respond to this issue, and not merely ratify the correctness of a survey made in a former suit, which constitutes no part of the pleadings. Staford v. King, 94 D. 304.

The object of a verdict is to respond to and decide issues between the parties upon the evidence adduced, and to declare their respective rights as involved in the issue with a certainty, so that the judgment can be entered with like certainty, and the ministerial officers can carry it into execution, without determining additional facts. Ib.

103. — in respect to damages. — In cases only involving questions of value and damage as questions of fact, the jury must, as a general rule, assess the amount of recovery. Cooper v. Poston, 85 D. 610.

104. Power of jury to give interest. — Equity will relieve against a mistake in a verdict by which the jury omitted to give interest. Cohen v. Dubose, 14 D. 709.

The form of a verdict given for a debt and interest should not be for the whole amount as a debt, but the verdict should be given for the debt, and the residue of the amount, being the interest recovered, should be in the shape of damages for the detention of the debt. North R. M. Co. v. Shrewsbury Church, 53 D. 258.

105. Effect of the verdict, generally. — A finding that the plaintiff ought to recover will operate as a finding that there has been an assignment of the bond sued upon, where the plaintiff sues in the character of assignee. Armstrong v. Pressitt, 32 D. 338.

For index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A verdict of a jury on the facts directly in issue in one case is conclusive as to such facts, in a subsequent case between the same parties. Isaacs v. Clark, 36 D. 372.

A verdict rendered when the issue of fact is joined on one count, but before judgment is reached on demurrers to other counts, will be considered as rendered on the first count only. Goodman v. Gay, 53 D. 589.

A verdict is competent evidence of a demand and of judicial ascertainment of it, though no judgment is entered upon it, unless it is stayed, or in some way set aside, and the plaintiff is entitled to have judgment upon it at any time before the right is barred by the statute of limitations. Person v. Barlow, 72 D. 121.

The assignee of a verdict not reduced to judgment in favor of a bank which is afterwards dissolved by judicial decree has a beneficial interest which he is entitled to enforce, and being without remedy at law, not being a party to the record, he is entitled to a decree in equity equivalent to a judgment at law. Ib.

A verdict cannot operate as res judicata, for not until judgment does a matter become res judicata. McReady v. Rogers, 93 D. 333.

106. Effect of uncertainty or repugnancy. — A verdict is not void for uncertainty, which awards the debt mentioned in the declaration and interest subject to a specified credit. Barrett v. Wills, 26 D. 315.

A verdict is sufficient to sustain an appropriate judgment, if any uncertainty that may exist therein can be explained by reference to the record; and therefore, in an action for the recovery of a slave, a verdict in these words, "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, with eighty dollars damages and costs of suit," is sufficient to support a judgment for the slave, and damages and costs of suit. Avery v. Avery, 62 D. 513.

A conditional verdict is bad at common law. Irvine v. Bull, 28 D. 708.

A conditional verdict to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land, by giving damages to be released on a conveyance being made, is erroneous, if the plaintiff's declaration shows a wholly unexecuted verbal contract of which a court of equity would not decree specific performance. Ib.

A condition annexed to a verdict is in nature of injunction to stay proceedings at law, and the verdict is not vitiated by the uncertainty of the condition, which may be reduced to a certainty by the court, either with or without an issue. Henry v. Rainan, 64 D. 703.

A verdict, "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff one cent, and costs to the defendant," is not ambiguous. The words "costs to the defendant," taken in connection with the context, mean that defendant recover costs. Plaintiff can recover no more costs than damages, and the verdict being one cent, the law, and not the jury, determines the question of costs; and in the above verdict the court may properly regard the words "costs to the defendant" as surplusage, and render a judgment for one cent damages, and a like sum in costs, and that defendant recover residue of costs. Conner v. Winton, 65 D. 761.

In an action of ejectment, where the verdict is silent as to one of the plaintiffs, the court is not at liberty to answer for the jury whether the judgment should be for the plaintiff or the defendant, and consequently the verdict is defective. Wood v. McGuire, 63 D. 246.

A verdict must comprehend the whole issue or issues submitted to the jury in a particular cause, and must find certainly, either for or against every party to the suit. Ib.

107. When a general verdict is sufficient. — A general finding by the jury is sufficient in actions of assumpsit. Stout v. Calver, 35 D. 438.

In an action on account, where the statute of frauds is relied upon as a defense, a general verdict in the words, "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, John Smith," is sufficient to authorize a judgment for the amount in controversy. Warren v. Smith, 76 D. 115.

When a case involving two or more issues is submitted to a jury, with evidence tending to sustain them all, and a general verdict is rendered, such verdict is prima facie evidence that all the issues were found in favor of the party for whom it is rendered; and when a judgment on such a verdict is presented by him to defeat a recovery in a subsequent suit brought on the same cause of action, the burden of proving that the verdict in the first suit was rendered upon an issue presenting only a temporary bar, and that such bar has been since removed, or has ceased to operate, is thrown upon the plaintiff. If a party against whom such a verdict is rendered would avoid this effect of a general verdict, he must see to it that the jury by their verdict declare upon what issue it is rendered. White v. Simonds, 78 D. 620.

No error is committed by withdrawing special issues from a jury and receiving a general verdict, if counsel on both sides consent to it, where the jury announce that they cannot agree upon the special issues submitted to them, but can agree upon a general verdict. Mitchell v. Hockett, 85 D. 151.

108. Reconsidering the verdict. — Where a judge, without the express assent of the parties, directed the jury to bring in a sealed verdict, which they did, but when they were polled the next morning, one of them dissented, when the judge directed them to retire, and they brought in the same verdict, all concurring, the court refused to set it aside for the irregularity. Douglass v. Tousey, 20 D. 616.

A party will be presumed to consent to the jury's separation upon bringing in a sealed verdict, if he does not object when the order is made. Id.

109. Amending and correcting the verdict.—The court will reject words in a verdict as surplusage, to have it conform to the issue. Apthorp v. Backus, 1 D. 28.

In assault and battery several pleas and issues were joined, and the jury assessed damages for the plaintiff. This was held as a substantial finding of all the issues in favor of the plaintiff, and it becomes the duty of the court to mold the verdict accordingly. Worford v. Isbel, 4 D. 633.

An informal verdict in an action of debt, by which more than was demanded is given to the plaintiff, will be amended by considering the surplus as damages, it appearing that the verdict was for the debt and interest. Friedly v. Scheetz, 11 D. 691.

A verdict defective or erroneous in a mere matter of form, not affecting the merits or the rights of the parties, will be amended by the court to conform it to the issue. Little v. Larrabee, 11 D. 43.

Error in a verdict appearing as a matter of calculation will be corrected and a proper verdict ordered entered. Hanse v. N. O. Ins. Co., 29 D. 456.

Where the jury find a special verdict, and, submitting the case thereby appearing to the judgment of the court, conclude by a general finding for plaintiff or defendant, as the law of the case may be, the conclusion may be disregarded, and the proper verdict entered, where the law of the case but warrants a verdict in favor of one of the parties of a more restricted kind. Hutchison v. Kelly, 39 D. 250.

A party cannot complain of a modification of the verdict of a jury, made by the court, but not to his prejudice. Rigg v. Cook, 46 D. 462.

The court may mold a verdict so as to meet the facts of the case and the ascertained conclusions of the jury. McMahan v. McMahan, 53 D. 481.

An informal and erroneous verdict may be amended to conform it to the law and the intention of the jury, and a direction to the jury in an action for obstructing a private way, where they have returned a general verdict for the plaintiff without adding damages, to amend the verdict so as to give some damages, is not error. Pearce v. McClenaghan, 55 D. 710.

A mistake made by the clerk in preparing a blank verdict for a jury, in the Christian name of one of the defendants, may be corrected by the court after the return of the verdict, so as to make it conform to the writ and other papers in the case, the jury being present, and approving the verdict as amended. Inhab. of Readfield v. Shaver, 79 D. 592.

A verdict may be amended when it furnishes all necessary facts; as where the jury, in consequence of a defective deed, find for the demandants for the entire premises described in a writ of entry, when, in fact, they owned only an aliquot part, and where the defect in the deed was not discovered at the trial. In such case, the verdict may be amended in conformity with the truth of the case, as disclosed by the deed in which the defect appears. Peabody v. Hewett, 83 D. 486.

The foreman of a jury, by mistake, announced a verdict different from that agreed to by the jury, and the verdict was so recorded. Held, that affidavits of the jurors were competent evidence to prove the mistake. Dakruple v. Williams, 20 R. 544.

Where the jury err in a matter of substance, by returning a verdict for the wrong party, or for a larger or smaller sum than was intended, and then separate, the verdict cannot be amended, but must be set aside; and the affidavit of the jurors is admissible to prove such mistake. Little v. Larrabee, 11 D. 43.

Every reasonable construction should be adopted for the purpose of working a verdict into form, so as to make it serve; but this rule is limited to cases where the jury have expressed their meaning in an informal manner. The court has no power to supply substantial omissions. Wood v. McGuire, 63 D. 246.

Altering a verdict on a certificate of a mistake in rendering it is not permissible after the verdict has been received and recorded, and the jury have been dismissed. Walters v. Jenkins, 16 D. 585; Rigg v. Cook, 46 D. 462; Settle v. Alison, 52 D. 393.

Such an improper alteration is the subject of a writ of error. Walters v. Jenkins, 16 D. 585.

110. Impeaching the verdict, generally.—A motion to set aside a verdict and reinstate a case is equivalent to a motion for a new trial, giving the court the same power over the verdict, and is therefore a proper remedy for mistake in the verdict. Lucas v. Lucas, 76 D. 642.

111. Grounds for setting it aside.—The court will not set aside a verdict upon the merits for mere technical defects in the declaration, where enough appears to show the foundation of the action, and the verdict and recovery may be pleaded in bar to another action for the same cause. Baldwin v. O'Brian, 1 D. 208.

Relief cannot be given against a verdict as being contrary to equity, unless the plaintiff knew the fact to be different from what the jury have found it, and the defendant was not aware of it at the time of trial; or where there was no jurisdiction at law; or where the verdict is obtained by fraud. Guthrie v. Kilpatrick, 6 D. 557.

Estoppel is binding upon the jury where it has not been waived by the party in pleading, and a finding contrary thereto may be disregarded by the court. Butler v. Newsom, 17 D. 565.

A verdict will not be set aside because the jurors by whom it was given knew of facts affecting the credibility of the witnesses in the case. McKain v. Love, 27 D. 401.

A verdict for four hundred dollars for three months' breach of agreement not to engage in a certain kind of business for five years will not be set aside as unwarranted by law, and excessive, where the injury to the plaintiff, as by diverting his trade, was not capable of exact proof or definite computation, but depended very much on general estimate, which was peculiarly within the province of the jury; and no exception lies to the exercise of the discretion of the presiding judge in overruling a motion to set aside the verdict as unwarranted by law upon the evidence, especially where no instruction was asked at the trial on the limit of damages which the jury would be warranted in finding upon the evidence. Doyle v. Dixon, 93 D. 80.

112. What errors are cured by verdict. — Nothing will be presumed after verdict but what must have been necessarily proved under the averments of the declaration; and therefore the total want of an averment of a fact which constitutes the gist of the action will not be cured, after verdict, by the statute of jeofails. Chichester v. Vass, 1 D. 509.

A misconception of action is not cured by a verdict, under our statute of jeofails, where the verdict itself is objected to as given under a misdirection. Truss v. Old, 18 D. 748.

A verdict does not cure the want of a cause of action in the declaration. Irvine v. Bull, 28 D. 708.

The defects in a declaration amendable by leave of court are cured by the verdict. And a neglect to allege, in the declaration in an action against a constable for not executing an execution, that the alderman had jurisdiction of the case in which the execution issued, is a defect in form merely, which might have been so amended. Corson v. Hunt, 53 D. 568.

After verdict, it is too late to object that a note pleaded as a set-off for a certain sum was introduced, and allowed as for a greater sum. Drew v. Towle, 64 D. 309.

113. Special verdicts. — It is sufficient if the special verdict finds facts amounting to usury, though it does not expressly find the corrupt agreement. Gibson v. Fristoe, 1 D. 502.

A court cannot look beyond a special verdict for the facts. La Frombois v. Jackson, 18 D. 463.

A special verdict should find material facts, and not the evidence of those facts. Ib.

A special verdict should find the fact to be decided on, or evidence which conclusively proves it. Ib.

Facts not included within a special verdict will not be presumed to exist. Lawrence v. Beaudien, 25 D. 155.

A special verdict is irregular and unauthorized which presents only the question of the competency of the evidence offered to prove the incorporation of the corporation plaintiff. Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 24 D. 51.

114. Sealed verdicts. — When the parties agree upon a sealed verdict, either party may have the jury polled when they come into court, and any of the jurors may dissent from the verdict to which they had previously agreed. Rout v. Sherwood, 5 D. 191.

There is no legal verdict but a public verdict delivered openly in court, and until it is received and recorded the jurors may alter it. Ib.

Jurors must be present personally in court when their verdict is opened, although they were directed to bring in a sealed verdict. If any of them then dissent, the verdict cannot be received. Rigg v. Cook, 46 D. 462.

115. Verdict subject to the opinion of the court. — A verdict subject to the opinion of the court upon facts stated authorizes the court to draw the same conclusions from such facts as the jury would have been entitled to draw. Jackson v. Whitbeck, 16 D. 454.

116. Findings by the court. — If the facts of the case are agreed upon, and the questions of law alone are submitted to the court for its judgment, the court can only respond to the questions of law arising from the admitted facts, and will not infer another fact and pronounce the law arising thereon. Bott v. McCoy, 56 D. 223.

A finding that a proposed railroad "will be specially injurious to the property of the plaintiffs, and other property similarly situated," must be construed to mean that the railroad would be specially injurious to the property of each of the plaintiffs in severalty, and in like manner specially injurious to the separate property of others similarly situated; and that although the cause of the injury would be common, the special injury to each would be several and direct, and not merely consequential. Milham v. Sharp, 84 D. 314.

A party requiring a finding on a point should specify the point, without dictating the terms of the finding. Miller v. Steen, 59 D. 124.

The sufficiency of evidence to justify its findings can be reviewed in the court which found the facts only upon motion for new trial. Prince v. Lynch, 99 D. 427.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A court cannot re-examine evidence and substitute different findings of fact after trial and rendition of judgment and filing of findings. Ib.

VIII. TRIAL IN CRIMINAL CASES.

1. Right of Trial by Jury.

117. Generally.—The essential features of a trial by jury as known at common law were intended to be preserved and its benefits secured to the accused in all criminal cases by the provisions of the Ohio constitution, that "the right of trial by jury shall be inviolate," and that "in any trial in any court" the party accused shall be allowed "a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county." Work v. State, 59 D. 671.

118. Constitutionality of statutes affecting the right.—Every person prosecuted for crime has a constitutional guaranty of trial by jury, and no law can be enacted which shall take away this right or interpose such impediments to its exercise as unnecessarily or unreasonably to impair it. Inhabitants of Saco v. Wentworth, 58 D. 786.

An act which makes it difficult for accused to obtain trial by jury, beyond what public necessity requires, impairs individual rights, and is inconsistent with the provision of the constitution which guarantees their protection. Ib.

An act requiring conditions for the purpose of preventing a trial by jury is at war with the spirit of the constitution, and so far as it deprives one of this means of protection, it is void. Ib.

A statute requiring an accused, as a prerequisite for obtaining a jury trial, to give a bond in a large penal sum, conditioned to be void if he shall abstain from all violations of the provisions of the act during the pendency of the appeal taken for the purpose of securing a trial by jury, contravenes the provision of the constitution which guarantees to the accused a speedy trial by jury, and is therefore void; and no action can be maintained on such a bond. Ib.

A statute authorizing the grand jury, where an infant under the age of sixteen years is charged with crime, and the charge appears to be supported by evidence sufficient to put the accused upon trial, instead of finding an indictment, to return to the court that the accused is a suitable person to be committed to the house of refuge, and directing the court thereupon to order the commitment without trial by jury, is constitutional. Prescott v. State, 2 R. 388.

119. Waiver of trial by jury.—A jury may be waived in a criminal case. State v. Holt, 47 R. 544; but such waiver can only be upon the consent of both the prisoner and the state. State v. Mead, 30 D. 661.

A statute providing that in criminal prosecutions the accused may elect to be tried by the court instead of a jury, and giving the court power in such cases to try the cases and render judgment, is constitutional, and such election will bind the accused. State v. Worden, 33 R. 27; Connelly v. State, 31 R. 34.

120. Such waiver held unconstitutional.—In a criminal case the prisoner may not waive a jury. State v. Carman, 50 R. 741; and a statute enabling a prisoner accused of felony to waive a jury trial is unconstitutional. In re Staff, 53 R. 285.

121. Trial by less than twelve.—Number of the jury at common law could never be less than twelve. Carpenter v. State, 34 D. 116; and they must be impartially selected, and must unanimously concur in the guilt of the accused before a conviction can be had. Work v. State, 59 D. 671.

The number of jurors necessary at common law cannot be diminished, nor a verdict authorized short of a unanimous concurrence of all the jurors by the general assembly of Ohio; and the statute of 1853 authorizing a conviction upon the finding of a jury of six is void. Ib.

Diminishing the number of jurors impairs the right of trial by jury. Ib.

An act allowing juries of six men before justices of the peace is not unconstitutional, under a constitution protecting right of jury trial as at common law, for juries were not required in these courts at common law, and in such case a jury of any number may be authorized within the discretion of the legislative body. Ib.

Where an issue is submitted to eleven persons, their finding cannot be considered as the verdict of a jury, upon which a court would be warranted in pronouncing judgment. Carpenter v. State, 34 D. 116.

On the trial of an indictment, the prosecuting attorney proposed to go to trial with less than the legal number of names of jurors in the box to be drawn from. The defendant's attorney consented. The prisoner being convicted, — held, that such consent did not validate the conviction. State v. Davis, 27 R. 387.

In a trial of a capital felony, the prisoner is not bound by his consent to be tried by less than twelve jurors. Territory v. Ah Wah, 47 R. 341; but on an indictment for forgery, the prisoner is bound by his consent to be tried by less than twelve jurors. State v. Kaufman, 23 R. 143.

2. Bringing on the Trial.

122. Right to speedy trial.*—A speedy trial is one conducted according to fixed rules, regulations, and proceedings of law, free from vexatious, capricious, and oppressive delays, created by the ministers of justice. Nixon v. State, 41 D. 601.

* Right to speedy trial, see note, 41 D. 604-607.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A statute giving a prisoner the right to an examination of the indictment, "at least two entire days before the trial," means two judicial days, and hence excludes the fraction of a day of its service. Ib.

Where a trial cannot possibly be commenced till the latter part of the last day of the term, its postponement till the next term is no infringement of the prisoner's right to a speedy trial. Ib.

A constitutional provision guaranteeing to every citizen a speedy and public trial in all criminal accusations is intended to prevent the government from oppressing its citizens by holding criminal prosecutions suspended over them, and to prevent delay in the administration of justice by obliging the courts to proceed with dispatch in the trial of criminal charges. Ex parte Turman, 84 D. 598.

A constitutional guaranty of a speedy and public trial of criminal charges does not mean that, in all the possible vicissitudes of human affairs, a person who is accused of a crime shall have a speedy and public trial in due form of law, because there may be times when the civil administration will be suspended by the force of uncontrollable circumstances. Ib.

A constitutional provision guaranteeing speedy trial to a person accused of crime extends to all grades of crime, but it cannot be held to place the accused upon such vantage ground that the state cannot demand from him such services as, under the circumstances of the country, he ought for the public good, or public safety, to render. Ib.

123. Service of copy of indictment. — A prisoner charged with felony may demand a copy of the indictment, on arraignment, and the refusal of it, if preserved by bill of exceptions, is error; but the right is waived by pleading and going to trial without objection. McKinney v. People, 43 D. 65.

124. — and lists of witnesses and jurors. — Under the act providing that one accused and indicted for murder shall have a list of the jury delivered to him two entire days at least before the trial, the accused is entitled to a list of the talesmen for the same length of time, where a tales has been awarded, unless such right be waived. State v. Aaron, 7 D. 592.

A list of the witnesses before the grand jury, examined in a capital case, will be directed to be furnished to the prisoner's counsel. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 491.

A defendant in a criminal action cannot object to a witness for the state on the ground that no notice of such witness had been given him, and that his name did not appear in the list of witnesses sworn before the grand jury, under a statute requiring that the defendant in a criminal cause shall be furnished before arraignment with "a list of the witnesses who gave testimony before the grand jury." Keener v. State, 63 D. 269.

3. The Place of Trial, and how Changed.

125. The proper place of trial. — A statute providing that offenses committed within one hundred rods of the dividing line between two counties may be prosecuted and punished in either is not in violation of a constitutional provision securing to the accused the right to trial by a jury of the "county or district" wherein the offense was committed, and which county or district shall have previously been ascertained by law. State v. Stewart, 50 R. 388. Contra, State v. Lowe, 45 R. 570.

126. Grounds for change of venue.* — At common law the venue in a criminal case may be changed on application of the prisoner. State v. Albee, 60 R. 325.

4. Continuance and Postponement.

127. Grounds, generally. — Rules governing applications for continuance of causes are, in general, the same, both in civil and criminal cases, though in the latter the matter is to be scanned more closely. Hyde v. State, 67 D. 630.

128. Popular excitement, and prejudice. — A motion for a continuance of a criminal cause on account of popular excitement against the prisoner is within the discretion of the judge to overrule, on the ground that five months had elapsed from the alleged time of the committal of the offense, which, in his opinion, was sufficient time for the subsidence of any popular excitement arising out of the circumstances of the case; and no reason appearing to induce doubt that he has exercised his discretion wisely, his decision will be sustained in the appellate court. Roberts v. State, 58 D. 528. Compare State v. Norris, 1 D. 564.

A continuance will not be granted on account of public prejudice and excitement precluding a fair trial in a criminal case, where sufficient time has elapsed to allow the excitement to cool. Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493.

Public excitement prevailing against one accused of crime, in the county where it was committed, added to other causes insufficient in themselves, ought to turn the scale in favor of a motion for a continuance. Madrox v. State, 79 D. 307.

When the principles of justice require a postponement of a criminal trial, it is the duty of the court to see that the trial is not precipitated to the injury of defendant. Ib.

129. Non-attendance of witnesses.† — To entitle a party to postponement of trial

* See note on change of venue, 74 D. 241-245.

† Rules as to continuance for absence of witnesses, see note, 74 D. 141-142.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

on ground of absence of witnesses, three things are necessary: 1. To satisfy the court that the persons are material witnesses; 2. To show that the party applying has been guilty of no laches nor neglect; 3. To satisfy the court that there is reasonable expectation of his being able to procure their attendance at the future time to which he prays the trial to be put off. Hyde v. State, 67 D. 630.

The fact that witnesses are beyond the limits of the state is not good ground for continuance, when the defendant has had time to prepare his defense. Id.

A failure to make use of the statutory means to procure a witness's attendance, or to secure his deposition, where he is out of the state, on account of his promise to return in time to give his testimony, will not warrant a continuance. State v. Cross, 79 D. 519.

An error in refusing a continuance for the absence of a witness who afterwards attends and testifies in the party's behalf is thereby cured. Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493.

A party indicted for murder is not entitled to a continuance of his trial, on the ground of the absence of an important witness, where his affidavit for such continuance fails to show that he had asked for a subpoena for the witness, or that he knew of no other witness by whom he could prove the same facts. Wall v. State, 70 D. 302.

130. The moving affidavits. — On motion for a continuance of a capital cause, the prisoner's affidavit of the absence of a material witness will be received in support of the motion. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 491.

A party moving a continuance of a criminal cause on the ground of his inability to subpoena a witness, by reason of the recent finding of the bill, and his close confinement since his arrest, must show that he has certain witnesses, giving their names, and must state what he expects to prove by them, in order that the court may determine whether or not the testimony would be material. Roberts v. State, 58 D. 528.

An affidavit for continuance in Iowa, for absence of a witness, must state his name and residence, and the facts showing the probability of procuring his testimony at the next term, the facts showing due diligence to obtain the witness or his testimony, and the facts to be proved by him. State v. Shupe, 85 D. 485.

131. Opposing affidavits. — Counter-affidavits to show a want of diligence and improbability of any reasonable expectation that the proposed testimony can be obtained at all, or at the time to which it is proposed to postpone the trial, may be received on application for a continuance of a cause for the purpose of the production of evidence. Hyde v. State, 67 D. 630.

132. Discretion of court to grant or refuse. — A mere continuance of a criminal case is within the discretion of the court. McFadden v. Com., 62 D. 308.

The continuance of a cause is a matter of right when the affidavit therefor conforms to the statute, and want of proper diligence cannot be imputed, and there is no cause to suspect that the application is for delay. Hyde v. State, 67 D. 630.

The announcement by a judge refusing a continuance that "trial must proceed," affords no ground of exception. Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493.

133. Avoiding continuance by admissions. — An admission of what was expected to be proved by an absent witness constitutes an admission, not merely that the absent witnesses would have sworn to certain alleged facts, but also that the facts alleged are absolutely true. Dominguez v. State, 45 D. 315.

A motion for continuance on ground of absence of witnesses should not be refused because the adverse party admits that the witnesses, if present, would testify as stated in defendant's affidavit; but notwithstanding this admission, the refusal of the motion will not be error if based upon a well-founded doubt of the verity of the affidavit itself, and a belief that the application was for delay. Hyde v. State, 67 D. 630.

Where the public prosecutor moved to postpone the trial of a person indicted for a misdemeanor, on account of the absence of witnesses, and the counsel for the accused offered in open court to admit that the witnesses, if present, would testify to the facts stated in the moving affidavit, and the application was denied, — held, 1. That the prisoner waived his constitutional right to be confronted with the witnesses; and 2. That the affidavit was competent evidence for the prosecution. United States v. Sacramento, 25 R. 742.

A statute providing that on a criminal trial, when the defendant moves for an adjournment on the ground of the absence of a material witness, the trial may proceed on the public prosecutor's stipulating to admit that the witness if present would testify as set forth in the affidavits, and that such statement might be read as his evidence, is not unconstitutional. State v. Jennings, 51 R. 236.

134. Second application. — The affidavit on a second application for a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses, after one continuance granted for the same cause, should be more explicit, and show what are the facts of the case, and what means of information applicant's witnesses possess; and if the second affidavit is less full, this may furnish ground to suspect that the object was delay. Hyde v. State, 67 D. 630.

After a refusal of a continuance asked on one ground, new grounds cannot be presented, under the Georgia practice. Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493.

135. Adjournments and postponements. — A defendant is not entitled to demand a postponement of a trial as a matter of legal right, in order to afford him an opportunity to find persons who would join him in an affidavit to obtain a change of venue. Wall v. State, 70 D. 302.

A telegram from a judge to the clerk of the court, ordering an adjournment, is a "written order," and warrants the adjournment. State v. Holmes, 41 R. 121.

6. Impaneling the Jury; Challenges; Opinions.

136. Qualifications and competency. — A master Mason is not incompetent to sit as a juror in an action of slander wherein one of the parties belongs to the fraternity of Free Masons and the other does not. Purple v. Horton, 27 D. 167.

A juror must be a freeholder, in Virginia, in order to serve as such in a case of felony. Dowdy v. Com., 60 D. 314.

An inhabitant of a county is competent to sit as a juror upon the trial of a person charged with larceny of the property of the county. People v. Bennett, 93 D. 551.

A juror was the second cousin of accused. This was not known to either until the case was being argued. The defendant pleaded insanity, and endeavored to prove that it was hereditary in the family. It was held that though it was a proper matter to be addressed to the discretion of the court if brought to its notice in proper season, it was not a disqualification of the juror. The peculiar nature of the defense did not alter the rule. State v. Andrews, 76 D. 593.

By statute, jurors are to be selected and put on the list from such persons as are assessed for personal property, or own a freehold estate in real property. P. owned a farm when he was put on the list, but was not assessed for personal property. Before the trial, he sold his farm, receiving a mortgage for part of the purchase-money; and at the time of the trial he was not a freeholder, and was not assessed for personal property. He was challenged. Held, that he was not a competent juror. The property qualification, when questioned by a challenge, must be that required to authorize the original selection of the individual as a juror. Kelley v. People, 14 R. 342.

On the trial of an indictment for stealing cattle, a person called as a juror is not incompetent merely by reason of his membership in an association, one of whose purposes is to prosecute cattle-thieves. Boyle v. People, 34 R. 76.

A member of a voluntary association formed for the prosecution of violations of certain laws is incompetent as a juror on the trial of a complaint for such a violation, instituted by an agent of the association, who is furnished by it with money for the expenses, and is paid for his services. Com. v. Moore, 58 R. 128.

Chinese may be lawfully excluded from juries, on the ground of alienage. State v. Ah Chew, 40 R. 488.

A juror not understanding and speaking English cannot be forced upon a prisoner, although his peremptory challenges may have been exhausted. McCampbell v. State, 35 R. 726; Lyles v. State, 19 R. 38.*

The objection that jurors on a criminal trial did not understand the English language is waived if not specifically taken at the trial. Yanes v. State, 32 R. 591.

The objection that a juror was not an elector must be raised before verdict, even in a capital case, it not being an absolute disqualification, but only ground of challenge. State v. Jackson, 41 R. 424.

137. Exemptions. — One who is exempt from jury duty may waive his privilege, and legally sit as a juror. United States v. Lee, 64 R. 293.

Persons exempted from service as jurors are not thereby disqualified to serve on a jury; and a verdict will not be set aside because a person so exempted was one of the jury. State v. Forshner, 80 D. 132.

A statute exempting persons over seventy years of age from service as jurors creates a privilege, and not a disability; and a criminal conviction is not rendered void by the fact that one of the grand jury indicting, and one of the petit jury convicting, were above that age. Green v. State, 43 R. 542.

138. Procuring the attendance of jurors. — In a precept to the sheriff to summon the grand and petit jury, it is sufficient to command him to cause to come before the judges twenty-four good and lawful men, without commanding him in what manner they are to be drawn or selected. White v. Com., 6 D. 443.

A precept to the sheriff, commanding him to cause to come, etc., "twenty-four good and lawful men, of the body of the county of C., aforesaid, then and there to inquire, present, do, and perform such things as on behalf of the commonwealth shall be enjoined them," and also a competent number "of sober and judicious persons, and none other, as jurors for the trial of all issues," etc., contains no command to convene the petit jurors from the body of the county of C.; and therefore if it does not appear by the return or the panel that the petit jurors in fact came from the body of the county, the error is fatal. Id.

* Inability of juror to understand English, see note, 35 R. 728-731.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A writ of venue facias is not void because issued without a seal. Maier v. State, 26 D. 379.

A separate venue facias for summoning jurors ought to be issued for each of several persons jointly indicted, and not a single venue facias for all such persons. McWhirt's Case, 46 D. 196.

Where several persons jointly indicted demand and are allowed separate trials, a joint venue facias previously issued should be quashed, and a separate venue ordered to issue for each prisoner. Id.

A panel of jurors summoned partly by bailiffs is good; for presumably acting under the sheriff's authority, they are his deputies pro hac vice. Conner v. State, 71 D. 184.

The legislature may authorize the drawing of jurors by a board of commissioners to be appointed by the governor. People v. Harding, 51 R. 95.

139. Impaneling the jury, generally. — Jurors need not be called in the order of their names on the venue. State v. Crank, 23 D. 117.

Impaneling a jury on an indictment is sufficient, when the indictment is founded on presentment, without impaneling them on the presentment also. Conner v. State, 71 D. 184.

When the name of a juror is drawn in making up the jury for a murder trial, it is the right of the accused to have him put upon the jury or challenged by the state, although, since such juror was summoned, he has been convicted of an assault, and at the time he is drawn is confined in the county jail. The court cannot discharge such a juror of its own motion. Boggs v. State, 6 R. 689.

No legal verdict can be rendered in a criminal cause by a jury composed of more than twelve men. If a jury of more than twelve men have been impaneled, and the last juror sworn can be pointed out during the trial, he may be dismissed from the panel and the trial proceed. Bullard v. State, 19 R. 30.

The presence of a prisoner indicted for felony is necessary at the impaneling of the trial jury, and he may not waive the privilege, and his absence is not cured by the subsequent offer of the court to allow him to examine the jurors at the time of making peremptory challenges. State v. Smith, 59 R. 4.

140. Challenge to the array. — On a trial for murder, the prisoner, having challenged the array, may withdraw the challenge, and thus waive the irregularity. Pierson v. People, 35 R. 524.

141. Peremptory challenges. — A peremptory challenge will be allowed, although upon his voir dire the juror gives such answers that he could not be challenged for cause. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 491.

The right of peremptory challenge must be exercised before the examination of a juror as to his bias or opinions. Com. v. Rogers, 41 D. 458; Com. v. Webster, 52 D. 711.

The right of peremptory challenge does not give the right of separate trial, where several persons are jointly indicted for the same offense, as in such a case the right of peremptory challenge is in no degree narrowed or affected; but each prisoner has the right to challenge the full number, and in this respect is unaffected by what the others do. Faulkins v. State, 44 D. 431.

A juror challenged by one prisoner, and not by another, who is jointly indicted, is to be withdrawn as to all, as no man ought to sit as a juror upon a joint trial who is not, in the estimation of all the prisoners, indifferent as to all. Id.

The right of peremptory challenge is not a right to select a jury, but merely to exclude from the trial any persons who are disagreeable to the party on trial. Id.

The right to peremptorily challenge jurors exists only on the trial of the indictment, and not on the trial of preliminary or collateral issues. Hence the right does not exist when a prisoner is on trial with respect to his present insanity. Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

Defendants indicted for an affray are to be tried together, and for the purposes of the trial and in making their defense are to be considered as having one common interest; consequently each defendant will not be allowed seven peremptory challenges, and if one of the defendants has introduced evidence in his behalf, the state has a right to conclude the argument to the jury, although the other defendant has introduced no evidence. Hawkins v. State, 58 D. 517.

Where two or more persons are indicted and tried jointly, the state is entitled to no more peremptory challenges than when the trial is against one alone. State v. Earle, 13 R. 109.

142. Challenge for cause, generally. — Every challenge for principal cause must be for some matter which imports absolute bias or favor, and leaves nothing for the discretion of the court. Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

Challenges for cause are allowed on the trial of any preliminary or collateral issue as well as on the trial of the main issue. Id.

It is a principal cause of challenge to a juror on a trial for felony, that he was a member of the grand jury that found the indictment. Dikworth v. Com., 65 D. 264.

143. Challenge to the favor for prejudice or bias. — If the defendant refuses to challenge a juror who is shown to have a bias against him, the prosecution cannot interpose such challenge. People v. Mather, 21 D. 122.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Jurors should be thoroughly impartial between the parties. One is incompetent to act as a juror who is hostile to either party, though such hostility does not have any especial reference to the suit or controversy on trial. Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

Sympathy with a prisoner and his family is not bias which will disqualify a juror in a capital case, where he states that he thinks he can give an unbiased verdict. Com. v. Webster, 52 D. 711.

144. Scruples against capital punishment.—It is a good challenge to a juror, for cause, on the part of the state, that he has conscientious scruples against finding a verdict of guilty, where the punishment is death. Hyde v. State, 67 D. 630; Monday v. State, 79 D. 314.

That a juror is opposed to capital punishment does not disqualify him from sitting in a capital case, where he states that he does not think his opinions will interfere with his doing his duty as a juror, although he fears that his views on that subject may influence others of the jury. Com. v. Webster, 52 D. 711.

Conscientious scruples entertained by a person, which would prevent him from assenting or agreeing to a verdict which would subject the accused to capital punishment, although justified by the evidence, disqualify him as a juror. Williams v. State, 66 D. 616.

A juror whose examination developed that he was opposed to capital punishment; who said "that he had conscientious scruples upon the subject of capital punishment; that they would bias his judgment,"—is not in a condition to impartially hear and examine the evidence; he does not stand indifferent between the prisoner and the state, and he should be excused. Id.

A juror testified that he "did have conscientious scruples on the subject of capital punishment, and that it would be against his conscience to render a verdict by which a party would be subjected to the punishment of death, but that he thought he could do justice as between the state and the accused." Held, that he was competent, as in the absence of any other possible evidence his answer under oath that he would do justice between the parties must be held to be conclusive. Id.

145. Opinion of juror, when disqualifies, generally.†—It was considered a good ground of challenge for cause that a juror should say on his voir dire that he did not know how much he might be influenced by his preconceived opinion. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 491.

Bias or partiality ought to be presumed where the juror has formed an opinion without hearing the testimony or having a personal knowledge of the facts. People v. Mather, 21 D. 122.

A party is incompetent to sit as a juror who has formed and expressed a decided opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. Armistead v. Com., 37 D. 633; People v. Mather, 21 D. 122; Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

Where a party formed and expressed a decided opinion as to the prisoner's guilt, from a conversation with the prosecuting witness, he is incompetent to sit as a juror. Armistead v. Com., 37 D. 633.

A preconceived opinion, to disqualify a juror, under the Massachusetts statute, must be something more than a vague impression formed from casual conversations or imperfect newspaper reports, and must be such as will be likely to prevent a candid, unbiased judgment after hearing the evidence. Com. v. Webster, 52 D. 711.

A juror must decide for himself whether his opinion is such as to prevent an unbiased verdict. Id.

A person is disqualified from serving as a juror when he has formed or expressed an opinion from what he has heard some one say respecting statements which had been made by some of the witnesses, notwithstanding the fact that the juror stated his opinion would not influence his verdict, but that he would be governed by the evidence. Nelms v. State, 53 D. 94.

A juror is not disqualified by the fact that he has conversed with a witness, and believes what he heard, but did not form any opinion of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. Thomson v. People, 76 D. 733.

A juror is competent, and will not be held to have formed an opinion sufficient to disqualify him on a challenge for cause, where he states on his voir dire that from having heard a part of the evidence before the examining court, he has formed a partial opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused which, though it "might" to some extent, he does not think would influence his verdict, if he states, further, that he has no fixed opinion in the case that would influence his verdict. Monroe v. State, 76 D. 58.

A juror's expressed opinion that defendant is of bad character is not necessarily ground of disqualification. And certainly an expression to that effect, made jocularly before trial, and not in reference to the case on which the defendant is to be tried, will not disqualify him. Otherwise, bad men could never be tried, for want of qualified jurors. Id.

To render a juror incompetent on ground of implied bias, it must appear that he entertains a fixed and settled conviction of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, or that he has expressed such a conviction. Whatever falls short of this does not amount to an unqualified opinion within the meaning of the statute. People v. King, 87 D. 95.

* See note on conscientious scruples against conviction upon circumstantial evidence, 36 D. 532.

† See monographic note on opinions of jurors as ground for challenge, 36 D. 521-534.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

146. Impressions and hypothetical opinions.* — A hypothetical declaration or opinion does not disqualify the juror, unless it appears that his mind has acquired that bias which operates unconsciously, and leads him to indulge his own feelings under the mistaken belief that he is influenced solely by the weight of the evidence, and to yield more readily to the evidence which confirms than to that which conflicts with his previous impressions. People v. Mather, 21 D. 122.

A hypothetical opinion of a juror as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, founded upon what he has heard, but not previously expressed, does not disqualify him from serving, when, although he does not doubt the truth of what he has heard, he has no doubt but that, if the evidence should turn out otherwise, he would be able to decide according to the evidence, without being in any degree influenced by the impressions previously made on his mind. Osiander v. Com., 24 D. 693.

Such an opinion can neither be a decided one nor one formed on deliberation. Id.

A juror who has a mere impression that the accused is guilty, or who has formed a contingent or hypothetical opinion respecting his guilt, is not liable to a challenge for principal cause. Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

A venireman is not disqualified by an impression adverse to the general character of the accused, if he has formed no opinion that the accused is guilty of the offense charged, and declares himself able to try the charge impartially. Lohman v. People, 49 D. 340.

147. Opinions based upon personal knowledge or derived from an authentic source. — Partiality or prejudice for or against the defendant is the true foundation for a challenge to a juror; hence a declaration of opinion, made upon an actual knowledge of the case, and not out of ill-will, was formerly no ground for a challenge. People v. Mather, 21 D. 122.

An opinion founded on a knowledge of the facts, or on information derived from those acquainted therewith, furnishes a good cause of challenge to a juror. Id.

148. Opinions based upon mere rumor or newspaper reports. — A challenge for cause was allowed where a juror on his voir dire says that he had no definite opinion, but, from his reading of the newspaper, that his prejudices were against the prisoner. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 491.

An opinion based on mere rumors or reports disqualifies one from acting as a juror, if it is positive in its character. People v. Mather, 21 D. 122.

A person is not absolutely disqualified from acting as a juror who has formed or expressed an opinion respecting the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, when such opinion is based on a mere rumor. Nelms v. State, 53 D. 94.

Where a juror states on his voir dire that he has a fixed opinion as to the guilt of the accused, he is incompetent to try a criminal case, even though the opinion was formed from hearsay evidence. Maddox v. State, 79 D. 307.

It is no good cause of challenge that the juror has formed and expressed an opinion adverse to the prisoner, such opinion being founded on rumor, and the juror further stating that he could try the case according to the law and evidence, uninfluenced by any opinion he may have so formed from such rumor. State v. Collins, 16 R. 771.

Under a statute of Indiana, jurors who have read the evidence on a former trial of the same indictment as reported in newspapers, and formed and expressed opinions, derived therefrom, on the merits of the case, which it would require evidence to remove, but which would readily yield to evidence, are competent. Guetig v. State, 32 R. 99.

149. Opinion upon some only of the facts involved. — A juror answered that he had not formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt of defendant, but that he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the fact of the killing of the deceased by defendant. Upon being challenged for actual bias, the court overruled the challenge. Held, that in order to constitute a good ground of challenge, the opinion must be as to the guilt or innocence of defendant of the crime laid to his charge. State v. Thompson, 74 D. 342.

150. The New York statute of 1872. — The New York act of 1872, relating to challenge of jurors in criminal cases, provides that the previous formation or expression of an opinion or impression in reference to the circumstances upon which any criminal action at law is based, or in reference to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, or a present opinion or impression in reference thereto, shall not be a sufficient ground of challenge for principal cause to any person who is otherwise legally qualified to serve as a juror upon the trial of such action, provided the person proposed as a juror, who may have formed or expressed, or has such an opinion or impression, shall declare on oath that he believes that he can render an impartial verdict, and provided that the court shall be satisfied that the person so proposed as a juror does not entertain such a present opinion as would influence his verdict. Held, constitutional. The act properly applies to trials of offenses committed before its passage. Stokes v. People, 13 R. 492.

6. Trial and Decision of Challenges.

151. Time to interpose challenges.

— A juror once sworn cannot be challenged for any pre-existing cause. Gillespie v. State, 29 D. 137; Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 534; Keener v. State, 63 D. 269; State v. Powers, 45 R. 138.

If an alien is drawn and impaneled on the jury, it is a good cause of challenge before trial; but if allowed to be sworn by the prisoner, it is too late after trial and conviction to make it a ground for a new trial. State v. Quarrel, 1 D. 637.

The objection that one of the jurors in a criminal case was a member of the grand jury who found the indictment, if not taken before the juror is sworn, cannot be made a ground for a new trial, though the prisoner swears that the fact was unknown to him until the jury retired. Gillespie v. State, 29 D. 137.

A motion by prisoner to discharge a juror and substitute another in his stead, on trial for felony, on ground that he was a member of the grand jury that found the indictment, made after the jury is impaneled and sworn, but before any evidence is introduced, should be granted, when it appears that the prisoner did not know this fact, and could not have known it with the exercise of reasonable diligence, before the jury was sworn. Dilworth v. Com., 65 D. 264.

Objection to a juror made after the jury is sworn is addressed to the discretion of the court. Ib.

The court in its discretion may set aside jurors on score of incompetency, propter affectum, discovered after they are sworn, on the motion or with the consent of the prisoner, at any time before verdict rendered; and at the instance of the prosecution for like cause when the discharge of the jury without the consent of the prisoner would not result in a discharge of the latter, semble. Ib.

Upon a motion to discharge a juror, and substitute another, made by the prisoner after the jury have been sworn, it is not the duty of the prisoner or his counsel to instruct the court as to the proper course in case the motion is granted, and from a refusal to do so there is not to be inferred a motive to gain some ulterior or unfair advantage. Ib.

152. Order of challenges. — The state cannot pass by jurors until the remainder of a panel is gone through, before showing cause; this English rule allowing the crown to pass jurors is abrogated by the Georgia penal code of 1833. Sealy v. State, 44 D. 641.

A juror may be challenged for cause by the prosecuting attorney after he has been formally passed as satisfactory, provided such challenge is interposed before the juror is sworn to try the cause. McFadden v. Com., 62 D. 308.

153. How interposed. — In challenging a juror for principal cause or for favor, the ground of the challenge must be so distinctly stated that the court can see whether it is for principal cause or to the favor, and whether the facts alleged, if true, support the challenge. The challenger must state why the juror is not indifferent. He must suggest some facts or circumstances which, if true, show the juror to be positively disqualified, or which create a probability or suspicion that he is not or may not be impartial. Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

154. Trial of challenges by the court. — A challenge propter affectum is of two kinds: a challenge to the favor, and for principal cause. The former must be determined by triers, but the latter is usually decided by the court. If the facts are admitted, the court pronounces upon their effect; but when there is a dispute about them, triers ought to be appointed, whether the challenge is for principal cause or for favor. People v. Mather, 21 D. 122.

A challenge of a juror for principal cause must go upon the record; if demurred to, an issue of law is formed, which the court must determine; if the facts stated as the ground of challenge are disputed, an issue of fact arises, which must be decided by triers. Ib.

When an issue of fact arises upon a challenge for principal cause, and each party submits his evidence on this issue to the judge, and neither demands that triers be appointed to decide it, the competency of the court to try the issue cannot be subsequently questioned. Ib.

A challenge to a juror may be demurred to, or the opposite party may take issue on the facts stated, or may plead new matter in avoidance. Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

155. Submission of challenges to triers. — A challenge for favor must be determined by triers. Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

On the trial of a challenge for favor, it is error for the court to instruct the triers that the resort to them was in the nature of an appeal from the opinion of the court on the facts, and that a hypothetical opinion formed by the juror does not disqualify him. Such an opinion, while not an absolute disqualification, is some evidence of bias, and ought to be taken into consideration by the triers, in determining whether the juror is indifferent between the parties. Nor is the resort to triers in the nature of an appeal from the opinion of the court. Ib.

The oath which should be administered to triers of challenges to jurors is as follows:

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

"You do solemnly swear that you will well and truly try, and well and truly find, whether the juror is indifferent between the people of the state of New York, and the prisoner at the bar." Id.

156. Examining jurors on the voir dire.*—The prisoner is not allowed to examine the jurors as to whether they have made up their minds as to his guilt or innocence. State v. Crank, 23 D. 117.

An objection to a juror on a trial for felony, on the ground that he was a member of the grand jury that found the indictment, is not removed by statements made by him upon examination upon the voir dire, to the effect that he had formed no opinion, and had no bias against the prisoner. Dilworth v. Com., 68 D. 264.

Only statutory questions respecting his competency should be propounded to a juror in a criminal case. Monday v. State, 79 D. 314.

On the question whether a juror could be asked on oath if he had expressed an opinion unfavorable to the prisoner, the court was divided. State v. Norris, 1 D. 564.

157. Waiver of challenges.—The exclusion of a juror on a peremptory challenge waives exceptions taken to points made and decided in disposing of challenges made to him for principal cause or for favor. Freeman v. People, 47 D. 216.

158. Swearing the jury.—A juror will be resworn in chief, where he states that he was under the impression that he had been sworn only on the voir dire. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 491.

The jury are judges both of law and fact in all criminal prosecutions under our constitution and laws, and as a necessary consequence should be sworn to decide according to both. Patterson v. State, 44 D. 530.

The swearing of the jury in a criminal case is wholly insufficient when they are not sworn to well and truly try, and a true deliverance make between the state and the prisoner, nor to give a true verdict according to the law and the evidence, but are simply sworn "to say the truth in the premises." Id.

It is not for the court to refuse to allow a juror to be sworn because he states that he has formed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant, if such juror is accepted by the prisoner and is not challenged by the people. Van Blaricum v. People, 63 D. 316.

159. Review of determination of challenges.—The decision of the judge on an issue of fact arising upon a challenge of a juror will not be set aside and a new trial granted, except in cases warranting such action, if the challenge had been submitted to triers. People v. Mather, 21 D. 122.

The objection to a juror by a prisoner, which is improperly overruled, is not cured by the juror's name being struck off the panel by the prisoner, or his not being drawn as one of the jury to try him. Dowdy v. Com., 60 D. 314.

*See note on examining jurors on the voir dire, 23 D. 128-131.

7. Conduct of the Trial, Generally.

160. Powers and duties of the presiding judge.—The court has authority to impanel a jury to try whether a prisoner was standing mute obstinately, and if they should so find, to direct the plea of not guilty to be entered, and to proceed with the trial. Butcliffe v. State, 51 D. 459.

On a trial for murder, the color of accused is no ground of distinction in applying the principles of the law applicable to the case. Campbell v. People, 61 D. 49.

A judge may himself take down testimony in a criminal case, instead of appointing another to do it, and although he may inadvertently and improperly insert an occasional comment on the testimony, it will afford no ground for a new trial. Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493.

On a rape trial, where a young female witness was embarrassed and unable to testify on account of laughter in the audience, the court removed from the room all the audience except the officers, attorneys, and jurors. Held, no error. Grimmett v. State, 58 R. 630.

161. Right of accused to be present.*—A prisoner accused of felony must be arraigned and plead in person; and in all subsequent proceedings he must appear in person, and not by attorney. Sperry v. Com., 33 D. 261; Sneed v. State, 41 D. 102; Hill v. State, 86 D. 736; Younger v. State, 98 D. 791.

Such appearance must affirmatively appear by the record; and upon a recital therein that the defendant appeared by attorney, it will not be presumed that he was personally present. Sperry v. Com., 33 D. 261.

The record of a conviction of felony must show how the jury were selected, tried, and sworn, and that the prisoner was present at these proceedings, and that the prisoner was present and pleaded in person at his arraignment. Younger v. State, 98 D. 791.

A person indicted for a criminal offense has a right to be present in court pending his trial, that he may discuss questions of law and fact, and point out and argue objections to the action of the jury, or to other proceedings in the cause. This right is guaranteed to him by section 10, article 1, of the constitution of Alabama. State v. Hughes, 36 D. 411.

The court may dispense with the appearance of a party in a case of simple misdemeanor, and take the appearance of an attorney or agent as a compliance with the condition of a recognizance in such a case; but either is purely a matter of discretion with the court, which an appellate tribunal will not assume to control or direct. Warren v. State, 68 D. 214.

During a trial for felony the prisoner stepped to an ante-room connecting with the court-room by swinging doors, and only fifteen or twenty feet distant, to telephone to a witness, and was absent five minutes. This was against the district attorney's objection. During such absence the prisoner's counsel continued the cross-examination of a witness. Held, not a violation of the requirement that the prisoner shall "be personally present during the trial." People v. Bragle, 42 R. 269.

162. Trying the prisoner in shackles.*—A prisoner is entitled to appear for trial, upon his own plea of not guilty, free from all manner of shackles or bonds, unless there is danger of his escape. People v. Harrington, 10 R. 296.

The mere fact that a prisoner brought before the examining magistrate remains handcuffed during the proceedings, and in that condition waives a preliminary examination, will not support a plea in abatement to the information for the offense. State v. Lewis, 27 R. 113.

The impaneling of two jurors, on a trial for murder, while the prisoner was handcuffed and in the dock at the rear of the court-room, but within sight and hearing, is not fatal error. Matthews v. State, 42 R. 667.

163. Separate trials.—The state has the right to elect which of two prisoners, jointly indicted, severing in their defense, shall be first tried. State v. Crank, 23 D. 117.

One of several indicted jointly cannot demand a separate trial as a matter of right. It is within the discretion of the court to grant or refuse the right to a separate trial, even in a capital case. State v. Soper, 33 D. 665; Hawkins v. State, 44 D. 431.

A record which shows that a prisoner was tried separately necessarily shows that the court directed a separate trial. Dias v. State, 30 D. 448.

Defendants, upon application, have the right to be tried separately in all cases where they are indicted for an offense which does not require the joint act of two or more to constitute the offense; the rule is otherwise in those cases which require the concurrence of two or more in the commission of the offense. In cases of the latter class the matter rests in the legal discretion of the court before whom the trial takes place. Horne v. State, 92 D. 49.

*That the shackles should be removed on the trial of a prisoner, see note, 27 R. 116, 117.

When several persons are jointly indicted, they cannot claim separate trials as a matter of right. Such separation is a matter of discretion with the court. State v. Collins, 16 R. 771.

164. Counsel to assist prosecutor.—Court may appoint a special counsel to prosecute an indictment, where the solicitor-general, through bodily or mental ailments, is unable to perform that duty. Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493.

The court possesses an inherent power to appoint one of the attorneys of the court, when necessary to prevent a failure of justice, to conduct the prosecution of a criminal. Dukes v. State, 71 D. 371.

165. Counsel for the accused.—The supreme court will not assign as prisoner's counsel one who is only an attorney of the court of common pleas. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 491.

A prisoner cannot be tried for felony without counsel to assist him, unless he expressly waives that right. Valle v. State, 35 R. 719.

Where a stenographer is supplied, it is not error to refuse to give time for counsel to take full notes. State v. Hoyt, 36 R. 89.

166. Entry of nolle prosequi.—A nolle prosequi may be entered at any time until the jury is charged, but cannot be entered afterwards; and the effect of entering a nolle prosequi after the jury is charged is an acquittal of the prisoner. State v. McKee, 21 D. 499.

The power to enter a nolle prosequi was, at common law, confided to the attorney-general alone. Under our statutes it is delegated to the district attorneys, to be exercised with leave of the court. People v. McLeod, 37 D. 328.

The court cannot order the entry of a nolle prosequi, on affidavits and other proofs submitted by the prisoner, the district attorney having made no application for leave to make such entry. Ib.

Nolle prosequi may be entered as to that one of two counts, in regard to which it is objected that an irregularity exists sufficient to warrant setting aside the verdict. State v. Whittier, 36 D. 272.

A prosecuting officer has the power, virtute officii, to enter a nolle prosequi in ordinary indictments; and this power may be exercised before a jury is impaneled or while the case is on trial, with the consent of the respondent, or after a verdict is rendered against him. The exercise of this power being discretionary on the part of the prosecuting officer, the court has no right to interfere, after a nolle prosequi has been entered, and allow the complainant to appear and prosecute the indictment. State v. Smith, 6 R. 480.

167. View of locus in quo.—A view of the place where a murder was committed will be permitted on the request of the jury, acquiesced in by the counsel on both sides and by the prisoner. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 491.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A view of premises where homicide was committed may be granted under the Massachusetts statute. Com. v. Webster, 52 D. 711.

Where the court in a criminal case orders a view of premises by the jury at the prisoner's request, it is no error to allow them to go without the prisoner, in absence of any request on his part to accompany them. Stellar v. State, 55 R. 211.

168. Discharge of jury before verdict.—Where one of two persons indicted for conspiracy was acquitted, and the jury were unable to agree whether the other was guilty or not, the court, against the consent of the latter, ordered a juror to be withdrawn, and the jury discharged; and it was held that the court may, in its discretion, in a criminal case, discharge a jury who are unable to agree on a verdict, against the consent of the defendant, who may be brought to trial a second time for the same offense. People v. Olcott, 1 D. 168.

In capital cases, the court has no power, without the consent of the prisoner, to discharge the jury because they have not agreed and say they cannot agree upon a verdict, except in cases of absolute necessity. Com. v. Cook, 9 D. 465.

The discharge of the jury in a criminal case, without legal justification for the act, entitles the prisoner to a discharge, as if acquitted. Mahala v. State, 31 D. 591.

The right to discharge a jury in a criminal case, without the consent of the prisoner, exists only in cases of necessity, which may be classified under the following heads: 1. Where the court is compelled by law to adjourn before the jury can agree upon a verdict; 2. Where the prisoner's misconduct places it without the power of the jury to examine his case correctly; 3. Where no possibility exists that the jury will agree upon a verdict. Id.

The impossibility of an agreement upon a verdict, to justify the discharge of the jury, must be an impossibility founded upon some physical cause, such as sickness or insanity of a juror, or exhaustion of the jury; but that they cannot bring their minds to an agreement will not justify their discharge. Thus the discharge at half-past nine, Friday morning, of a jury to whom the case had been submitted at two o'clock, P. M., the previous day, because they are unable to agree upon a verdict, will entitle the prisoner to his discharge. Id.

In Virginia, the court may properly discharge the jury, in a case of felony, whenever a necessity for so doing exists. Williams v. Com., 44 D. 403.

Mere inability of the jury to agree is not such a case of necessity as to permit the court, in a case of felony, to discharge the jury without the consent of the accused. Id.

Where the jury has been improperly discharged in a case of felony, the accused is entitled to his discharge. Id.

The practice in Virginia in case of a hung jury, in a trial for felony, is, either to adjourn the court at the end of the term, taking no notice of the jury, when they are discharged by operation of law, or else to discharge them simultaneously with the final adjournment of the court. Id.

The trial of a criminal case does not begin, so as to prohibit the court from continuing or discharging the jury, until a full jury is impaneled and sworn, and the discharge of the jury after the trial has begun, in a capital case, is not a continuance of the cause, but an end of it, and an acquittal of the prisoner, unless done with his consent, or required by some overwhelming necessity. McFadden v. Com., 62 D. 308.

On a trial for felony, it is proper for the court to discharge the jury, in the absence of the defendant, after they have deliberated, without agreeing, from four o'clock in the afternoon until six o'clock the next morning. State v. White, 27 R. 137.

169. Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence.—Settled rules of law relating to admission of testimony are the same in criminal as in civil cases. State v. Dart, 76 D. 596.

The testimony of complainants in an indictment as to reasons that induced them to believe their charges true, and as to their purpose in making them, may be excluded upon the trial, as it could have no effect upon the rights or liabilities of the defendants. State v. McNally, 56 D. 650.

The court commits no error in admitting irrelevant testimony, if it appears affirmatively from the record that the evidence became relevant by its connection with other testimony subsequently offered. Lawson v. State, 56 D. 182.

A defendant, on the trial of an indictment, not under oath as a witness, cannot be permitted to speak in presence of the jury, in order to rebut evidence of a witness for the government, who testified that he identified him by his voice. Com. v. Scott, 25 R. 81.

On the trial of an indictment, a written statement made by a witness for the prosecution, accompanied by a stipulation of the prisoner's former attorney that it might be read, was offered by the prosecution in evidence, the witness not being produced. The statement was admitted against the objection of the prisoner's acting attorney. Held, an infringement of the prisoner's constitutional right to be confronted with the witnesses against him. Bell v. State, 28 R. 429.

170. The order of proof.—The introduction of testimony out of the usual order is within the discretion of the court. Com. v. Eastman, 48 D. 596.

A defendant has the right to suppose that evidence will be offered and received in its logical order, and is not bound to meet it before it becomes relevant to the case. Brown v. People, 97 D. 195.

It is not a matter of discretion with the court to reject evidence because it was not offered before the proper time for its admission. Id.

171. Objections and exceptions.—On a criminal trial, it is the duty of the court to exclude improper evidence offered by the state, even if not properly objected to by the prisoner. State v. O'Connor, 27 R. 291.

172. Striking out evidence.—Evidence prima facie irrelevant may be rejected at the time it is offered, or the court may let it in and repudiate it, if after all is heard, it is still irrelevant. Lawson v. State, 56 D. 182.

8. Counsel's Address to the Jury.

173. Limiting the time to be consumed.—The time in which defendant's counsel shall address the jury may be limited in a criminal case by the court in its discretion, and the supreme court will not interfere unless this discretion has been abused. State v. Page, 64 D. 229; State v. Collins, 16 R. 771.

The restriction of the argument in a murder case to four hours on each side is valid. State v. Hoyt, 36 R. 89.

Under the constitutional provision securing to persons accused of crime the privilege of counsel, it is error for a judge presiding at a criminal trial, to limit the prisoner's counsel to forty minutes for his argument. Hunt v. State, 15 R. 677.

In the trial of a felony, whether the prisoner is heard through one counsel or two, the length of the argument is not a matter for predetermination by the court. As argument progresses, the court may confine the range of it to the facts and law of the case, and may interdict idle repetition; but so long as counsel speaks to the point, proceeds in good faith, and wastes no time, the court should forbear to interfere, but leave the limits of the speech to the discretion of the speaker, until it is manifest that the discussion is complete, or the subject exhausted. Williams v. State, 27 R. 412.

On a trial of one charged with a felony, eleven witnesses were examined, and the evidence, which occupied half a day in its delivery, was circumstantial and conflicting. The accused was defended by two counsel, who were limited by the court to thirty minutes in the argument to the jury. Held, that this was an abuse of power which prevented a fair trial. Dille v. State, 32 R. 395.

On the trial of an indictment for larceny, where six witnesses were examined on behalf of the people and three on behalf of the defendant, — held, error for the court to limit the arguments of counsel to five minutes each. White v. People, 32 R. 12.

174. Limiting the number of counsel or of speeches.—A statute prohibited the court in criminal cases from restricting the argument to a less number of addresses than two on a side. Held, not to apply where the accused had but one counsel, unless he himself chose to address the jury. Morales v. State, 28 R. 419.

175. Reading from books of law or medicine.*—Counsel has no right to read to jury facts of case at bar as stated in the report of the same case when formerly before the supreme court, for the purpose of contrasting them with the testimony of witnesses in the case at bar, and thereby to impeach their testimony. State v. White, 72 D. 533.

On a trial for felony, the prisoner's counsel, in his argument to the jury, proposed to read to them a statement of facts on an appeal in the same case, and the decision of the appellate court holding the evidence insufficient to convict, with a view to argue that the present evidence was also insufficient. The court refused to allow the reading. Held, no error. Dempsey v. State, 30 R. 148.

Refusal to allow counsel to read extracts from medical books to the jury is within the discretion of the trial court, and therefore not the subject of a writ of error. Luning v. State, 52 D. 153.

Reading medical books to jury is error. People v. Hall, 42 R. 477.

On the argument of a murder trial the district attorney, against objection, was permitted to read to the jury extracts from Browne's Medical Jurisprudence on the subject of insanity. There was no evidence that it was standard or scientific. Held, error. People v. Wheeler, 44 R. 70.

176. Abuses of the right of argument, generally.†—Constitutional guarantees to every one charged with crime, of the right to be heard by himself and counsel, do not warrant a statement of facts to the jury unauthorized by the evidence. State v. McCall, 39 D. 314.

Neither judge nor counsel should refer to the supreme court by way of menace, warning, or otherwise, except to cite its decisions in the progress of a trial, as by telling the jury that the court is responsible to the supreme court if it errs, or the like. Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493.

On a murder trial, at the end of the opening address of the prosecuting attorney, the audience applauded. In his closing argument he alluded to this, and approved it. The court did not check nor reprimand the audience nor the counsel, nor caution the jury. This, it seems, was error. Cartwright v. State, 49 R. 826.

177. Commenting on defendant's failure to testify.*—On the trial of an indictment, the prisoner having testified on his own behalf, the prosecuting attorney was permitted, in addressing the jury, to comment on his appearance while testifying. Held, no error. Huber v. State, 26 R. 57.

If the counsel for the people, in a criminal trial, comments on the omission of the defendant to testify in his own behalf, it is ground for a new trial, although the counsel was stopped by the court, and the jury were instructed to disregard those comments. Angelo v. People, 36 R. 132; Com. v. Scott, 25 R. 87.

178. Inflammatory and improper language.†—On a murder trial, counsel for the prosecution, in argument, said to the jury: "Martin, the defendant, is a man of bad, dangerous, and desperate character; but I am not afraid to denounce the butcher-boy, although I may, on returning to my home, find it in ashes over the heads of my defenseless wife and children." There was no objection by defendant's counsel nor any interference by the court. Held, that a conviction should be set aside. Martin v. State, 56 R. 812.

9. Instructions to the Jury.

179. Relative functions of court and jury.—If the court admits evidence, the jury cannot reject it as incompetent; but they may disregard it as incredible. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 534.

180. Questions of law for the court.—Questions of law arising on the arraignment or in the progress of the trial in relation to the admissibility of evidence must be decided by the court. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 534.

Question as to whether proper foundation has been laid for introduction of secondary evidence is for the court, not for the jury. Allen v. State, 68 D. 457.

The words of an indictment, when not clearly written, are to be determined by the court from an inspection of the writing. Com. v. Riggs, 77 D. 333.

The admissibility of evidence is a question for the court to determine. It is error to leave the jury to decide the question of admissibility, and to instruct them to consider the evidence or not, as they find the one way or the other. State v. Dick, 86 D. 439.

181. Questions of fact for the jury.—It is a question of fact for a jury to determine whether a note offered in evidence upon the trial of an indictment for counterfeiting is subscribed H. or N. Biddle, and their decision upon such question cannot be reviewed on error unless the note accompanies the record. Hess v. State, 22 D. 767.

The question of appropriation is for the jury. State v. Trask, 27 D. 554.

Whether the deceased came to her death by violent means or not, where the testimony of medical witnesses is conflicting, is a question of fact exclusively for the consideration of the jury. State v. Rash, 55 D. 420.

Sanity or insanity of a prisoner is matter of fact for the jury. The admissibility of evidence to establish insanity is a matter of law for the judge. State v. Patten, 63 D. 594; Sterens v. State, 99 D. 634.

182. Jurors as judges of the law.—The jury are the judges of the law as well as of fact, so far as they are involved in rendering a general verdict of guilty or not guilty. Com. v. Knapp, 20 D. 534; State v. Croteau, 54 D. 90; Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493; Kane v. Com., 33 R. 787; Hudelson v. State, 48 R. 171. Contra, Washington v. State, 35 R. 8.

An instruction that the "jury are not only judges of facts in case, but they are also the judges of the law," is erroneous, that doctrine having been abandoned in this country. Williams v. State, 66 D. 615.

A jury in a criminal case must accept the law to be as charged by the court. Lord v. State, 41 D. 729.

The jury has power, but not right, in a criminal case to disregard law as expounded to them by the court, and to render a verdict of not guilty where the law, if correctly administered, would result in a conviction; and their decision in such a case will be final, because the court cannot award a new trial. Such an improper exercise of power on their part does not, however, tend to prove that they are not bound to consider the instructions of the court as containing the law of the case. Com. v. Van Tassel, 71 D. 455.

When political power is conferred on a tribunal without restriction or control, such tribunal has the right to exercise it; the power of a jury in criminal cases to determine the whole matter in issue, submitted to their charge, is such a power which they may therefore lawfully and rightfully exercise. State v. Croteau, 54 D. 90.

To make a legal verdict, in a case of homicide, the jury must find the conclusion of law upon the facts; and notwithstanding it is their duty to receive a charge from the court, still the conclusion must be the result of their own conviction and understanding. Keener v. State, 63 D. 269.

183. The duty of the court as to instructions.—It is the right and duty of a judge sitting in a criminal trial to instruct the jury as to the law, if he think it proper to so instruct them, and there is no law prescribing any particular time at which such instructions shall be given. Quatkin v. Com., 33 D. 264.

In charging the jury, the charge, — a. Should be limited to a full explanation of the law of the case; b. All irrelevant matter found in the pleadings, evidence, or arguments of counsel should be stricken out; c. The evidence for the prosecution and defense should be clearly summed up; d. All strong expressions as to the guilt of the accused should be carefully avoided. State v. Chandler, 52 D. 599.

Judge, in charging jury, may call their attention to evidence of a particular fact or facts, if controverted, for the purpose of directing them to the rules of law that must govern them in arriving at the truth, and if uncontroverted, for the application of the law to the fact. All that is required of the judge is, that he should neither decide nor endeavor to influence the jury in their decision on the facts. Jones v. State, 62 D. 550.

It is the duty of the judge to declare what the law is, with its exceptions and qualifications, and then state hypothetically that if certain facts which constitute the offense are proved to their satisfaction they will find the defendant guilty, otherwise they will acquit him. Keener v. State, 63 D. 269.

The court may present facts in his charge, but must inform the jury that they are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact. Horne v. State, 81 D. 499.

A defendant in a criminal prosecution is entitled to have propositions of law governing his case plainly stated to the jury, in such a manner as to enable them to comprehend the principles involved. Lancaster v. State, 91 D. 288.

The jury should be distinctly instructed, where an indictment charges different offenses, as to the effect of a general verdict of guilty, and that they may convict on either count; and it is more satisfactory that they should do this. State v. Nelson, 94 D. 130.

The jury should be instructed to pass on the case of one or more of several defendants who are jointly indicted and put on trial together, before the other defendant or defendants have opened their defense, so that the latter may not be deprived of the evidence of co-defendants who are not inculpated by the evidence of the state, where there is little or no evidence against such defendants, and they are willing to be tried on the evidence of the prosecution. Jones v. State, 62 D. 550.

In criminal trials against two or more defendants, the judge has the right in his discretion to separate the evidence bearing upon the case of each, and to instruct the jury as to what is competent against one, and incompetent against another. State v. Collins, 16 R. 771.

184. What instructions are proper — A judge's observation in his charge, that a witness's testimony differs materially from a statement which he is said to have made out of court, such being the fact, is not error. People v. Genung, 25 D. 594.

The constitutional provision that a judge may "state the evidence and charge the law" authorizes him to charge the law upon the evidence so stated. Conner v. State, 26 D. 217.

The jury may be instructed that a principle of law insisted upon by counsel is inapplicable, in view of the evidence in the case. Id.

The court may instruct the jury in a criminal case, on any question of law, whenever, in the court's opinion, justice requires it. Blunt v. Com., 26 D. 341.

An instruction to the jury that they should believe one credible witness, when based upon a hypothetical case, and concluding, "Yet it is possible the witness might be mistaken or perjured," is not error. State v. Rash, 55 D. 420.

An instruction to the jury that they must take all circumstances together, and not separately, is not error, as all that is meant by such instruction is, that they must draw their conclusions from the whole of the circumstances, and pronounce their verdict as that conclusion should direct. Id.

The court may charge the jury that they may find a verdict of guilty on the first count of an indictment, inasmuch as the second is defective. Roberts v. State, 58 D. 528.

An instruction is not erroneous because it contains words of general signification capable of a meaning rendering the instruction erroneous, when from the evidence it appears that the jury could not have been misled thereby. Belote v. State, 72 D. 163.

Instructions should, generally, be hypothetical in form, and not assign a conclusive effect to circumstances, or assume that they are proved. Circumstances, generally, are not conclusive, but even where they are so, it should be left to the jury to determine whether those circumstances are established. People v. Levison, 76 D. 505.

In instructing the jury, it is proper for the court to direct them to determine the case by the evidence, and to disregard all other considerations. Monday v. State, 79 D. 314.

An instruction is not erroneous, where there is any evidence tending to prove facts upon which it is based, and it correctly states the law applicable to such evidence. Breeze v. State, 80 D. 340.

The court may state testimony and declare the law although it is erroneous to charge in respect to matters of fact. People v. King, 87 D. 95.

On the trial of an indictment against a wife for being a common seller of intoxicating liquors, the judge charged the jury "that the fact that defendant did not go upon the stand to testify was a proper matter to be taken into consideration in determining the question of her guilt of innocence." Held, correct. State v. Cleaves, 8 R. 422.

185. What instructions are improper. — To instruct a jury on matters not in evidence is error. State v. Hildreth, 51 D. 369.

Instructing a jury that a witness probably desires to avoid further examination because, after his examination, he leaves the court, and, as appears by return to an attachment against him, cannot again be found, is error. Coughlin v. People, 68 D. 541.

Only such instructions should be given as are based on legitimate evidence in the case; and it is error to give irrelevant instructions, though they state correctly abstract principles of law, if they are calculated to mislead the jury. Id.

It is error to instruct a jury that "evidence which tends to establish the defendant's guilt also tends, in an equal degree, to prove that he was present at the time and place when and where the deed was committed; and if he seeks to prove an alibi, he must do it by evidence which outweighs that given for the state tending to fix his presence at the time and place of the crime." If evidence on behalf of a prisoner raises a reasonable doubt of his guilt, he must be acquitted, and this doubt may arise from the whole evidence in the case; and the rule is no different where the defendant sets up an alibi than it is where other affirmative matter is relied on. French v. State, 74 D. 229.

A charge which presents facts or suggests a conclusion from facts, without informing the jury that they are the exclusive judges of such facts, is erroneous. Horne v. State, 81 D. 499.

It was essential to establish the identity of certain notes found where the prisoner was said to have concealed them with the ones charged to have been stolen. The court in its charge said that "one twenty-dollar note was positively identified." Held, error, as the question of identity, no matter what the evidence, was for the jury. Hill v. State, 86 D. 736.

Where the prisoner has testified to material matters in his own behalf, it is error for the judge to instruct the jury that "one interested will not usually be as honest and candid as one not so." Veatch v. State, 26 R. 44.

The burden of proof remains upon the state throughout the trial to establish the guilt of the prisoner beyond a reasonable doubt upon the whole evidence; and an instruction that if defendant killed deceased, he is presumed guilty of murder, in the absence of proof to the contrary, and that it devolves upon him to show a mitigation or justification, is erroneous. State v. Wings, 27 R. 329.

It is error to charge that reasonable doubt of guilt means doubt suggested by or arising out of the proof made, and that in considering the evidence and arriving at a verdict, "what is called common sense is perhaps the juror's best guide." Densmore v. State, 33 R. 96.

After instructing a jury that they are judges of the law as well as the facts, it is error to instruct them that "common sense" is their best guide, without limiting its application to the value and weight of evidence. Wright v. State, 35 R. 212.

186. Expressions of opinion. — An instruction to the jury "that it was competent for them to look to circumstantial testimony, as, for instance, the acts and conduct of accused, to ascertain his guilt, such as his absconding and concealing himself for the purpose of escaping the law, or his being possessed of or using large sums of money which he could not honestly account for," does not amount to an expression of opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. Bullock v. State, 54 D. 369.

Any expression of opinion by a trial judge as to whether a fact in issue is or is not sufficiently proved is error, which error is not cured by announcing in his charge the jury's independency of him in all matters of fact pertaining to the issue. State v. Dick, 86 D. 439.

The weight of evidence under the California constitution is left entirely to the jury, and the court is not allowed to express an opinion in relation thereto, although it may state what facts are in evidence and what are not. People v. King, 87 D. 95.

187. Necessity of prayer for instructions. — An omission of a judge to charge the jury on a particular point must be brought to his attention before they have returned their verdict; and if he is not reminded of the omission until after the verdict, it is not error for him then to refuse to charge on such point. State v. Collin, 23 D. 230.

188. What requests to charge should be granted. — Where the general good character of the accused as a peaceable man is proved, the following is a correct charge, to wit: "If the prisoner be proved of good character as a man of peace, the law says that such good character may be sufficient to create or generate a reasonable doubt of his guilt, although no such doubt would have existed but for such good character"; and if asked in writing, it is error to refuse it. Fields v. State, 11 R. 771.

189. What may be properly refused. — Abstract instructions which there is no evidence to support need not be given. State v. Reigart, 39 D. 628; People v. Cunningham, 43 D. 709; McDaniel v. State, 47 D. 93.

It is no error to refuse an instruction asking the court to comment upon facts in proof, or to direct the minds of the jury to such facts. State v. Homes, 57 D. 269.

An instruction proper in itself may be refused if interwoven with another instruction improper to be given. Andre v. State, 68 D. 708.

The court properly refused to charge the jury that "defendant is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt upon every material fact involved in the case," and properly instructed the jury instead, that "the defendant is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt of his guilt, remaining in the minds of the jury, after canvassing the whole of the testimony in the case." Wise v. State, 85 D. 595.

It is not error to refuse to give instructions which have already been given in substance. People v. King, 87 D. 95.

An instruction which has a tendency to mislead the jury should not be given. State v. Benham, 92 D. 417.

190. Duty of the court in granting or refusing.—An instruction should not be refused because the request was not handed in before argument, according to a rule of court. Such a rule ought to be regarded as binding by counsel, but cannot be laid down as an unbending rule of law, since the necessity for a request to charge may arise from what has already been charged by the judge. People v. Garbutt, 97 D. 162.

191. Correcting instructions.—An erroneous instruction is not cured by afterwards embodying in the charge the true rule of law applicable to the point. Horne v. State, 81 D. 499.

192. Further instructions.—A verdict will not be set aside where a court, in response to an inquiry propounded by a jury, correctly states the law. Perkins v. Com., 56 D. 123.

The court has a right to give to the jury further or explanatory charges, in a case where counsel have voluntarily absented themselves from the court-room, if the prisoner be present. Collins v. State, 73 D. 426.

After a jury had retired to consider of their verdict the court sent to them, in answer to their request, an instruction in writing, and also a copy of the statute, without the knowledge of counsel on either side. Held, error. State v. Patterson, 12 R. 200.

10. Retirement and Deliberation of the Jury.

193. Custody of the jury.*—The jurors in a criminal case should not be permitted to go at large after they are sworn until they are finally discharged. Nomaquis v. People, 12 D. 157.

The jury may be permitted to separate, even in a capital case, where the trial has to be adjourned from day to day. State v. McKee, 21 D. 499.

The court may permit the jury to separate during the progress of the trial, and before verdict. Davis v. State, 45 D. 559.

194. Oath to officer in charge.—A sheriff need not be specially sworn upon taking charge of the jury when they retire to consider of their verdict. Davis v. State, 45 D. 559.

195. Taking out exhibits.—A box found in possession of a prisoner accused of theft, and claimed to have a certain relation to the theft, which, on examining it before the jury, is found to contain a secret place in the lid in which are certain bank bills supposed to be counterfeit, may be delivered to the jury as it is, and be by them taken to the jury-room. State v. Stebbins, 79 D. 223.

196. Deliberation of the jury.—A jury need not give the same weight to the different parts of the confession of a prisoner, and may even totally disregard that part of the confession which is favorable to the prisoner, if it is contrary to the experience of mankind, or is contradicted by other evidence stronger than itself. Bower v. State, 32 D. 325.

197. Doctrine of "reasonable doubt."—The guilt of accused must be fully proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and no preponderance of evidence, however great, will suffice. Billard v. State, 94 D. 317; Hipp v. State, 33 D. 463; Sumner v. State, 36 D. 561; Mitchell v. State, 68 D. 493; but it is not requisite that the jury should believe a particular witness beyond all reasonable doubt. State v. Smith, 54 D. 578.

If it is uncertain which one of two or more persons is the guilty party, all must be acquitted, although it may be positively proved that some one of them committed the crime. Campbell v. People, 61 D. 49.

Reasonable doubt, to warrant acquittal in a criminal case, is not a mere possible doubt, but is such a doubt as, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in such a condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. Com. v. Webster, 52 D. 711.

Such a doubt should be actual and substantial, not mere possibility or speculation. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the charge. Billard v. State, 94 D. 317.

*Rule that jury must be kept together, see note. 43 D. 76-87.

Separation of jury in criminal trials, see note, 60 R. 73-75.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Circumstantial evidence need not be so conclusive as to exclude every possibility of the defendant's innocence, in order to justify his conviction. If the jury, from the evidence, are satisfied of the defendant's guilt beyond any reasonable doubt, they may convict him, although there is no evidence proving or tending to prove it impossible for another person to have committed the crime. Findley v. State, 36 D. 557.

Defendant's failure to disprove some of the circumstances proved against him in a criminal case should have no weight with the jury, if, from all the circumstances proved, they are not satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Id.

11. The Verdict.

198. Reception of the verdict, generally.—The jury must be present when their verdict is delivered in court, in order that the prisoner may have them polled, and the verdict is not final until pronounced and recorded. Nomaque v. People, 12 D. 157.

The jury returned their written verdict to the clerk, during a recess, without consent of the parties. They then separated for half an hour, discussing the verdict with many meanwhile. Being recalled by the court, and asked if they had agreed, they answered that they had, and they then handed the verdict to the court. Held, no error. James v. State, 30 R. 496.

199. — in absence of accused.—An accused has a right to be present when the verdict is returned, that he may have an opportunity to poll the jury if he so desires. State v. Hughes, 36 D. 411.

It is error to receive a verdict in a criminal case in the absence of the prisoner. Temple v. Com., 29 R. 442. This principle applies where the prisoner is out on bail, the law not regarding the cause of his absence, as whether he is away voluntarily or against his will. Sneed v. State, 41 D. 102.

A verdict may be received in the absence of the accused, where, being on bail, he absconds pending his trial. Fight v. State, 28 D. 626.

Receiving a verdict in the absence of a prisoner does not entitle him to a discharge. State v. Hughes, 36 D. 411.

The verdict of a jury may be received in presence of the prisoner, although in the absence of and without notice to his counsel. Stutcliffe v. State, 51 D. 459.

A verdict may be rendered and judgment pronounced in defendant's absence in a criminal prosecution for a slight or inferior misdemeanor, such as gaming. Warren v. State, 68 D. 214.

A defendant waives his right to be present at rendition of a verdict of felony against him, if he is not in custody so as to be deprived of the power to attend, and is voluntarily absent. Price v. State, 72 D. 195.

A defendant cannot take advantage of his voluntary absence when a verdict of felony was rendered against him, if he was under recognizance of bail and present at the commencement of the trial, for thereafter he was in the custody of the law, and if he afterwards withdrew from the court or escaped so as not to be present at the return of the verdict, it is by his own unlawful act, of which he can take no advantage. Id.

Prisoner may voluntarily absent himself from the court-room during a portion of the progress of his trial. Consequently, where the jury in a trial for felony returned and stated that they had agreed upon a verdict, but had not reduced it to writing, and were sent back to prepare a written verdict, and where, when they returned, the prisoner was not present, and the jury returned their verdict, were polled by the prisoner's counsel, and discharged before his return, the prisoner will not be given a new trial, unless he show that his absence was enforced. Hill v. State, 86 D. 736.

It is not enough to show that an accused was absent from the court-room during the rendition of the verdict in his case. The burden is on him to show error, and he should make it appear that he was deprived of the right to be present, not merely that he was not present. Id.

After the jury have dispersed, with the prisoner's consent, leaving the verdict with the foreman, to be returned by him into court, it is not indispensable that the prisoner should be present when the act of return takes place in pursuance of the consent; and though he is confined in jail at the time, the verdict will not, on that account, be illegal. Smith v. State, 27 R. 393.

The verdict of a jury in a criminal case may be received in the absence of the prisoner's counsel, the prisoner himself being present. Beaumont v. State, 28 R. 424.

A verdict of felony inadvertently received in the absence of the prisoner is void and amounts to an acquittal, although his counsel were present and did not object; and the error cannot be cured, after the jury have been discharged, by immediately reassembling the jury, examining on oath those who had left the court-room, and again receiving the verdict in the presence of the prisoner. Cook v. State, 31 R. 31.

The prisoner in a case of felony not capital is entitled to be present when the jury bring in their verdict; this right cannot be waived by his counsel; but a verdict in his absence, the reception of which is assented to by his counsel, does not entitle him to a discharge, but only to a new trial. State v. Jenkins, 37 R. 643.

A bailed prisoner on trial for larceny voluntarily left the court-room during the deliberation of the jury, and on the coming in of the jury, being called and not appearing, a verdict of guilty was received and sentence was pronounced in his absence. Held, no error. Lynch v. Com., 32 R. 445.

A defendant indicted for felony, released on bail and voluntarily absent from the trial, may not complain of the reception of the verdict in his absence, especially when his counsel is present and answers for him. Barton v. State, 44 R. 743.

200. Polling the jury.* — The refusal of the court to poll the jury is error for which a judgment will be reversed. James v. State, 30 R. 496.

The consent of the defendant in an indictment to the jury's bringing in a sealed verdict is no waiver of his right to have the jury polled. Stewart v. People, 9 R. 78.

The defendant in a criminal case has no right to poll the jury. State v. Hoyt, 36 R. 89. This is a means which the court sometimes takes for its own guidance, but when the court is fully satisfied, it will not resort to it. State v. Allen, 10 D. 687.

A verdict rendered by each juror separately, instead of by the whole jointly, is valid, as where the jury, after consulting, came into court together to render their verdict jointly, but on the instance of the prisoner's counsel were polled, and each was called upon to say for himself whether he found the prisoner guilty or not guilty. State v. John, 49 D. 396.

201. Sufficiency of the verdict, generally. — Where the jury agree as to one or more of several defendants jointly indicted, but cannot agree as to the rest, and are discharged from necessity, their verdict, so far as agreed on, must be received. Com. v. Cook, 9 D. 465.

The verdict of the jury, "We find the defendant guilty of murder," written on the envelope of the indictment, on which no part of the indictment is written, but which is indorsed with the title of the case, the finding of the grand jury, and the names of the witnesses, and where there is no question raised, but that as a matter of fact, the finding of the jury refers to the indictment under which the prisoner was tried, will be held to be of sufficient certainty as to person and offense. State v. Ferguson, 27 D. 412.

The jury should render their verdict of guilty or not guilty orally, in open court, and a record should be made thereof. An improper written verdict attempted to be made should be rejected by the court. Lord v. State, 41 D. 729.

A verdict of "guilty of murder in the first degree" is invalid. Wooldridge v. State, 44 R. 706.

A verdict may be returned for manslaughter, and a valid judgment rendered upon such verdict, under an indictment charging the prisoner with murder in the first degree. Sutcliffe v. State, 51 D. 459.

On the trial of an indictment for murder, the jury returned a verdict finding "the prisoner guilty of manslaughter." By statute, there were two degrees of manslaughter. Held, that the prisoner was properly sentenced as on a conviction of the higher degree. Welch v. State, 15 R. 690.

Upon the trial of an indictment for murder not charging any particular degree, the jury returned a verdict of "guilty," specifying no degree. The statute divided murder into two degrees. Held, that the verdict was bad, and that no judgment could be rendered on it. Hogan v. State, 11 R. 575.

Upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the jury returned a verdict of guilty, without specifying the degree. The statute divided murder into two degrees, and provided that the jury should specify the degree. Held, 1. That the verdict was bad, and that no judgment could be rendered on it; 2. That it being within the power of the defendant to have had the verdict corrected when rendered, he is considered as consenting to it, and as waiving objection to being tried before another jury. State v. Rover, 21 R. 745.

202. General verdict. — On an information containing several counts, setting forth one offense in different forms, evidence was offered in support of one count only, and the jury gave a general verdict of guilty. The verdict was held good. State v. Smith, 5 D. 132.

A general verdict of "guilty" upon an indictment containing two counts, one for stealing a horse, and the other for receiving a horse, knowing the same to have been stolen, is error, and entitles the prisoner to a venire de novo. State v. Johnson, 22 R. 666.

Upon a general verdict of guilty, judgment may be given upon any one or all of several felonies of the same degree, included in the indictment, as they may have been supported by proof. State v. Crank, 23 D. 117.

Verdict of "guilty on the first count" of an indictment is a general, not a special, verdict. Roberts v. State, 58 D. 528.

203. Special verdict. — A special verdict which states the felonious taking in one state, and the taking continued into another, cannot be supported as a felonious taking in the latter. State v. Brown, 1 D. 548.

A special verdict finding a defendant guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, but not finding him guilty in the county where the offense is alleged to have been committed, is insufficient. Com. v. Call, 32 D. 284.

Such a verdict does not amount to an acquittal, but the accused is entitled to a new trial. Id.

A jury have the right to find a special verdict, by which the facts are put on the rec-cord, and the law is submitted to the judges. Com. v. Chatham, 88 D. 539.

A special verdict is sufficient, if it finds all the substantial requisites of the charge, without following the technical language used in the indictment; and it is not necessary that, after stating the facts, they should draw any legal conclusions. Id.

A statute provided that when the defense of insanity was set up upon the trial of an indictment for murder, etc., the jury should find specially whether the defendant was insane when the alleged crime was committed, and that if they acquitted on that ground, the verdict should so state; that thereupon the court should sentence the defendant to confinement in the insane hospital until such time as the governor should discharge him; that such discharge should be granted whenever the prison inspectors should summon certain officers named to examine the defendant, and they should certify to the governor that he was no longer insane. Held, that the jury had the constitutional right to give a general verdict, but that a special verdict was not unauthorized. Underwood v. People, 20 R. 633.

204. Sealed verdict. — In a case of felony, the jury, by their foreman, sealed their verdict of guilty, using a printed blank form for the purpose, and intrusted it to their foreman, and separated overnight. The sealing of the verdict and the separation were by permission of the court, without the knowledge of the defendant or his counsel. The next morning the jury assembled in court, and the prisoner being present, the clerk asked if the jury had agreed, and the foreman answered that they had, and without saying more, handed the sealed verdict to the clerk, who opened and read it to the jury, and thereupon told them to harken to their verdict, as the court had recorded it. Held, irregular; the verdict must be pronounced by the foreman in open court, the effect of the sealed verdict being simply to preclude the idea of influence during separation. Com. v. Tobin, 28 R. 220.

205. Compromise verdict. — What does not constitute a compromise verdict, see Monroe v. State, 76 D. 58.

It is no objection in law to the verdict that a juror in a capital case at first was not for conviction, but finding a majority was against him, after deliberation with them, united publicly and of his own accord in the verdict. State v. Godwin, 44 D. 42.

A jury, having agreed upon a verdict of murder in the second degree, but disagreeing as to the term of imprisonment to be imposed, agreed that each member should mark a number not more than fifty nor less than five, and that the aggregate divided by twelve should stand as the number of years of imprisonment. Held, error. Wood v. State, 44 R. 701.

206. Amending and correcting the verdict. — A verdict of "guilty on the first account" may be corrected with respect to the orthography of the word "count," by an erasure, under the direction of the court, of the syllable "ac." Roberts v. State, 58 D. 528.

207. Interpreting the verdict. — A and B being indicted for a conspiracy to defraud C, the jury found a verdict that there was an agreement between A and B to obtain money from C, but with intent to return it again; this was held not to be a verdict of acquittal, or a verdict on which any judgment could be given. People v. Olcott, 1 D. 168.

A general verdict of guilty is understood to find a higher offense, if there is testimony to support it; and such verdict is not ground for a new trial. State v. Nelson, 94 D. 130.

208. Assessment of punishment by jury. — A verdict against a defendant, in manslaughter, must fix the punishment. Dias v. State, 39 D. 448.

The court will not revise or control the discretion of a jury in fixing the duration of punishment. McWhirt's Case, 46 D. 196.

A verdict finding prisoner "guilty of murder in first degree, and penitentiary for life," is sufficient to sustain his conviction and sentence accordingly. Notes v. State, 62 D. 711.

12. Arrest of Judgment.

209. Grounds for the motion, generally. — Upon an indictment for forging a check upon the Bank of Virginia, and obtaining a note of the said bank therefor, under a statute passed before the bank was established, and a verdict of guilty, — held that judgment must be arrested. Com. v. Swinney, 5 D. 512.

A motion in arrest of judgment can only be made on account of some intrinsic defect apparent on the face of the record, which would render the judgment in the case erroneous. State v. Carrer, 77 D. 275.

210. Insufficient grounds. — The fact that a juror, during the trial of a prisoner for murder, asked the prosecuting attorney, and afterwards the court, to procure the attendance of a certain witness whose evidence such juror believed to be important, is not a sufficient ground for arresting the judgment pronounced on a verdict of guilty rendered by the jury of which he was a member. State v. Watkins, 21 D. 712.

The illegality of a grand jury which presented an indictment cannot be taken advantage of on motion to arrest judgment; such objection must be pleaded in abatement. State v. Carrer, 77 D. 275.

211. Objections too late after verdict. — A statute provided that before any prisoner is tried for felony in a superior court he shall be examined before an inferior court, unless such examination be waived by his consent entered of record in such superior court. Held, that it was too late after the verdict and judgment in the superior court for a prisoner to insist that such statute had not been complied with. State v. Stewart, 23 R. 623.

Even in a capital case, if the court permits the jury to separate before submission, and the defendant does not object until after verdict, the objection is waived. Henning v. State, 55 R. 756.

13. The Sentence, and how Enforced.

212. Power and duty of the court.

—A court may pass sentence without having the original indictment before it, and if the original be stolen from the files its place may be supplied by a copy, like any other record or pleading. Mount v. State, 45 D. 542.

213. Time to pass—Delaying or suspending sentence. — On conviction of maintaining a nuisance, the court suspended sentence, on payment of costs, so long as the defendant should abate the nuisance. At a subsequent term the court imposed sentence of imprisonment and payment of costs. Held, void. State v. Addy, 39 R. 547.

214. Inquiry as to whether defendant has "anything to say," etc. — The record of a trial for a capital offense must show that prisoner was present when sentence of death was pronounced upon him, and that he was asked whether or not he had anything to say why such sentence should not be pronounced upon him. Hamilton v. Com., 55 D. 485.

It is error not to ask the defendant, in a case of felony, why sentence should not be passed upon him, and that this was done must appear from the judgment entry. Mulles v. State, 6 R. 691.

It is not necessary that a prisoner convicted of a felony, not capital, should be asked before judgment what he has to say why sentence should not be pronounced against him. State v. Taylor, 21 R. 561; Jones v. State, 24 R. 658.

The record of a capital conviction failed to show that, before sentence, the prisoner was asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced. Held, that the sentence should be reversed, and the prisoner remanded for resentencing. McCune v. Com., 21 R. 7.

On a conviction of murder it is error to omit to ask the prisoner if he has anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced, but it does not necessitate a new trial, but only resentencing. State v. Trueman, 47 R. 840.

In sentencing for murder, it seems it is not necessary to ask the prisoner if he has anything to say against the sentence. At all events, a motion in arrest of judgment, in which the omission is not set up as error, is a waiver of such right. State v. Hoyt, 36 R. 89.

215. Designating time of imprisonment. — Where a person was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for a term of one year, to commence upon the expiration of another term; and one year afterward the first judgment and sentence were adjudged void, — held, on habeas corpus, that the sentence either commenced to run immediately on rendition, and had expired, or it was void for uncertainty, and in either case, the prisoner was entitled to his discharge from the state prison. Ex parte Roberts, 16 R. 1.

216. Sentence where there are several counts or several offenses. — An indictment contained two counts. The first charged the defendant with breaking and entering a storehouse; the second charged him with stealing the goods. He was found guilty under both counts, and the judge imposed a distinct sentence on each count. Held, not erroneous. Com. v. Birdsall, 8 R. 283.

The prisoner was tried on an indictment containing many counts, each charging a different misdemeanor of the same kind. A verdict of guilty, on twelve counts, was returned, and a separate sentence, to the full extent allowed by law for a misdemeanor of the grade charged, was imposed on each count. Held, 1. That the sentence for a single offense was good; 2. That the further sentences were in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and absolutely void, and not merely erroneous; 3. That the prisoner, after the execution of one sentence, was entitled to discharge on habeas corpus. People v. Liscomb, 19 R. 211.

217. Cumulative and alternative sentences. — If a person is convicted at the same term of court on two several informations of distinct offenses, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment for each, judgment may be given that one term of imprisonment shall commence at the expiration of the other. State v. Smith, 5 D. 132; Petition of McCormick, 1 R. 197.

The commencement of the term of a sentence of imprisonment "to take effect immediately after the expiration" of a prior sentence, is, if such prior sentence be reversed, the date of such reversal. Brown v. Com., 26 D. 130.

Upon conviction of several misdemeanors of like character, charged in separate counts of the same indictment, the court has no power to impose a sentence, or cumulative sentences, exceeding in the aggregate the maximum punishment prescribed by statute for one offense of the character charged. People v. Liscomb, 19 R. 211.

² Failure to ask defendant whether he has anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced against him, see notes, 21 R. 5; 36 R. 87, 88.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

218. Recalling and vacating sentence.—New sentence.*—The judge of a superior court has power to revise and increase a sentence imposed upon a convict, during the same term of court, and before the original sentence has gone into operation, or any action been had upon it. Com. v. Weymouth, 79 D. 776.

Where a prisoner has been convicted and sentenced, and duly committed in pursuance of the sentence, the power of the court to revise or change the sentence is at an end. Brown v. Rice, 2 R. 11.

A defendant who has been found guilty, generally, upon an indictment containing several counts for distinct offenses, and has been sentenced upon some of the counts to imprisonment, and has been imprisoned under such sentence, cannot be brought up at a subsequent term to which the case has not been continued, and be sentenced anew upon another count in the same indictment, even if the first sentence was erroneous. Com. v. Foster, 23 R. 326.

On a trial for murder, a verdict was rendered of involuntary manslaughter, and the jury assessed a fine. The court thereupon discharged the prisoner. Afterward, at the same term, the court set aside the judgment, in the absence of the prisoner, and entered judgment for the fine assessed, and for imprisonment. Held, valid. Price v. Com., 36 R. 797.

219. Entry of judgment.—So much of a judgment as is an affirmation of the prisoner's guilt may be rejected as surplusage, and the fact that it was defectively stated cannot avoid the judgment. Hawkins v. State, 44 D. 431.

An error which will render a judgment voidable only is the want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding in conducting the action or defense. Ex parte Gibson, 91 D. 546.

An entry of a judgment in the minutes of the court should show that all the acts required by the statute to be done up to that stage of the case were performed. Ib.

A judgment entered in the minutes of the court is not void, if it appears therein that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the person of the defendant, however erroneous it may be, unless it is so uncertain in its terms as to be void on that ground. Ib.

I. WHEN IT LIES.

II. PROCEDURE.

I. WHEN IT LIES.

1. When trover will lie, generally.—An action of trover may be maintained for the recovery of property delivered in exchange for other property fraudulently described and not owned by defendant. Waters v. Van Winkle, 4 D. 387.

Trover, assumpsit, or case will lie against a bailee, if a conversion be proved. The effect of an election of the form of action considered with reference to the proof, and the nature of the defense. Lockwood v. Bull, 18 D. 539.

Trover for the amount of a promissory note will lie by the maker against the payee, who has transferred it in violation of the agreement pursuant to which it was given, and the transferee recovers judgment thereon against the maker. Buck v. Kent, 21 D. 576.

If that judgment was of any importance in determining the rights of the parties in trover, an exemplified copy ought to have been produced. Ib.

Trover will lie by one tenant in common against another for the loss or destruction of personalty while in his possession. Hyde v. Stone, 22 D. 582.

Trover lies wherever trespass de bonis asportatis will lie. Pierce v. Benjamin, 25 D. 396.

Trover is the proper remedy for trespass committed by mining coal and carrying it away from another's land by mistake. Forryth v. Wells, 80 D. 617.

A party entitled to the possession of a writing cannot take it by force or fraud; but in trover the manner of taking possession is immaterial, the gist of the action being the wrongful conversion. Graham v. Warner, 28 D. 65.

Trover lies to recover property appropriated by theft, as well as that taken by fraudulent means or by trespass. Hutchinson v. Merchants' etc. Bank, 80 D. 596.

A tree standing wholly on one's land, but extending its roots into, and its branches over, the land of another, belongs nevertheless to the former proprietor, and the latter is liable for the taking and conversion of fruit growing on the branches of such tree, which overhang his land. Lyman v. Hale, 21 D. 728.

Trover lies by a mortgagee in possession against a stranger for cutting trees upon the former's premises and taking them away, the severance constituting the trees personal property, and the taking away the asportation for which the action lies. Whidden v. Seelye, 63 D. 661.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Trover is a transitory action, and lies for conversion of personal property in a foreign jurisdiction. Id.

A private action of trover is suspended until the public prosecution for the offense has been duly conducted and ended, but the private wrong is not merged in the public wrong, nor does the public prosecution supersede the private action. Hutchinson v. Merchants' etc. Bank, 80 D. 596.

If an action of trover is commenced within the period of limitation, after the conclusion of the public prosecution for a theft, it will not be barred by the statute; the action being suspended until that time, the statute of limitations cannot begin to run against the action until the disability is removed. Id.

In an action to recover the value of property alleged to have been stolen from the plaintiff by the defendant, — held, that the right of action was not suspended until the determination of a criminal prosecution against the offender. Houck v. Minnick, 2 R. 413.

2. When it will not lie. — Trover does not lie against one coming into possession by delivery or finding of goods, without proof of some tortious act on his part. Burditt v. Hunt, 43 D. 289.

Trover will not lie against an attaching officer for neglect in not taking proper care of the property attached. Abbott v. Kimball, 47 D. 708.

Conversion is the gist of the action, and without conversion, neither possession of the property, negligence, nor misfortune will enable the action to be maintained. Rogers v. Huie, 56 D. 363.

Trover will not lie unless defendant has converted property to his own use; and if not, then any other act to amount to a conversion must be done with a wrongful intent, either express or implied. Id.

A plaintiff cannot recover in trover, although there has been a technical conversion, if his real and substantial claim is merely to recover damages for the breach of an illegal contract. Woodman v. Hubbard, 67 D. 310.

3. Who may maintain it. — One joint owner of a chattel may bring trover or trespass for his separate interest, and the defendant cannot take advantage at the trial of the non-joinder of the other parties, but must plead it in abatement. Wheelwright v. Depeyster, 3 D. 345.

Trover will lie in favor of the executor of a deputy sheriff, for the conversion, by a stranger, of property attached by the deputy on meane process. Badlam v. Tucker, 11 D. 202.

One from whom goods have been stolen may maintain trover, before the conviction or acquittal of the person accused of the taking. Pettingill v. Rideout, 25 D. 473.

Trover by the purchaser at an execution sale will lie, notwithstanding the conversion may have taken place before the sale. Jewett v. Patridge, 28 D. 173.

Trover will not lie for the owner of the reversionary estate in a chattel, prior to the determination of the particular estate. Steele v. Williams, 31 D. 646.

Trover cannot be maintained by owners of estate in remainder, to recover for a conversion occasioned by an absolute sale of the entire estate in the property by a purchaser from a precedent tenant for life, where such sale was made during the continuance of the particular life estate. Lewis v. Mobley, 34 D. 379.

Trover by an occupant, for an undivided moiety of crops of land worked on shares will lie against an officer selling the whole on execution against the land-owner. White v. Morton, 52 D. 75.

The original owner regaining possession of converted property with its accretions after conversion may recover the value of the property and its accretions if it be again converted, either by the original converter or by a stranger. Moody v. Whitney, 61 D. 239.

An administratrix may maintain trover for the conversion of a certificate of stock against one who received it from the heir, as security for a debt, where, after the death of the intestate owning the certificate, and before the appointment of the widow as administratrix, the widow and heirs indorsed it, and caused it to be sent by one of the heirs to a certain person for sale, and subsequently such heir, without the assent of the widow and the other heirs, made an agreement to pledge it as security for a debt which he owed, and gave an order on the custodian of the certificate for its delivery to the creditor, who supposed the heir owned it, and who obtained it and sold it. Morton v. Preston, 100 D. 146.

Plaintiff raked into heaps manure that had accumulated in the street, the fee of which was in the borough, intending to remove it. Before he could do so, and within twenty-four hours, defendant carted it away. Held, that plaintiff could maintain trover. Haslem v. Lockwood, 9 R. 350.

One falsely and fraudulently representing himself to be a member of a responsible firm of commission merchants obtained goods from the owner, giving a forged check of the firm in payment; he then shipped the goods to the firm, who in good faith sold them on his account to an innocent purchaser, who in turn sold them. Held, that the owner, being innocent, and not negligent, was entitled to recover for their value from the last purchaser. Alexander v. Swackhamer, 55 R. 180.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

4. The necessary title or possession.*

— Plaintiff, to recover in an action of trover, must prove general or special property in himself and a right of possession at the time of the conversion by the defendant, a conversion by the defendant, and the value of the property. Danley v. Rector, 50 D. 242; Turley v. Tucker, 35 D. 449; Hudspeth v. Wilson, 21 D. 344; Hyde v. Noble, 38 D. 508; Whitlock v. Heard, 48 D. 73; Brasier v. Ansley, 51 D. 408; Ames v. Palmer, 66 D. 271; Baxter v. Bush, 70 D. 429; Davidson v. Waldron, 83 D. 206.

The plaintiff, to maintain an action of trover, must appear to be entitled to the thing in question, and to be in the actual and constructive possession thereof, at the time of the conversion. Gage v. Allison, 2 D. 682; Lewis v. Mobley, 34 D. 379.

Possession and the exercise of acts of ownership are sufficient evidence of title, prima facie, to maintain trover. Jones v. Sinclair, 9 D. 75.

If the plaintiff, in an action of trover, show a right to possession, either at the time of the taking or at the time of conversion, it will be sufficient. Id.

In trover, as in ejectment, plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, without regard to the weakness of that of his adversary. Davidson v. Waldron, 83 D. 206. And therefore the plaintiff cannot recover if defendant prove property in another when the conversion took place. Hostler v. Skull, 1 D. 583.

The property of personal chattels draws to it the possession, so that the owner, although not in actual possession, may bring either trespass or trover, at his election, against a stranger who takes them away. Bird v. Clark, 3 D. 269.

A mere naked possession, without some kind of property, is not sufficient to entitle a person to maintain trover. Odiorne v. Colley, 9 D. 39; Laspeyre v. McFarland, 7 D. 705.

The general owner of a chattel cannot maintain trover therefor during the continuance of a definite term for which he has parted with the possession of it. Swift v. Moseley, 33 D. 197.

Possession is sufficient evidence of title to enable plaintiff to maintain trover against a wrong-doer, although the title to the chattel may not be in the plaintiff, but in another; and if the defendant would protect himself by showing an outstanding title in another, he must connect himself with it by showing that he acted under the authority of him who was in fact the owner. Louremore v. Berry, 54 D. 188.

The sheriff's property in goods levied on is sufficient to support trespass or trover, for a taking or a conversion of them. Lock-

* What title or possession is sufficient to maintain trover, see note, 1 D. 585-586.

wood v. Bull, 13 D. 539; Davidson v. Waldron, 83 D. 206.

A sheriff having attached personal chattels, a person to whom he delivers them for safe-keeping is merely his servant, having no legal interest in the chattels, and cannot therefore maintain trover for them. Ludden v. Leavitt, 6 D. 45.

Where an officer takes goods upon an attachment or execution, and delivers them to a third person for safe-keeping, upon his written promise to return them on demand, such person has a sufficient interest in the goods to maintain trover for them. Pool v. Symonds, 8 D. 71.

In an action of trover by a purchaser of a lot of logs under execution, which had been validly levied upon some of them and invalidly upon the remainder, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that he is entitled to the possession of the particular property which is the subject of the suit, or of some part of it which he can identify, or he cannot recover. Brown v. Pratt, 65 D. 330.

A second mortgagee of personal property, who is not in actual possession, cannot maintain an action in the nature of trover for its conversion. Ring v. Neale, 19 R. 316.

The bailor may maintain trover for a chattel bailed by him for a definite term, when the bailee, without the bailor's consent, puts it to a use different from that for which it was bailed. Swift v. Moseley, 33 D. 197.

Whether a naked trustee of a chattel can recover full damages in trover, quære. Newsum v. Newsum, 19 D. 739.

Where the special property is founded on possession, the possession must be peaceable and lawful, or acquired by some shadow of title from the absolute owner; a mere trespasser cannot by his trespass acquire possession sufficient to maintain trover. Turley v. Tucker, 35 D. 449.

The plaintiff, having a general or special property in himself as an individual, may bring trover in his own name, whether he acquired that property as a purchaser, as a common carrier, as a special bailee, or in the discharge of his duty as a sheriff or other public officer. Brewster v. Vail, 38 D. 547.

The possessor of a promissory note may maintain trover for its conversion, although the legal title to the note and the right to sue for the money due thereby is in the payee. Louremore v. Berry, 54 D. 188.

Possession by the finder of a lost article is sufficient to entitle him to maintain trover against any one who converts it, except the owner. Brandon v. Huntsville Bank, 18 D. 48.

Possession of a slave who finds a chattel is the possession of his master. Id.

Buildings erected by one person on land of another, with the latter's express consent, are the property of the former; and he, or those claiming under him, may maintain trover for them against the owner of the land. Osgood v. Howard, 20 D. 322.

For index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

One who has the right to the possession of a certain tract cannot maintain trover for stone and gravel dug therefrom, against one who has the actual adverse possession of the land and sets up title thereto. Mather v. Trinity Church, 8 D. 663.

Trover for iron ore may be maintained by one in possession of the land from which it was taken, who has dug the same under a conveyance of the right by the owner of the land, against a person taking and converting such ore after it is dug, and the action cannot be defeated by showing a previous conveyance of the right to take ore, to a stranger who had never been in possession or done anything under the contract. Grubb v. Guilford, 28 D. 700.

The owner of land out of possession may maintain trover for timber cut thereon by one not in actual possession of the premises. Wright v. Guier, 36 D. 108.

5. For what property it lies. — An action of tort for conversion of a gold coin issued by a private individual, of the value of ten dollars, and current in some parts of the country, and passed away by mistake for a half-dollar, and then by the receiver to a third person for the same amount, is maintainable against the last person after demand made and tender of a half-dollar. Chapman v. Cole, 71 D. 739.

Trespass will not lie against an officer and his purchaser at a judicial sale of a lot of saw-logs, where the levy was wrongfully made by such officer upon part of the logs, without distinguishing what part, and the part levied on was sold without being pointed out or separated from the rest, and the purchaser never took possession or attempted to exercise any control over the property. Conkey v. Amis, 74 D. 251.

A compliance with the conditions of an agreement sufficient to sustain trover for promissory notes is shown where it appears that the plaintiff and vendor delivered to the defendant the notes of the vendee for the purchase price of land conveyed by the vendee to the defendant, because the defendant was uneasy as to the title by reason of certain mortgages upon the land undischarged of record, and for the purpose of securing him against those mortgages, the notes to be held by the defendant until the plaintiff should "get up the mortgages" and the mortgage notes; that the plaintiff procured the mortgage notes and a quitclaim deed from one of the mortgagees, the other being dead, and tendered these notes to the defendant, together with his bond indemnifying the defendant against the mortgage undischarged of record, which bond the defendant accepted. Robbins v. Packard, 76 D. 134.

Trover will lie: For a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace. Hudspeth v. Wilson, 21 D. 344. Contra, Cobb v. Cornegay, 45 D. 497.

By a judgment creditor, for a writ of execution issued on his judgment, and this though it had become an expired process. Keeler v. Fassett, 52 D. 71.

For wrongful conversion of a promissory note. Davis v. Funk, 80 D. 519.

For conversion of "shares of stock," rather than for the certificate. Payne v. Elliot, 35 R. 80; Budd v. Multnomah Street R'y Co., 53 R. 355.

For grain consigned to a public warehouse, and there mingled with other grain; and where the owner of the warehouse transfers the warehouse and such contents to a national bank, to secure a debt, the latter must respond to such consignors for such grain, irrespective of its chartered authority. German Nat. Bank v. Meadowcroft, 35 R. 137.

Trover will not lie: For a portion purchased of a larger quantity of like property, where, subsequently to the purchase, there has been no further act done to specify and identify the part sold. Woods v. McGee, 30 D. 202.

For a judgment won at cards, and delivered to the winner. Hudspeth v. Wilson, 21 D. 344.

To recover the possession of personal property which the plaintiff has parted with for the purpose of defrauding his creditors; but the personal representatives of such a person may, after his death, maintain such an action for the benefit of his creditors, if his estate be otherwise insufficient to pay his debts. Stewart v. Kearney, 31 D. 482.

Against a sheriff for unfinished counterfeit coin found in the possession of a person arrested by him at the suit of a third person claiming to be the owner, where he does not show that it was put in its questionable shape without his knowledge or consent. Spalding v. Preston, 50 D. 68.

For a justice's judgment, overruling, on this point, Hudspeth v. Wilson, 21 D. 344; for a justice's judgment is not a record, but has one essential quality of a record, that it concludes the parties from denying the facts it affirms. It is a muniment in which both parties have an interest, but neither an exclusive one. Cobb v. Cornegay, 45 D. 497.

For the conversion of a judgment. Platt v. Potts, 53 D. 412.

For a note after judgment rendered on it, as the note then has no existence. Id.

For the value of a note paid before conversion, or in any manner legally discharged, for in fact it would have no value; but if the word "paid" was written across the face of the note by mistake, or by one without authority, this would not discharge the maker from his obligation to pay, and consequently trover would lie for its conversion. Louremore v. Berry, 54 D. 188.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

6. Who is liable. — Conversion by an officer of the law is a conversion by the persons employing him. Calkins v. Lockwood, 42 D. 729.

Where a salesman of a merchant takes into his employer's store, after close of business hours at night, a creditor of such employer, and selects goods therein to be taken in payment of the debt, which are sent off by the purchaser without the knowledge of the merchant, such purchaser acquires no title to the goods, but will be liable to the merchant for the value thereof, and for any damages he has sustained by reason of the taking and carrying away of the goods. But he will not be liable for the value of other goods packed up and sent off at the same time by the salesman to other creditors of his employer, unless it can be shown that he aided, assisted, and concurred in their being so taken and sent away. Peshine v. Shepperson, 94 D. 468.

Trover will lie: Against an officer who sells without notice property seized under process. Wright v. Spencer, 18 D. 76.

Against one who hires a horse to travel a certain distance, and goes farther; but if the owner receives payment for the hire of the horse for the actual distance traveled, the hirer is not liable in trover, although the horse may have been injured. The owner's remedy is case. Rotch v. Hawes, 22 D. 414.

Against a broker purchasing property from one who has no title, for value, and bona fide, and shipping it to his principal. Williams v. Merle, 25 D. 604.

Against one who aids and abets another in keeping property from its rightful owner. Scott v. Perkins, 48 D. 470.

Against a party to whom live-stock has been delivered, with power to sell them to pay for their keeping, if he convert them to his own use. Whitlock v. Heard, 48 D. 73.

Against a purchaser in good faith of stolen goods, if he has sold them subsequently. Courtis v. Cane, 76 D. 174.

Trover will not lie: Against a servant, for goods bought by master at unauthorized sale by a mortgagor in possession, and delivered by the mortgagor to the servant to be carried to his master, where the servant carries and delivers them, but has no knowledge of the want of authority to sell, and is guilty of no tortious act. Burditt v. Hunt, 43 D. 289.

Against an auctioneer, where he receives and sells stolen goods in the regular course of business, and pays over the proceeds of sale to the felon without notice that the goods were stolen. Royers v. Huie, 56 D. 363.

Against the personal representatives for a conversion by the deceased in his lifetime. Chaplin v. Barrett, 75 D. 731.

Against one who has received, in good faith, and without gross negligence, stolen coupons of United States bonds, and has sold them and paid over the proceeds to his principal. Spooner v. Holmes, 3 R. 491.

Against one who hires a horse to drive to a particular place, and in returning takes a wrong road by mistake, and on discovering his mistake takes what he considers the best way back, which carries him by a circuit through another town. Spooner v. Manchester, 43 R. 514.

Against a railway conductor permitting a passenger to travel on his train with goods which the conductor knows to have been stolen, and thus escape, where he did not know that the passenger was the thief nor that the plaintiff was the owner. Randlette v. Judkins, 52 R. 747.

7. What amounts to a conversion, generally.* — A person may be guilty of a conversion without having the actual possession of the property. Hall v. Amos, 17 D. 42.

To constitute a conversion sufficient to support trover, it is not necessary to show a manual taking, nor that the defendant has applied it to his own use; but assuming a right of disposal, and exercising an exclusive right, constitutes a conversion. Bristol v. Burt, 5 D. 264; Webber v. Davis, 69 D. 87.

Any intermeddling with the property of another, in a manner subversive of the owner's dominion over it, is sufficient evidence of a conversion. Reid v. Colcock, 9 D. 729; Allen v. Crary, 25 D. 566.

Conversion is any wrongful exercise or assumption of authority, personally or by procurement, over another's goods, depriving him of their possession. Hale v. Ames, 15 D. 150.

Where a vendee takes possession and lets the premises, together with the use of chattels thereon belonging to the vendor, and receives pay for such use, there is sufficient evidence of a conversion. Miller v. Plumb, 16 D. 456.

One who is in possession of another's property is bound to surrender it upon demand; but if he does not know the owner, claims no property in himself, and is willing to give it up upon being exonerated, he is not guilty of a conversion. Dowd v. Wadsworth, 18 D. 567.

A tortious taking of another's chattel is a conversion. Woodbury v. Long, 19 D. 345.

The gist of trover is the disposing or assuming to dispose of another's goods without his authority. Everett v. Coffin, 22 D. 551.

A purchaser from a vendee in a conditional contract of sale, before the performance of the condition, is guilty of conversion when he treats and claims the property as his own.

* Conversion, what is, see note, 18 D. 151-153.

By finder of lost article, see note, 18 D. 55-56.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

and states that the owner must look to the original vendee for payment. Trover may therefore be maintained against him in the absence of any demand for possession. Houston v. Dyche, 33 D. 130.

An unlawful taking of goods out of the possession of the owner, with intent to convert them to the use of the taker, is itself a conversion, and not merely evidence of it. Clark v. Whitaker, 48 D. 160.

A party is guilty of conversion, though he did not personally engage with the person who actually took possession of the property, and used, consumed, and disposed of it, if he co-operated with him in those acts by aiding and abetting him in doing them, and by his subsequent recognition, approval, and adoption of them; and so, also, is a party who, though having no active personal agency in the taking of the property or in the subsequent use or disposition of it, yet advised and assisted another in the measures adopted for the taking of it, received benefit from the taking, and subsequently approved and adopted it. Ib.

Any act of ownership over the property taken, which is inconsistent with the true owner's right of dominion over it, is evidence of a conversion. Ragsdale v. Williams, 49 D. 406; Woodman v. Hubbard, 57 D. 310.

To constitute conversion, possession, with a claim of title adverse to that of the true owner, is sufficient. Maxwell v. Harrison, 52 D. 335.

A breach of contract by a positive misconduct involving a loss or destruction of property bailed is a conversion. Phillips v. Brigham, 71 D. 227.

Where a party is ignorant of the title of a third person at the time he enters into a contract of exchange, but is afterwards informed of it, and then continues to claim and use the article exchanged, he is guilty of conversion, and an action of trover may be maintained against him without a demand. Porter v. Foster, 37 D. 59.

Trover cannot be maintained by an attaching officer against a receptor or bailee of the attached property, if it becomes materially damaged or lessened in value through the mere negligence or non-feasance of the bailee, as such neglect or non-feasance does not amount to a conversion. Tinker v. Merrill, 94 D. 345.

Conversion to sustain trover consists either in appropriation of the property to the party's own use and beneficial enjoyment, or in its destruction, or in exercising dominion over it, in exclusion or defiance of the plaintiff's right, or in withholding the possession from the plaintiff under a claim of title inconsistent with his own. Ib.

Conversion is never established by proof that property intrusted to defendant has been materially damaged or lessened in value through the latter's mere negligence or non-feasance. Ib.

A sale of property by the hirer of it is a conversion thereof, and puts an end to the contract between the hirer and the latter, and the latter may maintain trover therefor against the purchaser, before the expiration of the time for which it was let. Sanborn v. Colman, 23 D. 703.

Where a party sells property claimed by another, and the proceeds are placed in the hands of a third person to abide a decision of their respective rights, and such party persuades the third person to pay him the sum he has received, without the privity or consent of the other, he waives the benefit of any arrangement made with the third person, and becomes liable at once to the other party if he was the owner of the property, though no decision has been rendered nor demand made of the defendant. Higgins v. Brown, 37 D. 54.

A person is guilty of conversion who sells property of another without the owner's authority, although he acts as the agent or servant of one claiming to be the owner, and is ignorant of his principal's want of authority. Kimball v. Billings, 92 D. 581.

Sawing trees out by and belonging to another, into logs, is a conversion. Baker v. Wheeler, 24 D. 66.

The fact that one takes possession of stolen property, as depositary or common carrier, will not charge him with conversion, but some action by which it is converted into something else, as into money or other property, either by sale, exchange, or collection, or some intermeddling inconsistent with the owner's right should be found, in order to make the person responsible who has obtained innocent possession. Koch v. Branch, 100 D. 324.

A defendant is not guilty of conversion where a wagon belonging to the plaintiff is brought to his premises and left there, and the plaintiff makes a demand for it, but of no one in particular, and there was no assertion of title on the part of the defendant, and no refusal to deliver the wagon, nor offer or threat to prevent the plaintiff from taking possession; where, in fact, throughout the whole transaction the defendant was entirely passive. Ragsdale v. Williams, 49 D. 406.

It is conversion if one hire a horse to be driven to one place and voluntarily drive him to another, and trover will lie. Woodman v. Hubbard, 57 D. 310.

Buying a horse from one who had no right to sell him, and subsequently exercising dominion over him by letting him to another person, amount to a conversion, although the buyer believed his title to the horse to be perfect; and no demand by the owner is necessary before commencing an action for the conversion. Gilmore v. Newton, 85 D. 749.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

If one drives the cattle of another upon a highway in a direction known to him to be opposite to the owner's residence, and they are lost in consequence, he is liable for conversion, although he did not intend it. Tobin v. Deal, 50 R. 345.

8. What is a conversion as between persons occupying one of the legal relations. — In general, one joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener of a chattel cannot maintain trover against another merely because he is in exclusive possession. But if one joint owner destroy the property or do any act without the consent of the other, inconsistent with their joint ownership, or tending to destroy the other's joint interest or the property itself, trover will lie. Cowan v. Buyers, 5 D. 668.

If one joint owner of a chattel sells the entire chattel, it is a conversion for which trover lies. Permyer v. Kelly, 54 D. 177.

The agent of one joint owner selling entire chattel is guilty of conversion, whether he had notice of a co-tenant's rights or not, and is liable to an action of trover by a co-tenant, where neither negligence nor any fault whatever is imputable to the plaintiff. Ib.

A bailee may have trover against the bailor or his vendee, where the possession of the property has been fraudulently taken from the bailee in contravention of his rights. McConnell v. Maxwell, 26 D. 428.

A bailee is liable in trover where he refuses to deliver the property to one whom he knows to be the owner thereof, and from whom his bailor obtained the property wrongfully. Doty v. Hawkins, 25 D. 459.

An abuse by the bailee of the thing loaned or hired is a willful conversion, rendering him liable in trover, and precluding a return of the property in mitigation of damages, especially where it is essentially injured; as where an omnibus, hired for use only in a particular place, is driven with a heavy load to a different place, and damaged so as to require repairs. Hart v. Skinner, 42 D. 500.

Where a lessee of a chattel sells it during the continuance of the term for which it was leased, the lessor may maintain trover therefor. Swift v. Moseley, 33 D. 197.

9. Necessity of demand before suit. — Demand for a watch left with a watchmaker for repairs, and stolen from him through his negligence, is not necessary before bringing suit for the value of the watch, as the law requires no man to do a vain and nugatory thing. Halyard v. Dechelman, 77 D. 585.

10. — of tender of charges claimed by defendant. — Trover for goods may be sustained though a lien thereon exists in favor of defendant, if before the commencement of the action he had converted them by an absolute sale thereof. In such case no tender of the amount of the lien need be made, but the defendant may recoup the damages to the extent of such amount. Saltus v. Everett, 32 D. 541.

11. Sufficiency and effect of the demand. — A demand by letter upon another to restore goods belonging to the writer is not sufficient to constitute a conversion, if no notice is taken of it; but if an answer is sent falsely, denying the possession of such goods, the demand becomes sufficient to charge the latter with a conversion. Pattes v. Gilmore, 45 D. 385.

Where a demand is made upon one member of a firm, after its dissolution, it is not sufficient to charge the other members with conversion of property delivered to the firm. Ib.

Plaintiff in an action of trover may make demand by agent. Buel v. Pumphrey, 56 D. 714.

Where the owner of property demands its return from the bailee, who has violated his contract of bailment, or makes any other effort for its recovery, this is not of itself a waiver of a previous conversion. Cobb v. Wallace, 98 D. 435.

12. When a refusal is a conversion. — A seizure of goods by an officer is not tortious, where he takes them under regular process in favor of a creditor of a fraudulent vendee, and therefore the vendor, to enable him to maintain trover therefor against the officer, must make demand upon him; but if demand being made, the officer refuses to deliver them without requiring any evidence of the title of the person making the demand, he will be presumed to have waived his claim to such information. Thompson v. Rose, 41 D. 121.

A declaration that a party "will not deliver the goods to any person whatsoever," when a demand has been made, will be deemed a refusal, and, quoad such goods, a conversion. Buel v. Pumphrey, 56 D. 714.

An agent making demand for delivery of property belonging to his principal must, as a general rule, prove his authority to make the demand; where, however, the party upon whom the demand is made makes no objection to the authority of the agent to make the demand, but puts his refusal to deliver upon other grounds, which cannot in point of law be supported, such refusal is a clear waiver of all objection to the authority of the agent, and amounts in law to a conversion. Robertson v. Crane, 61 D. 520.

A borrowed from B, an incorporated bank, four thousand dollars in confederate treasury notes, to be returned within ten days, and left with B, as security, four thousand dollars in its own bills, the latter being more valuable than the former. A, within the limited time, offered to return four thousand dollars in confederate treasury notes, and demanded back the four thousand dollars he had left with B as security. The latter refused to take the one or return the other. Held, that B's refusal to return the four thousand dollars in its own bills was a conversion of those bills, and that trover lay for such conversion. Abrahams v. Southwestern R. R. Bank, 7 R. 33.

A, having agreed to erect a brick building for B, and to furnish all the materials, wrongfully took bricks belonging to C, but without B's direction. C thereupon notified B of the facts, and that he should look to him for payment, if the bricks were used in building the house. They were so used, and B paid A the sum specified in the agreement. Held, that B was liable to C for the value of the bricks. Dawson v. Powell, 15 R. 745.

A refusal of a party to deliver what in foro conscientia belongs to him, and ought to remain in his possession, is not a wrongful conversion. Graham v. Warner, 28 D. 65.

A refusal of goods after demand is no conversion, if the circumstances show that it is caused by a reasonable apprehension of the consequences, in a doubtful matter. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 28 D. 359.

A refusal from misapprehension of the law may be reasonable, and so prevent its having the effect of a conversion; therefore, where one intrusted with notes for collection was summoned, by trustee process, in an action instituted against his principal, and because of such process refused to deliver the notes upon order from his principal, there was no conversion, though such notes were not within the meaning of the act authorizing trustee process. Id.

Mere non-delivery by a common carrier will not constitute a conversion, nor will a refusal to deliver, on demand, if the goods have been lost through negligence, or have been stolen; there must be proof of a wrongful disposition or wrongful withholding. Magnia v. Dismore, 26 R. 608.

A qualified refusal by a common carrier to deliver goods on demand of one entitled to them does not constitute a conversion, if the qualification is reasonable and in good faith; and where the person making demand omits to produce any evidence of title to or to identify himself as the consignee, it is a question for the jury whether the qualification is reasonable, and the true reason for not delivering the goods. McEntee v. New Jersey Steamboat Co., 6 R. 28.

Defendant received bills of exchange for acceptance, and on demand for them by the persons entitled thereto, he looked for them, but not finding them, said he might have burned them up with papers he considered of no value. Held, that he was not liable in trover, there being no evidence of a voluntary or intentional destruction or loss of the bills. Salt Springs Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 8 R. 564.

13. — or evidence of a conversion. — A demand and refusal are not in themselves conversion, but prima facie evidence of a conversion, which may be rebutted by other evidence. Packard v. Getman, 16 D. 476; Lockwood v. Bull, 13 D. 539; Irish v. Cloyes, 30 D. 446; Denell v. Odell, 38 D. 628; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 41 D. 767; Thompson v. Rose, 41 D. 121; Magee v. Scott, 55 D. 49; Carr v. Clough, 59 D. 245; Webber v. Davis, 69 D. 87; Cobb v. Wallace, 98 D. 435.

An absolute refusal to deliver property creates an inference in law that there has been a conversion; but one sued for a conversion should be permitted to show that his refusal to deliver the property was not unconditional, but was accompanied by a reasonable qualification or requirement. Dent v. Chiles, 26 D. 350.

Demand and refusal are evidence of conversion only where the property whereof they were predicated was in the possession of the party refusing. Irish v. Cloyes, 30 D. 446.

Conversion evidenced by an unqualified refusal is not obviated by subsequent acts in recognition of the owner's rights; therefore, where several days after an unqualified refusal to surrender to plaintiff his property, in defendant's possession, said defendant pointed out the property to a tax collector as that of plaintiff, and the collector thereupon made distress upon and finally sold the property, and applied the proceeds in discharge of plaintiff's tax bill, this was held not to obviate the conversion evidenced by the refusal. Id.

Demand and refusal are no evidence of conversion, when the defendant makes no claim to the property himself, but has a sufficient and well-grounded doubt as to the plaintiff's title, and refuses to give up the property until he has ascertained to whom it belongs; aliter, if he has not sufficient grounds to doubt plaintiff's title. Zachary v. Pace, 47 D. 744.

A defendant withholding goods from plaintiffs' bailee is guilty of conversion after demand; consequently, where goods belonging to the plaintiffs were in the possession of a third person who was doing some work upon them, and the defendant obtained possession of them, and on the demand of the third person for the goods to give them to the plaintiffs, refused to give them up, the demand and refusal are evidence of a conversion. Bradley v. Spofford, 55 D. 205.

A demand by an original owner and refusal by the converter, after converted property has passed into an improved condition, may be regarded as evidence of a conversion after the first taking, so as to admit of the owner recovering in trover the value of the property in its improved state. Moody v. Whitney, 61 D. 239.

Trover for goods, the possession whereof was originally lawful in defendant, can be maintained only by proof of some subsequent tortious act of defendant amounting to a conversion. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 28 D. 359.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

An assertion of ownership over property in one's possession is not evidence of conversion, where made to a stranger not within sight of the property, nor in the presence of the real owner. Irish v. Cloyes, 30 D. 446.

14. In case of actual conversion, demand and refusal unnecessary. — Proof of demand and refusal in trover is not necessary where there has been an actual conversion. Newsom v. Newsom, 19 D. 739; Jewett v. Patridge, 28 D. 173. Houston v. Dyche, 33 D. 130; Webber v. Davis, 69 D. 87; otherwise if the possession was at first legal, and the holding afterwards tortious. Buel v. Pumphrey, 56 D. 714.

A party purchasing property from one who has no right to sell, and holding it to his own use, is guilty of a direct act of conversion without any demand and refusal. Hyde v. Noble, 38 D. 508.

A tortious conversion consists in a wrongful asportation of a chattel with intent to appropriate it to taker's use, and no demand and refusal are then necessary to maintain action. Harker v. Dement, 52 D. 670.

No demand is necessary to be made for the possession of stolen goods upon an innocent purchaser, after he has sold them to another person, for the reason that such sale is an actual conversion, and in such case a demand is not necessary. Courtis v. Cane, 76 D. 174.

In an action by the assignee of an insolvent debtor for alleged conversion of goods of debtor by a mortgagee of a portion of the goods, who has sold under the mortgage, besides the mortgaged goods, similar goods of the debtor not included in the mortgage, but intermingled and confused with the mortgaged goods, although the goods were sold and converted into money before any demand was made by the assignee upon the defendant, still, for the purpose of establishing a conversion, it is sufficient to show that the defendant has been in possession of particular parcels of property belonging to the plaintiff, which he has unlawfully converted to his own use by an actual sale, and an appropriation of the proceeds to his own benefit, and the plaintiff may recover for whatever articles belonging to him he can show have been thus disposed of, and need not show any demand and refusal. Simpson v. Carleton, 79 D. 707.

II. PROCEDURE.

15. Rules relative to parties. — An action of trover may be maintained against two or more defendants, if the evidence establishes a conversion by all. Cowan v. Buyers, 5 D. 668.

All the plaintiffs must recover, or none, in an action of trover for converting sundry chattels. Pettibone v. Phelps, 35 D. 88.

Where others have joined with a party in the conversion of property, it is not necessary, in an action against him for the tort, to join the others. Puttee v. Gilmore, 45 D. 385.

A tenant in common may recover in trover against a stranger his aliquot share in a chattel, unless a plea in abatement is interposed; and after his recovery his co-tenant may recover likewise from the same defendant, and no plea in abatement can be interposed. Harker v. Dement, 52 D. 670.

A joint action in trover cannot be maintained against the seller, who is a tort-feasor and the bona fide purchaser of a chattel. Larkins v. Eckmire, 54 D. 651.

16. Declaration. — The declaration in trover for conversion of promissory notes need not state their dates or time of payment. Bank of New Brunswick v. Neilson, 29 D. 691.

A count in such a declaration, which describes the notes as "eleven other promissory notes, having the like drawers, indorsers, descriptions, and value as the said promissory notes in the first count mentioned," is bad on special demurrer, because it mixes them all together, without distinguishing the drawer and indorser of one note from another. Id.

Reference may be made to a prior count, to avoid great prolixity. Id.

In trover, goods should be described with convenient certainty, that the jury may know what is meant, and a count describing the goods as "divers goods, to wit, a lot of goods being in a store at Alton," is entirely uncertain, both as to the kind and quantity of goods, and is bad. Edgerly v. Emerson, 55 D. 207.

Plaintiff cannot recover for an interruption to his business, etc., in an action of trover, without a special count or averment in the declaration to that effect. Agnes v. Johnson, 62 D. 303.

17. Matters of defense. — One who has delivered goods to a commission merchant for sale may maintain trover against an officer who seizes them upon a writ against such merchant, and the officer cannot set up, in bar, any lien for expenses which the merchant may have upon the goods. Jones v. Sinclair, 9 D. 75.

That the defendant acted without fraud, and in ignorance of the plaintiff's rights in disposing of the goods, is no defense in an action of trover. Everett v. Coffin, 22 D. 551.

That the defendant acted under instructions from another, who himself had no authority, is no defense in such a case. Id.

The declarations made by a party, at the time, in response to a demand for the possession of property, may be received in evidence in his favor, to show that his refusal was qualified and reasonable, and not of a character to render him liable for a conversion. Dent v. Chiles, 26 D. 350.

Evidence that a note was fraudulently obtained is admissible in bar of an action of trover, brought by the obligee therein against the obligor, for the conversion thereof by the latter; and such evidence may be given under the general issue. Graham v. Warner, 28 D. 65.

In an action of trover, the defendant may show in bar of the action anything that tends to establish that the subject of the suit was not the property of the plaintiff, that the defendant's possession or conversion is not unlawful, or that the thing itself is of no value. Id.

The application of converted property in discharge of the original owner's liabilities, with respect to it, will go in mitigation of damages, in trover brought for the conversion. So if the property converted was pointed out to a tax collector as that of plaintiff, and was thereupon by the collector levied upon and sold, and the proceeds of the sale applied in discharge of plaintiff's tax bill, this may be shown in mitigation. Irish v. Cloyes, 30 D. 445.

A right of action for a conversion is not waived by plaintiff's request to a tax collector who has seized the property as that of plaintiff, to postpone his sale. Id.

An officer may pay off the lien of a common carrier for freight on goods, in order to get possession of them, and upon doing so will stand in the place and have the rights of such carrier. But if, upon demand being made upon him by a claimant of said goods, he sets up no claim of lien, but makes an unqualified refusal, he will not be allowed afterwards to set up such lien as a defense, in an action of trover for the goods. Thompson v. Roe, 41 D. 121.

A defendant in trover cannot return property in mitigation of damages, where the taking was willful, and the property has been essentially injured, and where no rule for such return has been applied for. Hart v. Skinner, 42 D. 500.

The rule for a return of property in trover must be applied for, as the matter rests primarily in the discretion of the court below. Id.

The motive influencing defendant in a tortious conversion is material only in repelling a recovery of exemplary damages. Harker v. Dement, 52 D. 670.

Trover founded on possession can only be defeated when the true owner is known; a mere possibility that such owner will afterwards be discovered will not defeat such action. Branch v. Morrison, 69 D. 770.

The record of proceedings to try the right to personal property levied on, in which the title is adjudged against the claimant, is conclusive against him in an action of trover by him for the property against the purchaser under the execution. Shirley v. Fearn, 69 D. 375.

A judgment and distingas against a claimant in a proceeding to try title to personal property levied on may be introduced by the purchaser under the distingas in an action brought by the claimant against him for the property, even though he acquired no title by his purchase, for it is competent for him to show that the plaintiff has no title, and is therefore not entitled to recover. Id.

It is no defense to an action of trover for property sold by defendant as agent of another, that the property was government bonds payable to bearer, if the principal was not the bona fide purchaser. Kimball v. Billings, 92 D. 581.

If the owner of property, with knowledge of facts constituting its conversion, again takes possession of it as owner, this will be evidence of a waiver of the conversion. Cobb v. Wallace, 98 D. 435.

A defendant in trover cannot show title in a third person with whom he has no privity, either to defeat the action or in mitigation of damages. Harker v. Dement, 52 D. 670; Weymouth v. Chicago etc. Ry Co., 84 D. 763. Contra, Boyce v. Williams, 37 R. 618.

In an action of trover, when neither party has title to the property, the defendant may show title in a third person, under whom he does not claim, in order to defeat the plaintiff's action. Smoot v. Cook, 100 D. 741.

Possession of personal property is prima facie evidence of title; and if the defendant in trover had possession after the plaintiff had possession of the same property, such possession is sufficient evidence of title to sustain his defense until the plaintiff should prove title. Id.

A purchase in good faith, from one who has no title and no right to transfer the property, will not ordinarily constitute a defense to an action for its conversion; but this rule does not apply where the act of appropriation can be justified, as having been authorized in any manner by the owner of the property. Hills v. Snell, 6 R. 216.

R. pledged his pianos to F., who employed him to assist him in caring for and renting them. R. rented one of them in his own name to D. F. notified D. that he was the owner, and D. agreed to hold it for and return it to him at the end of the lease. To satisfy his own debt, R. subsequently sold it to P. and assigned to him the lease, P. having notice of F.'s claim. P. notified D. of the sale, and D. took a lease from him. In an action by P. to recover the piano from D., — held, that D. might effectually set up the title of F. in defense. Pakntag v. Doutrick, 43 R. 245.

In trover against a sheriff's officer for a wrongful seizure of chattels on execution, the defendant may show that the plaintiff had no right of possession in his own name. Stearns v. Vincent, 45 R. 37.

A chattel mortgagor sued a third person for conversion of the mortgaged property. Subsequently the mortgagees seized the property under the mortgage, sold part of it, and transferred another part to the defendant. The mortgagor made a second mortgage of the property pending the action. Held, 1. That the making of the second mortgage was not an abandonment of the cause of action; but 2. The seizure by the mortgagees should be considered in mitigation of damages. Dahill v. Booker, 54 R. 465.

18. The plea, or answer. — A plea in bar amounting to the general issue in trover is bad. Spalding v. Preston, 50 D. 68.

19. What evidence is admissible and sufficient. — Possession, coupled with a claim of title and acts of ownership, is evidence of a conversion. Dowd v. Wadsworth, 18 D. 567.

The admission by one of the defendants in trover that they had received and disposed of the goods, made to one of the original consignees, who had inquired what had become of them, is sufficient evidence of a demand and refusal. Everett v. Coffin, 22 D. 551.

More formal demand is unnecessary after such an admission. Ib.

In trover against a purchaser from a vendee, the testimony of others who sold goods to the vendee about the same time is admissible to show that the vendee was then insolvent, and that he had no expectation of paying for the articles he purchased. Rowley v. Bigelow, 23 D. 607.

The production of a justice's execution without the judgment is sufficient to maintain an action by a constable against a stranger for taking the goods seized thereunder. Spoer v. Holland, 24 D. 37.

A constable's indorsement on the execution is evidence to identify the goods levied on, in such a case, and may be amended if insufficient for that purpose. Ib.

A constable's declarations are perhaps inadmissible to show what goods were levied on in such an action. Ib.

To maintain trover against an innkeeper for goods intrusted to him by a guest, actual conversion must be shown. Hallenlake v. Fish, 24 D. 88.

Demand and refusal are not sufficient to prove conversion by an innkeeper where the defendant has not, at the time, possession or control of the goods. Ib.

An action of trover by a person entitled to an estate in remainder in a female slave, to recover for a conversion alleged to have occurred during the existence of a precedent life estate, imposes upon the plaintiff the burden of proving the slave to have been alive at the time his estate in remainder vested in possession. Lewis v. Mobley, 34 D. 379.

The fact of a party's removal from the state is not evidence of conversion of property previously consigned to him for sale. Pattis v. Gilmore, 45 D. 385.

Possession of property by a defendant need not be proved in an action for its conversion; in many cases the parting with the possession is the very fact upon which the plaintiff relies to establish a conversion. Zachary v. Pace, 47 D. 744.

Evidence not tending to prove a natural and proximate consequence of the tortious act alleged in the complaint is inadmissible for plaintiff, in an action for the wrongful taking and withholding of slaves. Burton v. Holley, 65 D. 401.

A plaintiff in trover claiming title under a deed of joint owners must show its due execution by all the grantors; it is inadmissible to show a transfer of the interest of one owner, unless it is offered for this purpose alone. Shirley v. Fearn, 69 D. 375.

The guilt of defendant need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, in trover for goods stolen, to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict; but the jury are to decide according to the weight of evidence, as in other civil cases. Sinclair v. Jackson, 74 D. 476.

Testimony that plaintiff stated to defendant that he had witnessed improper intercourse between defendant's wife and a third person is inadmissible, in an action of trover for promissory notes, to show that the notes were given to the defendant or his wife as compensation for injury done her, or that the notes were voluntarily given to her. Robbins v. Packard, 76 D. 134.

In action by an assignee in insolvency for alleged conversion of debtor's goods by a mortgagee of a part of the goods, who has sold all of the goods, it is not error to admit, as evidence of the conversion of the property claimed, the reply of the mortgagee, to a demand by the assignee for the goods, that "he was sorry that he could not accommodate him, and he had been expecting this demand for several days." Simpson v. Carleton, 79 D. 707.

A, the tenant of timber-land of B, cut timber on that land, and also on adjoining land belonging to others, and sold it to C. B replevied the timber and converted it to his own use. In trover by C against B therefor, — held, that the prima facie presumption was, that A had the right to cut the timber on the adjoining property. Wielack v. Grist, 52 R. 473.

20. The damages recoverable. — 1. Generally. — If the defendant, in an action of trover, return the property before action is brought, and the same be accepted by the owner, he can only recover for the partial conversion. Hepburn v. Sewell, 9 D. 512.

Damages in trover are not severable where an entire sum is recovered for the conversion of articles for some of which trover will not

He, but the judgment must be reversed. Miller v. Pham, 16 D. 456.

A constable can recover only the amount of his execution in trover against an assignee of the debtor who has taken the goods after levy. Spoor v. Holland, 24 D. 37.

A rule of damages is a question of law in an action of trover, and the jury are to ascertain the quantum of damages according to the rules of law. Baker v. Wheeler, 24 D. 66.

A defendant in trover who repudiates possession of goods under contract, and claims by a wrongful conversion, cannot claim the benefit of the contract in mitigation of the damages. Backenstoss v. Stahler, 75 D. 592.

Whether the same rule of damages should be adopted in cases of conversion where the wrongful taking was by design as in those cases where it arose from mistake, quere. Weymouth v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 84 D. 763.

One who converts a certificate of stock must be regarded as having converted shares which the certificate represents, so that he cannot claim to be liable only for nominal damages for such conversion. Morton v. Preston, 100 D. 146.

2. *Measure of damages.—The measure of damages in trover is the value of property at time of conversion. Moody v. Whitney, 61 D. 239; and interest from the time of conversion. White v. Martin, 26 D. 365; Buford v. Fannen, 1 D. 615; Hepburn v. Sewell, 9 D. 512; Baker v. Wheeler, 24 D. 66; Clark v. Whitaker, 48 D. 160; Lee v. Mathews, 44 D. 498. But a jury may go even beyond this. Backenstoss v. Stahler, 75 D. 592. Yet the jury cannot give vindictive damages. McDowell v. Murdock, 9 D. 684.

An agent who purchases female slaves, not knowing at the time that the title thereto was not in his vendor, will not be liable for the value of children of such slaves born after the delivery to his principal and before demand made or suit brought. Lee v. Mathews, 44 D. 498.

The old rule for measure of damages in trover, viz., the value of the thing at the time of conversion, and interest thereon up to the entry of judgment, has no application to the remedial system of Texas. In that state the amount of damages will vary according to the particular property to which it may be applied. Prilgin v. Strickland, 58 D. 124.

Plaintiff is entitled to recover the highest value of the property up to the time of the verdict. Kid v. Mitchell, 9 D. 702.

The measure of damages where an officer sells, without notice, property seized under protest, is the diminution in price produced by the irregularity of the sale. Wright v. Spencer, 18 D. 76.

The owner of property tortiously taken is entitled to its enchained value until it has been so changed as to alter the title. Baker v. Wheeler, 24 D. 66.

The measure of damages for conversion of property by mistake, at a place where it was about to be sold, where the defendant removes it to another town and mixes it with other similar property so that it cannot be identified, is the value of the property at the place and time of conversion, with such increase as it may have received from fluctuations of the market and other causes independent of defendant's acts. Weymouth v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 84 D. 763.

The owner of logs tortiously taken and converted into lumber is entitled to recover the value of the lumber. Baker v. Wheeler, 24 D. 66.

Damages in trover for timber cut and hauled are confined to the value of the timber at the time of its severance from the freehold, if the possession of the converter subsequent to that time has been uninterrupted. Moody v. Whitney, 61 D. 239.

The measure of damages in trover for notes or other choses in action, executed by persons other than the defendant, is the value of the property, which is prima facie the amount due; but this may be rebutted by proof of its actual value, which may be much less, through the inability of the maker to pay. Robbins v. Packard, 76 D. 134.

The measure of damages in trover for notes executed by defendant is the amount due thereon at the time of the trial, without reference to the ability of the defendant to pay. Id.

The plaintiff in trover for notes of a third person may recover the amount due thereon at the time of the trial, where the notes were notes given by a vendee to the plaintiff for the purchase price of land, the plaintiff giving the vendee a deed, to become good upon the payment of the notes, and afterwards the vendee sold and quitclaimed the land to the defendant, who agreed with the plaintiff and vendee to pay the plaintiff the amount then due on the notes; and subsequently the defendant became alarmed about the title, because of certain mortgages outstanding of record, and the plaintiff thereupon, to assure him, gave him a deed of the property, and delivered to him the notes, to be held until the property should be relieved of the mortgages; and the defendant, with the plaintiff's consent, sold the land to a third person, and the plaintiff, having performed the agreed condition, demanded the notes, which the defendant refused to deliver. Id.

The owner of a slave unlawfully detained may recover not only his value, but also damages for the value of his services from the time of the demand up to the time of the trial. And the jury may find the value and the specific damages in distinct amounts. Pridgen v. Strickland, 58 D. 124.

21. Judgment, and how enforced. — A judgment and verdict in trover are conclusive as to title to the goods claimed in another action for the same goods, where it is shown by parol that the question of title was the only matter in issue before the jury. King v. Chase, 41 D. 675.

22. Effect of judgment to transfer title.* — The right of property, in the subject-matter of an action of trover, is not vested in the defendant until judgment is satisfied. And upon such satisfaction the defendant is entitled to the increase of the property, between the time of conversion and satisfaction, and must bear the loss that has occurred. Hepburn v. Sewell, 9 D. 512.

A satisfaction of a judgment in trover passes the title to the defendant, the change so made having relation back to the time of the act of conversion sued upon, from which period defendant will have the benefit of all natural increase of the property. White v. Martin, 26 D. 365.

One electing to proceed in trespass or trover for taking or conversion of personal property abandons his property to the wrongdoer at that time, and proceeds for its value; so that when judgment is obtained and satisfaction made, the property is vested in the defendant by relation as of the time of the taking or conversion. Acheson v. Miller, 59 D. 663.

An unsatisfied judgment in trover does not give the defendant title to the property in question. Atwater v. Tupper, 29 R. 674.

I. CREATION AND DURATION; INTERPRETATION, VALIDITY, ETC.

1. In General.

1. Construction and validity of trusts, generally.*—A trust may be created for the benefit of a third person, as a creditor, without his knowledge at the time; and he may afterwards affirm the trust, and compel its execution. Shepherd v. McEvers, 8 D. 561.

A trust contrary to the avowed policy of the state will not be enforced through the equitable powers of the court. Methodist Church v. Remington, 26 D. 61.

A court of law will not entertain a question of validity of trusts, if an estate be conveyed to a grantee capable of taking the trust estate. Miles v. Fisher, 36 D. 61.

To constitute a direct trust, there must be,—1. A transfer to a competent person; 2. A fund or object transferred; 3. A cestui que trust or purpose to which the fund is to be applied. Commissioners v. Walker, 38 D. 433.

A trust is an obligation upon a person, arising out of confidence reposed in him, to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence. Ib.

A trust is created by an act of the legislature providing for "a sinking fund under the management of the auditor of public accounts and the president and cashier" of a specified bank, for the redemption of certain bonds. The officers named are trustees, and have the legal title to the money thus intrusted to them, and the power to loan it, and to sue for and recover it at law. Ib.

A trust of land created by will is of same effect as a trust created by deed. Ross v. Barclay, 55 D. 616.

Intent of a settlor in creation of a trust must be carried into effect, unless it contravenes some public policy of the law. Wright v. Miller, 59 D. 438.

A trust differs essentially from a contract, and will be enforced when the latter cannot be. Crawford's Appeal, 100 D. 609.

By an instrument in writing, D. assigned to his grandson, V., twelve thousand dollars in notes and mortgages, the amount to be taken by V. after the death of D., D. to retain the mortgages and notes during his life. There was no declaration of trust in the instrument in favor of V. On the back of certain notes and mortgages D. had, nearly six months before the execution of said instrument, written and signed assignments thereof to V. D. kept possession of the notes and mortgages until his death. Held, 1. That the instrument was a mere testamentary disposition of the twelve thousand dollars, and not being duly executed as a will, could not take effect as such; 2. That there being no consideration, the court would not complete what it found imperfect, and establish a trust; 3. That the notes mentioned could, under the statute, be assigned only by indorsement and delivery, and not by a separate instrument; 4. That the assignment written on the notes did not make a complete transaction, and the court would not complete it. Badgley v. Votrain, 18 R. 541.

To constitute a trust, it is enough if the owner of property conveys it to another in trust, or if the owner of personalty unequivocally declares, either orally or in writing, that he holds it in present, in trust for another. Ray v. Simmons, 23 R. 447.

2. Trusts valid in part and void in part.—A statute authorized a town to issue bonds, to aid the construction of a railroad, upon the written assent of a majority of the tax-payers, certified by three specified commissioners. Two of the commissioners signed the certificate, but the third, although sharing in their deliberations, refused to concur. Held, that the certificate was conclusive, and evidence was inadmissible to show that the requisite number of tax-payers had not assented. First Nat. Bank v. Town of Mount Tabor, 36 R. 734.

3. Construction of deeds creating trusts.—A deed to two trustees, but executed by only one of them, is complete and operative as a conveyance in trust. Tennant v. Stoney, 44 D. 213.

A grantee who, at the time of conveyance, gives back to his grantor a written agreement in which he acknowledges that he receives the land conveyed as collateral security, and agrees to pay off certain of the grantor's debts out of the property conveyed, and turn over the balance, if any, to the grantor, constitutes himself a trustee for such purpose, and his liability will be enforced by a court of equity. Pratt v. Thornton, 48 D. 492.

A deed of trust not intended as a security for money is not void as to creditors and purchasers, if not proved and registered within six months from the time of its execution. Green v. Kornegay, 67 D. 261.

A settlement by a deed of trust upon the grantor's daughter, of certain slaves for life, and in the event of her marriage, then in trust for the joint use of herself and husband, and the survivor of them, and on the death of the survivor, to issue that may be born of such marriage absolutely, will, in a case where the daughter marries twice, and has issue of both marriages, vest the property in the issue of both marriages, share and share alike. May v. May, 68 D. 431.

The rights granted to a cestui que trust by deed executed in another state cannot be defeated, and the property rendered subject to the debts of the trustee or of the grantor, in consequence of non-registration in Mississippi, but registration in another state is not notice to a purchaser in Mississippi; and where a party acquires the legal title in the latter state by purchase from the trustee, bona fide, and for a valuable consideration, without notice, he will not be disturbed in his title at the instance of the cestui que trust. Wyse v. Dandridge, 72 D. 149.

A grant of land for a valuable consideration upon trust that the trustee "shall at all times permit all the white religious societies of Christians and the members of such societies to use the land as a common burying-ground and for no other purpose," is not upon a condition subsequent, but is void for the want of certainty in the beneficiaries. Brown v. Caldwell, 48 R. 376.

A, by deed, conveyed all her property, "both real and personal," to a trustee in trust, to pay the income to her during her life, and at her death to transfer the property as she should by will appoint, and in default of such will to convey the property to her "heirs at law." The trust property was all personal. A died intestate. Held, that the trust property being personalty, the word "heirs" meant the persons entitled to take under the statute of distributions, and that therefore the property went to A's husband, and not to her child. Sweet v. Dutton, 12 R. 744.

A wife, for the purpose of evading her husband's importunities to dispose of her lands, and for a loan from a trustee, conveyed them in trust to pay her the income for her life, and on her death for her children, with power to sell and to convey in certain contingencies, and reserving no power of revocation. The contingency of her surviving her husband was not provided for. The trustee sold, and invested the proceeds. Held, that on the husband's death the widow was not entitled to rescind the trust. Keyes v. Carleton, 55 R. 446.

A deed creates a mere equitable life estate in a married woman, and executes legal estate in her heirs, where it conveys real estate to a trustee in trust that she "may, during her life, have, hold, use, occupy, possess, and enjoy" the same, "and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and the same to convert to her own proper use and benefit, notwithstanding her coverture, and that without the let, trouble, or control" of her husband, or liability for his debts, "as fully in every respect as if she were sole and unmarried, and from and immediately after her death, then to and for the use and benefit of her legal heirs and representatives." Ware v. Richardson, 58 D. 762.

A grantor's intention is to prevail in trusts for use of married women, but with the qualification that it must not contravene or defeat the established rules of construction. Ib.

The same mode of construction is adopted in cases of deeds as in devises, where property is given to the use of married women. Ib.

Where nothing appears on the face of a trust deed to indicate a contrary intention (a woman and her children being the beneficiaries), it will vest an estate in the woman, and her children then born, and in one en ventre sa mere, as tenants in common; but no title vests in her children afterwards begotten. Gay v. Baker, 78 D. 229.

Under a conveyance of 385 acres of land, worth about twenty-four hundred dollars, in trust for the use and benefit of a married woman and her children, the trustee being directed to permit the husband to use the lands for the use and benefit of his wife and children, for their support and the education of the children, and upon the further trust, that upon his death the said lands are to be equally owned and divided by and between all the children then living, "and if the wife shall survive him, then she is to take a child's part of said land for her life only,"—held, construing the deed in connection with the value of the property, the condition, number, and relationship of the beneficiaries (including after-born children) to the grantor, that he intended the property should be jointly used and enjoyed by the wife and children as a family, and that her interest in it could not be separated and subjected, by bill in equity, to the payment of her debts. Bell v. Watkins, 60 R. 756.

4. Construing absolute deed as deed in trust.—A person, being subject to intoxication, and therefore fearing imposition, conveyed his property by an absolute deed to another, for the benefit of his child, a minor, but no declaration to this effect appeared in the deed. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the trust. Gay v. Hunt, 3 D. 681.

A secret oral contract between the grantor and grantee in an absolute conveyance, that it is to be in trust for all the grantor's creditors, will not support it if it is void under the statute of Elizabeth, without such contract. Birely v. Staley, 25 D. 303.

Such a secret agreement cannot be enforced by the grantor or his creditors at law or in equity. Ib.

A deed of mortgaged lands was executed by the mortgagor, husband and wife, to the mortgagee, upon the mortgagee's oral promise to the wife to sell the land, discharge the debt, and pay back the surplus or reconvey any portion unsold. Held, a valid and enforceable trust in equity. Clark v. Hancy, 50 R. 536.

5. Declarations of trust.—A parol declaration of trust, either of real or personal estate is valid, in the absence of any statute requiring its creation to be in writing. Anding v. Davis, 77 D. 658.

A parol agreement to pay hire for slaves is a sufficient declaration of trust to vest the equitable title in the cestui que trust without delivery; and the obligation of a father to provide for his daughter is a good and meritorious consideration to support a trust, except as to creditors. Blake v. Jones, 21 D. 530.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A trust is not created by a written acknowledgment by one party that another is entitled to certain property, without proof of a consideration for such acknowledgment. Thompson v. Branch, 33 D. 153.

To constitute a writing a declaration of trust, it must be of such a nature that the party must be believed to have intended it as such. Loose and inadvertent declarations are insufficient for that purpose. Ocean v. Wheeler, 43 D. 283.

Words of desire, recommendation, and confidence, in a will, may amount to a declaration of trust, when it appears from other parts of the will that the testator intended not to commit the estate to the devisee or legatee, or the ultimate disposal of it to his kindness, justice, or discretion. The testator willed to his wife his real estate "during her natural life," and his "personal estate of every description . . . absolutely, having full confidence that she will leave the surplus to be divided at her decease justly among my children." By this will the absolute ownership of the personal property of the testator is given to his widow, with an expression of mere expectation that she will use and dispose of it discreetly as a mother, and no trust is thereby created. Pennock's Estate, 59 D. 718.

A trust is not created in favor of a son of a vendee of land by a mere declaration of the vendee, at the time of making the purchase, that "he was going to buy the land for his son," if there is no further proof of any agreement to do so, nor any evidence that the son furnished the money to pay for it. Lloyd v. Lynch, 70 D. 137.

An equitable title may be completely divested by a clear and unambiguous declaration of trust, although a further disposition of the legal title is still in contemplation. Lane v. Ewing, 77 D. 632.

Declarations of trust defining the nature of a trust executed by a trustee and cestui que trust after the execution of the trust deed and changing the character of the trust thereby constituted, cannot have a retroactive effect so as to divest an inchoate right of dower which attached to the subject-matter of the trust upon the execution of the trust deed. Nicoll v. Ogden, 81 D. 311.

Trustees cannot, by a declaration of trust, relieve themselves of any duties thereof, though they may voluntarily assume new duties. Id.

Where a mother, entitled to the whole of the property of her intestate son, signed articles of agreement by which, after waiving her right to administration and agreeing that letters issue to her son-in-law, it was agreed that the bulk of the property should be invested, the interest to go to an invalid son while he lived, and the principal to his brothers and sisters upon his death, — held, that such instrument must be regarded as an assignment and declaration of trust with a trustee competent to carry it into effect. Cressman's Appeal, 82 D. 498.

An agreement constituting a declaration of trust is not revocable at the instance of a party competent to make it, merely because some of the cestui que trust who joined in the instrument were minors, or under the disability of marriage at the time of its execution. Id.

A bond and mortgage were executed to defendant and M., as executors, for eight thousand dollars. Of this amount six thousand dollars belonged to the estate, and the balance was lent to M. by the plaintiff. In an action to enforce a trust in the bond and mortgage for the plaintiff's loan, declarations of M., made soon after the loan, when she was feeble and expecting soon to die, to the effect that she had received the loan and that the plaintiff was to have an interest in the mortgage as security, and that she intended to execute a written acknowledgment to that effect, — held, competent, and constituting a valid and enforceable declaration of trust. Barry v. Lambert, 50 R. 677.

6. Devises in trust. — To raise a precatory trust, the words of recommendation or of hope used by the testator must be certain, — 1. As regards the objects to whom such terms are applied; and 2. The subjects of property given must be certain. The words are then considered imperative and create the trust. Lucas v. Lockhart, 43 D. 766.

A precatory trust was held created by this clause, following a devise of all of testator's real and personal property to his wife during her widowhood, viz.: "Fourth, during my wife's widowhood she is to have the entire use, profits, and control of my estate, and to her discretion do I trust the education and maintenance of my children during that time." Id.

Words in a will expressive of desire, recommendation, and confidence are not words of technical but of common parlance, and are not prima facie sufficient to convert a devise or bequest into a trust, and the old Roman and English rule on this subject is not part of the common law of Pennsylvania. Pennock's Estate, 59 D. 718.

Real estate being devised to trustees and their heirs, to the use of or in trust for another and his heirs, if the testator has imposed upon the trustees any trust or duty, the performance of which requires that the estate should be vested in them, they will take an estate co-extensive with the duties to be performed; if not, the legal ownership will pass over to the beneficial devisee. Ellis v. Fisher, 65 D. 52.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume V.

An active trust is created and estate vested in trustees by devise of real and personal estate in trust "to collect and receive the rents, issues, interest, and income therefrom," and after deducting expenses, "to pay over the same unto the cestui que trust for his own use and benefit, or to such person as by his order in writing he may authorize to receive the same," and upon his decease, to assign, transfer, and convey the said estate so held as he by his last will shall appoint, and in default of appointment, to such person or persons, for such estates and in such shares, as would be entitled to the same had he died seized thereof intestate; but the income for life under such a devise becomes the absolute property of the cestui que trust, and therefore attachable by his creditors, and could only be secured to the cestui que trust by provisions in the will against alienation and liability for debts. Guard Life Ins. Co. v. Chambers, 86 D. 513.

A testator may bequeath certain land to a trustee to hold during the life of his (testator's) son, the trustee to let or demise the same, and pay the income over to the son, or at his option to permit the son to let and demise the same, and collect the income during his life, but provided that the land shall not be subject to the son's debts, nor under his control or management. Rife v. Geyer, 98 D. 351.

A testamentary provision in trust for founding and endowing a public library is not avoided by the direction to publish books written by the testator, averred to be atheistical, nor by a direction that the trustees shall not exclude any book "on account of its difference from the ordinary or conventional opinions on science, government, theology, morals, or medicine," the former not being a condition precedent, and the latter being a mere negative recommendation. Manners v. Philadelphia Library Co., 39 R. 741.

A devise in trust "to assist, relieve, and benefit poor and necessitous persons, and to assist and co-operate with any such charitable, benevolent, religious, literary, and scientific societies and associations, or any or either of them, as shall appear to the trustees best to deserve such assistance or co-operation," is valid. Suter v. Hilliard, 42 R. 444.

A devise of a testator's entire estate to his wife, "recommending to her, at the same time, to make some small allowance, at her convenience, to each of my brothers and sisters, say, to each, one thousand dollars," does not create a trust in favor of the brothers and sisters. Ellis v. Ellis, 50 D. 132.

A devise in trust is void under rule against perpetuities, where the testator, after empowering and directing trustees named, to lease his hotel property and apply the rents, provides that "the period during which my trustees, and their heirs and successors, shall have the power and are required to lease, as aforesaid, shall be so long as my said children, or any children or descendants of them, or any of them, left by them, or any of them, at the death of them, or any of them, shall live; it being understood that any lease made during the period aforesaid shall have full effect and continue for its stipulated term, notwithstanding the cessation of all of said lives before the end of the term"; for under these provisions the period for continuing the trust or power to lease may extend so as to embrace persons and lives not in esse at the time of the testator's death. Barnum v. Barnum, 90 D. 88.

A devise in trust to build a free school-house, and extend the education of poor children, is void at law for uncertainty. Stonestreet v. Doyle, 40 R. 731.

7. Legacies in trust. — Where a legacy is given to A, in trust for B, with a limitation over upon his death, B cannot compel A to convey the legal title to him. Battle v. Petway, 44 D. 59.

Where the present right to the whole profits of certain bank stock, devised to a trustee, as well as the absolute ultimate dominion of the shares, is devised to certain legatees, they have a right to have a transfer of the stock made to them. It would be different if from the nature of the trust the ownership of the cestui que trust was not immediate and absolute, or if their possession would defeat or endanger a legitimate ultimate distribution of the trust property. Turnage v. Greene, 62 D. 208.

If trusts are absolutely void under the rule against perpetuities, legacies springing out of them must also be regarded as void. Barnum v. Barnum, 90 D. 88.

A bequest of money to the trustees of an organized church, in trust, to apply the interest to the suppression of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, is valid. Haines v. Allen, 41 R. 555.

8. Parol trusts. — Writing is not essential to the creation of a trust; but the statute of frauds requires that its terms and conditions must be clearly manifested and proved in writing, under the hand of the party to be charged, before the court will carry it into execution. Steele v. Steele, 9 D. 256.

A trust of personality may be created by parol. The statute of frauds does not extend thereto. Kimball v. Morton, 43 D. 621.

The statute of frauds does not apply to resulting trusts or trusts by operation of law; resulting trusts are provable by parol, notwithstanding the statute of frauds. Osborne v. Endicott, 65 D. 498.

A party who undertakes to establish a resulting trust by parol takes the burden of proof on himself. He claims an estate in land, not only without a deed, but in opposition to the written title; ordinarily such trusts should not be favored. Strimpyler v. Roberts, 57 D. 606.

A trust arising or resulting by implication or construction of law out of a conveyance of lands is one expressly excepted from the operation of the Georgia statute of frauds by the statute itself. Maddox v. Rowe, 68 D. 535.

The principle that a trust estate cannot legally exist without a declaration in writing, signed by the party who holds the legal estate, does not apply to secret trusts and confidences, created for the purpose of defeating or delaying creditors, which may always be proved by parol. Hills v. Elliot, 7 D. 26.

When a mortgagee assigned her interest in the mortgaged premises, and promised orally to repay the money and interest, unless the assignee should receive the money from the mortgaged premises, she was held liable as the trustee of the assignee, to the amount of the money so promised. Id.

A trust in land cannot be raised by parol. Jackson v. Miller, 21 D. 316; Irvine v. Ivers, 63 D. 420; Ratliff v. Ellis, 63 D. 471. Contra, under the Texas statute, James v. Fulcro, 55 D. 743.

If A voluntarily conveys land to B, the latter having taken no measure to procure the conveyance, but accepting it, and verbally promising to hold the property in trust for C, the case falls within the provision of the statute of frauds requiring trusts to be expressed in writing, and a court of equity will not enforce the parol promise. Lantry v. Lantry, 2 R. 310.

9. Executory trusts.—An executory trust is one where the beneficiary is not yet clothed with an equitable title, but has a mere right to have some act done which will vest in him such equitable title. Nicoll v. Ogden, 81 D. 311.

An executory trust is constituted and cestui que trust have no equitable title to land where, by a declaration of trust executed by them, they provide that the trustee shall not convey it to them until after partition, and then in severalty, or that he shall sell it and divide the proceeds among them; and dower cannot attach to property thus held. Id.

10. Simple and special trusts.—Trusts are either simple or special; in the former, the trustee is passive and performs no duty, and the trust is purely technical; in the latter, he is active, being an agent to execute the donor's will, and the trust is operative. Dodson v. Ball, 100 D. 586.

A simple trust gives to the cestui que trust a right to the possession, control, and disposal of the property, and the legal estate becomes executed in him, unless it is necessary to remain in the trustee, to preserve the estate for the cestui que trust, or to pass it to others. Id.

A special trust maintains the legal estate in the trustee, to enable him to perform the duties devolved on him by the donor, and gives the cestui que trust only a right in equity to enforce the performance of the trust. Id.

A simple or passive trust cannot continue the legal estate in the trustee, except for a proper and useful purpose, such as the law will protect; and as soon as the purpose fails or ceases to exist, the legal estate becomes executed in the cestui que trust. Id.

Equity preserves a special trust to give effect to a donor's right of dominion over his property; as to a passive trust, it permits it to fall in favor of public policy. Id.

11. Implied trusts, generally.—Trusts result by implication of law in two cases only: 1. Where a purchaser of land has paid the purchase price with his own money, and taken the conveyance in the name of another, or where he has paid with the money of another and taken the conveyance in his own name; and 2. Where a trust has been declared of part of the estate, from which the law implies an intent to reserve the beneficial ownership of the residue. Kieler v. Kieler, 27 D. 308.

Loose and vague declarations of intention by one member of a family, in letters to his brothers, in regard to his holding land in trust for the other members, are not sufficient evidence to charge him with a trust by implication. Steere v. Steere, 9 D. 256.

To raise a trust by implication, or operation of law, an actual payment, or actual loan of the money by the cestui que trust, at the time of the purchase, must be shown. Id.

Where two persons sold personal property belonging to another, with his assent, and took bonds from the purchasers in their own name, and collected a portion of the purchase-money, a court of equity will infer some conventional arrangement between the parties, in the nature of a trust, which it will enforce. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 18 D. 250.

No equitable presumption of trust arises where the grantee of property is related to the person from whom the consideration proceeds, in such a manner that the latter is under a moral or natural obligation to provide for the former, but prima facie the transaction will be regarded as an advancement for the benefit of the nominee. This may be rebutted by evidence clearly showing that a trust was intended to be created in favor of the person who paid the purchase price. Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Deale, 79 D. 673.

No express or implied trust is created by a transaction whereby one of two partners who are embarrassed with debts executes a deed to the other, absolute on its face, with a consideration expressed, of both his individual property and interest in the partnership property, for the purpose of enabling the grantee to raise money by mortgaging the same to pay the firm debts. Burt v. Wilson, 87 D. 142.

A grantee holds land in trust for a grantor to the extent of the purchase-money, where he has received an absolute conveyance and has failed to make any payment of the purchase price, and such trust descends to the representatives and heirs of the grantee, against whom a lien for the purchase-money will be enforced. Ib.

Every person is a trustee who receives money to be paid to another, or to be applied to a particular purpose to which he does not apply it, and is liable either at law for money had and received, or in equity for breach of trust. Finney v. Cochran, 37 D. 450; Stockard v. Stockard, 46 D. 79.

Where a person agreed, verbally, to bid in land for another at a sheriff's sale, he shall be bound and decreed to hold in trust, though he took the conveyance in his own name, and the plea of the statute of frauds will not avail him, when he has tendered an account, in which he charged the other with the amount of the purchase-money. Denton v. McKenzie, 1 D. 664. S. P., Miller v. Antle, 92 D. 495.

12. — and how created by will. — A trust in an absolute devise may be established by parol proof of contemporaneous declarations of the testator and subsequent declarations of the devisee in possession, that the devise was made for the benefit of a third person upon the devisee's suggestion and promise to hold it in trust. Hoge v. Hoge, 26 D. 52.

A devisee's active or passive agency in procuring the devise must be shown, it seems, in order to enforce such a trust. Ib.

One enabled to bid in property at less than its value, by falsely representing that he is acting for or in the interest of the defendant in execution, will be converted into a trustee for the benefit of such defendant. Grumley v. Webb, 100 D. 304. S. P., Ryan v. Dox, 90 D. 696.

13. Constructive trusts. — 1. When a trust arises. — Persons acquiring title by fraud are trustees for the injured party. Coleman v. Cocke, 18 D. 757; Lewis v. Lewis, 43 D. 540.

When necessary, the heir will be regarded as a trustee, and the rents and profits may accumulate in his hands for the benefit of the executory devisee, until the vesting of the estate; and the court may, in its discretion, appoint a receiver of them for that purpose. Rogers v. Ross, 8 D. 575.

A legatee who takes an estate subject to a trust takes it as a trustee. McCants v. Bee, 16 D. 610.

One obtaining, as an assumed protector of certain illegitimate children, a compromise in their favor, and as the result of such compromise, a conveyance to himself of certain real estate, cannot claim that the children had no interest in the property, and that he holds it discharged of the trust. Sweet v. Jacobs, 31 D. 252.

A mortgage to one person to secure the debt of another makes the former a trustee of the latter, who may compel an assignment to be made, or may have a foreclosure decreed for his benefit. Lady Superior v. McNamara, 49 D. 184.

A married woman obtaining a patent from government will be regarded as the trustee of one who had entered the land, and finding her in possession without any claim to a right of pre-emption, had paid her for her improvements, and for yielding possession to his vendee, if with the money thus obtained she entered a claim of pre-emption, and obtained the patent. Groves v. Fulsome, 57 D. 247.

A trustee de son tort is he who of his own authority enters into the possession or assumes the management of property which belongs beneficially to another. He is subject to the same rules and remedies as other constructive trustees. Morris v. Joseph, 91 D. 386.

One who assumes the management and control of land of another thereby constitutes himself the trustee of the owner, and can do nothing prejudicial to the interests of such owner while such relations exist. He cannot acquire title to the land at tax sale for a delinquency which occurred while he had control, although the fiduciary relation may have ceased at the time of the sale. Ib.

2. When no trust will arise. — A trust does not arise from a mere breach of contract, but the remedy is at law. Cowan v. Wheeler, 43 D. 283.

No trust arises on a conditional contract to convey land, especially where the conditions are not performed. Hence, where a surety for the purchaser of land takes the conveyance in his own name as security, and gives the purchaser a written agreement to convey to him upon condition that he pays the notes for the purchase-money, but the latter, after paying part, fails to pay the residue, without the surety's fault, the surety will not be adjudged a trustee, nor will the contract be enforced against him. Ib.

That the alleged trustee in such case has sufficient funds of plaintiff to perform the conditions of the contract will not render him chargeable as trustee, especially where the funds are not alleged to be in his hands for that purpose, though if he held them for that purpose it might amount to virtual performance of the conditions entitling the plaintiff to a specific performance. Ib.

The acquisition of property by larceny or trespass does not create the relation of trustee and cuius que trust; and therefore such relation is not created where a person abstracts securities not intrusted to him, and substitutes forged securities in their place. Doyle v. Murphy, 74 D. 165.

The owner of mortgaged cattle sold them, and with the proceeds paid his debt to a bank in another county, where the mortgage was not filed, the cashier having no knowledge of the circumstances except that the money arose from a sale of cattle. Held, that the bank was not liable to the holder of the mortgage for the proceeds. Burnett v. Gustafson, 37 R. 190.

14. Resulting trusts in real property. — 1. General rules.* — Whether a conveyance taken in the name of another than the person paying the consideration is an advancement to such other, or a resulting trust is created, depends upon the character of the transaction at its inception. Dudley v. Bonworth, 51 D. 690.

The death of the nominal purchaser and descent of the mere naked title does not destroy or impair a resulting trust. Id.

A resulting trust in notes secured by mortgage attaches to land mortgaged to secure their payment, when the mortgage is foreclosed by the person holding the legal title to the notes. Buck v. Swazey, 56 D. 661.

A trust resulting from payment of consideration by a third person, on a purchase of land, results only in favor of such person, and descends to his heirs, and does not inure to the benefit of one for whom the purchase might have been intended to be made. Padgett v. Lawrence, 40 D. 232.

A resulting trust may be rebutted even by parol declarations of the person in whose favor it would otherwise be raised. Adams v. Guerard, 76 D. 624.

A resulting trust will be upheld, although the title to the land is acquired through a judicial sale. Beagle v. Wentz, 93 D. 762.

A resulting trust will be upheld against the objection of uncertainty, where a creditor verbally agreed to reconvey to the debtor fifteen acres of land around the debtor's house, part of a tract of fifty-eight acres, if the debtor would waive his exemption, and permit the whole tract to be sold at sheriff's sale, under an execution levied upon it, and to be bought in by the creditor. The law presumes that the land was meant to be laid off in a reasonable shape, and the parties can afterwards do it, or if one will not, the other can, on notice. Id.

Where a trust results by operation of law, as, for instance, where there is a devise or bequest to a person "upon trust," and no trust is declared, etc., in such cases the trust results to the heirs at law or personal representatives, and extrinsic evidence will be rejected. Saylor v. Plaine, 1 R. 34.

2. When a trust will result. — Implied or resulting trusts arise where a purchase is made by one person in the name of another. Such trusts arise by operation of law, are not within the statute of frauds, and may be proved by parol. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Deale, 79 D. 673. S. P., Jackson v. Miller, 21 D. 316; Bavington v. Clarke, 21 D. 432; Foot v. Colvin, 3 D. 478; Williams v. Hollingsworth, 47 D. 527; Baker v. Vining, 50 D. 617; Neill v. Kesse, 51 D. 746; Irwin v. Ivers, 63 D. 420; and are subject to execution against the beneficiary. Smith v. Gray, 34 D. 664. But under the statute of frauds, such trusts must arise from some conveyance or deed. Jackson v. Morse, 8 D. 306.

As a general rule, a resulting trust arises in favor of one who advances money to another for the purchase of land. Sullivan v. McLennan, 65 D. 780; Smith v. Strahan, 67 D. 622.

Where land is purchased with money of two or more persons, and the conveyance taken by agreement in the name of one of them, a resulting trust arises in favor of the others. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371. S. P., Buck v. Swazey, 56 D. 681; Osborne v. Endicott, 65 D. 498; Jenkins v. Frink, 89 D. 134.

If an agent purchases property in his own name with the funds of his principal, he holds in trust for the latter, and may be compelled to convey. Hall v. Sprigg, 12 D. 506; Depeyster v. Gould, 29 D. 723; Moffatt v. Shepard, 52 D. 141.

One buying land with the money of another, and taking the legal title in his own name, becomes trustee of a resulting trust in favor of the latter, even though he stood in no fiduciary character to the person whose money has been used. Beck v. Urrich, 53 D. 507.

Where executors were authorized by will to sell land devised to the testator's family on giving security, and they sold the land, and employed the money it produced in the purchase of other lands, these circumstances, together with evidence of the declarations of one of the executors, will be sufficient to raise a trust for the family in the lands thus purchased. Wallace v. Duffield, 7 D. 660.

Land of an intestate confirmed to one of the heirs, in the orphans' court, at the appraisalment, may be shown to be held in trust for the others, when the trust is in writing, without impugning the sanctity or validity of the decree of the orphans' court. Bavington v. Clarke, 21 D. 432.

Where a declared trust in a deed is void, a trust arises by implication in favor of those who paid the purchase-money. Methodist Church v. Remington, 26 D. 61.

When one makes a purchase of land in the name of another, and pays the consideration money, a resulting trust immediately arises by virtue of the transaction, and the nominal purchaser will be a trustee for the person

* See mono-graphic note on resulting trusts, 51 D. 751-760.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume X.

paying the purchase-money; this presumption of a resulting trust may be rebutted by circumstances, but the burden of proof rests upon the nominal purchaser. Dudley v. Bosworth, 51 D. 690. S. P., Smitheal v. Gray, 34 D. 664; Portis v. Hill, 65 D. 99. This rule extends to purchasers from the commonwealth. Strimpfster v. Roberts, 57 D. 606.

Where the object for which a conversion of real estate into personalty is made fails, either wholly or in part, so that the proceeds thereof are not legally and effectually disposed of by the testator, there is a resulting trust in favor of the heirs at law pro tanto. Hawley v. James, 32 D. 623.

A testator died seised of lands in another state, which, by his will, he devised to his executors and trustees to be sold, and directed the proceeds to be invested in lands in the state where he was domiciled at the time of his death, upon trusts which were illegal and void by the laws of that state. Held, that there was a resulting trust in favor of the heirs at law as to the land devised, and that the executors and trustees would be decreed to transfer the legal title to such heirs. Id.

A trust results to a fraudulent debtor for the creditors on a purchase of land in another's name by such debtor to defraud his creditors, and the debtor's interest is subject to sale on execution, and the execution purchaser may in equity compel the holder of the legal title to convey to him, to surrender possession, and to account for the rents and profits. Dunnica v. Coy, 69 D. 420.

Where a mortgagor with warranty pays off a prior mortgage on the same land, the payment will inure to the benefit of the second mortgagee. But if the money with which such payment is made is furnished in part by a third person, who takes an assignment of the mortgage to himself, and for his own benefit, a resulting trust in his favor attaches at once to the conveyance from the first mortgagee to the mortgagor, to the extent of the portion of the mortgage debt actually paid off by his money. Kelley v. Jenness, 79 D. 623.

Where land is purchased with the money of a husband, in the name of the wife, there is a resulting trust in his favor, and she will be declared a trustee for him for the benefit of his creditors. Belford v. Crane, 84 D. 155.

A resulting trust is created in a creditor for a debtor as to a part of the debtor's land which the creditor verbally agreed to reconvey to the debtor, if he would waive his exemption and permit the whole tract to be sold at sheriff's sale, under an execution levied upon it, and to be bought in by the creditor. Beegle v. Wentz, 93 D. 762.

Allegations in a bill that A laid out the money of A, B, and C in the purchase of land for their common use, benefit, and advantage, under an agreement that A and B were to be owners in fee and tenants in common, each of a moiety, and that C was to have wood from the land during her life, and that a deed was taken by A, are sufficient allegations of such a purchase to raise a resulting trust. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371.

Where notes secured by mortgage are purchased by the joint funds of two persons, and the purchase is taken in the name of one only, a resulting trust arises in favor of the other, to the extent of the funds he has advanced, and this trust is not discharged by a memorandum made by the person taking the legal title, which, after reciting the joint interest of the two, adds that the person taking the title agrees to account and pay to the other one half the sums received on the notes as collected. Buck v. Swasey, 56 D. 681.

3. When no trust results.—A resulting trust does not arise on a purchase of land for another's benefit where the purchaser uses his own name and credit, and the undertaking to act for the other's benefit is by parol. Fowke v. Slaughter, 13 D. 133.

A resulting trust to a grantor, contrary to the express terms of his conveyance, cannot be raised. Squire v. Harder, 19 D. 446.

A conveyance in fee, with warranty, estops the grantor from alleging an interest in the purchase-money which will raise a resulting trust to him. Id.

A resulting trust cannot arise in a patent from the government for land for which no consideration was paid. Jackson v. Miller, 21 D. 316.

A resulting trust cannot arise out of a fraud upon the government. Id.

A resulting trust is a mere creature of equity, and does not arise where there is an express declaration of trust by the parties in writing, nor in fraud of the laws of the land, as in the case of an alien purchasing land, and having the deed made to a citizen, in which case no trust results in favor of such alien. Leggett v. Dubois, 28 D. 413.

Where the person making a purchase of land in the name of another, and paying the consideration money himself, is under a natural or moral obligation to provide for the person in whose name the conveyance is taken, no presumption of a resulting trust arises, but the transaction will be regarded prima facie as an advancement for the benefit of the nominal purchaser. Dudley v. Bosworth, 51 D. 690. S. P., Lisloff v. Hart, 57 D. 203; Dickinson v. Davis, 80 D. 202.

A resulting trust will not be raised or enforced in contravention of public policy, or the provisions of a statute, as in the case of a conveyance in the name of another, made to hinder, delay, or defraud the creditors of the purchaser. Dudley v. Bosworth, 51 D. 690.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A resulting trust does not exist in favor of the heirs of persons who made an assignment to another of a money demand and a conveyance of certain real estate, absolute upon their face, and importing a valuable consideration; but upon an express verbal condition that the proceeds from the collection of the demand and the sale of the real estate should be held in trust for the heirs of the assignors and grantors. Irvine v. Ivers, 63 D. 420.

A resulting trust does not always arise from advance of purchase-money. It does not follow that because money has been furnished by one party for the purchase of land that a trust thereby results that cannot be explained or defeated. While the advance may create such a trust, it must be subject to the rights of others, and cannot be allowed to intervene to defeat prior and superior equities. Sullivan v. McLennan, 65 D. 780.

Neither a resulting nor express trust arises or is created under the Minnesota statutes, in favor of one who settles upon and improves government land, and agrees, by parol, with another that the latter should enter it in his own name at the land-office, pay for it, and convey it to the former upon repayment of the purchase price. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 72 D. 97.

A presumption of trust arises in favor of one who pays purchase-money of land, when it is conveyed to a stranger, but such a presumption is rebutted in case the purchase can fairly be deemed to have been made for another, from motives of natural love and affection. Thus a purchase by a parent in the name of a child is deemed prima facie an advancement from which no trust results; and the presumption that such a purchase is intended for a provision is stronger in the case of a wife than of a child. Dickinson v. Davis, 80 D. 202.

Before the passage of the Georgia act of 1821, making all estates estates in fee unless some less estate be expressly limited, a marriage settlement conveyed an entire legal estate to a trustee, and then declared a trust in favor of a husband and wife, during the life of the one who should longest live; with remainder to their children, without expressly confining the remainder to a life estate in the children, or expressly declaring it to be an estate of inheritance in them. In 1819, the same parties bought other property, and took a deed professing to declare the same trusts as the marriage settlement, and declaring a trust in favor of the husband and wife, during the life of the one who should longest live; with remainder to their children, and "their heirs," thus pursuing the intent of the marriage settlement, but using new words of expression. Held, that any resulting trust which might have arisen under the marriage settlement was rebutted by the deed of 1819. Adams v. Guerard, 76 D. 624.

15. Resulting trusts in personal property.—Where one person purchases a chattel with the funds and for the use of another, but takes the bill of sale in his own name, a resulting trust arises in favor of the owner of the fund, and he may elect to take the chattel or the fund; but the purchaser holds the legal title to the chattel. Guphill v. Isbell, 19 D. 675.

A trust results in favor of the principal when property is purchased by an agent, in his own name, with his principal's funds. Crocker v. Crocker, 88 D. 291.

M. held a judgment against plaintiff for two thousand dollars, and offered to discharge it for five hundred dollars, but plaintiff did not accept the offer. R., a stranger to plaintiff, applied to M., and by falsely representing that he was acting for plaintiff, induced M. to assign the judgment to him, R., for five hundred dollars. Held, that plaintiff had no interest in the transaction, and that he was not entitled to the benefit of the purchase of the judgment. Garvey v. Jarvis, 7 R. 335.

16. What is a sufficient payment of consideration to raise a resulting trust.—A resulting trust arises only in favor of a party paying the consideration, or some part thereof, at the time of the purchase, where land is purchased and the conveyance taken in another's name, and a subsequent payment will not suffice. Pinnock v. Clough, 42 D. 521. S. P., Hollida v. Shoop, 59 D. 88; Buck v. Swazey, 56 D. 681; Burden v. Sheridan, 14 R. 505.

To establish a resulting trust by parol, there must be the clearest and most indisputable proof that the purchase was made for the party claiming such trust, and the purchase-money paid by him. Hollida v. Shoop, 59 D. 88.

After a purchase with a party's own money or credit, a subsequent tender or reimbursement by another may be evidence of some other contract, or the ground of some other relief, but cannot by retrospective effect produce a resulting trust. Id.

Where the party who pays the consideration upon a purchase of land directs the deed to be made to one to whom he is indebted, as a security for such debt, he thereby renounces the benefit of the consideration, and no trust arises in his favor. Jackson v. Morse, 8 D. 306.

When the money of one forms only a part of the consideration of land purchased in the name of another, the land is charged with a resulting trust pro tanto, if the proportion of the money paid by each can be clearly ascertained; but no resulting trust arises when the amount belonging to one and the other is unknown or uncertain. Baker v. Vining, 50 D. 617.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Parol testimony of declarations of a deceased person, that another person was jointly interested with him in the purchase of certain land, the deed to which was taken in the name of such deceased person alone, is not competent to raise a resulting trust in such other person, without proof of the payment of part of the purchase-money by him. Neill v. Keese, 51 D. 746.

If a party who sets up a resulting trust in lands has made no payment, he cannot be permitted to show by parol evidence that the purchase was made for his benefit. Irvine v. Ivers, 63 D. 420.

To create a resulting trust, the deed need not show a consideration furnished by a third person, but it may be shown by any note or memorandum of the nominal purchaser, though the statute of frauds be pleaded. Osborne v. Endicott, 65 D. 498.

A resulting trust does not exist in favor of one who pays part of the price of land conveyed to another, unless such payment has been made for some specific part or distinct interest in the estate. McGowan v. McGowan, 74 D. 668.

No use results to a grantor in a deed expressing a consideration, though it is merely nominal, and never paid, and parol proof that the conveyance was intended to be in trust for the grantor will not raise a trust. Hogan v. Jaques, 97 D. 644.

A verbal promise by a grantee to reconvey land upon receiving back his debt will not be enforced, either at law or in equity, especially against a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice. Ib.

2. Requirements of the Statutes.

17. Adoption of early English statutes. — The statute 27 Henry VIII., chapter 10, called the statute of uses, is part of the common law of Massachusetts. Johnson v. Johnson, 83 D. 676.

18. Their operation, generally. — The statute of uses operates to transfer the property to the person entitled to the use, dispensing with livery of seisin. Chapman v. Glassell, 48 D. 41; Ramsay v. Marsh, 13 D. 717.

The statute of uses does not extend to personal property. Rice ad. Burnett, 42 D. 336.

A use was a mere confidence in a friend, before the statute of uses, that the feoffees to whom the lands were given should permit the feoffor and his heirs, and such other persons as he might designate, to receive the profits of the land. Ware v. Richardson, 56 D. 762.

The statute of uses transferred the use into possession by converting the estate or interest of the cestui qui use into a legal estate, and by destroying the intermediate estate of the feoffee. Ib.

A trust is a use not executed under the statute of uses in the cestui que use, but the legal estate is vested in the grantee or trustee. Ib.

Special trusts are not within the statute of uses, and a trust to hold for the separate use of a married woman is special; if the woman becomes sole, the special trust for her separate use ceases, and the legal estate vests fully in her. Stacey v. Rice, 67 D. 447.

A use executed by the statute is a legal estate to all intents and purposes, as much as if it had been given by the instrument creating the estate, without the intervention of a trustee. Ib.

19. What is a valid express trust within the statutes. — An active operative trust is created and an estate vested in trustees by a devise of real and personal property, in trust, to lease and let the real estate, to keep the personal estate invested on bond and mortgage, or other safe security, to collect and receive the rents, interest, and profits thereof, and to pay over the net income to the children of the testator; the uses not being such as are executed by the statute of uses, nor by the common law of Pennsylvania. Barnett's Appeal, 86 D. 502.

A trust restricted to lives in being at death of testator, or to the survivor of them, does not infringe the rule against perpetuities. Ib.

The law concerning active trusts discussed. Ib.

Where, by agreement, two parties obtained a road franchise in the name of one upon a bill drawn by the other, and each of them constructed one half of the road, and the one in whose name the franchise stood took possession and collected the tolls on their mutual account, on the understanding that they were to share equally therein, — held, that an express trust was created, of which the party in possession was the trustee. Miles v. Thorne, 99 D. 384.

B., holding the legal title to real property, but upon a secret parol trust for his wife and her brother K., executed a deed thereof, absolute in form, in which his wife joined, to K., the brother, without any pecuniary consideration and without the knowledge or consent of K. B. caused the deed to be recorded. Subsequently, B. said to K.: "The property of your sister has been deeded to you, and I want you to look after her interests, and see that she has her property." K. replied, "All right," or "Very well," or words to that effect. Afterward, K., in a letter to his mother, and also in a document intended to be a will, incidentally recognized the conveyance as a trust. Held, that the assent of K. to the conveyance, in connection with the words of B. informing K. thereof; created an express trust in favor of B.'s wife, and that the subsequent letter and document were sufficient evidence of the trust within the statute of frauds. Kingsbury v. Burnside, 11 R. 67.

20. What express trusts are invalid. — An express trust upon land conveyed by a decedent cannot be created by an inventory of the estate that includes land as part of the estate, but states the title to be in another, notwithstanding the grantee was present when the inventory was made, and knew of it, but made no objection. It is no writing of the grantee, and amounts to no more than parol evidence. Ratliff v. Ellis, 63 D. 471.

An express trust upon land conveyed by a decedent to one who becomes administrator cannot be created by a charge for payment of taxes in the administration account, when it is not shown that the taxes were levied on this land, although it appears that the amount of the charge is the same as the tax would have been upon this land. The evidence is too uncertain to constitute a written acknowledgment of the administrator that the land was part of the decedent's estate. Id.

A mere dry trust will not be sustained when persons equitably entitled to any property take absolutely the entire beneficial interest, and the trustee has no duty to perform; unless it be a special trust intended to accomplish some object, as to preserve contingent remainders, protect property for the sole and separate use of a married woman, or from the creditors of the cestui que trust. Kay v. Scates, 78 D. 399.

A trust will not be sustained on the ground that it is for the sole and separate use of a woman, if she was unmarried when the will took effect, and there was at the time no marriage in immediate contemplation. Id.

21. What trusts are executed by the statutes. — A use is executed where there is in esse a person seised to the use, a cestui que use, a well-defined use, and a seisin out of which it is to issue, and the property vests in the cestui que use from the date of the deed creating the use. Moore v. Shultz, 53 D. 446.

Power to dispose of the estate by will given to a cestui que use, in the deed creating the use, effects nothing, as the deed vests in him the fee. Id.

A use will not be prevented from being executed in the cestui que use by the mere interposition of a trustee to protect and secure a trust estate in a third person, even though a married woman, unless there is attached to the trustee the performance of some active functions or duties in order to support the trust. Ware v. Richardson, 56 D. 762.

A use is executed in the trustee when the devise or deed is in trust "to collect and pay over" the rents and profits to another. Id.

A use is executed in the cestui que use when the devise or deed is in trust to permit another to "enjoy" the rents and profits. Id.

An implied trust is not within the statute of uses, and consequently does not become executed by force of that statute. Such a trust can only be executed by a voluntary conveyance of the trustees, a decree in chancery, or a judgment in ejectment. Strimpfer v. Roberts, 57 D. 606.

Trusts will not be considered executed, but will be treated as executed, and the legal estate as vested in the cestui que trust, where the persons named as trustees have no duties to perform which require the seisin or possession of the estate to be in them, and the persons for whose use the trust was created are sui juris. Kay v. Scates, 78 D. 399.

A trust will not be considered executed until the time at which the full beneficial enjoyment of the interest devised shall vest. Id.

A present gift for a present and lawful purpose amounts to a vested and executed trust for that purpose. Philadelphia v. Girard, 84 D. 470.

Where the entire beneficial interest is in the cestui que trust, without restriction as to enjoyment, the trust should be considered as executed. No conveyance of the legal title is necessary, though it will be decreed for the purpose of removing a nominal cloud from the title. Rife v. Geyer, 98 D. 361.

If a trust is perfectly created, so that the donor has nothing more to do, and the one seeking to enforce it has need of no further conveyance, and nothing is required of the court to give effect to it as an executed trust, it will be given effect notwithstanding want of consideration and of change in the possession of the property. But if the transaction is incomplete, the court will not complete it without first inquiring into its origin and consideration. Badgley v. Volrain, 18 R. 541.

22. Effect of state statutes relative to uses and trusts. — The contingent right of a trustee to receive the rents and profits of land purchased in the names of the testator's children, until and even after such children have attained the age of twenty-two, if he shall think proper, is not a trust authorized by the New York revised statutes. Wood v. Wood, 28 D. 451.

A trust in personality is not affected by the provision in the revised statutes of New York abolishing all uses and trusts not therein authorized (1 R. S. 721, 2d ed., sec. 45), that provision relating only to trusts in realty. Kane v. Gott, 35 D. 641.

A trust to executors to sell realty, invest the proceeds in stocks, etc., and accumulate the income, and dispose of it as directed by the will, is not prohibited by the provision of the revised statutes abolishing uses and trusts not therein authorized, the property directed to be sold being regarded as personality. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The limitation of suspension of absolute ownership of personality to two lives, by the revised statutes, relates only to future contingent estates. Ib.

The North Carolina act of 1812 of the revised statutes, chapter 45, section 4, did not mean to change the nature of trusts, the relation between the trustee and cestui que trust, or the rights of the latter against the former. It was not intended to embrace cases in which the trustee could not voluntarily convey to the cestui que trust the legal estate without incurring a breach of trust to other persons. Battle v. Pelway, 44 D. 59.

The fourth section of the Pennsylvania act of assembly of April 22, 1856, relative to creation of trusts, is prospective, and has no application to a case which arose before the passage of the act. Lingenfelter v. Ritchey, 98 D. 308.

23. The doctrine of cy pres. — The principle of cy pres in executing trusts is not applied in Pennsylvania, because no court possesses the specific powers necessary to give it effect, and because it is grossly revolting to a sense of public justice. Methodist Church v. Remington, 26 D. 61.

The doctrine of cy pres, in Pennsylvania, is that by which a well-defined charity, or one where the means of definition are given, may be enforced in favor of the general intent, even where the mode or means provided for by the donor fail by reason of their inadequacy or unlawfulness. Philadelphia v. Girard, 84 D. 470.

When a definite function or duty is to be performed, and it cannot be done in exact conformity with the scheme of the person who has provided for it, it must be performed with as close approximation to that scheme as is reasonably practicable. It is the doctrine of approximation, and is not at all confined to the administration of charities, but is equally applicable to all devises and contracts wherein the future is provided for, and it is an essential element of equity jurisprudence. Ib.

Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. 127, established the validity of trusts created by will in this case, and the heirs of Stephen Girard are now concluded by the decree therein. Ib.

II. THE TRUSTEE.

1. Rights, Powers, and Duties of Trustees.

24. Appointment of trustee. — A trustee of an express trust is a person in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another. Harney v. Dutcher, 55 D. 131.

A state legislature may appoint trustees and convey property to be held in trust, for any object, public or private. Commissioners v. Walker, 38 D. 433.

Any person may hold as a trustee who is capable of confidence and of holding real or personal property. Ib.

Corporations may now hold as trustees. Ib.

A trust may be confided to the incumbents of certain offices and their successors in office. Ib.

Women may be appointed as executive trustees of the court, where it will promote the interests of all concerned; as where a committee is selected to take charge of the person of a female lunatic, or of a lunatic husband, father, etc. Gibson's Case, 17 D. 257.

Officers whose duties are incompatible with the duties of trustees, such as register, clerk, or judge of a court, cannot be employed as trustees. Ib.

Infants and femes covert, being incompetent to contract, cannot act as trustees for the sale or disposition of property where security is required to be given. Ib.

A trustee must be a citizen and resident within the jurisdiction of the court, so as to be continually under its control, and to be the better able to discharge the trust; hence no person can act as such who is in a position subjecting him to the necessity of occasional absence from the state for long intervals. Ib.

A chattel interest to commence in future may be created without the aid of a trustee. Jaggers v. Estes, 49 D. 674.

The appointment of trustees under the New York absent and absconding debtor's act is conclusive evidence that the steps leading to the appointment were regular, provided jurisdiction of the proceeding is shown. Wood v. Chapin, 67 D. 62.

Proceedings against an absent or absconding debtor are not vitiated, or a conveyance of his property by trustees invalidated, by the failure of the officer before whom the proceedings were had to file his report within the statutory time, or by the failure of the trustees to record their appointment within the statutory time; for the statute is directory merely. Ib.

Trustees appointed under the New York absent and absconding debtor's act take title to his property, — not a mere power to convey, — and their title dates from the first publication of notice. Ib.

Jurisdiction to appoint a trustee becomes vested in the court of chancery, and does not depend upon acquiring jurisdiction of the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased trustee, where a trustee is appointed by a deed which provides that in case of his decease or legal incapacity the trust estate shall vest in such court, which shall execute the trust declared. Morrison v. Kelly, 74 D. 169.

25. His estate or interest. — A different rule of construction is not necessarily to be applied to trust estates than that governing legal estates; accordingly limitations of the trusts of a term are decided according to the doctrines applicable to real estates. Cudworth v. Thompson, 4 D. 617.

The cestui que trust cannot deny his trust.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

tee's title, in an action at law, where he admits that he is in possession under him; and when sued by such trustee, or by a purchaser under him, he cannot put the plaintiff to the proof of what he has thus admitted. Den v. Alberson, 22 D. 719.

The word "heirs" is not necessary to create an estate in fee in trustees when such an estate is clearly essential to the purposes of the trust. Chamberlain v. Thompson, 28 D. 390; Gould v. Lamb, 45 D. 187.

A trustee appointed by the court of another state, in the place of a deceased trustee to whom land in Pennsylvania has been conveyed, obtains no title to the land so as to enable him to maintain ejectment for it. Williams v. Maua, 31 D. 465.

The assent of the cestui que trust to a trust created in his favor will be presumed, and therefore the estate vested in his trustee is not overreached by the lien of a judgment obtained against the grantor, intermediate the creation of the trust estate and the acts of the beneficiary indicating his assent to the trust. Skipwith v. Cunningham, 31 D. 642.

A trust created upon the vesting of the legal title in the trustee cannot be destroyed otherwise than by the renunciation of the cestui que trust. Id.

A trustee will be considered as taking the legal title, when it becomes necessary that the title should be vested in him in order to execute the declared purposes of a will. Morton v. Barrett, 39 D. 575; Rife v. Geyer, 98 D. 351.

A trustee may recover in ejectment against his cestui que trust. Beach v. Beach, 39 D. 204.

Where a trustee is under no obligation to convey to a defendant, the jury will not be directed to presume a conveyance to him. Id.

The legal title to real estate and personality remains in the trustee where it has been vested in him to be held for one person until marriage; afterwards for the joint use of husband and wife, and of the survivor, with contingent remainder over. Rice ads. Bursett, 42 D. 336.

The legal estate will not vest in a trustee in case of a trust for the use of a married woman, unless the instrument creating the trust assigns to the trustee the performance of some duty necessary for her enjoyment of the estate. Ware v. Richardson, 56 D. 762.

An instrument will be so construed as to vest legal estate in trustees if possible, where an estate is devised or conveyed to trustees for the separate use of a married woman, because such a construction will but effectuate the intention of the donor. Id.

In all cases where it is doubtful what estates trustees have, they are presumed to take an estate large enough to enable them to accomplish the purposes of the trust; but the trustee will never, by construction, be held to take a greater estate than the nature of the trust demands. Coulter v. Robertson, 57 D. 168; Gould v. Lamb, 45 D. 187.

Trustees take exactly that quantity of interest in an estate which the purposes of the trust require, and in the absence of any express limitation, sufficient to carry the legal inheritance, the estate of the trustees may be enlarged and extended into such an estate as the nature of the trust may require; the construction in this respect to be governed mainly by the intention of the testator, as gathered from the general scope of the will. Ellis v. Fisher, 65 D. 52.

A devise to trustees for a particular purpose vests the legal estate in them as long as the execution of the trust requires it, and no longer. Steacy v. Rice, 67 D. 447; Coulter v. Robertson, 57 D. 168.

A trustee's title does not cease at death of a married woman, where slaves are conveyed to him by deed, his heirs, executors, and administrators, in trust for her sole and separate use during her life, and after her death, for the use, benefit, and behoof of her children by her present husband, and their heirs forever. Bryan v. Weems, 65 D. 407.

A testator having devised an estate to trustees in trust for use and benefit of a feme covert during her natural life, and at her death to the use of the heirs of her body, and in default of heirs of her body, then to his (the testator's) own right heirs, the trustees take only a legal estate for the life of the feme covert, the evident intention of the trust being to protect the property against the marital rights of the husband, and upon the death of the feme covert, the legal title vests in the heirs of her body as purchasers, under the limitation in the will. Ellis v. Fisher, 65 D. 52.

The title held by a defendant as trustee may be transferred by sale under an execution against him. Giles v. Palmer, 69 D. 756.

An active trust is created requiring the legal estate in the trustee by a provision in a will bequeathing land to a trustee, to be leased by him, and the income paid over to the testator's son during his life, remainder to his heirs, and with a further provision that if the trustee desires, he may permit the son to let the land and collect the income, but that it is not to be liable for his debts or in any wise under his control. Rife v. Geyer, 98 D. 351.

Whenever it is necessary for the accomplishment of any object of the creator of a trust that the legal estate should remain in the trustee, then the trust is a special, active one. Id.

The true test as to whether a trust is an active one, requiring a legal estate in the trustee, is, Would a court of equity in Pennsylvania decree a conveyance of the legal title? Id.

Where land is devised to a trustee, with directions to give the income thereof to the testator's son, for life, or to permit the son to himself collect the income, the trustee takes a legal estate which is not divested by this permission to the son, and the latter's estate is only an equitable one. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Where a trustee conveys his legal title to his cestui que trust in violation of the will creating the trust, it is a breach thereof, and the conveyance is absolutely void. Id.

Lands were conveyed to trustees, their heirs and assigns, to sell sufficient to pay certain debts, and then to lease and support a certain beneficiary for life; the residuum to be held for the benefit of the grantor's heirs at the expiration of the life estate; reserving to the grantors power by appointment or will to direct where the residue should go; the trustees, in their discretion, upon request of the grantors, to sell and convey any portion. Held, that the trustees took the whole estate, and the beneficiaries only an equitable interest; and that if by the acts or negligence of the trustees the estate of the trustees had been defeated by adverse possession, the interests of the remaindermen were also defeated. Bennett v. Garlock, 35 R. 517.

26. Acceptance by trustee, and how proved. — A trustee's acceptance is not essential to the existence of a trust. Field v. Arrowsmith, 39 D. 185; Stone v. King, 84 D. 557.

A court of chancery will execute a trust, whether the trustee assents or not. Field v. Arrowsmith, 39 D. 185.

Where the grantee in a deed of trust agreed to accept the trust, and the deed was put on record pursuant to the directions of the grantor, the delivery was sufficient. Steele v. Lowry, 19 D. 581.

An estate conveyed in trust to two persons, one of whom refuses to act as trustee, vests in the other. Scull v. Reeves, 29 D. 694.

An executor accepting a trust accepts it entirely, and cannot renounce a portion of it. Ross v. Barclay, 55 D. 616.

Lands in Pennsylvania subjected by a testator to a trust, other than for payment of debts, of which the executors in New York are trustees, can be conveyed only by the executors accepting all the trusts under the will, or by their rejecting the trusts entire, and procuring the appointment of a trustee in Pennsylvania. A middle course of renouncing the executorship and trust, so far as regards the lands in Pennsylvania, and procuring the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed in Pennsylvania, will fail, for he cannot execute the trust, and they cannot renounce it in part. Id.

A trustee may maintain an action without proving his acceptance of the trust; his bringing of the suit and acting as trustee are sufficient. O'Neill v. Henderson, 60 D. 568.

It is a sufficient delivery of a deed of trust if the draughtsman informs the bargainee of its existence, and he consents to act as trustee under it. Green v. Kornegay, 67 D. 281.

A voluntary deed of trust was delivered by the grantor to the trustee named therein, who communicated this fact to the cestuis que trust, and promised to have the deed recorded. To avoid executing the trust, the trustee afterwards returned the deed to the grantor, who destroyed it. Held, a complete delivery to the cestuis que trust. Stone v. King, 84 D. 557.

27. Rights and powers, generally. — Trusts, with respect to funds created by will for distribution at a future period, are either discretionary or directory: Discretionary, where no directions are given as to the manner in which the fund shall be invested prior to its final appropriation in satisfaction of the trust; directory, where the manner in which the fund shall be invested is pointed out. Decker v. Cantrell, 81 D. 576.

A trustee is bound to manage and employ the trust property for the benefit of the cestui que trust with the care and diligence of a provident owner. Hutchinson v. Lord, 60 D. 381.

Where no express or implied directions can be derived from the will of the donor as to the investment of trust funds, it is the duty of the trustee to whom money is conveyed in trust to invest it in good and safe securities. Kimball v. Reding, 64 D. 333.*

A trustee being directed to use his "best skill and judgment" in investing trust funds, his powers and discretion are not enlarged by the use of the words "best skill and judgment." Id.

An investment, to be deemed safe, must have some evidence that it is so, to distinguish it from a mere adventure; it must have a valuation, yield an actual income, and not be founded upon remote contingencies. Buying stock in a contemplated railroad is not a safe investment, but a mere adventure. Id.

A trustee does not transcend his power or abuse his trust by paying over to the cestui que trust, money, in good faith, when charged by the will of testator to do so when in his judgment it seems necessary. Id.

Trustees for the benefit of another cannot recover in that capacity where they do not seek to do so, and have repudiated the trust relation by bringing the action in their own right. Thus where A paid purchase-money, and took a conveyance to B of an undivided one half of a tract of land, and after the death of A and B the heirs of B, in their own right, sued the grantor for partition, they cannot recover as trustees for benefit of A. Portis v. Hill, 65 D. 99.

A trustee under a deed of trust has no power to impose new terms or conditions, or

* Investments by trustees and liability for, see note, 57 R. 111-114.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

to alter or vary those contained in the deed. Cassell v. Ross, 85 D. 270; Hunt v. Townsend, 100 D. 63.

28. Seeking advice from the court. — The right of plaintiffs to seek advice and direction of the court in performance of their duties as trustees is not dependent on defendant's acts and proceedings, whether legal or illegal. It is not necessary that defendants should be made parties, or that any decree be entered against them if they are so made. Treadwell v. Salisbury Mfg. Co., 66 D. 490.

If plaintiffs state a case entitling them to the aid and advice of the court in the performance of their duties as trustees, a suitable decree may be entered to fully meet this part of the prayer of the bill, without any inquiry concerning the legality of the acts or proceedings of a corporation defendant. Id.

The court of chancery has general power and authority to entertain jurisdiction of cases in which trustees ask for protection in the performance of their duties; but the cases which fall under this head of equity are those in which there are conflicting claims to the trust estate, or it is doubtful, upon the construction of the will, deed, or other instrument creating the trust, to whom the property, or the beneficial interest in it, belongs. Id.

A bill in equity cannot be maintained by trustees who are stockholders in a corporation, under a claim for protection and advice in the execution of their trusts, and thereby subject the corporation, and all their acts and proceedings, to the jurisdiction of a court of chancery. Id.

Where a testator devises to a trustee, with directions to invest the trust fund in land in a particular place, and to apply the rents and profits to the use of his children until they attain a certain age, the court may authorize an investment in another place upon the same trust, with the consent of all those having vested or contingent interests in the fund. Wood v. Wood, 28 D. 451.

The chancellor may assent, for parties who are infants, and within his jurisdiction, to such change of investment. Id.

29. Power to sue in his own name. — Trustee may reduce the trust estate to possession, and may sue or defend a suit at law in regard to it, if the instrument by which the trust was created does not inhibit. Huckabee v. Billingsly, 50 D. 183.

A trustee may maintain an action at law for the possession of the trust fund or estate. Commissioners v. Walker, 38 D. 433.

A trustee may maintain trover against his cestui que trust for a conversion of the trust property. Guphill v. Isbell, 19 D. 675.

A trustee may bring an action as trustee which he would be estopped to bring in his individual capacity. Worthy v. Johnson, 54 D. 393.

A trustee of an express trust may prosecute an action in behalf of the trust in his own name. Harney v. Dutcher, 55 D. 131.

Section 33 of the Kentucky code, enabling trustees to bring actions in their own names without joining the beneficiaries, has not changed the rule under the old practice providing that a trustee under a mortgage made to secure the payment of money to others could not sue for a foreclosure and sale without making the cestui que trust parties. Bardston etc. R. R. Co. v. Metcalfe, 81 D. 541.

A trustee, to maintain action in his own name, without joining the cestui que trust, under that section, must allege or show that the beneficiaries are numerous, and that it is impracticable to bring them before the court within a reasonable time. Id.

When a trustee is entitled to sue in his own name without joining the beneficiaries, it is error to give him judgment for the money. The court should retain control over it for the benefit of those entitled to it. Id.

30. Power to dispose of trust property, and how exercised.* — The trustee in a trust deed can convey to a purchaser an absolute title at law, whether the trust has been performed or not, but it is defeasible in equity by the party injured by a breach of the trust. Taylor v. King, 8 D. 746.

A conveyance by a trustee under a deed of trust passes the legal title to the estate; and in an action of ejectment for the same, the purchaser need not show that, in making the sale, the trustee had complied with the conditions specified in the trust deed. Reece v. Allen, 46 D. 336. S. P., Gale v. Mensing, 64 D. 197.

A quitclaim deed from trustee to trustor reinvests the trustor with the legal estate, and divests the trustee of it. Huckabee v. Billingsly, 50 D. 183.

A trustee under a deed giving him power to sell and convey can sell and convey such title only as is vested in him by his conveyance. Such an agent has no authority to bind his principal or grantor by a covenant in his name. Barnard v. Duncan, 90 D. 416.

A trustee's conveyance under such power is valid without warranty or personal covenants; in fact, there can be no warranty of title on such sales, and all purchasers are bound to know it. Id.

Authority to convey merely gives no implied power to make covenants. Id.

A trustee cannot be required to enter into any personal covenants for title, or against encumbrances generally, where he has sold real estate under a deed of trust. He sells in his fiduciary capacity only, and acts as a mere agent to sell and convey, and as a trustee to execute the trust declared. Id.

* Conveyance by trustee, effect of, see note, 64 D. 199-203.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The usual trustee covenant against acts and encumbrances done or suffered by himself is the only one which can be required of a trustee executing a mere naked power of sale under a deed of trust. Ib.

Trustees having power under deed to sell and convey real estate, as well as executors, administrators, guardians, mortgagees, assignees for the benefit of creditors, and other like trustees, who have no other interest in the property than a legal title with power to sell and convey, are exempted from responsibility in making sales, except where fraud exists, or where they voluntarily enter into personal covenants of warranty. Ib.

A vendee may lawfully demand an ordinary trustee covenant of a trustee who sells to him under power of sale, as the trustee cannot object to covenanting against acts or encumbrances done or suffered by himself; but if the vendee absolutely refuses to complete his purchase unless a deed with full general warranty of title is tendered, it amounts to a waiver of any demand for a covenant against the trustee's own acts merely, and of all objections to the deed that was tendered because of its not containing such a covenant. Ib.

One who takes a conveyance of real estate in trust for a married woman may mortgage the same to secure the payment of the purchase-money, where the deed and mortgage are executed at the same time, and form part of the same transaction. Mavrich v. Grier, 93 D. 373.

Trustees authorized to sell real estate and invest the proceeds in stock are not thereby empowered to exchange the trust property for other real property. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 18 D. 250.

Where a deed of trust minutely prescribes the circumstances under which, and the manner in which, the trustees may dispose of the trust property, they are not at liberty to dispose of it in any other manner. If they voluntarily confess judgment, contrary to the provisions of the trust deed, such judgment is not a lien upon the trust property, and can only bind the individual property of the parties confessing it. Hunt v. Townshend, 100 D. 63.

A conveyance by a trustee, in violation of the trust, cannot be impeached by a stranger to the trust. Coxe v. Blenden, 26 D. 83.

The trustee is guilty of a breach of trust in selling the trust property under disadvantageous circumstances which it was in his power to avoid. Hunt v. Bass, 24 D. 274.

A will devised property to a certain trustee and his personal representatives, to hold for the use of the testator's son during his life, and for the use of his children after his death, with power to the trustee, but not to his representatives, to lease. Held, that a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, was not void. Collins v. Foley, 52 R. 505.

31. Public and private sales.—Where land is given to a trustee to sell the same "at auction or otherwise, in whole or in parcels, on giving three weeks' notice thereof," he can sell the same at private sale; the direction as to notice has only a reference to a sale at public auction. Minusc v. Cox, 9 D. 313.

The beneficiaries of a trust may acquiesce in and confirm a sale by the trustee by acts which will preclude them from afterwards calling the sale into question; but such acts, to amount in equity to a confirmation of the sale, must have been done with a full knowledge on their part of their legal and equitable rights which are affected by it, and of the defects of the title so confirmed. Mulford v. Minch, 64 D. 472.

The measure of damages where a purchaser at a trustee's auction sale refuses to perform his contract, and the property is resold on the same day within the hours mentioned in the advertisement, but at an enormous sacrifice, in consequence of most of the bidders having departed, is not the difference in price between the two sales, though it would be the proper criterion of damages actually sustained if the latter sale had been fairly made on proper notice; but even that would not be conclusive. The common-law rule is to give no more damages than the actual loss sustained; and where the property is shown to be still worth as much as was bid for it, the damages can be little more than nominal. Barnard v. Duncan, 90 D. 416.

32. Validity of sales by trustee.—Trustee to make a sale is allowed a greater discretion in Maryland than is granted to a master in chancery in England; but such sales have, as occasion required, been guarded with more precautionary restrictions than those adopted by the English court. Murdock's Case, 20 D. 381.

In ordering a resale by a trustee, the court may direct the highest bid at the previous sale to be rejected, where it appears that the bidder is unable to comply with his bid, or has acted fraudulently, or has attempted to baffle the court. Ib.

A trustee may be directed or allowed to report two or more persons as the highest bidders, upon the express condition that if the highest bidder does not comply with the terms of sale, the next bidder may be received as the purchaser, where there is just reason to believe that there is a combination of bidders to embarrass the sale, or the highest bidder has no ostensible means of payment. Ib.

A sale by trustees upon credit may be an act of good faith and the proper exercise

* Power of sale, when trustee vested with, by implication, see note, 57 D. 209-217.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

of discretion, according to circumstances. Hoffman v. Macbail, 64 D. 637.

Where a trustee in a trust deed is authorized to sell for cash upon default of payment of the money for which the deed was given, he cannot sell on credit; and if he does sell on time, the sale may be set aside as void. Cassell v. Ross, 85 D. 270.

Where a trustee holds land in trust to convey one half thereof to a certain party upon request, or if no request is made for a conveyance, to sell the whole, and account to the party named for one half of the proceeds of the sale, the trustee may sell the whole tract, or any part of it, and such sale will be in conformity with the trust; and if no request is made for a conveyance during the lifetime of the trustee, at his death his representative takes the land upon the same trust, and if he sells, the purchaser acquires a good title discharged of the trust. Paul v. Fulton, 82 D. 124.

At a sale by a trustee under a power, where the facts or means of information concerning the condition and value of the thing sold are equally accessible to both parties, and nothing is said or done which tends to impose on the other, or to mislead him, there is no fraud of which the law can take notice; but where material facts are accessible to the vendor only, and he knows them not to be within the diligent attention, observation, and judgment of the other party, he is bound to disclose those facts, and make them known to the purchaser. Barnard v. Duncan, 90 D. 416.

Where the trustee in a deed of trust with a power of sale gives notice for a certain number of days, advertises the property, and puts it up for sale at public auction, and the property is struck off to a bidder, the trustee cannot upon the same day resell the property because the purchaser refuses to complete his contract; there must be a new publication of notice. Id.

A trustee's sale under a power contained in a trust deed should be made with precision, to render it valid. The notice of sale should contain such facts as would reasonably apprise the public of the place, time, and terms of sale, and the property to be sold. But mere omissions and inaccuracies in these respects, not calculated to mislead, and working no prejudice, will not be regarded. Therefore, where the deed empowers the trustee to sell at public auction at the court-house in a certain town and county, and the notice states that the sale will be for cash, at the court-house door in such town, but without naming the county, or stating that it will be at public auction, the notice is sufficient, until it is shown that injury results therefrom. Powers v. Kueckhoff, 97 D. 281.

Sales and titles founded on powers of sale contained in trust deeds should not be avoided for slight reasons. But where the power has not been executed in accordance with essential conditions, the sale and deed will be held to be utterly void, at law and in equity. Id.

A deed of trust gave a power to the trustee, "or his legal representative," to sell the property conveyed by the deed on default of payment of the debts for which it was conveyed as security. Held, that the power could not be exercised by the administrator of the trustee, but only by his successor in the trust. Warnecke v. Lembo, 22 R. 86.

33. Rights and liabilities of purchasers. — If a trustee sell without giving public notice, when he is directed to give such notice, the sale is valid as to a purchaser, the trustee being held responsible for a deficiency, if any. Minus v. Cox, 9 D. 313.

Where a testator devised the residue of his property to his three sons, directing that the share of one should be deposited by his executor with the others, and giving the executor a power to sell, — held, that an attaching creditor of the son could not hold against a purchaser at a sale of the estate by the executor, pursuant to the power. Braiman v. Stiles, 13 D. 445.

A purchaser at a trustee's sale, in a creditor's suit, may be ordered to make payment directly to the creditors upon the trustee's death before payment. Ocombe v. Jordan, 22 D. 236.

Upon the death of the purchaser at a trustee's sale, before completing payment, his representatives having assets may be compelled summarily to bring in the residue of the purchase-money. Id.

A resale may be ordered on the purchaser's death before payment in such a case, for the purpose of raising the residue of the purchase-money. Id.

In sales by a trustee, the rule caveat emptor applies. Sutton v. Sutton, 56 D. 109.

At a sale by a trustee under a trust deed, the purchaser takes only such right and interest as the trustee has power to convey, where at the time of the sale the purchaser has notice of a deed conveying a portion of the property purchased. Rives v. Dudley, 67 D. 231.

The immediate grantee or purchaser at a trustee's sale under a trust deed is bound at his peril to examine the title he is purchasing, and must see that all precedent conditions of the sale are complied with by the trustee. Without this he cannot protect himself by insisting that he is a purchaser in good faith without notice, and the sale may be set aside. The rule is believed to be different, however, with a remote purchaser. Cassell v. Ross, 85 D. 270.

An innocent purchaser at a trustee's sale under a trust deed, without notice, will not be affected by a previous arrangement or agreement between the debtor and creditor. Powers v. Kueckhoff, 97 D. 281.

34. Right to deal with the estate, generally.*—Trustees are not allowed to deal with the trust estate for their own benefit. Miller v. Davidson, 44 D. 715.

A person having charge of the property of another, who confounds the same with his own so that it cannot be distinguished, must bear all the inconvenience of the confusion, and is liable for the utmost value of the property. Brackenridge v. Holland, 20 D. 123. This principle applied to the case of an executor who had mixed the assets of the estate with his own property, and had invested them. Myers v. Myers, 16 D. 648.

The relation of trustee and cestui que trust is usually, as well in fact as in law, a relation of personal trust and confidence. Tull v. Davis, 100 D. 385.

Contracts between cestui que trust and their trustees, although not void, are strictly scrutinized by courts of equity, in order that no injustice may be done the cestui que trust; and before the same will be upheld, it must appear that the latter were free to act as rational, intelligent men. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 18 D. 250.

The utmost good faith is required where a fiduciary relation exists, in all transactions, so as to prevent undue advantage being taken; and if in such a case there is any suspicion of artifice or undue influence, equity will pronounce the transaction void. Juan v. Toulmin, 44 D. 443.

A trust cannot be revoked, or the trust estate applied to other purposes, unless the beneficiary has dissented from the trust. Stockard v. Stockard, 46 D. 79.

A trustee may contract with the cestui que trust in relation to the trust property, where the power of disposal of it is in the beneficiary. Marshall v. Stephens, 47 D. 601.

Where a creditor is appointed trustee in a deed of trust by the debtor, in favor of the debtor's wife and children, and the conveyance declares the property to be "free and exempt from the debts, contracts, and encumbrances" of the debtor, if the creditor signs the deed it is equivalent to a covenant or agreement on his part that the property shall be free from his own debt, and he cannot afterwards subject the property to his debt. Strong v. Willis, 52 D. 364.

A party is not permitted to allege his own fraud; consequently a trustee in a deed of trust by a debtor, who is also a creditor of the debtor, cannot impeach the conveyance as fraudulent so as to subject the property to his debt. Id.

* Liability of trustee dealing with trust estate, see note, 40 D. 516.

Dealings of trustee with cestui que trust, see note, 16 D. 516, 517.

35. Right to purchase the trust property.—1. The general rule forbidding such purchase.—A trustee cannot purchase for himself nor deal with the cestui que trust, in reference to the trust estate. McCants v. Bee, 16 D. 610; Grumley v. Webb, 100 D. 304.

A trustee cannot be a purchaser at his own sale. Singstack v. Harding, 7 D. 669; Dorsey v. Dorsey, 6 D. 506; without first divesting himself of his fiduciary character. Murdock's Case, 20 D. 381; Pratt v. Thornton, 48 D. 492.

A trustee cannot purchase at his own sale, either in person or by another, and a sale made to himself of the trust estate is invalid, and the cestui que trust is entitled, as of course, to have it set aside. Armstrong v. Campbell, 24 D. 556; Davis v. Simpson, 9 D. 500; Richardson v. Jones, 22 D. 293; Salmarsh v. Beene, 30 D. 525.

A trustee cannot sell and buy the same property because of the antagonistic interest in the two positions. Tiedale v. Tiedale, 64 D. 775; Remick v. Butterfield, 64 D. 316. He is not prohibited from purchasing, but if he does, it will be for the benefit of the cestui qui trust, who may, within a reasonable time, have a resale, or the trustee may be held to his purchase. Brackenridge v. Holland, 20 D. 123.

A trustee is not permitted by a court of chancery to buy the trust fund for his own benefit, without the consent of the beneficiary, which must be clearly proved. If he does, he still holds subject to the trust. Field v. Arrowsmith, 39 D. 185; Chorpenning's Appeal, 72 D. 789.

A trustee is bound to fidelity in the interests of his trust, and will not be permitted to make a profit by the relationship. This rule is inflexible, without regard to considerations paid by trustee, or his honesty of purpose. Chorpenning's Appeal, 72 D. 789.

A trustee appointed by a court of equity to sell real estate cannot buy at such sale, either on his own account or as the agent of a third person. North Baltimore Building Ass'n v. Caldwell, 90 D. 67.

A trustee in a deed to secure debts, who is an attorney at law and in fact of the creditor, cannot make a valid sale of the property to himself. Washington etc. R. R. Co. v. Alexandria etc. R. R. Co., 100 D. 710.

2. Scope and extent of the rule.—Where a power is given to an executor to sell for the benefit of a third person, a purchase by the executor from his cestui que trust is not favored in equity, and he cannot maintain a bill for specific performance based on such purchase. Munro v. Allaire, 2 D. 330.

Purchases by a trustee from his cestui que trust will not be sustained by courts of equity unless, after the most rigorous scrutiny, it clearly appears that there is no fraud or concealment in the transaction, and no advantage taken by the trustee of information obtained by him in that capacity. McCants v. Bee, 16 D. 610.

A purchase of the trust estate at sheriff's sale by a fraudulent trustee, pending litigation between him and his cestui que trust, confers no title; and the sheriff's deed can stand only as a security for what was advanced upon the execution. Keaton v. Cobb, 18 D. 596.

A trustee's purchase at a sale of the trust property is not void; it will bind the cestui que trust if he acquiesces; if he dissent in a reasonable time, the trustee will be considered as holding for him. Jennison v. Hapgood, 19 D. 258.

The trustee's purchase of the trust property is void, both as to himself and as to others jointly interested with him in the purchase. Hunt v. Bass, 24 D. 274.

An agreement entered into by a commissioner appointed by the orphans' court to sell real estate, by which the property to be sold is to be purchased by another person, and afterwards divided between them, will not be enforced in equity. Saltmarsh v. Beene, 30 D. 525.

A trustee cannot purchase at his own sale, or at a sale by his co-trustees; and if a trustee becomes interested in such purchase, the cestui que trust may have that purchase set aside, and the property re-exposed for sale; or the court may set aside the sale entirely, and order the purchase-money refunded. Scott v. Freeland, 45 D. 310. And whether the sale was private or public, the cestui que trust may insist on having the experiment of another sale, without proving that the trustee made a bargain advantageous to himself, and without showing actual injury. Bank of Old Dominion v. Railroad Co., 74 D. 302. The manner of making such resale and of taking the account with such purchaser stated by the court. Buckles v. Laferty, 40 D. 752.

The trustee's designs in purchasing at sheriff's sale are immaterial, whether it be for himself or for the purpose of quieting his title as trustee; because, no matter what his intention might be, the law will protect cestui que trust against the acts of the trustee. Spindler v. Atkinson, 56 D. 755.

The rule that a trustee cannot purchase trust property for his own account forbids that a receiver who has bought in on foreclosure of a mortgage property of which he held the equity of redemption as receiver should be allowed to hold the property as against a cestui que trust who elects to claim the benefit of the purchase. Jewett v. Miller, 61 D. 751.

A trustee purchasing at his own sale cannot derive any benefit therefrom, though he has acted without moral turpitude, and the cestui que trust may still treat him as trustee, a court of equity relieving him to the extent of allowing him a lien on the property for any advances of a reasonable nature which he may have made. Mulford v. Minch, 64 D. 472.

Trustees cannot purchase at their own sales, either directly or indirectly, and if they do, such purchase will be set aside on the proper and reasonable application of the parties interested. This doctrine applies to purchases by parties acting in any fiduciary capacity which imposes upon them the obligation of obtaining the best terms for the vendor, or which has enabled them to acquire a knowledge of the property. Hoffman S. C. Co. v. Cumberland Coal & I. Co., 77 D. 311.

To support a purchase by a trustee from the cestui que trust of part of the trust property, the trustee must divest himself of his character as trustee, and enter into a new and distinct contract with the cestui que trust; and it must appear that the latter has the fullest information concerning the transaction and the trust, and that no advantage is taken by the purchaser of information acquired by him in the character of trustee. Smith v. Townsend, 92 D. 637.

Cestui que trust are not estopped from impeaching deeds given by them to their trustee, by reason of their having taken legacies under his will, which were not made a charge on the particular property derived under the deeds; nor does any case of election arise under such circumstances. Id.

Cestui que trust, who secure the vacation of deeds executed by them to their trustee, which convey part of the trust property, are in equity bound to repay to the trustee the purchase-money, and sums expended in repairs and permanent improvements, with interest. Id.

The doctrine in question is not confined to a particular class of persons, such as guardians, trustees, or solicitors, but is a rule of universal application to all persons coming within the principle that no party can be permitted to purchase an interest where he has a duty to perform inconsistent with the character of a purchaser. Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 89 D. 779.

The case of pledgor and pledgee comes within this rule, which rests upon grounds of public policy, and is enforced without regard to the question of bona fides, in the particular case. Id.

In cases of pure trust, resort to a court of equity must be had for relief, and that court will grant relief where there are special circumstances requiring such interference in cases of quasi trusts. Id.

A person taking entire control and management of a consolidated corporation consisting of several corporations created by laws of different states, and conducting the same as one company for the better security and protection of a mortgage of some of the corporate property, thereby becomes a trustee, not only for the mortgagee, but also for the mortgagor corporations; and his purchase of the trust property at a foreclosure sale under another mortgage will inure to the benefit of the cestui que trust, upon his being reimbursed the amount of his bid, with interest. And as such trustee, he is bound to account; and it is error to hold that the right of the mortgagor corporation to an accounting will depend on the redemption from the sale to such trustee under the second mortgage. Racine & M. R. R. Co. v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 95 D. 595.

3. Its limits and exceptions.—It seems that a purchase by a trustee who is also a cestui que trust may be sustained, if it be to save the property from loss. Munro v. Allaire, 2 D. 330; Spindler v. Atkinson, 56 D. 755.

It is not universally true that such a sale is void at all times and under all circumstances. Van Dyke v. Johns, 12 D. 76.

A purchase by a trustee can be questioned only by the cestui que trust. Wilson v. Troup, 14 D. 458.

The rule forbidding such purchases is for the beneficiary's protection, and not for that of the trustee. Richardson v. Jones, 22 D. 293.

Equity will not vacate such sale on application by the trustee or the agent through whom the purchase was made. Ib.

Unreasonable delay in taking steps to have set aside a sale by a trustee to himself will imply an election to treat the sale as valid, and a confirmation of it may be justly inferred after the lapse of eight or ten years. Scott v. Freeland, 45 D. 310. S. P., Van Dyke v. Johns, 12 D. 76; Harrison v. McHenry, 52 D. 435; Follansbe v. Kilbreth, 65 D. 691.

A trustee may purchase at sheriff's sale property held in trust under a deed void as to the grantor's creditors, and must be treated as the purchaser of the grantor's entire interest at the date of the deed, in the absence of fraud on his part in connection with such sale. Spindler v. Atkinson, 56 D. 755.

A trustee cannot hold trust property for his own benefit, but is entitled to reimbursements for his expenditures and improvements, although he can purchase such property at a sheriff's sale made without his instrumentality. Ib.

The interest of cestui que trust inures to the benefit of the creditors when purchased at a sheriff's sale by a trustee of a deed of trust void as to creditors. Ib.

A trustee may purchase the interest of his cestui que trust when its sale by a public officer is inevitable. Chorpenning's Appeal, 72 D. 789.

A purchase of property by a trustee of the cestui que trust is not void, but voidable; although such a sale will not only be set aside for fraud, but upon a very slight showing of advantage or bad faith; but when it is clear that the cestui que trust intended that the trustee should buy, and there is no fraud, concealment, or advantage taken by the trustee of information acquired by him as such, the purchase will be upheld and enforced. Buell v. Buckingham, 85 D. 516.

36. Right to acquire adverse interest in trust property.—A trustee, mortgagee, tenant for life, or purchaser who gets an advantage by being in possession, and purchases an outstanding title or encumbrance, cannot use it for his own benefit, but must be considered as holding it in trust for him under whose title he entered. A court of equity will, however, lend its aid to secure or reimburse all advances properly made by a trustee or agent to fortify the title. Morgan v. Boone, 16 D. 153. S. P., Green v. Winter, 7 D. 476; Morrison v. Caldwell, 17 D. 84; Winwall v. Stewart, 70 D. 549.

An adverse claim purchased by a trustee inures to the benefit of the cestui que trust. Hence, where one holding a tract of land, one half to himself, and one half as trustee for another, buys in an adverse claim, the latter is entitled to the benefit of half of such claim, and is liable for half the purchase-money and interest. McClanahan v. Henderson, 12 D. 412.

Where one holds land, one half for himself and one half in trust for another, if he relinquishes to an adverse claimant any part of the land, he must either show the superiority of the adverse title, or submit to have the land relinquished taken out of his own moiety. Ib.

Where a trustee has possession of the trust estate for his cestui que trust, he cannot, by any act of his own, without communication with the cestui que trust, so change the nature of his possession as to make it adverse; and if he part with the possession to a third person, in whose favor time would operate, and regain it by purchase or descent, he takes it charged with the trust. Armstrong v. Campbell, 24 D. 556.

Property is clothed with the trust, upon return to the hands of the trustee, after an unauthorized disposition thereof by him. Hunt v. Bass, 24 D. 274.

Possession of a trustee is considered as that of the beneficiary. Miller v. Bingham, 36 D. 58.

Adverse possession, between the trustee and cestui que trust, cannot exist where the trust is express. Ib.

Whether a trustee can change the trust subject by substituting other property in its place to be held subject to the same trusts, quære. Heth v. Richmond etc. R. R. Co., 50 D. 88.

A trustee cannot sell the trust subject without a substitution of property of equal value. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A trustee, by asserting an adverse right to property, cannot divest himself of the character of trustee, nor vest title in himself until after the statute of limitations has run. Moffatt v. Buchanan, 54 D. 41.

An implied trust is ended and the trustee holds adversely to the cestui que trust from the time when he manifests an intention to claim and enjoy as his own the land subject to the trust, by failing to make a conveyance to the cestui que trust at the time agreed upon, and by taking out a patent for the land in his own name. De Cordova v. Smith, 58 D. 136.

An express trust is determined by the act of the trustee whenever he denies the right of the cestui que trust, and assumes absolute ownership of the property he holds in trust adversely to and within the knowledge of the cestui que trust. Robertson v. Wood, 65 D. 140.

A cestui que trust electing not to consider the trustees' purchase of outstanding disputed claims as being made on his account, and engaging in a protracted litigation with them for the establishment of their legal title under the purchase, cannot, after the lapse of six years from the purchase, and after a court of law has decided in favor of the trustees, come into a court of equity and have the purchase held for his benefit. Wisehall v. Stewart, 70 D. 549.

37. Execution of trust where there are two or more trustees.*—Three trustees of an absconding debtor's estate must be appointed under the Pennsylvania domestic attachment act, and qualify, before any of them can act; but if one afterwards dies, the survivors may sue as trustees. McCreedy v. Guardians, 11 D. 667.

A majority of trustees, having powers of a general nature, all of whom are assembled, may act if regular notice has been given. But where a certain number of trustees are, by act of assembly, to be appointed and sworn, all must be appointed and sworn before a majority can act, though the law vests in the majority all the powers of the whole. Id.

A contract by which one trustee agrees, for a pecuniary compensation to himself, to permit his co-trustees to have control of the trust fund, is in violation of law, and the court will neither enforce it while executory nor relieve from it when executed, especially where both parties are in pari delicto. Foot v. Emerson, 33 D. 205.

Several persons associated in a private trust or agency must all concur, in order to bind the parties for whom they act. Low v. Perkins, 33 D. 217.

Declarations made by one of such persons are not evidence of the acts of all. Id.

* When a majority of the trustees may execute the trust, see note, 11 D. 674, 675.

Survivorship of co-trustees, see note, 18 D. 163, 164.

Co-trustees must jointly execute such duties of their office as demand the exercise of judgment and discretion, although mere ministerial acts may be performed by one of them. Vandever's Appeal, 42 D. 305.

A trustee cannot justify acting alone on the ground of necessity, where his co-trustee was near at hand and might have been consulted without detriment to the interests of the trust. Id.

38. Compensation.*—Trustees are entitled to compensation for their services. Muscogee Lumber Co. v. Hyer, 43 R. 332.

A trustee's compensation may be increased, diminished, or withheld altogether, according to the circumstances of each case, in the sound discretion of the court. Gibson's Case, 17 D. 257.

The compensation of a trustee should be put at the lowest estimate, where the transactions of the trust are involved in obscurity, which might have been removed by a proper attention to duty. McDowell v. Caldwell, 16 D. 635.

The English rule is, that trustees are not entitled to any compensation for their services; but the English courts allow them a certain per diem under the name of an indemnity. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 18 D. 250.

Trustees in Maryland are allowed the same compensation for their services as are allowed to executors, etc., by statute. Id.

The trustees of real estate who have had the care of it for years, and have received a commission upon the income, may be allowed a further compensation out of the corpus of the estate on the termination of their trust. Biddle's Appeal, 24 R. 183.

A trustee who is also a lawyer may be allowed compensation for necessary services of a professional character concerning the trust after as well as before his appointment. Perkins's Appeal, 56 R. 208.

39. Commissions.—Commissions or poundage fees are allowed trustees in making sales, both by law and the rules of the court. Gibson's Case, 17 D. 257.

To prevent double commissions, as where a trustee dies after partly executing his trust, and another is appointed, the compensation should, if possible, be apportioned between them, according to the labor, trouble, and deserts of each. Id.

Where a deceased trustee has received full commissions, his successor should be allowed no more than a necessary recompense for his trouble. Id.

Half commissions may be allowed to the second trustee, in such a case, on the amount collected by him. Id.

Five per cent commission will not be allowed a trustee for simply receiving and paying over dividends of stock to his cestui que trust. Turnage v. Greene, 62 D. 203.

* Compensation of trustees, under the laws of the several states, see note, 17 D. 266-274.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A trustee is entitled to no commissions where he accepts the trust coupled with an interest, and the deed expressly provides for the payment of the expenses of the trust, but is silent as to whether he shall have compensation for his trouble and attention. Imboden v. Hunter, 79 D. 116.

40 Reimbursement for expenditures. — A trustee is entitled to interest on advances made for the use of the cestui que trust. He is also entitled to an allowance for depreciated money paid him for rent of the trust estate; for expenses incurred in erecting necessary and proper buildings, although the cestui que trust was not consulted. Dhwoorth v. Sinderling, 2 D. 469.

A trustee will be remunerated for necessary improvements rendering permanent benefit to the estate of the beneficiary. Myers v. Myers, 16 D. 643. But he cannot deduct the amount expended by him for additions and improvements on the trust estate, to the prejudice of the cestui que trust. Pratt v. Thornton, 48 D. 492.

Where one holds land, one moiety for himself and one moiety as trustee for another, he is entitled to be reimbursed one half the amount expended in improvements, and is liable for one half the rents. McClanahan v. Henderson, 12 D. 412.

Where there is a trust to sell land, to raise money to pay off encumbrances, etc., a trustee should not be allowed for improvements of the trust estate, though made in good faith, as in building houses and mills, clearing lands, and making roads. He is entitled only to necessary expenditures, as for repairs, etc. Green v. Winter, 7 D. 475.

A trustee of real estate may, at his discretion, pay off an encumbrance on the trust property. Pratt v. Thornton, 48 D. 492.

A trustee who in good faith pays out money to discharge a lien on land may retain the land as security, though the transfer to him was in fraud of creditors. McMeekin v. Edmonds, 26 D. 203.

Courts of chancery never permit trustees, of their own authority, to break in upon the capital of the trust fund. To sanction the expenditure after it has been made would give a license to trustees that would endanger estates committed to them. Hester v. Wilkinson, 44 D. 303.

Purchases by trustees, including executors, administrators, and guardians, when made in obedience to the duties of the trust, impose upon them a personal liability; the seller must look to them for payment, and they must look to the trust estate for reimbursement. Sanford v. Howard, 68 D. 101.

41. Rights of third persons dealing with trustees. — Co-operation of a stranger with a trustee in an act amounting to a breach of the trust, will render him liable for the loss occasioned thereby, if he had such notice of the existence of the trust as was sufficient, ordinarily, to awaken distrust, or put him upon inquiry. Bunting v. Ricks, 32 D. 699.

Actual knowledge of the existence of a trust is not required to render a person liable who acts together with a dishonest trustee in a matter constituting a misapplication of the trust fund. Id.

A purchaser from a trustee who sells in his own right need not pay the purchase-money, though he has accepted a deed and given his bonds; as to unpaid purchase-money, he is a volunteer. Beck v. Uhrich, 53 D. 507.

A judgment creditor purchasing at a trustee's sale cannot require the trustee to credit the surplus on his judgment, but he must pay to the trustee the purchase price in full before he can require a deed, and he must move as any other person would be required to do to subject said surplus fund to the payment of his claim. Cook v. Dillon, 74 D. 354.

If a trustee commits a breach of trust by loaning the assets of the trust to a third person, the latter is bound to indemnify the trustee; and if he has the trust property in specie, a court of equity will compel him to restore it to the trustee from whom he borrowed it. Abbott v. Reeves, 88 D. 510.

A pledge by a trustee to secure his own debt, of what is known to be trust property, is prima facie unauthorized, and one taking such security is bound at his peril to ascertain whether the trustee has power to give it. Shaw v. Spencer, 97 D. 107; 1 R. 115.

The term "trustee," in stock certificates issued to the holder in his name "as trustee," is sufficient to put persons on inquiry as to the holder's right to pledge them for his own debt, and a pledgee taking them without inquiry does so at his peril. Id.

42. When purchaser from trustee will take subject to trust. — 1. The general rule. — A purchaser from a trustee, with knowledge of the trust, takes subject to the trust. Smith v. Daniel, 16 D. 641; Shepherd v. McEvers, 8 D. 561; Talbott v. Bell, 43 D. 126; Heth v. Richmond etc. R. R. Co., 50 D. 88.

One coming into possession of trust property, with notice of the trust, shall be bound as a trustee. Kinloch v. FOn, 26 D. 196; Pierce v. McKeehan, 45 D. 636; Carpenter v. McBride, 52 D. 379; Lathrop v. Bampton, 89 D. 141.

An executor or trustee has no right to apply to his own use the trust fund; and a purchaser, knowing of the trust, purchases at his peril the trust property so applied. Graf v. Castleman, 16 D. 741.

A trust may attach to property, though the purchase of it by the trustee was irregular. Heth v. Richmond etc. R. R. Co., 50 D. 88.

A recovery in trover by a trustee without satisfaction vests the legal title in the defendant, and he becomes the trustee, and a court of equity will aid the cestui que trust against either the trustee or vendee for the recovery of the property. Bust v. Bush, 51 D. 675.

A trust estate is not such after-acquired title as inures to the benefit of a grantee of the trustee who makes the conveyance in his individual capacity. And an implied trust is governed by the same general rules as other trusts. Kelley v. Jenness, 79 D. 623.

A purchaser of corporate stock, with notice of a trust in favor of a third person, takes nothing as against the cestui que trust. Crocker v. Crocker, 88 D. 291.

2. What is sufficient notice of the trust. — To make the purchaser of a legal title a trustee, it is not necessary that he should have notice as to the particular cestui que trust; it is sufficient if he has notice that the person from whom he buys is but a naked trustee; he is then bound to inquire and find out the cestui que trust. Maples v. Medlin, 3 D. 687.

The possession of a cestui que trust exercising all the acts of ownership is not notice of a secret trust to a purchaser. Scott v. Gallagher, 16 D. 508.

The possession of a cestui que trust becomes adverse when the legal title is conveyed in violation of the trust. Id.

A breach of trust occasioned by misapplication by the clerk of a court of the proceeds of a negotiable promissory note, held by him in trust, is sufficient to charge one who took the note in ignorance of the character in which it was retained by the officer, but was cognizant that it had been given to a commissioner, in payment at a sale under his direction, in obedience to a decree of court. Bunting v. Ricks, 32 D. 699.

Purchasers of a resulting trust estate are not innocent purchasers for value, where the consideration is that they will pay the debts of the grantor, and support him and his wife. Purchasers upon such a consideration must look to the title, and the equities to which it is subject. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371.

A purchaser must take notice of the title and its defects as it appears of record, where he buys at a sale made by a mortgagee or trustee under a power to sell for the payment of debts. He cannot legally demand covenants for title contained in the conveyance to the trustee. Barnard v. Duncan, 90 D. 416.

Evidence of usage among brokers to buy and sell, in the market and without inquiry, stock certificates issued in the name of one as trustee, and by him transferred in blank, is not admissible to vary the established rule of law that the word "trustee" in such a certificate is sufficient to put the purchaser on inquiry, and that he takes it at his peril. Shaw v. Spencer, 97 D. 107.

A father paid the purchase-money, and took a deed in the name of his daughter, a minor, the deed expressing a consideration paid by him. He held possession of the premises for thirty-eight years. The daughter and her husband, having surreptitiously obtained the deed, conveyed the property. Held, that the purchaser from her, for value, had notice of the resulting trust, and was guilty of fraud, and that a release to the father might be presumed. Jackson v. Matzdorf, 6 D. 355.

3. Rights of purchaser who is ignorant of the trust. — The trust may be enforced against a purchaser without knowledge thereof, where he still retains the property in his hands. But it is otherwise where he has parted with the property. Smith v. Daniel, 16 D. 641.

A purchaser from a trustee without notice holds the property discharged of the trust. Hudnal v. Wilder, 17 D. 744. But the trustee will be held answerable to the full value of the trust. Rife v. Geyer, 98 D. 381.

A purchaser without notice, who has acquired the legal title, and paid his money without notice of a trust, is protected in equity, even against the cestui que trust. Wyse v. Dandridge, 72 D. 149; Beck v. Ulrich, 53 D. 507. This rule applies as well to chattels as to real estate. Wyse v. Dandridge, 72 D. 149.

A subsequent purchaser of trust property cannot be protected as an innocent purchaser, unless his plea or answer contain explicit averments that he purchased for a valuable consideration, without notice, and that he has taken a conveyance of the legal title. Smith v. Gray, 34 D. 664.

A resulting trust is beyond the contemplation of the Texas statute respecting the rights of creditors, and is protected against one who acquires a judgment lien against it without notice, although a purchaser in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without notice, would take the estate discharged of the trust. Blankenship v. Douglas, 82 D. 608.

A bona fide purchaser, without notice, of corporate stock, will be protected against a secret trust in favor of a third person, where such person, by his own voluntary act, has conferred the apparent right of property in the stock upon the vendor. Crocker v. Crocker, 88 D. 291.

2. Liabilities of Trustees.

43. In general. — Trustees or assignees are personally liable for omission to do what would be plainly beneficial to the trust property or to the cestui que trust, though acting in the utmost good faith. Hutchinson v. Lord, 60 D. 381.

A devise to an infant, with directions that another occupy the land during the infant's nonage, for the support of the family, but not to use the land in any other way, will not entitle the trustee or the infant's guardian to charge the land with improvements made thereon. Findley v. Wilson, 14 D. 72.

A trustee who causes improvements to be made on the land of his ward by holding out the expectation of a lease, where no such lease can legally be made, is liable personally. Ib.

Where a naked trustee executes a release under seal, of a lien for the payment of money, in which he acknowledges the receipt of the money, he holds the money in trust, and is liable for the same. And his acknowledgment estops him, both at law and in equity, from denying the fact of receiving the money. Lincoln v. Purcell, 73 D. 196.

A trustee expressly authorized to make expenditures necessary for the repair or protection of the estate, and having no trust funds on hand, may, by express agreement, exempt himself from liability therefor, and make the expenditure a charge upon the estate; but in the absence of such agreement, the trustee is individually liable, and he cannot, by a mere subsequent promise to pay out of the estate, create a lien thereon, although the creditor acted upon the faith and credit of the estate. New v. Nicol, 29 R. 111.

44. Liability for losses.*—Trustees are liable for parting with the dominion of trust property, and permitting it to be squandered, though the deed to them did not specify the trust upon which it was made. Kinloch v. l'On, 26 D. 196.

To invest trust money on good security is the duty of a trustee. Commissioners v. Walker, 38 D. 433.

If trustees loan money without due security, they are liable in case of loss by insolvency. Gray v. Fox, 22 D. 508.

Loaning money on private security, especially where infants are concerned, is not, within the meaning of the English cases, a compliance with the rule that due security is to be taken by the trustee. Ib.

Land security or public stock should be taken by the trustee, in this country, who loans the trust money. Ib.

An order of the orphans' court that the money loaned remain on interest is no protection to the administrator, such order being beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Ib.

The permission of the court to loan the money should first be had; the money should not be loaned and an order of approval applied for afterwards. Ib.

A trustee is not answerable for losses

* See monographic note on the investments which a trustee may make without being liable for resulting loss, 40 D. 506-518.

occurring without any fault or negligence on his part. Knowlton v. Bradley, 43 D. 609.

The rule that a trustee cannot in any case invest funds in his hands upon personal security has not been adopted in New Hampshire. Ib.

If a trustee, having trust funds in his hands, neglects to invest them or take security in some mode, a good reason should be shown. Ib.

A trustee cannot establish the fact of loss of the trust fund by his own uncorroborated testimony. Seawell v. Greenway, 75 D. 794.

He is allowed to testify to the extent of a loss by theft or robbery; but a foundation for this testimony must be first laid by proving the theft or robbery aliunde, scilicet. Ib.

A trustee who, in good faith, received confederate treasury notes in payment of promissory notes held in trust, under the Georgia act of 1863, acted under color of law, and is protected by the act of 1866, and the ordinances of the conventions of 1865 and 1868. Campbell v. Miller, 95 D. 389.

He might, in good faith, prior to adoption of the Georgia code in 1863, receive payment of promissory notes held in trust in such currency as was generally received by prudent men in the transaction of their own business, and reinvest the same in the note of a person who was then entirely solvent. Ib.

A trustee who received confederate currency in payment of promissory notes held in trust, before the adoption of the Georgia code in 1863, and after its adoption invested it in securities not authorized by law, and without an order of court, did so at his own risk, and is liable for the value of the currency at the time when it should have been reinvested. Ib.

A trustee who changes an investment of trust funds with the consent of the cestui que trust, who is of legal age, is not liable for any loss growing out of such new investment. Ib.

A trustee may show that an investment or change of investment made by him was prudent. Ib.

Trust funds must be kept separate from the private funds of the trustee, or he will be liable in case of loss. They must be deposited and loaned as trust funds, and kept separate from other funds. Coffin v. Bramlett, 97 D. 449.

A trustee who mingles trust funds with his own thereby becomes debtor to such fund. If he deposits them in his own name, and they are lost through the bank's insolvency, he is liable; so an investment of them in stocks in his individual name is a breach of the trust. Ib.

A trustee agreed to purchase and pay for a farm for the use of the cestui que trust, out of the proceeds of the trust estate. He purchased, and gave his bond, secured by a mortgage on the premises; but he refused to pay the bond when due, and procured a foreclosure and sale of the farm by the mortgagee, at a loss. He was held liable for this loss and for costs of suit. Green v. Winter, 7 D. 475.

A will directed the executors to use their judgment as to investing the estate, at the same time recommending keeping one half in real estate. When defendant was appointed trustee, more than half the fund was invested in government bonds, and none in real estate. He sold the bonds and invested the greater part in railroad bonds at eighty-five per cent of their par value, and the promissory note of an individual secured by such bonds. He was an experienced bank officer, and took advice as to the investment. The railroad was a line of 125 miles in Vermont, forming part of a continuous line from Portland to Ogdensburgh, and the bonds were secured by mortgage on the franchises and property of three railroad corporations out of Massachusetts, and were selling at from eighty to ninety per cent of their par value. The roads were managed by reputable men, and the bonds were regarded as an excellent investment. Subsequently, the bonds greatly depreciated. Held, that defendant was not chargeable with the loss. Brown v. French, 28 R. 254.

45. Liability for negligence. — A trustee in possession of trust property is only bound to ordinary diligence in its preservation and protection. Campbell v. Miller, 95 D. 389.

He may receive payment of promissory notes held in trust, when due, in such currency as a prudent man would receive for debts due him individually under similar circumstances. Id.

Trustees are liable for gross negligence, and for their own acts, in not carefully securing money which was in their hands, and put out by them, but not for failure to sue at once a former trustee while in good credit, or on first hearing of his insolvency, when there was not probability of recovering at that time. Konigmacher v. Kimmel, 21 D. 374.

46. Liability for acts of co-trustees.* — Co-trustees are bound to watch over the conduct of each other, and to know of the collection of funds belonging to the trust estate; and if one of two trustees fails to apply money collected by him from a sale of the trust fund to certain outstanding indebtedness, and the other trustee knows of the receipt of such money, and makes no effort to have the same so applied, the latter is jointly chargeable for interest with his associate. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 18 D. 250. S. P., Deaderick v. Cantrell, 31 D. 576.

* Liability of one trustee for acts and defaults of co-trustees, see note, 42 D. 288-293.

Trustees joining in a receipt for money will raise a presumption that it came equally into the possession or under the control of all, and there must be direct and positive proof to rebut the presumption. Where, in consequence of any act or agreement of one trustee or executor, money comes into the hands of his co-trustee or co-executor, both are held liable for it. Monell v. Monell, 9 D. 298.

The unaccounted balance of a fund entrusted to the management of several will be charged to those in default through failure to account. Johnson v. Johnson, 29 D. 72.

A joint trustee permitting his co-trustee to retain the trust fund for many years, without inquiry as to whether it has been invested so as to answer the purposes of the trust, will be liable, because of his neglect, for the conduct of his co-trustee. Deaderick v. Cantrell, 31 D. 576.

A joint trustee of a directory trust failing to see that the trust fund is invested in the manner pointed out is liable for the abuse of the trust by his co-trustee. Id.

47. Liability to account. — The law discountenances all but the most open and satisfactory dealing between parties standing in a fiduciary relation, as they do not deal at arm's-length. Diller v. Brubaker, 91 D. 177.

A trustee is bound to put his cestui qui trust in possession of the full and true state of his affairs before any settlement will bind. Id.

48. When chargeable with interest. — If there is no unreasonable delay in applying the trust money according to the directions of the trust, and there is no application made of it to his own use, a trustee will not be chargeable with interest. Minus v. Cox, 9 D. 313.

If, in the management of the trust fund, the trustees exceed their power, or make unproductive investments, they are chargeable with interest; and if they apply the same to their own use, they are chargeable with compound interest. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 18 D. 250.

Trustees are chargeable with compound interest on the ground of the presumed gain to them, from the use of the trust fund, and if the circumstances are such as to forbid such presumption, and it appears that they invested the trust fund in good faith, although in violation of their trust, and that they have not derived any profit from such investment, they will not be charged with compound interest. Id.

Rests of six months allowed trustees without interest, to reinvest the fund, are not unreasonable. Id.

A trustee mixing trust money with his own, and keeping no separate account, must be charged with interest at five per cent annually at least, and his bondsmen may be liable in case of loss. Knowlton v. Bradley, 43 D. 609.

49. Proceedings on trustee's bonds. — Where encumbrancers are not parties to proceedings appointing a trustee to sell the property and pay off the encumbrances, they are not bound to seek payment out of the proceeds of the sale in the trustee's hands, nor they are bound to abide by a loss on account of the trustee's default. In such a case the court may order a second trustee to pay off the encumbrances without impairing the rights of the encumbrancers against the sureties of the first trustee. Brooks v. Brooks, 38 D. 310.

Where the condition of a trustee's bond is broken, but on account of the death of the trustee before the creditor has become properly recognized, the latter's remedy at law is lost, equity will grant relief against the sureties of the trustee. Id.

Equity will not extend the liability of sureties beyond the clear intent and import of their contract; but if to such an extent they cannot at law be held liable, by reason of fraud, accident, or mistake, equity, to prevent a failure of justice, will interfere and enforce the execution of their contract according to its obvious meaning and design. Id.

3. Death, Resignation, Removal, New Appointment, etc.

50. Effect of death of trustee. — Upon the death of one of two trustees, the entire trust estate does not vest in the survivor, but a moiety of the same vests in the heirs or devisees of the deceased trustee. Sanders v. Morrison, 18 D. 161.

The ius accrescendi is destroyed by statute, in Kentucky, in trust estates as well as in all others. Id.

Trustees having died without executing the trust, chancery may appoint a trustee to effectuate the same. Bull v. Bull, 20 D. 86.

Upon the death of a trustee appointed to sell realty under a decree in chancery, the court may proceed in a summary way to compel his administrator to account for and pay over money which came into his hands by virtue of the trust. Coombs v. Jordan, 22 D. 236.

The administrator of a trustee may sue for a debt accrued in the trustee's lifetime, and before the appointment of another trustee. Lahy v. Holland, 50 D. 705.

51. Discharge. — A trustee can be discharged only by decree of a court of equity, by force of a provision in the deed, or by the consent of all the parties interested. Ross v. Barclay, 55 D. 616.

Evidence establishing the existence of a trust does not justify a presumption that the trust has been surrendered; nor does delivery of the property to one not authorized to discharge the trustee amount to a surrender of the trust. Guphill v. Isbell, 19 D. 675.

52. Resignation. — A trustee who accepts cannot renounce. Ross v. Barclay, 55 D. 616; without the consent of the cestui que trust or the direction of the court. Shepherd v. McEvers, 8 D. 561.

A quondam trustee may sue after resignation for a debt agreed to be paid to him, or "such other trustee as may be lawfully appointed," and the debtor cannot object that he is not the proper party. Lahy v. Holland, 50 D. 706.

Payment to a trustee after his resignation will absolve the debtor from liability under a contract to pay to such trustee, or such as may be appointed. Id.

53. Removal. — The court may displace a trustee, where he removes from the state, or neglects his duty, or is guilty of injurious or improper conduct. Gibson's Case, 17 D. 257.

Where trust property is misapplied by the trustee, the remedy is by a petition for their removal, and not an action at law by the beneficiary to recover the property from them. Methodist Church v. Remington, 28 D. 61.

54. Substitution. — A railroad company's deed of trust of its property, made to secure certain bonds, provided that if the trustee should become incapable of acting, any court of record of a certain county, upon application of three fifths of the bondholders, and notice to the president or any director of the company, might appoint another trustee. The trustee, president, and directors went into the enemy's lines, and remained there during the war of the rebellion. Held, that an order of the county court, substituting another person as trustee, without notice, and a sale by such substituted trustee, were utterly void. Washington etc. R. R. Co. v. Alexandria etc. R. R. Co., 100 D. 710.

III. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF CESTUI QUE TRUST.

55. The estate or interest of the cestui que trust.* — Property conveyed to a trustee for the benefit of the issue of a contemplated marriage, and to be sold on the direction of the grantor, inures to the benefit of such issue, although the grantor die without directing the sale. Steele v. Lowry, 19 D. 581.

A legislative act transferring the legal title of a mere naked trustee, and vesting it in the cestui que trust, in a case where the latter, by a resort to the proper tribunal, might have compelled such transfer, is constitutional and valid. Ref. Prot. Dutch Church v. Mott, 32 D. 613.

The cestui que trust cannot call for the legal title, when, from the nature of the trust, his ownership is not immediate and absolute, and when it would defeat or put it in his power to defeat or endanger a legitimate ulterior limitation of the trust. Battle v. Petway, 44 D. 59.

Where property is given to a trustee for the use of a beneficiary, the assent of the latter to receive it on the condition of the grant must be signified either to the grantor or to the trustee. Lockhart v. Wyatt, 44 D. 481.

A conveyance from trustee to cestui que trust is presumed when the latter has been for a long time in possession of lands which the former ought to have conveyed; but such presumption is not raised in favor of him who attacks or holds in opposition to the equitable right. Harman v. Kelley, 45 D. 552.

Where a trustee who, holding both the legal and equitable title to real estate in trust for partners in a land speculation, whose rights are accordingly personal, by the direction and with the consent of the cestuis que trust, conveys the land to another without specifying the nature of the trust, by such conveyance raises a simple trust, and the right of the cestuis que trust becomes thereby changed from personalty to an equitable estate of inheritance, in which the widow of one of the cestuis que trust is dowable. Nicoll v. Ogden, 81 D. 311.

56. How far his interest is alienable.*—A purchase by a trustee of the cestui que trust's interest is always viewed with great jealousy. Bruch v. Lantz, 21 D. 458.

Fraud or an advantageous purchase need not be shown in such a case. Id.

The cestui que trust may assign, without being guilty of champerty, when he, or his trustee, is in possession, although another person may, for a short time, have held possession of a portion of the land. Falls v. Carpenter, 28 D. 592.

Where the court cannot decree a conveyance of the legal title at the suit of the cestui que trust, the trustee's estate would not be divested by a sheriff's sale under execution against the cestui que trust. Battle v. Petway, 44 D. 59.

The cestui que trust cannot create a trust in his own favor to the prejudice of his creditors, by investing his individual property in a building on the land held in trust; and the rents and profits of such building will be applied in satisfaction of the creditors' judgment. Woodruff v. Johnson, 55 D. 247.

Where a trustee executes a power of attorney to a third person with authority to release the deed, and the latter does so by and in the name of the trustee, and the land is released, not to the grantor in the trust deed, but to a purchaser under him, the deed of trust will be treated as duly and regularly released. Bryan v. Stamp, 56 D. 139.

An interest in the trust estate may be conveyed, and the person conveying will be equally compelled to convey when he acquires title, as if the title had been in him at the time of making such contract. Buck v. Swasey, 56 D. 681.

A resulting trust is created in notes secured by mortgage, where the purchase is made with the joint funds of two persons and the title is taken in the name of but one; and in such a case, if the cestui que trust conveys an interest in the property to the plaintiff, a trust is created in his favor which attaches to the land if the mortgage is foreclosed, and the trustee can bring a suit in his own name against the trustee to enforce the trust. Id.

The assignee of an interest in a trust estate may maintain an action in his own name in equity, although he could not maintain such an action at the common law. Id.

On assignment of an interest in a trust estate, the trustee holds the land in trust for the assignee, and a conveyance will be directly enforced from the trustee in his favor, and the conveyance when made will discharge the assignor from so much of his contract as shall thereby have been performed. Id.

The equitable title may be divested out of the cestui que trust otherwise than by alienation, before the trust is actually performed, where an agent converts himself into a trustee for his principal by making a nominal purchase to himself. Follansbe v. Kilbreth, 65 D. 691.

The cestui que trust may divest himself of his equitable title by repudiating the acts and purchase of the trustee when he discovers that the latter has practiced any fraud towards him, but he may waive the fraud and claim his rights as cestui que trust; or he may treat the purchase as his own by selling his equitable title before he has discovered the fraud; or such equitable title might doubtless be destroyed by mutual agreement of both parties, without fraud on either side; or possibly be defeated by laches or subsequent misconduct on the part of the cestui que trust. Id.

An agent and trustee may divest cestuis que trust of their equitable title, without their consent, by repudiating the agency, when the cestuis que trust have fraudulently induced the trustee to act for them and incur personal responsibilities which he would not have undertaken but for the fraud practiced upon him. Id.

A court of equity will not permit the cestui que trust to show a speculative disposition toward his trustee. If the former discovers facts justifying a repudiation of the latter's acts, he is bound, after investigation, or a reasonable time therefor, to declare whether he will avail himself of that right or not, and cannot lie by indefinitely for the purpose of affirming the bargain if a profitable one, or repudiating it if it is a losing one. Ib.

* Judgments against trustee, when bind cestui que trust, see note, 34 D. 722-725.

The founder of a trust by will may secure the income to the beneficiary by prohibiting his alienation of it, and its seizure by his creditors, in anticipation. Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 43 R. 504.

57. His right to follow the trust property. — Upon breach of trust by a trustee, the cestui que trust may follow the estate into the hands of a stranger, or he may have his remedy against the trustee personally to recover for damages caused by his unauthorized act. Huckabee v. Billingsly, 50 D. 183.

A trustee cannot convert money into land or land into money at his pleasure unless specially authorized; and if he invests money in land, the cestui que trust may take the land or demand the money, at his option. Kaufman v. Crawford, 42 D. 323.

The cestui que trust may be subrogated to the rights of an administrator, where land held in trust by a deceased trustee has been sold on credit by the administrator. The notes taken in payment will be canceled, and the money will be ordered to be paid by the innocent purchasers to the cestui que trust. Vandever v. Freeman, 70 D. 391.

Money delivered to a person to pay debts, and converted by him, is not a trust fund, authorizing the one who reposed the confidence, or his representatives, to recover it as such. Doyle v. Murphy, 74 D. 165.

A trust assumed by a testator will not be enforced against his executor, where identity of trust fund is entirely lost, and the property claimed is not shown to be the fruit or product of the property originally covered by the trust. Lathrop v. Bampton, 89 D. 141.

Equity will follow a trust fund so long as its identity exists, or when it can be shown that it is the product of the original property of the cestui que trust; and the right of reclamation attaches to it until detached by the superior equity of a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice; but the right of pursuing it fails when the means of ascertainment fail. Ib.

Before the cestui que trust can claim specific real or personal property, he must show that it is the identical property originally covered by the trust, or that it is the fruit or product thereof in a new form. Ib.

Identity of trust estate in the hands of testator is entirely lost where his executor has possession of his testator's property, and it cannot be shown that such trust estate is in the hands of the executor in its primary condition, or that it was converted by the testator into the property, or any part of it, which subsequently came into the executor's possession. Ib.

The cestui que trust may elect to hold the original or substituted property, when he can identify the trust fund, either in its original or in a substituted form, or he may hold the trustee personally liable; but if he cannot identify the property, he must rely on the personal liability of the trustee. Ib.

In following a trust fund consisting of money, it is not necessary to identify individual pieces or coins, but it is sufficient to show a separate and independent fund or value, readily distinguishable from all other funds. Ib.

The cestui que trust has simply a claim against the estate of his trustee, where the latter during his lifetime mingled the money of the cestui que trust with his own, and after his death neither the trust money nor property into which it was converted could be identified in the hands of the executor; and such claim must be presented to the executor for allowance as required by the probate act. Ib.

Equity will follow the fund through any number of transmutations, and preserve it for the owner, so long as it can be identified, no matter in whose name the legal right stands. Farmers' & M. N. Bank v. King, 98 D. 215.

If money has been converted by the trustee or agent into a chose in action, the legal right to it may have been changed, but equity regards the beneficial ownership. Ib.

N. put $469 into the hands of W. in trust. W. deposited it in bank with other moneys to his own credit, and afterward drew out and applied to his own use all but $91. Subsequently, he drew checks for that balance, and some $1,400 in another bank, in favor of R., to secure him against his liability for W., on an official bond. Held, that N. could not recover his money from R. Neely v. Rood, 52 R. 302.

58. Remedies to enforce trusts, generally. — A purchase of land by a guardian, which he declared at the time to be for the use of his ward, is not such a trust as can be enforced by the ward. Kisler v. Kisler, 27 D. 308.

Heirs of the founder of an eleemosynary corporation have no visitatorial power where the trustees are not themselves objects of the donor's charity, and are vested by the founder with a general control, superintendence, and management of the trust, which in effect gives them the power of visitors; as where a certain sum of money is bequeathed to certain trustees and their successors, who afterwards become incorporated, in trust, to invest the same in such secure manner as they shall think best, and to apply the income to the pay or maintenance of a faithful and competent instructor in a certain school to be established by them, for pious and indigent youth, and authorizing the trustees and their successors "to make from time to time such rules and regulations as they may believe best adapted to insure success." Sanderson v. White, 29 D. 591.

A bill by the heirs in such a case to compel the trustees to a discovery as to their investments, and to an execution of the trust, will not lie. Ib.

A trust created for the benefit of a third person, without his knowledge at the time, may be afterwards affirmed and enforced by him. Woodbury v. Bowman, 31 D. 40.

An agreement without consideration to execute a trust in futuro is not binding; but where the trust is actually undertaken and commenced, equity will enforce it. Switzer Skiles, 44 D. 723.

A trust arising from an illegal transaction may be enforced in favor of an innocent party. Hence, where a trustee for creditors of an insolvent combines with others to obtain from the government, in fraud of the law, the legal title to certain land conveyed by the debtor to such trustee, the creditors of the insolvent, not being parties to the fraud, may enforce against the trustee the trust existing in their favor in the property. Miller v. Davidson, 44 D. 715.

A money compensation for a trust upon land may be decreed when from the circumstances it is more equitable, and the amount will be the original purchase-money and interest. Heth v. Richmond etc. R. R. Co., 50 D. 88.

A cestui que trust may maintain ejectment upon a demise in his own name, though the legal estate be still in the trustee, in a case where the purposes of the deed have been satisfied, and also in the case of a resulting trust. Doggett v. Hart, 58 D. 464.

Where the cestui que trust brings ejectment, the jury is permitted to presume that a regular surrender has been made by the trustee of his estate, thereby clothing the cestui que trust with the legal title, and enabling him to recover in the action: 1. Where the purposes of the trust estate have been satisfied; 2. Where the beneficial occupation of the estate by the possessor induces a supposition that a conveyance of the legal estate has been made to the party beneficially interested; 3. Where the trust is so plain that a court of equity would not hesitate to compel the trustee to make a conveyance to the cestui que trust. Ib.

A cestui que trust coming into equity to assert the legal title must allege that the trustee has refused the use of his name in an action at law. Ib.

A conveyance by a grantor in a trust deed, and the trustee, of lands settled in trust, is a fraud on the beneficiaries in remainder named in the trust; and equity will entertain a suit in their behalf to cancel it, notwithstanding that they were unborn when the trust was created; that the time has not yet arrived when they are to enter on the enjoyment of the remainder; and that the conveyance was made under authority of a decree of court (fraudulently obtained). Wright v. Miller, 59 D. 438.

Where a party obtains a conveyance of property in trust, to reimburse himself and another for money paid, and a suit is brought to enforce the trust on the part of the second cestui que trust, equity will grant a decree compelling the trustee to pay to the plaintiff the amount to be secured. Miller v. Thatcher, 60 D. 172.

Beneficiaries under a trust deed may maintain an action for the enforcement of the trust and the recovery of that portion of the trust funds to which they may be entitled. Lexington Life etc. Ins. Co. v. Page, 66 D. 165.

A trust will be enforced, notwithstanding the consideration is voluntary, if it is created and declared in conformity with the statute of frauds. Lane v. Ewing, 77 D. 632.

An executory agreement to create a trust will not be enforced if it is upon a voluntary consideration. Ib.

A bill to compel conveyance of the legal title from the trustee may be sustained, though no demand for the title is made before suit brought, but the complainant will be subjected to costs. Forbes v. Hall, 85 D. 301.

If an action to enforce a trust could have been maintained against testator, it can be against his executor; but if it could not have been maintained against the testator, it cannot be against his executor. Lathrop v. Bampton, 89 D. 141.

A cestui que trust, when forced to rely upon his trustee's personal liability, occupies a position towards the estate of the trustee which is no better, but is identical with, that of a simple contract creditor. Ib.

Trustees holding notes, given by other parties for the benefit of a railroad corporation, cannot refuse to surrender such notes to the beneficiary simply on the ground that a condition named in such notes, the failure to comply with which would render them void, had not been complied with. Des Moines Valley R. R. v. Graff, 1 R. 256.

A party assigned certain securities in trust to another to satisfy a certain indebtedness, and to hold the balance subject to his order, which trust was accordingly accepted. The assignor afterwards directed the balance of the money received under the assignment to be paid over to a third party. Held, that this party could maintain an action for money had and received against the person holding the money; for the acceptance of the trust was equivalent to an express promise to the person who should be ordered to receive the money. Weston v. Barker, 7 D. 319.

The person for whose benefit a trust is created may compel the performance thereof, in equity, although he may be no party to the contract. Accordingly, where the first of several judgment creditors entered into a written agreement with those subsequent to the second, that if they would allow the first to purchase at sheriff's sale a certain portion of the judgment debtor's realty, without let or hindrance, he would discharge the remainder of the realty from his judgment, and would pay the second judgment creditor, — held, that the latter, although no party to the agreement, could enforce the contract in equity. Rodney v. Shandland, 12 D. 70.

B. deposited in a savings bank certain moneys in his own name as trustee for R. B. gave the bank-book to R., who returned it to B., in whose control it remained. B. was childless. R. was his step-daughter. It was in evidence that B. was a man of few words, and that he treated R. as his daughter. In an equity suit by R. against the administrator of B., claiming the deposit as trust funds held by B. for R., — held, 1. That the trust was completely constituted; 2. That the trust being constituted, the fact that it was voluntary was no reason for refusing relief. Ray v. Simmons, 23 R. 447.

59. Jurisdiction of equity. — As a general principle, where confidence is reposed, and that confidence is abused, courts of equity will grant relief. Highberger v. Stiffer, 83 D. 593.

Where a legal or actual fiduciary relation exists between two persons, where the one exercises influence and control, and the other reposes trust and confidence, as a protection against overweening confidence, independent of any ingredients of positive fraud, as a matter of public policy, courts of equity will interpose to prevent a man from stripping himself of his property. Ib.

Equity alone can compel a trustee to execute or surrender his trust. Guphill v. Isbell, 19 D. 675.

Trusts of personality will be enforced by chancery. Kimball v. Morton, 43 D. 621.

Trusts arising under a will, and requiring equitable interposition, are within equity jurisdiction, and the fact that the trusts were created by a will will not exclude a chancery court from the exercise of its jurisdiction. Wade v. Am. Col. Soc., 45 D. 324.

Where the legal title passes to a trustee, equity will enforce the trust, although the purchase-money was paid by the trustee himself, and the trust is declared for his children. Dennison v. Goehring, 47 D. 505.

Equity will not assume jurisdiction to establish trusts in every case where a mere confidence has been reposed or a credit given. Doyle v. Murphy, 74 D. 165.

Equity never interferes with the execution of a use by statute, unless, or any longer than, there is something for the trustee to do, which, being done, will produce a different result from the statute. Adams v. Guernard, 76 D. 624.

Where trusts, even of an official character, have been violated, equity takes jurisdiction. Norton v. Hixon, 79 D. 338.

Trusts in land, created in favor of an insolvent, either with or without full consideration, may, in the absence of fraud, be enforced in equity by the beneficiary against the trustee. Baker v. Evans, 86 D. 456.

60. Limitations of suits involving trusts. — Although trusts are not strictly within the statute of limitations, yet equity has adopted the principles of that act. Wallace v. Duffield, 7 D. 660.

The statute of limitations protects the possession of a party claiming under the trustee, and adverse to the cestui que trust, after the surrender of the trust. Guphill v. Isbell, 19 D. 675.

Where by contract between the complainant and defendant, the latter was authorized to sell the lands of the former, and account for two thirds of the proceeds, retaining the other third as compensation, this constitutes the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, and although the remedies at law and in equity are concurrent, the statute of limitations is no bar to an account; and if the defendant contracts to sell the lands to a partnership, of which he is a member, the sale is voidable at the instance of complainant, and if the defendant sell the warrants of survey for such of the lands as cannot be discovered, and then take them back from his vendee, and locate them in his own name, he cannot hold the lands thus located, against the principal. Armstrong v. Campbell, 24 D. 556.

Courts of equity, equally with courts of law, are bound by statutes of limitation in all cases of bailments, loans, etc., although express trusts, where the remedies at law and in equity are concurrent. Ib.

A trust created in a party by implication, as where he has obtained property by fraud or unlawful means, although there is no remedy at law, also comes within the statute of limitations. In such cases the trust is not created by contract, nor does the relation of trustee and cestui que trust exist. Armstrong v. Campbell, 24 D. 556; Lexington L. etc. Ins. Co. v. Page, 86 D. 165.

An appointee in trust may plead the statute of limitations or not; and if he fails to do so, those for whom he holds the property have no right to do so. Leigh v. Smith, 42 D. 182.

The statute runs in case of a trust estate in favor of a stranger in exclusive adverse possession against both the trustee and the cestui que trust, whether for life or in remainder. Smith v. Biffe, 44 D. 156.

A conveyance by one of several trustees of an estate is manifestly defective, but an em-try thereunder is sufficient to set the statute of limitations in motion against the trustees and cestui que trust. Id.

Lapse of time is not a bar to the enforcement of a resulting trust, where the trustee has acknowledged the trust, and there has been no adverse possession and no laches on the part of the beneficiary in bringing his bill for relief as soon as the trust is denied. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371.

The rights of a cestui que trust under an express trust cannot be barred by the statute of limitations so long as the trust exists. Pratt v. Thornton, 48 D. 492; Lexington Life etc. Ins. Co. v. Page, 66 D. 165.

To trusts falling exclusively within the jurisdiction of equity, the presumption, from lapse of time, of satisfaction, payment, or waiver, does not apply. Hightower v. Thornton, 52 D. 412.

On the repudiation of a trust, the trustee's possession becomes adverse, and suit must be prosecuted within the time allotted by law, otherwise the claim will be barred; and it is immaterial whether the trust was cognizable at law or in equity. Tinnen v. McBane, 60 D. 205.

The rule that a technical or direct trust is not barred by lapse of time is subject to the qualification that it is barred: 1. Where circumstances exist calculated to raise a presumption from lapse of time of a discharge or extinguishment of the trust; 2. Where there is a remedy by action at law to which a limitation is expressly fixed; 3. Where an open denial or repudiation of the trust is brought home to the knowledge of the parties in interest, which requires them to act as upon an asserted adverse title. Phillips v. State, 64 D. 635.

61. Parties. — Cestui que trust need not be joined in an action by a creditor to reach trust property in the hands of administrators or trustees who have the control of, and whose duty it is to protect, the property. In such case, the defense of the trustees is the defense of the cestui que trust, and their presence in court is not necessary to the protection of their interests. Winslow v. Minn. & Pac. R. R. Co., 77 D. 519.

Equity has power to allow a cestui que trust to be made a party defendant, where facts exist to justify it. But the court will require him to present his defense, that they may judge of its sufficiency, and he must show that the relief sought, if granted, would prejudice his rights and interests. Id.

In an action by one of several cestui que trust, to declare and enforce implied trust in relation to land, all the persons who are entitled to or claim to be entitled to a portion of the trust estate are proper parties defendant. Jenkins v. Frink, 89 D. 134.

Where vacant lots in a city are conveyed to trustees in trust for a husband and his wife, and the survivor of them for life, and at the death of the survivor to be conveyed to their children who should be living at the death of the survivor, and the descendants of such of the children as should be then dead leaving descendants; and upon the further trust that if said husband should think it expedient to sell the lots, or any part of them, the trustees should permit him to do so, the proceeds of the sale to be secured and held upon the same trusts, — if the husband dies without selling the lots, leaving his wife and children surviving him, the trust to sell will continue, and a court of equity may execute it. And if the widow file a bill against the children and trustees for a sale of the lots, the court may decree a sale, and the descendants of any child dying in the lifetime of the widow will be bound by the decree. The rule in reference to the representation of parties applies to such a suit, and the parties before the court will represent any such descendants as may become entitled under the trusts of the deed. Faulkner v. Davis, 98 D. 698.

If suit be brought to enforce a trust to sell created by a deed, and all persons in being who are interested in the object of the suit are convened before the court as parties, it is competent for the court to decree accordingly; and any title acquired under such decree is good, not only against those persons, but all others who may afterwards come into being and become interested in the trust. Id.

Where property is conveyed to trustees and their heirs forever on trusts declared in the deed, the heirs of the grantor have no interest in the subject, and are not to be regarded until all the trusts are satisfied. And in a suit for the execution of the trusts, they have no legal or equitable interest, and are not necessary or proper parties. Id.

62. Remedies for violation of trust. — Trustees who violate their trust in a sale of the trust property are liable to the cestui que trust for the utmost value of the property sold, but where the actual value can be clearly ascertained, that is the measure of indemnity. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 18 D. 250.

A sale of the trust property, by one trustee to his co-trustee, is a breach of the trust, for which both are liable. Id.

A cestui que trust who incurs costs at law in defending against his trustee a title purely legal, instead of coming at once into the proper forum for redress, cannot recover such costs in equity; but he is entitled to repayment of the costs paid to the trustee. Keaton v. Cobb, 18 D. 595.

It is a breach of trust to permit trust property to be diverted from its destination, or to diminish its value. Pearson v. Moreland, 45 D. 319.

For index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Investment by a trustee in the stock of a bank which has suspended specie payments is a breach of his trust. Morris v. Wallace, 45 D. 642.

A trustee cannot invest the trust property in his own name. If he does so, the cestui que trust may either insist upon a transfer of the investment, or charge the trustee with the amount invested, with interest. Ib.

An abuse of trust does not confer any privilege on the guilty party, nor on those in privity with him. Brown v. Johnson, 51 D. 118.

Cestui que trust may, during the continuance of the trust, maintain a bill against the trustee to vacate deeds obtained from them by the trustee. An equity, and a right to apply to have the deeds vacated, arises as soon as the trustee departs from his legal duty. Smith v. Townsend, 92 D. 637.

A cestui que trust can maintain an action at law against the trustee for money had and received, where the trust has been closed and settled, and the amount due the cestui que trust has been established and made certain. Gould v. Emerson, 96 D. 720.

63. Proceedings to compel accounting. — A court of equity, as part of its original and inherent jurisdiction, will compel the proper application of a trust fund, and require the trustee to render an account of his proceedings under the trust. Dole v. Olmstead, 85 D. 397.

A trustee refusing to account to referees for rents and profits of certain parts of the trust estate is chargeable with the reasonable income of such rents and profits, in the judgment of the referees. Green v. Winter, 7 D. 475.

A trustee's refusing to account furnishes a good reason for adopting against him the most rigid rule of calculation. Myers v. Myers, 16 D. 648.

A trustee or quasi guardian who is compelled to account to his cestui que trust is entitled to credit for the sums expended by him in the acquisition of the trust property. Hanna v. Spotts, 43 D. 132.

In a bill by the beneficiaries against a trustee for an accounting, the trustee ought not to be charged with the loss of a slave taken from the beneficiaries in Tennessee, upon a judgment against their grantor, and which the trustee residing in North Carolina failed to recover before being barred by the statute of limitations. Hester v. Wilkinson, 44 D. 303.

The cestui que trust may maintain an action of account render against his trustee receiving profits of land. Dennison v. Goehring, 47 D. 505.

The circuit court has ample jurisdiction to settle the account of a trustee appointed on a judgment of forfeiture against a bank. Coulter v. Robertson, 57 D. 165.

A probate account is a statement of receipts and payments by the trustee concerning the estate confided to his care, the detailed statement of its administration while in his hands, what has been received and from what sources, what has been paid out and for what purposes, and the balance, if any, remaining. From the nature of such account, a claim for damages for a tort cannot be included in it. Brown v. Howe, 69 D. 276.

An order of court approving an account of a trustee, in which he claims a certain credit, is not conclusive as to his right to such credit, but the court may, at a future time, investigate and restate the account. Seawell v. Greenway, 75 D. 794.

Orders passing accounts of trustees may be considered as orders or judgments in rem, subject to be set aside upon future inquiry into the correctness of the accounts. Ib.

A trustee may be called into a court of equity by cestui que trust, at any and all times, for the purpose of having an accounting of the trust property. Smith v. Townsend, 92 D. 637.

An executor can be held to account as trustee, where he has come into possession of a trust fund or its substitute, so that the same can be identified, and charged as such upon the same terms as his testator held the trust; and the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust will be added to that of executor. Lathrop v. Bampton, 89 D. 141.

In a suit against a trustee of corporate property, who is managing it for the protection of a mortgagee thereof, to compel an accounting, the decree should be that the account be first taken and stated, and that a reasonable time be given for redemption from a sale to the trustee under a second mortgage, and for payment of such balance as should be found due upon the first mortgage debt, after deducting the net earnings of the property; and that in default of such redemption and payment being made, the property be sold in satisfaction of the first mortgage debt. Racine & M. R. R. Co. v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 95 D. 595.

In the accounting by a trustee who has managed property of the mortgagor railroad corporation for the protection of the mortgagee, the mortgagor corporation is entitled to a credit for the earnings of a line of road which had been constructed by such trustee, with money furnished by the mortgagee, along the line of the road owned by the mortgagor, and which, by its contiguity to the latter road, rendered it less valuable than it would otherwise have been. Ib.

By deed made in May, 1860, three bonds, secured by mortgages of real estate, were assigned to B., in trust, to invest the proceeds, as soon as received, "in such manner as the said B. may think proper, on consultation with" the cestui que trust, and then to permit them to receive the income. The cestui que trust removed, shortly afterward, from South Carolina, where the trust was created, to New York, and remained there during the war with the Confederate States. In 1862 and 1863 B. collected the bonds in confederate treasury notes, then much depreciated, and invested the proceeds in bonds of the Confederate States, without consultation with the cestui que trust, with whom it was, at that time, impracticable to communicate. Held, that B. committed a breach of trust, and that he was liable to account to the cestui que trust for the sums received. Held, further, that the obligors in the bonds were not liable to account to the cestui que trust, for that they were discharged by their payments to B. Mayer v. Mordecai, 7 R. 26.

64. Distribution of trust funds.—The court of chancery has jurisdiction, in Maryland, under the act of 1785, chapter 72, and supplement, to decree a sale of trust property for the purpose of a division among the parties entitled to it, upon competent and satisfactory proof that the same is not susceptible of partition without loss, and that a sale will be advantageous to the parties. Smith v. Townsend, 92 D. 637.

If a power to lease included in a trust is void because of the invalidity of the trust under the rule against perpetuities, the right to share in the distribution of the rents given by the instrument creating the trust will necessarily fail. Barnum v. Barnum, 90 D. 88.

Where trust funds, of which income, interest, or profits are given to a person for life, and the principal bequeathed over upon the death of the life tenant, are invested either by the trustee, or at the death of the testator, in stock or shares of an incorporated company, the value of which consists in part of an accumulated surplus or undivided earnings laid up by the company, such additional value is part of the capital, which, as well as the par value of the shares, must be kept by the trustee intact for the benefit of the remainderman; but the earnings on such capital, as well as upon the par value of the shares, belong to the life tenant. When an extra dividend is declared out of the earnings of the company, it belongs to the life tenant, unless part of it was earnings carried to the account of accumulated profits, or surplus earnings at the testator's death or at the time of the investment, if made since his death, in which case so much must be considered as part of the capital. Van Doren v. Olden, 97 D. 650.

Where the property of a corporation consists wholly of real estate, and a part of it is taken by eminent domain, the compensation therefor, if distributed as a dividend to the share-holders, belongs to the capital, and not to the income of a trust fund invested in the shares. Heard v. Eldredge, 12 R. 687.

Where a will provides for a trust to pay income to one for life with remainder to another, and the trustee invests in bonds at a premium, payable at a certain day, he may deduct from the interest received on each bond enough to make good, by successive deductions, the amount of such premium, without regard to the market value of the bonds at the time of deduction. New England Trust Co. v. Eaton, 54 R. 493.

A testator bequeathed the "income, profit, and products" of certain stock in a corporation to a person for life, remainder over. Afterward, the corporation increased its capital stock, allowing each stockholder the option to take at par as many new shares as he held of the old. The trustees under the will sold part of their "options" to take the new shares, and with the proceeds bought new shares. Held, that the new shares were capital, and went to the remainderman. Moss's Appeal, 24 R. 164. S. P., Brinley v. Grou, 47 R. 618. But compare Willbank's Appeal, 3 R. 535.

TURNPIKE COMPANIES.

1. Charters.—A charter of a corporation authorizing it to maintain a toll-road is a contract, and within the protection of the clause of the constitution of the United States prohibiting the several states from passing any laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Backus v. Lebanon, 35 D. 466; Derby T. Co. v. Parks, 27 D. 700.

The repeal of such a grant impairs the obligation of the contract, and is unconstitutional, unless the right of appeal is reserved or the corporation consents. Derby T. Co. v. Parks, 27 D. 700.

A consideration is unnecessary to render binding an executed legislative grant of such a right. Id.

A grant to a private corporation must be construed strictly, but not so as to defeat the object of the grant; and the laws relating to public highways in Maryland must be given a liberal construction. Douglass v. Boonsborough Turnp. Co., 85 D. 647.

2. Public easement in the road.—An easement in a turnpike road is vested in the public in substantially the same manner as is that in a common highway. State v. Maine, 71 D. 89.

Resumption by the sovereign power of the franchise of a turnpike company leaves the public easement in the road disburdened of the tolls, but otherwise unaffected. Id.

By a transfer of a turnpike road from the public to a corporation, the title to the soil is not changed, but remains in the owners of the soil of the adjoining lands, and they have the same use and enjoyment of it that they had before. The easement or right of way is transferred to the corporation, to be held by them while they work and keep the road in repair, subject to the public's right to use it upon paying toll. Douglass v. Boonsborough Turnp. Co., 85 D. 647.

The distinction between the occupation of a highway by a railroad or a canal and by a turnpike company is, that the occupancy of the former is permanent and exclusive, while the turnpike is considered a public highway over which every citizen has a right to travel in his own mode of conveyance, and the imposition of tolls is only a method of keeping the road in repair. Id.

3. Damages to land-owners. — The owner of land taken for a turnpike is presumed to have received compensation for a perpetual public easement when the road was first laid out, and he is not entitled to any further compensation, when the legislature subsequently converts such turnpike into a public highway. State v. Maine, 71 D. 89.

Where a corporation is empowered by statute to establish and build a turnpike, and land is condemned, and compensation made to the then owners of the soil, a subsequent purchaser takes cum onere, and the legislature may, by a subsequent act, authorize the corporation to occupy and grade the road, without any new condemnation and compensation to such purchaser. Any compensation which could be claimed in such a case would be by the community which had borne the burden of the original condemnation. Douglass v. Boonsborough Turnp. Co., 85 D. 647.

4. Tolls. — The notice of an application to the legislature for an increase of tolls on a turnpike road under the control of the applicants is not absolutely necessary to be given to a party engaged in carrying the mails over said road under a contract with the United States, but who is not bound by his contract to carry the mails on said road, and the want of such notice will not avoid the grant passed in pursuance of such application. Derby T. Co. v. Parks, 27 D. 700.

An allegation in the application, of a mistake in the charter authorizing the construction of such road, with respect to the rate of tolls, but referring to the inequality of the tolls as evidently proving that fact, is a matter of inference, and though erroneous, is not necessarily fraudulent. Id.

The omission to state in such application that the mails are carried over the road under a contract with the United States, by a third party, is not such a suppression of the truth as to amount to a fraudulent concealment. Id.

The regulation that a toll-road company should keep the rates of toll constantly exposed to view is mandatory; and if not complied with, deprives the company of the benefit of the penalty for passing without paying toll. Middle Bridge Prop'rs v. Brooks, 29 D. 510.

Collecting tolls before being authorized to do so, or collecting in excess of the amounts authorized, is a ground for forfeiting a franchise. People v. Kingston T. R. Co., 35 D. 551.

A statute construed, and held to authorize the charging of tolls for the full distance between two turnpike gates, though a less distance was traveled by the person of whom toll was demanded. Id.

5. Toll gates and houses. — The proprietors of a turnpike road have no authority to erect a gate upon an existing public highway, unless specially authorized by the legislature. Wales v. Stetson, 3 D. 39.

A person who has paid toll, or who is exempt from paying thereof, has the right to open the gate and pass through; but he must not commit a breach of the peace in so doing. Pingry v. Washburn, 15 D. 676.

A turnpike corporation may make any use of the land on which it has an easement, necessary for the enjoyment of its franchise. It may, therefore, erect a house for its toll-gatherer, cut down trees, and dig a cellar and well for the accommodation of the house, on land over which the turnpike runs, without being liable in trespass to the owner of the land. Tucker v. Tower, 19 D. 350.

A license granted to turnpike corporation under the general turnpike act is evidence of the completion of the road, so as to warrant the erection of toll-gates, but it is not conclusive of the completion of the road in an action in the nature of a quo warranto. People v. Kingston T. R. Co., 35 D. 551.

A turnpike corporation cannot erect a toll-house on another's land except by license of the owner, and when it ceases to be used as a toll-house, the owner of the land may revoke the license, and remove the house as a nuisance. Lancaster T. Co. v. Rogers, 44 D. 179.

A toll-house erected in a highway by a turnpike company becomes a nuisance when it ceases to be used as a toll-house, and any one may remove it. Id.

A turnpike company cannot maintain trespass for the removal of an abandoned toll-house erected partly on another's land, in consideration of the owner's use of the road free of toll, and partly in the highway, where, after it has ceased to be used as a toll-house, the owner of the land removes it. Id.

The charter of a plank-road company authorized it to build its road from a point in the city of Detroit, and to erect gates according to their reasonable discretion, subject to the condition that none should be placed in the city; afterward the city limits were so extended as to include a gate erected by the company. Held, that the rights of the company were not thereby restricted, and that the gate did not thereby become a nuisance, subject to injunction at the suit of the state. Chops v. Detroit etc. Plant Road Co., 26 R. 512.

6. Liability for failure to keep road in repair. — A turnpike corporation's liability for injuries arising from want of repair of road is co-extensive with that of towns, under a charter making it liable for "all damages" to any person from whom toll is demandable, and damage must therefore not only be special, but direct. Baxter v. Winocski Turnp. Co., 52 D. 84.

A turnpike corporation is not liable for general damages resulting from not attempting to travel a highway, or from not being able to travel as expeditiously as otherwise, because of its insufficiency. Id.

A turnpike company may be indicted for failure to maintain its road in repair prescribed by the charter, but not for failure to construct the road in the prescribed manner. State v. Godwinsville etc. Road Co., 60 R. 611.

7. — for injuries caused by defects. — A turnpike corporation is not liable for injuries caused to adjoining property by digging clay from a highway, if ordinary care and prudence is exercised. Baxter v. Winocski Turnp. Co., 52 D. 84.

Plaintiff's horse, while being driven on a highway with due care, became frightened without plaintiff's fault and ran off the highway, across private property, onto defendant's turnpike, where he was injured by falling over a defective bridge which defendant was bound to repair. Held, that defendant was liable. Baldwin v. Greenwoods Turnp. Co., 16 R. 33.

A turnpike company, exacting toll for public travel on its road, negligently suffered the same to become, and to its knowledge to remain a long time, out of repair, by means of a large hole near the center of the track. The plaintiff, riding on horseback on said road, having no knowledge of the defect, and being in no way negligent, her horse became frightened by the hole, shied, threw her to the ground, and injured her. Held, that she might recover damages from the company therefor, without alleging that the horse came in contact with the hole, or that there was not room to pass on either side. Brooksville etc. Turnp. Co. v. Pumphrey, 26 R. 76.

8. Forfeiture of franchise. — Failure of a turnpike corporation to construct its road is per se a misuser, forfeiting the franchise conferred. People v. Kingston T. R. Co., 35 D. 551.

An extension by the legislature of the time for completing a road does not bar an information in respect to a part of the road completed before the passage of the act. Id.

A waiver of causes of forfeiture is not presumed from the passage of a statute giving a turnpike corporation an extension of time in which to complete its road. Id.

Title of, to public lands, see PUBLIC LANDS, I.

1. Sovereignty of. — The ultimate political sovereignty of the government created by the federal constitution resides in the United States of America. Chancely v. Bailey, 95 D. 350.

Sovereignty is indivisible and unalienable. Id.

ment by the states, as expressed in the constitution, vest in that government, with respect to such powers, the supreme, irresistible, absolute, uncontrolled authority over the people of the respective states, so as to act efficiently and directly upon them as individuals. Id.

2. Cessions of land to. — A state legislature ceded to the United States jurisdiction over certain land, to be occupied as a "Home for Disabled Soldiers," by a corporation organized under act of Congress. Held, that the title to the land being in the corporation and not in the United States, it remained subject to the jurisdiction of the state courts. In re O'Connor, 19 R. 765.

Semble, that a state cannot abdicate its jurisdiction over places within its limits, unless the title thereto has been vested in the United States, and that as to such places the jurisdiction of the state to enforce its laws and to punish crime continues until Congress has, by some further legislative act, extinguished the state authority, and vested exclusive jurisdiction in the federal courts. Id.

3. Power to contract. — Power to lease lead mines on the public land not subject to entry does not reside in the President of the United States, either by virtue of his office or from acts of Congress. Lorimier v. Lewis, 39 D. 461.

The United States government has power under last two clauses of section 8, article 1, of federal constitution, to construct an aqueduct drawing its supply of water for the city of Washington from within the limits of Maryland, and using and occupying land for that purpose in Maryland, by permission and consent of the state. Reddall v. Bryan, 74 D. 550.

The United States, in its political capacity, may enter into contracts, take bonds, receive real or other property as security for debts, and the like, in cases not previously provided for by law; and no legislative authorization is required therefor, but the power exists as incident to the general right of sovereignty; the government, as a body politic, being authorized, within the sphere of the constitutional powers confided to it, and through the instrumentality of the proper department to which those powers are confided, to enter into contracts not prohibited by law, and appropriate to the just exercise of those powers. Dikes v. Miller, 78 D. 571.

4. Suits by or against. — Suits against the United States cannot be sustained in the courts of a state. Orleans Nav. Co. v. Schooner Amelia, 12 D. 516.

Vessels of the United States cannot be seized to compel the payment of toll. Id.

The United States may sue in their own name on a note indorsed to them, whether it is negotiable in form or not. United States v. White, 37 D. 374.

Government, as a sovereign, cannot be sued. United States v. Murdock, 89 D. 652.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES USURY.

1. General principles.* — Any loss imposed on the borrower in addition to the amount lent and lawful interest, whatever form it may assume, is a violation of the law restricting the lender to a specified rate of interest, and renders such contract liable to the penalty imposed by such law. Clague v. Creditors, 20 D. 300.

To constitute usury, it is essential that there be a loan of money. Foot v. Emerson, 33 D. 205.

Allegations and proof that a written contract is not usurious, where it appears to be so, must be explicit and clear of all doubt. Lockwood v. Mitchell, 70 D. 78.

2. The corrupt intent. — The existence of a corrupt and unlawful intent on part of lender to take illegal interest is essential, in order to make a transaction usurious. Condit v. Baldwin, 78 D. 137.

In order to constitute usury, both parties must be consenting to the unlawful interest, namely: the lender to ask, the borrower to give; and there must be proof of a lending and a borrowing. Price v. Campbell, 1 D. 535.

Therefore, if a bill of exchange be drawn on an obscure man in Scotland, although the payee may expect it will be protested, yet, if there was no agreement between him and the drawer that it should be protested, the transaction is not usurious. Id.

On a question of usury, it is the intention of the parties which determines the nature of the transaction, and no matter what the form, where there is really a loan at more than legal interest, no shift or device can take it out of the statute. The original intention must often be learned by matter dehors the particular instrument of writing between the parties; and what the intention was, whether a real sale or one merely colorable so as to evade the statute, is a question for the jury. Tyson v. Rickard, 5 D. 424.

A stipulation to repay the principal in money is not necessary to constitute a loan; it is enough if the principal is secured, and not bona fide put in hazard, and it matters not what the nature of the security is, if it is insufficient, for if the principal is secured, and more than legal interest is reserved, it is usury. Id.
